surance thereon. The defendant, the owner of the wharf, and engaged in the wharfage and storage of lumber, disputes this liability for the loss in question on the ground that it was relieved from such liability by reason of a special contract with the owners of the lumber whereby defendant accepted the deposit of this consignment of lumber subject to the owner's risk.

It is true that this issue is not expressly raised by the pleadings. The complaint avers:

That "at all times herein mentioned defendant has maintained and operated, and does now maintain and operate at South San Pedro, Cal., a storage wharf for hire," and, that "on the 18th day of August, 1916, the Union Lumber Company, a corporation, was the owner of certain lumber and timber products which were there stored, and situate upon the wharf and premises maintained and operated by defendant at East San Pedro, Cal., as a wharf and premises for hire; * * * that on said date said lumber and timber products were in the care and custody of defendant for a consideration, awaiting orders from its owner as to its disposition and removal therefrom," and was damaged by fire through defendant's negligence.

The defendant contents itself with simply denying "that, at the time or times in said complaint mentioned, defendant has maintained or operated, or does now maintain or operate at San Pedro, Cal., a storage wharf for hire," or that on the 18th day of August, 1916, the lumber in said complaint described was "stored upon the wharf or premises maintained or operated by defendant." It also denies that the loss occurred through defendant's negligence; but there is no reference to the special defense that the lumber was placed on the wharf at the risk of the owner.

[1] It is not the fact, however, as suggested by respondent, that this defense was raised for the first time on appeal. It was raised in the evidence and by the findings of the trial court. Evidence as to the special contract under which it is claimed that this lumber was stored on defendant's wharf, with a waiver of liability against defendant, was introduced by defendant without objection, and the trial court specifically finds upon the issue thus raised.

It is settled law under the decisions of this state that, where a case is tried without objection upon a showing of facts not pleaded, but supported by the evidence and covered by the findings, objection will not be considered on appeal that the pleadings do not present the issue. Klopper v. Levy, 98 Cal. 525, 33 Pac. 444; King v. Davis, 34 Cal. 100; Barbour v. Flick, 126 Cal. 628, 632, 59 Pac. 122; Rudel v. County of Los Angeles, 118 Cal. 281, 50 Pac. 400; Fernandez v. Western

Fuse, etc., Co., 34 Cal. App. 420, 423, 167 Pac. 900. Not only was the evidence as to this waived of liability introduced without objection, but the plaintiff participated in its introduction by cross-examining the witness as to the agreement. Had objection been made, the pleading could properly have been amended to conform to the facts as testified to.

The finding of the trial court upon this issue was that before the lumber was received upon the wharf the defendant company notified said Union Lumber Company as follows:

"That there would be a strike of the long-shoremen and the wharf handlers June 1st; that it would not receive said shipment of lumber after June 1, 1916, except subject to its not assuming any responsibility for delivery, or loss, or damages, or theft, or any cause whatever of that nature, until the strike was over, and it was in a position to handle the same; that with said understanding, and shortly after June 1, 1916, said lumber and timber products were removed from said steamer Noyo by the master of said steamer, and piled in the rough upon defendant's said wharf for the express purpose of having the same stored by defendant."

[2] The evidence clearly supports this finding that such notice was given, and that the lumber was landed upon the wharf with that understanding. The terms of the notice of nonassumption of liability were amply sufficient to cover the loss by fire complained of. The only question open to discussion is the right of the defendant to exempt itself from liability for the negligence of its own employees.

The general rule that a depositary or bailee for hire in the course of his ordinary business cannot relieve himself by contract or notice from responding in damages for loss arising from his own negligence or that of his agents or servants, may be conceded. Railroad v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (84 U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627; Minnesota Butter & Cheese Co. v. St. Paul Cold Storage, etc., Co., 75 Minn. 445, 77 N. W. 977, 74 Am. St. Rep. 515; Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 683, 77 Pac. 664.

But in this case the owner had notice that the defendant was not accepting the responsibility of storing the lumber in the ordinary course of its business, but under special conditions. It was anticipating a strike, which actually occurred, and it had reason to believe that its facilities for handling business would be so disturbed as to render it unsafe to assume the usual risks. It, in effect, notified the plaintiff that it had suspended its usual line of business, and would only accept the lumber upon its wharf at the owner's risk. Even so, an individual bailee might not be permitted to excuse himself from damages caused by his personal want of ordinary care, but in the case of a strike, with its attendant disorganization of discipline and system, it would be strange indeed if an employer, and particularly a corporation which can only act through its employees, could not refuse to accept goods in storage except on condition of being released from liability for damages that might in any way be traceable to such disorganized conditions.

It is true in this instance that the loss by fire was not the direct result of the strike. It was contributed to, at least, by failure to construct an oil tank maintained on the wharf of defendant, as required by an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, but the immediate cause of the fire was the negligence of one of the defendant's employees in operating machinery to which this oil tank was attached. To what extent the conditions brought about by the strike may have contributed to such want of care of the employee cannot be determined, but it was a contingency to be anticipated, and which the defendant had a right to protect itself from by a special contract as to the liability assumed.

This case comes to us on rehearing from the District Court of Appeal, and we accept the conclusions of that court, and the reasoning on this point presented in the following language:

"With reference to the lumber destroyed by fire, it is evident that the defendant did not receive it as a wharfinger, nor was it received as a depositary, gratuitous or for hire, so long as the lumber remained on the wharf under the agreed conditions herein.

[3] "But for comparison, the degree of care to be exercised by a depositary and his liability for loss or damage to the thing stored will be stated. The Code provides for the degree of care and limitation of liability in case of a deposit. If for hire, the depositary must use at least ordinary care for the preservation of the thing deposited (section 1852, Civ. Code); and if gratuitous only, at least slight care (section 1846, Civ. Code). 'No warehouseman or other person doing a general storage business is responsible for any loss or damage to property by fire while in his custody, if he exercises reasonable care and diligence for its protection and preservation.' Section 1858e, Civ. Code. If such be the rules by which the liability of the depositary is measured in the event of the destruction of the deposit, it would seem that nothing short of gross or wanton negligence would make a defendant responsible for the loss of the lumber placed on the wharf with the express understanding that the defendant would be relieved from all liability, and that the Union Lumber Company would take all the risks if permitted to pile its lumber there awaiting storage. From the foregoing testimony, the strong inference is that the Union Lumber Company had control of the lumber until piled and stored in the yard back of the wharf. Then the situations of the parties were that of contracting parties dealing at arm's length. The defendant refused to receive the lumber in the usual way, and informed the Union Lumber Company of the danger and risk of leaving this lumber even on the wharf during the strike. It permitted the Union Lumber Company to pile the lumber on its property under the express agreement that it (the defendant) would be under no obligation for its loss or damage, and that Union Lumber Company would take all the risk. When this agreement was made the defendant realized the dangers attending the strike which it knew would surely take place on June 1st. The strike did come, and was serious. It was necessary to place watchmen on duty around the property. Even then there was violence and threats made against the defendant. Some of its 'employees were beaten up rather badly.' Such a contract, under existing conditions, not to take any risk for any loss or damage to the lumber from whatever cause, was not only within the rights of the defendant, but was an act of good business judgment. At the time the contract was made, the Union Lumber Company was told by the defendant that it could leave the lumber on board ship, or it could take its lumber 'back to Redondo or take it back where it came from.' By placing it on the wharf in the face of the strike, and the conditions under which it was permitted to place it there, the Union Lumber Company did not use business prudence or ordinary care. Section 1714, Civ. Code.

[4, 5] "Even if the defendant did not exercise ordinary care in the preservation of said lumber, it violated no state law as a depository. It had not stored the lumber, and was therefore, independent of the contract, not liable as a depository. In making its contract with the Union Lumber Company, it violated no law against public policy. The public had nothing to do with the transaction, was not in any way interested in the matter. The transaction was a common sense mutual arrangement between two competent contracting corporations concerning their private affairs. Such a contract is not only not against public policy, but it is binding upon the parties, and will operate to relieve the defendant from the negligence of its employees while in its service. Stephens v. Southern Pac. Co., 109 Cal. 86, 41 Pac. 783, 29 L. R. A. 751, 50 Am. St. Rep. 17. 'The authorities all agree that the contract is not void as against public policy unless it is injurious to the interests of the public or contravenes some established interest of society.' Griswold v. Ill. C. R. Co., 90 Iowa, 265, 57 N. W. 843, 24 L. R. A. 647. 'It must not be forgotten that you are not to extend arbitrarily those rules which say that a given contract is void as being against public policy, because, if there is one thing more than another which public policy requires, it is that men of full age and competent understanding shall have the utmost liberty of contract, and that every contract, when entered into fairly and voluntarily, shall be held sacred and shall be enforced by the courts of justice. Therefore, you have this paramount public policy to consider that you are not likely to interfere with this freedom of contract.' 3 Eng. & Am. Ency. of Law (Old Ed.) note 3, p. 875.

[6] "It should be constantly borne in mind that this was not a unilateral contract on the part of the defendant. The Union Lumber Company, by accepting the conditions upon which it was permitted to rough-pile the lumber on the defendant's premises, accepted those conditions and affirmatively agreed to relieve defendant from all risks. The defendant and the Union Lumber Company freely contracted with all of the possible dangers in mind which might attend a tie-up of a large business by means of a strike of a comparatively large body of employees. The contract was to the effect that the defendant would not be responsible for the delivery, or loss, or damage of this lumber. The terms of the agreement are broad enough in meaning to guard the defendant against all loss or damage by fire or other cause attending a general strike of its employees, including any loss or damage caused by reason of disturbed conditions, in consequence of, as a sequence to, a strike; shortage of help, overwork, and overwrought remaining employees, interruption of the ordinary conduct of the business; a want of ordinary and usual care of employees in doing their work under stress and disturbance and threats; for lack of efficiency in coping with fire or other destructive agencies because of the condition of or scarcity of employees."

In the light of the conclusion reached by the Court of Appeal and by this court that the defendant was released by its contract from liability for the damage sued for, and the trial court having found that the lumber was accepted upon defendant's wharf in pursuance of said agreement, and understanding that it was so received at the owner's risk, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the lower court to amend its conclusions of law in accordance herewith, and render judgment for the defendant.

KINLEY v. LARGENT. (L. A. 5848.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1921.)

1. Witnesses  181—Incompetency of claimant to testify as to matter occurring before decedent's death may be waived by personal representative.

The incompetency of a witness under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3, providing that parties or assignors prosecuting claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person "cannot be witnesses" as to any matter occurring before the death of such deceased person, can be waived by the decedent's personal representative, since such statute merely means that a claimant is incompetent to testify against the estate.

2. Witnesses  181—Administrator held to have waived incompetency of plaintiff suing on claim against estate.

In action against an administrator on a claim against the estate, in which the administrator expressly declined to object to the plaintiff as a witness on the ground of incompetency under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3, making a claimant an incompetent witness as to any matter occurring before the deceased's death, the plaintiff should have been permitted to testify, since in such case the administrator waived the incompetency.

3. Judgment 688—Judgment for claimant in action against executor or administrator not conclusive against heirs.

A judgment for claimant in action against an executor or administrator is not conclusive against the heirs, since such judgment only establishes the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the executor or administrator, and a judge under Code Civ. Proc. § 1504, and since all matters, including allowed claims not passed upon on the settlement of any former account or in rendering an exhibit or in making a decree of sale, may be contested by the heirs for cause shown on the settlement of an account, under section 1636.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Anna Kinley against W. T. Largent, administrator of the estate of James Kinley, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff giving her insufficient relief, she appeals. Reversed.

James M. O'Brien, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James B. Barry, of Sawtelle, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff, Mrs. Anna Kinley, from a judgment which she recovered from the administrator of the estate of James Kinley, deceased. The decedent and appellant were husband and wife.

The action was brought to recover the sum of $3,444, which appellant had turned over to decedent for investment in street bonds. Up to the time of his death he had made no report on the investment. Appellant presented a demand to the administrator for the said sum, which was disallowed upon the ground that under subdivision 3, § 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, appellant was incompetent to testify against the estate, and that respondent was unwilling to assume the responsibility of waiving the incompetency. This action followed.

Upon the trial appellant offered herself as a witness, whereupon the following statements by the court and the respective counsel were made:

"The Court: Is this such a claim against an estate as bars the claimant from being a witness under section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure?"

"Mr. O'Brien: I presume that the claimant would be disqualified as a witness under that section if an objection were made to her testimony. This matter, however, has already been discussed with the administrator and his attorney, and, in view of the fact that both the administrator and his attorney are convinced that an injustice would result if such an objection were made, they have decided not to make any objection to the competency of the plaintiff as a witness in her own behalf in support of her claim against the estate.

"Mr. Barry: I want to say, your honor, that Mr. Largent, the administrator of decedent, was a next-door neighbor of the plaintiff and her husband for a long time prior to the latter's death. He became intimately acquainted with them, and knew, prior to the death of Kinley, that moneys had been so advanced to him by his wife, as now claimed by her. Under those conditions we feel that to interpose a technical objection to the competency of the plaintiff to testify as a witness in her own behalf in this suit would result in an injustice. As we have no desire to be the cause of an injustice, we do not feel it right or proper to make such objection.

"The Court: I am inclined to the opinion that the statute cannot be waived by a failure of the administrator or his attorney to make the objection. I will hear your evidence and make a ruling on this point later."

Appellant identified five drafts, aggregating $2,467.10, which were admitted in evidence, and testified to other advances aggregating $979.50, but, as this latter amount depended on her testimony alone, the evidence was excluded, the court saying:

"I will allow the plaintiff the aggregate amount of the several drafts which she has identified. I cannot consider her testimony as to the other advancements. The rule is a harsh one and even works injustice, but it is absolutely necessary to protect an estate from injustice. I have no doubt in my mind that Mrs. Kinley's claim is a just one. No objection is necessary. The statute is provided for just that purpose."

[1] Appellant's position is thus stated:

"There is only one point involved on this appeal. If the incompetency prescribed by section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be waived, the judgment of the lower court must be affirmed. If it can be waived, it was waived in this case, and the lower court should be directed to enter judgment for the entire amount and interest claimed by the plaintiff. The principle which we urge to be the law may be stated thus: The statutory incompetency of parties or assignors of a party to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf the same is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator upon a demand against the estate of a deceased person to testify as to any fact occurring before the decedent's death, is not absolute, but may be waived, and, if waived, the testimony of such person must be considered."

Section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads, in part, as follows:

"Persons who cannot testify.—The following persons cannot be witnesses:

"3. Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator upon a claim, or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter or fact occurring before the death of such deceased person."

There is no authority in this jurisdiction directly on the question whether the personal representative of a deceased person may waive the incompetency contemplated by this provision. In other jurisdictions it has been held that the incompetency of a claimant to testify under their respective statutes may be waived, and in Jones on Evidence, vol. 4, § 780, it is said, referring to the incompetency of a claimant to testify against an estate of a deceased or incompetent person:

"This exception to the statutory rule removing the incompetency of parties was introduced for the benefit of those representing the deceased or incompetent person; and their representatives may, if they choose, waive this privilege. All objection to the competency of a witness as to a transaction with an incompetent or deceased person will be deemed waived if it is not made at the time the evidence is given. * * * An administrator and his counsel cannot sit by without objecting to the admission of incompetent evidence and expect the trial judge to rule it out on his own motion. The objection must be to the competency of the witness, not merely to the competency or relevancy of the evidence."

Numerous authorities are cited in support of the text. In general, the statutes of other jurisdictions only disqualify the claimant to testify against the estate. See compilation of statutes in Wigmore on Evidence, § 488. Section 1880, on the other hand, provides that a claimant cannot be a witness as to any matter or fact occurring before the death of the deceased person. However, in construing this section it has been held, notwithstanding its broad language, not to mean that the claimant cannot become a witness under any circumstances. Thus, in Chase v. Evoy, 51 Cal. 618, the claimant was made a witness and allowed to testify on behalf of the estate. The court declared:

"The language of the statute is very broad, and, if literally construed, might exclude all parties to the action, whether called to testify for or against the estate. But to give it this construction would defeat the manifest purpose of the act, and we think the language is capable of a different interpretation. Parties to the action, or in whose behalf it is prosecuted, are not allowed to testify against the estate in a suit to establish a demand against it. One of the parties to the transaction out of which the demand originated being no longer in esse, it was deemed unwise to permit the other party to testify to his version of it, when called by the plaintiff in a proceeding against the estate to establish the demand. The statute, it is true, provides in general terms that 'the parties to an action or proceeding' against the estate shall not testify; but the obvious meaning of this provision is that a party to the action shall not testify against the executor or administrator. * * * But, in view of the evil to be remedied, the Legislature could have hardly intended to prohibit the executor or administrator from calling a party to the action to testify in behalf of the estate. On the opposite theory, the defendant, representing the estate, would not be permitted to call the plaintiff himself to prove that the demand was fraudulent or had been fully paid. Such a construction is wholly inadmissible, and would be at variance with its manifest intent."

In Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 375, 12 Pac. 284, 60 Am. Rep. 539, the claimant was made a witness for the purpose of identifying certain books connected with his claim against the estate. Colburn v. Parrett, 27 Cal. App. 541, 150 Pac. 786, was a similar case.

It is proper to point out that in some of the cases under this subdivision language is used which might indicate that the incompetency was absolute. Thus, in Rose v. Southern Trust Co., 178 Cal. 580, 174 Pac. 28, it was remarked that "such a witness must not testify." However, in that case the opinion shows that the testimony was objected to on the trial of the action, so the question of a waiver was not presented. Moreover, as already shown, there are cases in this jurisdiction where, even against objection, the party was allowed to become a witness for some purposes.

[2] It is clear that subdivision 3 is to be given no broader effect than if it merely provided that a claimant is incompetent to testify against the estate. This interpretation gives to the statute the same meaning as that expressed in those statutes of other jurisdictions wherein it is held, as has been seen, that the personal representatives of the deceased may waive the incompetency. Allowing this waiver will not operate to defeat the object of the statute; for it is always in the power of the administrator or executor by timely objection to bar the witness. It follows that under subdivision 3 of section 1880 the personal representative should be permitted to waive the incompetency. Hence, as the administrator herein expressly declined to object to the witness on the ground of incompetency, the waiver should have been allowed, and the witness permitted to testify.

[3] It should be noted that—

"A judgment rendered against an executor or administrator, upon any claim for money against the estate of his testator or intestate, only establishes the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the executor or administrator and the judge" (section 1504, Code Civ. Proc.), and that "all matters, including allowed claims not passed upon on the settlement of any former account, or on rendering an exhibit, or on making a decree of sale, may be contested by the heirs, for cause shown," on the settlement of an account (section 1636, Code Civ. Proc.).

It thus appears that the judgment in an action such as this against the executor or administrator is not conclusive against the heirs.

Judgment reversed.

RALPH v. ANDERSON. (L. A. 6802.)

(Supreme Court of California, Sept. 13, 1921.)

1. Assignments ⚡121—Assignee may bring suit in own name.

Assignee of a chose in action may bring suit thereon in his own name.

2. Assignments ⚡34—Assignment of a chose in action need not be in writing.

An assignment of a chose in action, such as right to damages arising out of automobile collision, need not be in writing, and parol evidence of a transfer is admissible.

3. Assignments ⚡137—Transfer of chose in action sufficiently shown by testimony of assignor.

In a suit by assignee of a chose in action, a claim for damages arising out of an automobile collision, oral testimony of assignor himself to the effect that he had transferred his claim was sufficient to bind him, and support a finding that an assignment had been made.

4. Assignments ⚡121—Assignee for collection may sue in own name.

An assignee of a chose in action is not deprived of his right to sue in his own name by the fact that the claim is assigned merely for collection, debtor being completely protected by the assignment whatever collateral arrangements are made.

5. Evidence ⚡117—Interest in chose in action by third person admissible.

In an action by alleged assignee of claim for damages arising out of collision between automobiles, evidence of insurance company's interest in the claim was admissible, subject to plaintiff connecting this interest with his action by proof of authorization to sue.

6. Appeal and error ⚡882(11)—No complaint of lack of proof excluded through appealing party's act.

Defendant, in an action by assignee of claim for damages arising out of an automobile collision, cannot complain that an assignment to plaintiff was in fact an assignment to him only as agent for an insurance company, and that there was no showing of authority on the part of the plaintiff to maintain the action, where defendant made objection to proof of such authorization, and there was ample evidence to prove a direct assignment to plaintiff.

7. Appeal and error ⚡882(3)—No complaint of theory of cause induced by own conduct.

Complaint cannot be made that case was tried on an erroneous theory when the court and parties were led into the acceptance of that theory by complainant's own counsel.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1058(2)—No complaint of sustaining of objection to evidence subsequently admitted.

Complaint cannot be made on appeal of rulings of court sustaining objections to questions where the objection was subsequently overruled and the witness permitted to answer a similar question.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Archibald S. Ralph against Joseph Anderson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Head & Rutan, of Santa Ana, and David R. Faries and Ivan Kelso, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. The automobile of one H. O. Henderson was damaged in a collision with the automobile of Joseph Anderson. Archibald S. Ralph instituted the present action against said Joseph Anderson for damages, alleging that the collision was the result of defendant Anderson's negligence, and that said H. O. Henderson duly assigned, sold, and transferred his claim against the said defendant as sued for in this action "to the plaintiff herein [Ralph], who is now the owner and holder thereof." Judgment having been rendered in favor of the plaintiff, defendant appeals, upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to show that plaintiff Archibald S. Ralph is the owner of the claim sued upon, or is authorized to bring suit in his own name and therefore that a judgment in plaintiff's favor would not protect defendant against a subsequent suit upon the claim by the real owner. This is the only question raised upon the appeal.

[1-3] If there is sufficient evidence to support the finding that the owner of the claim assigned the same to plaintiff, the judgment in plaintiff's favor must be affirmed, for it is the settled rule that an assignee of a chose in action may bring suit thereon in his own name. Wiggins v. McDonald, 18 Cal. 126; Gradwohl v. Harris, 29 Cal. 150; Reios v. Mardis, 18 Cal. App. 276, 122 Pac. 1091. Upon the assignment phase of the case, Mr. Henderson, the owner of the damaged automobile, was called as a witness for the plaintiff. The record discloses that he testified (1) that he assigned any claim that he might have against the defendant to Archibald S. Ralph, the plaintiff; (2) that the assignment was made shortly after the accident; (3) that the assignment was oral, and consisted of a direction to Ralph to collect the damages from the defendant. There was no attempt to prove that the assignment was written, and, since there is no statutory provision requiring an assignment of such a claim to be in writing, parol evidence of the transfer was admissible. Humboldt Milling Co. v. N. W. Pac. Ry., 166 Cal. 175, 135 Pac. 503; Shoenhair v. Jones, 33 Cal. App. 545, 165 Pac. 971; Civ. Code, § 1052. In a suit by the assignee upon a claim so assigned, the oral testimony of the assignor himself to the effect that he has transferred his claim is sufficient to bind the assignor and support a finding that an assignment has been made. Bruno v. Severini, 196 Pac. 501. The testimony of the original owner of the claim that he had assigned the same to the plaintiff in the instant case by oral assignment was therefore sufficient proof of an assignment.

[4] It is true that it also appears from the testimony of both the assignor, Henderson, and the assignee, Ralph, that Henderson was, at the time of the collision, insured in the Automobile Indemnity Exchange of Orange county, an interinsurance association organized pursuant to statutory provisions (St. 1917, p. 1170, amended St. 1919, p. 1270), of which plaintiff Ralph was the attorney in fact and manager. And it may further be gathered from the testimony that it was understood between Henderson and Ralph that the amount of any judgment collected in this action was to be turned over to the said indemnity exchange. This agreement restricting the disposition of the proceeds recovered in no way detracts from plaintiff's capacity to sue, for an assignee is not deprived of his right to sue in his own name by the fact that the claim is assigned merely for collection. Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 Pac. 550. Provided the assignment, whether verbal or written, is absolute, so as to vest the apparent legal title in the assignee, the latter—

"is entitled to sue in his own name, whatever collateral arrangements have been made between him and the assignor respecting the proceeds. The debtor is completely protected by the assignment, and cannot be exposed to a second action brought by any of the parties, either the assignor or other, to whom the assignee is bound to account." Pomeroy's Code Remedies (4th Ed.) § 70; Grant v. Heverin, 77 Cal. 263, 18 Cal. App. 647, 19 Pac. 493; Ingham v. Weed, 5 Cal. Unrep. 645, 48 Pac. 318.

However, defendant advances the theory that it is apparent from the evidence adduced upon the whole case that the Automobile Indemnity Exchange of Orange county, and not the plaintiff Ralph, is the assignee of the claim, and is the real party at interest. It is pointed out, in support of this contention, that the evidence shows that Henderson was insured in the interinsurance company above mentioned, and that the company has become subrogated to Henderson's claim against defendant by reason of having assumed charge of and paid for some of the repairs to the Henderson automobile; and, furthermore, that, aside from the right arising from subrogation, the actual assignment testified to by Henderson was not an assignment to Ralph individually, but solely in his capacity as agent for the said exchange. It is therefore urged that the present action should not have been prosecuted by plaintiff in his individual capacity. Swift v. Swift, 46 Cal. 266; Chin Kem You v. Ah Joan, 75 Cal. 124, 16 Pac. 705.

[5-7] Upon the trial of the case, counsel for defendant repeatedly and successfully objected to all questions of counsel for plaintiff tending to bring out the interest which the said Automobile Indemnity Exchange possessed in the claim sued upon. Objection was likewise made to plaintiff's attempt to prove an authorization from the interinsurance company to plaintiff to bring suit upon the claim. Evidence of the interinsurance company's interest in the claim was admissible, subject, of course, to plaintiff connecting this interest with the present action by proof of his authorization to sue. Bauer v. State, 144 Cal. 740, 78 Pac. 280; Ferguson v. McBean, 4 Cal. Unrep. 429, 35 Pac. 559. However, as a result of the attitude of defendant's counsel, plaintiff was compelled to try the case upon the theory of a direct assignment of the claim to plaintiff subject to a collateral agreement concerning the disposition of the proceeds. The trial court having found, upon ample evidence, that plaintiff sustained the burden of proving such a direct assignment, defendant cannot, upon appeal, raise objection that certain evidence is lacking when his attorneys are responsible for its omission, nor complain that the case was tried upon an erroneous theory when the court and parties were led into the acceptance of that theory by defendant's own counsel. Powell v. Ross, 4 Cal. 197; Merrill v. Kohlberg, 29 Cal. App. 382, 155 Pac. 824; Harp v. Harp, 136 Cal. 421, 69 Pac. 28.

[8] It is contended that the court erred in sustaining objections to questions put to the witness H. O. Henderson by defendant's counsel as to whether or not he (Henderson) had assigned the claim in question to the Automobile Indemnity Exchange. The correctness of these rulings need not be investigated, for it appears that the court subsequently overruled the objection of plaintiff's counsel and permitted the witness to answer the following question:

"Is it not, Mr. Henderson, a fact, that prior to the filing of this suit you assigned all of your rights, titles, and interests to any claim, cause of action arising out of this accident, if any you had, to the Automobile Indemnity Exchange of the Orange County Automobile Club?"

In response, the witness stated, in effect, that the only assignment of the claim made by him was the oral assignment concerning which he had already testified. This question and answer brought forth all the information called for by the questions previously ruled out, and it follows that, if any error was committed, it was not prejudicial to the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

ATHEARN v. NICOL et al., Judges.
(Sac. 3266.)

1. Judges $\S$ 16(1)—Governor could appoint judges from other counties to try cases under statute.

Under Const. art. 6, § 8, the Governor has power to appoint judges from other counties to hear a proceeding relating to issuance of bonds for assessments for improvements under St. 1919, p. 1093, §§ 4, 5, supplementing St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 117, St. 1913, p. 252, St. 1915, p. 1338, St. 1919, pp. 1091, 1122, 1209, even though the Legislature has no authority to direct the Governor to nominate judges from other counties to hear such proceedings, especially as the superior court judge of the county is disqualified from hearing such proceedings when they affect or relate to real property in his county under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 5.

2. Courts $\S$ 101—Judges assigned from other county may sit together in cause.

Three judges from other counties appointed by Governor to try proceedings relating to issuance of bonds for assessments for improvements under St. 1919, p. 1093, §§ 4, 5, supplementing St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 117, St. 1913, p. 252, St. 1915, p. 1338, St. 1919, pp. 1091, 1122, 1209, may sit together and dispose of the matter, under Const. art. 6, § 8.

3. Courts $\S$ 67, 101—As many sessions as judges, and all judges may sit together.

There may be as many sessions of the superior court in the city and county of San Francisco as there are superior court judges in the county, including those assigned thereto by the Governor, and those acting pro tempore, and all these judges can sit together at one time for the trial of a case, under Const. art. 6, §§ 6-8.

4. Courts $\S$ 102(1)—Majority of judges may render decision.

Where authority is conferred upon a court of more than one judge, the majority can render decisions of the court, in the absence of express statutory or constitutional provision to the contrary.

5. Constitutional law $\S$ 46(1) — Question of validity of statutory directions as to judges held immaterial.

On application for writ of prohibition to prevent three judges appointed by Governor under statutory direction to try a proceeding relating to issuance of bonds for assessments for improvements under St. 1919, p. 1093, §§ 4, 5, it was immaterial that the Legislature had no right to direct the Governor to appoint three judges, or to direct that two or three judges might render a decision, or that the Governor had no authority to require the three judges to sit together, since they could hear the case without the statutory directions.

6. Courts $\S$ 2—Prohibition $\S$ 28—Sufficiency of document filed to invoke jurisdiction does not affect jurisdiction.

If a court has jurisdiction and authority to pass on the validity of an assessment, and the questions arising with relation thereto, the sufficiency of a complaint or document filed to invoke that jurisdiction is one to be determined by them upon the hearing, and does not affect their jurisdiction to pass thereon, and need not be considered on application for prohibition.

7. Constitutional law $\S$ 46(3)—Question of constitutionality of statute because prohibiting new trial and appeal not considered on application to prevent judges from hearing proceedings.

That St. 1919, p. 1093, §§ 4, 5, providing special procedure on hearings of objections to issuance of bonds for assessments for improvements, is unconstitutional as constituting a special ruling of practice, in that it prohibits the granting of a motion for a new trial, and deprives defeated party of a right to appeal, is immaterial on application for prohibition to prevent judges from hearing proceedings invoked, since the question of constitutionality of the statute in that respect will arise when the jurisdiction of the court is invoked, either upon a new trial or upon an appeal.

In Bank.

Application by F. G. Athearn for writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to G. W. Nicol and others, extra judges of the Superior Court, designated to determine certain questions concerning the validity and apportionment of an assessment for drainage work, requiring them to desist from the contemplated trial of certain issues. Writ denied.

Haven, Athearn, Chandler & Farmer, of San Francisco (Geo. A. Clarke, and Elston, Clark & Nichols, all of Berkeley, amici curiæ), for petitioner.

Frank Freeman, of Willows (Robt. T. Devlin, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ), for respondents.

Thomas Rutledge and Brown & Alberry, al of Colusa, and Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco, for West Side land owners.

WILBUR, J. The petitioner asks for a writ of prohibition directed to the respondents, who are judges of the superior court, requiring them to desist from the contemplated trial of certain proceedings instituted under and by virtue of an act of the Legislature (St. 1919, p. 1092, §§ 4, 5) relating to the issuance of bonds for assessments for improvements in the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district. The respondents have been designated by the Governor to sit as judges of the superior court in and for the county of Sutter to hear and determine the questions that may be raised before them concerning the validity and proper apportionment of assessments of said district aggregating over $8,000,000. The procedure followed in this case is in accordance with an act of the Legislature of the state of California (St. 1919, p. 1092, §§ 4, 5), supplementing other legislation (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 117; St. 1913, p. 252; St. 1915, p. 1338; St. 1919, pp. 1091, 1122, 1209), concerning the organization and powers of said district. By such legislation authority is given for the construction and maintenance of improvements in said district, and the levying of assessments upon the property within the district.

The statute under consideration provides that, after the levy of the assessment by the assessor, and the approval thereof by the reclamation board, a proceeding shall be instituted by the reclamation board in the "superior court of the state of California in and for the county" wherein a majority of the realty affected by the assessment is contained. Upon the filing of the assessment with the clerk of said court, notice is given by publication of the date of the hearing of objections to such assessment. It is provided that the court shall hear objections to the assessment and render a decision thereon, which shall be final and conclusive (St. 1919, pp. 1092, 1095, § 12), and from which no appeal can be taken and no new trial can be granted (section 8, p. 1094). This proceeding is to be heard before three judges of the superior court selected by the Governor from counties not within the drainage district.

Acting in accordance with the provisions of this legislation, the reclamation board has filed with the county clerk of the county of Sutter its assessment, and the Governor has designated the three respondents to hear such proceedings, and they are now proposing to hear the proceedings, unless prohibited from so doing by this court.

It is claimed that the Legislature had no authority to direct the Governor to nominate three of the judges of the superior court from counties other than the one in which the proceeding is filed to hold such court. This may be conceded; and yet if the Governor had the authority to do so, under the Constitution, without the request or direction of the Legislature, and he has exercised that authority by the appointment of the respondents, we need not concern ourselves with the question of whether or not the Legislature has any power to enact such a statute.

[1] We will first consider the authority of the Governor under the Constitution itself. Section 8 of article 6 of the Constitution provides that a judge of any superior court may hold a superior court in any county, at the request of a judge of the superior court thereof, and upon the request of the Governor it shall be his duty so to do. While, no doubt, the ordinary course of procedure has been for the Governor to name a judge of another superior court to sit for or in the place of some disqualified judge of the county in which he is requested to sit, it is clear from the Constitution that any superior court judge of the state of California can hold a superior court in any county of the state of California when requested so to do by the Governor. The number of judges of the superior court in the county to which he is assigned by the Governor is thus increased. And, if the Governor, in the exercise of his prerogative, assigns three judges to a given county in addition to those provided by the Constitution and Legislature for the county, the number of judges who can hold separate sessions of the superior court in the county is thus increased by the number so assigned by the Governor to the county. In addition to the number of superior court judges provided by the Legislature and elected by the people, and those acting upon the request of the Governor, the Constitution provides for judges pro tempore to try specific cases upon the agreement of the parties thereto. This matter of pro tempore judges is only germane to the discussion in that it shows that there may be many more judges exercising the power and authority of superior court judges in a given county at a given time than those designated in the Constitution or by the Legislature. For instance, in Los Angeles county the Constitution provides for 2 superior court judges (article 6, § 6). This number has been increased by the Legislature to 23 (St. 1921, p. 1177).

The Governor of the state is thus authorized to temporarily increase the number of superior court judges in a county by a request that judges from other counties sit within that county as superior court judges.

Before the latest increases in the number of judges of the superior court in Los Angeles and San Francisco, several extra sessions of the superior court were held simultaneously with and in addition to all the usual departments of the superior court. Sometimes as many as three or four extra sessions were held at one time. Superior court judges for such extra sessions were designated by the Governor from other counties, and his authority to do so has never been questioned; indeed, in view of the plain language of the Constitution, it could not well be questioned. It is therefore apparent that there is nothing illegal in the selection by the Governor of the respondents to sit in the county of Sutter as superior court judges. Assuming that the matter involved is a judicial question now pending before the superior court of the county of Sutter, as the statute expressly declares, and that the respondents have severally been selected to hold court in that county, it is obvious that the court has jurisdiction of the matter in question, and that the respondents, acting as judges of that court, have jurisdiction to proceed to dispose of the matter.

Before considering the question as to whether or not the 3 respondent judges can sit together and hear the proceedings, a preliminary question should be mentioned. The judge of the superior court of the county of Sutter is disqualified to hear these proceedings by reason of subdivision 5 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which disqualifies a judge of a county from hearing such proceedings when they affect or relate to any real property within his county. This provision has been held constitutional. Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Rector, 172 Cal. 385, 156 Pac. 506. From this it follows that the judge of the superior court of the county of Sutter, elected by the people thereof, is disqualified to try these proceedings and that 3 respondents properly assigned by the Governor to that county are each qualified and empowered to dispose of the matter.

[2, 3] So far we have considered only the authority of the Governor to assign these judges to the superior court of Sutter county. When so assigned they derive their powers from the Constitution itself. It remains to consider the questions of whether or not they can sit together and dispose of the matter, and whether the Legislature has any authority to direct that they shall do so. This involves a further consideration of the terms of section 8 of article 6 of the Constitution. This section provides:

"There may be as many sessions of a superior court at the same time as there are judges thereof, including any judge or judges acting upon request, or any judge or judges pro tempore. The judgments, orders, acts and proceedings of any session of any Superior Court held by one or more judges acting upon request, or judge or judges pro tempore, shall be equally effective as if the judge or all of the judges of such court presided at such session." (Italics ours.)

Section 7 of the same article provides as follows:

"If any county, or city and county, other than the city and county of San Francisco, in which there shall be more than one judge of the superior court, the judges of such court may hold as many sessions of said court at the same time as there are judges thereof, and shall apportion the business among themselves as equally as may be."

While, in the city and county of San Francisco, by the terms of section 6 of article 6 of the Constitution, it is also provided that there may be as many sessions of said court at the same time as there are judges thereof, it is provided that they shall select a presiding judge, who shall distribute the business of the court among the judges thereof and prescribe the order of business. It is then provided (and this provision would seem to be applicable to all superior courts):

The judgments, orders, and proceedings of any session of the Superior Court held by any one or more of the judges of said courts, respectively, shall be equally effectual as if all the judges of said respective courts presided at such session." (Italics ours.)

From these sections it is apparent not only that there may be as many sessions of the court as there are superior court judges in the county, including those assigned thereto by the Governor and those acting pro tempore, but also that all of these judges can sit together at one time for the trial of the case; hence, the provision that the decision of one judge sitting at a separate session of the superior court is equally effective as though all the judges of the superior court were sitting and rendering judgment. The Constitution also contemplates a session held by "one or more judges" as well as by one, and by all. The authority is found in section 8, above quoted.

"The judgments," etc., "of any session of the superior court held by one or more judges acting upon request, or judge or judges pro tempore, shall be equally effective as if the judge or all of the judges of such court presided at such session." (Italics ours.)

The question of whether or not the Governor has the power to request 3 superior court judges to sit together and try a single case and thus impose upon them the obligation to do so is not necessarily involved in this proceeding, for, if the 3 judges selected by the Governor, and requested to sit in Sutter county, become thereby invested with the authority so to do under the Constitution, they can so act if they so desire, by reason of their constitutional authority to sit together in the trial of a single case, and this it is alleged they propose to do.

It is provided in section 7 of article 6 of the Constitution, above quoted, that the judges of the superior court of counties other than San Francisco "shall apportion the business among themselves as equally as may be." If we concede that the Legislature had no power to enact legislation requiring that a certain proceeding shall be heard before a session of the superior court presided over by 3 judges, and that the statute so providing has no more effect than as a formal request by the Legislature that it be done, and if we further concede that, while the Governor has authority to name 3 judges and request that they sit in the county for the purpose of trying such a proceeding, such request has no other effect than to create said judges for the time being judges empowered to hold sessions of the superior court in and for the county of Sutter, still, if they then have the discretion to sit together for the consideration of a case or cases submitted to that court, and if they desire to accede to the request of the Governor and to the request of the Legislature so to do, their consent so to do and their action in pursuance of such request and purpose constitutes them judges of the superior court of the county of Sutter, authorized by the Constitution to sit together for the disposition of any case or cases brought before them, including the case they are thus proceeding to try. There is, therefore, no ground for interference by us because of the alleged lack of power of the Legislature to create a department of the superior court of the county of Sutter for the purpose of trying such an action, and no reason to consider the authority of the Governor to compel judges so to act. The question before us thus reduces itself to this simple proposition: Can 3 judges of the superior court of the county of Sutter sit together for the hearing of the proceeding in question? To this question the Constitution makes a plain answer that 3 judges of the superior court may, if they choose, sit together for the purpose of hearing any proceeding over which the court itself has jurisdiction.

[4, 5] Other constitutional questions are raised by the petitioner. It is claimed that the Legislature had no right to direct that 2 out of 3 judges may render a decision in the case. Unless the Constitution authorizes 2 of the 3 judges to render a decision where 3 sit together, it is clear that the Legislature had no power to make such a provision. The general rule, however, is that, where authority is conferred upon a court of more than one judge, the majority can render decisions of the court in the absence of express statutory or constitutional provision to the contrary (15 C. J. [Courts] § 362, p. 965; Austin v. Harbin, 95 Tenn. 598, 32 S. W. 628. That question, however, is not involved here so far as the case has proceeded. The respondents have agreed to sit together and to try the same, and so far have not been called upon to rule upon any matters involved in the case. If upon the conclusion of the case 2 judges take one view and 1 another, the question as to whether or not 2 of the 3 judges can decide the case would be important.

[6] Petitioner contends that the filing of the assessment cannot be treated as the filing of a complaint to validate the assessment, for to do so would be to violate the constitutional provision prohibiting the Legislature from special legislation relating to the practice of the courts. This question need not be considered upon this hearing, for the reason that, if the court has jurisdiction and authority to pass upon the validity of the assessment and the questions arising with relation thereto, the sufficiency of the complaint or document filed to invoke that jurisdiction is one to be determined by them upon the hearing, and does not affect their jurisdiction to pass thereon. Ex parte Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 89 Pac. 605.

[7] It is claimed that the legislation, which prohibits the granting of a motion for a new trial in such a proceeding, and deprives the defeated party of a right to appeal, is unconstitutional, for the reason that it constitutes a special rule of practice. If this be conceded, it is immaterial. That question will arise when the jurisdiction of the courts is invoked either upon a new trial or upon an appeal.

The respondents argue at length that, in the exercise of their powers under the statute in question, they are not acting as judges of the superior court, but as a special board selected for the purpose of determining the particular matter with relation to the assessments, and that while so acting they are merely one of the boards charged with quasi judicial functions in the collection of a tax. It is very clear that the Legislature contemplated a court proceeding. It provided that the judicial proceedings to validate the assessment should be commenced in the superior court. It declared the proceedings to be judicial proceedings, and it is manifest throughout that the whole scheme was to have a judgment of the superior court affirming the validity of the bonds before they were issued, and to permit no other attack thereon, and there is no doubt that the proceedings are in a large part judicial. While many interesting and important questions are thus raised by the petitioner, the only thing that we are called upon to decide, or can properly pass upon in this proceeding, is the jurisdiction of the respondents to proceed in the matter. It is clear that they have such jurisdiction. We are not concerned at the present time with their method of exercising that jurisdiction.

The writ will be denied.

In re AUFRET'S ESTATE.Appeal of STATE.

- 1. Executors and administrators $\hookrightarrow$ 314(7) — Answer to nonresident aliens' petition for distribution of estate more than five years from time of succession held insufficient.

Answer of the state to a petition for distribution of the estate of a decedent, alleging that petitioners are citizens and residents of France, that petition was filed more than five years after decedent's death, and that petitioners have not appeared and claimed the estate within five years after decedent's death, without alleging that petitioners were not residents and citizens of the state or of the United States at the time of the decedent's death, held insufficient to show petitioners not entitled to the estate under Civ. Code, §§ 672, 1404, requiring nonresident aliens to appear and claim property taken by succession within five years from the time of succession.

- 2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 907(2)—Decree of distribution not reversed for want of a finding in absence of evidence.

A decree distributing estate to nonresident alien petitioners more than five years after the time of succession will not be reversed for want of a finding that no claim was made within the five-year period within which claim was required to have been made under Civ. Code, §§ 672, 1404, in the absence of an answer to the petition setting forth a defense, and in the absence of the evidence, since it will be presumed in favor of the judgment that the proof showed that petitioners had within five years after the decedent's death appeared and claimed the succession.

- 3. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 900—Error not presumed.

Error is never presumed, all intendments being in favor of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Suzanne Aufret, deceased. Petition of Mathurin Marie Le Ralle and others for a decree of distribution. From the decree the State of California appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb and Frank L. Guereña, both of San Francisco, for the State.

S. J. Brun and J. A. Fairchild, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal on behalf of the state of California from a decree of distribution of the estate of Suzanne Aufret, deceased, distributing the property to the respondents Mathurin Marie Le Ralle, Marie Louise Bichelot, and Marie Ange Bichelot, in certain proportions not material to the inquiry on this appeal. The record on appeal consists of the following documents:

(1) The petition of the respondent, Mathurin Marie Le Ralle, asking distribution of the estate to the two respondents as heirs at law of the decedent. It alleges the death of the decedent on May 18, 1908; that the estate was in San Francisco, and was personality; that the public administrator had been appointed administrator of the estate, and had duly administered the same; that his accounts had been settled, showing a balance of $2,126.41 in money; that the respondents were the heirs of the decedent, by reason of their relationship to her, as set out in the petition, stating their respective shares and rights therein; and that they were residents of France at the time of the filing of said petition on March 18, 1919. It does not aver that they were aliens, or that they ever were subjects of France.

(2) An answer to the petition by the Attorney General, on behalf of the state. It alleges that the aforesaid respondents are all citizens and residents of the republic of France; that the aforesaid petition for distribution was filed and the claim of succession to the said estate made more than five years after the death of the decedent; and that neither of the respondents had appeared and claimed such estate by succession within five years from the death of the said decedent. It asks that the petition be denied and that the property be distributed to the state.

(3) The decree of distribution appealed from. It recites that on the hearing of the petition evidence was introduced by the respective parties; that the decedent was a resident of Algiers, Africa, at the time of her death, which occurred on May 18, 1908; that the estate was ready for distribution and consisted of the sum of money above stated; that the respondents were her next of kin entitled to succession, and that at the time of her death the respondent, Le Ralle, was and "still is" a resident and subject of France; that one Marie Anne Le Ralle Bichelot, a niece of decedent, was at the death of the decedent a resident and subject of France; that said Marie Anne Le Ralle Bichelot died on March 17, 1913, and was then a resident and subject of France, and left surviving her the respondent Marie Ange Bichelot, her husband, and the respondent Marie Louise Bichelot, her child, "both of whom are residents and subjects of France." It does not state that respondent Le Ralle was a resident or citizen of France at any time between the date of May 18, 1908, and the date of the decree, to wit, September 29, 1919, or that the deceased niece was not a resident of this country from the time of the death of the decedent Aufret until the date of her own death, or that her surviving husband and child aforesaid were not residents and citizens of this country at all times prior to the date of the decree. Thereupon it ordered distribution of the estate to them as aforesaid.

There was no recital or finding upon the subject of their having appeared and claimed the estate within five years after the death of said decedent, except the recital that they were entitled to succession. No bill of exceptions or other statement showing the evidence introduced and proceedings taken at the trial appears in the record. No findings or decision in writing were signed or filed, other than the aforesaid recitals in the decree of distribution.

[1] The answer does not state facts sufficient to show that the respondents are not entitled to the estate under the provisions of our Civil Code on the subject. Section 672 declares that—

"If a nonresident alien takes by succession, he must appear and claim the property within five years from the time of succession, or be barred."

Section 1404 provides, further, that aliens may take by succession the same as citizens—

"but no nonresident foreigner can take by succession unless he appears and claims such succession within five years after the death of the decedent to whom he claims succession."

The answer does not aver that the respondents, or either of them, were not residents and citizens of California, or of the United States, at the time of the death of Suzanne Aufret in 1908, and ever since, until the time of the filing of the answer in the year 1919. If they were such residents or citizens at the time of the death of the decedent, they would immediately succeed to the title, free from the condition expressed in section 1404, and no claim on their part would be necessary to enable them to take by the succession. On the face of the petition and answer thereto since the relationship was not disputed, the court below was authorized to make the distribution to the respondents, as it did. In our consideration of the case, since the answer stated no defense, it may be entirely disregarded.

The recitals of the decree do not preclude the respondent from taking the succession. As to respondent Le Ralle, the recitals do not say that he did not become a resident of this country immediately after the death of the decedent, and remain such resident until the date of the decree, or that he did not become a citizen of this country in that interval, or that he did not appear within the first five years and claim the succession. As to the deceased niece, the recitals do not say that she did not appear and claim the succession before her death, or that her successors, her husband and child, did not do so after her death. The recitals, therefore, do not warrant the conclusion that the decree was erroneous.

[2, 3] We know of no decision to the effect that a judgment or decree for a petitioner may be reversed for want of a finding, where the answer does not set forth any defense. Error is never presumed. All intendments are in favor of the judgment. In the absence of the evidence, it will be presumed that there was proof to the effect that the respondents had, within five years after the death of the decedent, appeared and claimed the succession to the property. It has been said that such—

"claim may be in pais, as by taking possession of the property, or conveying or contracting with respect to it." State v. Smith, 70 Cal. 156, 12 Pac. 123.

We can perceive no reason why this statement is not a correct interpretation of the statute. But even if it were held that the claim must be manifested by some formal document of record or on file in the proceedings in probate for the settlement of the estate, the result would be the same, for, in view of the decree and the lack of any evidence to show that such claim was not so shown, we must presume that it was so manifested.

The decree is affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. COE v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 6525.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 13, 1921.)

Municipal corporations ~~§~~34 — Consolidation not effected by vote on ballot not stating proposition of assuming indebtedness.

Under St. 1913, p. 577, as amended (St. 1915, p. 311) § 5, providing that when a petition for consolidation with another city requests the submission to the electors of the question of assuming the bonded indebtedness of such city, the question of consolidation must be submitted the same as under section 2, requiring only the submission of such question where no assumption of indebtedness is contemplated, except that the notice of election must also distinctly state the proposition of assumption, where such notice, though it included the latter proposition, provided for a ballot containing only the question of consolidation, the proposition of assuming such indebtedness was not submitted to the electors, as required by Const. art. 11, § 8½, subds. 6, 7, and no consolidation was therefore effected, though a majority voted in favor thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Quo warranto by the People of the State of California, on the relation of Charles Coe, against the City of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 183 Pac. 822.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, Delphin M. Delmas, of Los Angeles, and F. G. Blood, of San Diego, for appellant.

Chas. S. Burnell, Wm. P. Mealey, J. H. O'Connor, and Jess E. Stephens, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This proceeding is one of quo warranto instituted by the Attorney General on the relation of Charles Coe. By it the people of the state assail the validity of the consolidation proceedings under which it is claimed by the city of Los Angeles that the city of Sawtelle has become consolidated with, and is a part of, the city of Los Angeles, and under which the latter city is exercising municipal governmental functions over the city of Sawtelle. The judgment of the trial court was in favor of the defendant, and we have before us an appeal from such judgment.

The city of Sawtelle existed up to May 4, 1917, as a separate municipality of Los Angeles county. On that day an election was held therein, pursuant to proceedings theretofore regularly had, to determine whether it should be consolidated with the larger city of Los Angeles, with the result that by a majority of three or four out of a total vote of something over a thousand, it was declared that the cities should consolidate. No question is raised as to the effectiveness of the election held in the city of Los Angeles. The principal claim of appellant is that by reason of the form of ballot used in the election in Sawtelle the question to be submitted to the electors thereof was never submitted to nor voted upon by such electors, with the result that the election therein was ineffective for any purpose. It would follow, the consent of the electors manifested by their votes at such an election being essential to a consolidation, that no consolidation was ever effected.

At the time of the proceedings the city of Los Angeles had a large existing bonded indebtedness, for which, of course, none of the property in the city of Sawtelle was liable. It was proposed, as one of the conditions of consolidation, that for the payment of a very considerable part of such bonded indebtedness the property in the city of Sawtelle should, after consolidation, be subject to taxation in common with the property in the city of Los Angeles as it had theretofore existed. This condition was fully expressed in the petition originating the consolidation proceeding and in the various orders and notices in such proceeding in both cities. It is conceded by both parties, as it must be, that the question to be submitted to the electors of each city was the single and indivisible proposition that the two cities be consolidated with the assumption by the city of Sawtelle of the burden of taxation for the payment of the specified part of the existing bonded indebtedness of the city of Los Angeles, and that unless the proceedings were such as to impose that burden on Sawtelle no consolidation was effected.

The proceedings were had under the provisions of an act "to provide for the consolidation of municipal corporations," approved June 11, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 577), as amended April 29, 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 311). Section 2 of that act, having to do with such proceedings where no assumption of existing bonded indebtedness by either city is contemplated, provided, among other things, that upon the filing of the proper petition with the legislative body of the city having the smaller population, that body must call a special election, "and submit to the electors of such municipal corporation the question whether such municipal corporation shall be consolidated." Notice of such election is required to be given, which notice, among other things, "shall distinctly state the proposition to be submitted" (italics ours). It further provided that upon the ballot there shall be printed the words "Shall the cities of — and — be consolidated?" with the words "Yes" and "No," with voting squares in which the voter was to stamp a cross to indicate his vote. Various other provisions as to time and manner of notice, voting precincts, election officers, polls, etc., are included. Section 3 had to do with the subsequent proceedings in the larger city, and it is here expressly provided that "the question" submitted to the electors thereof "shall be stated in the notice of such election and on the ballots to be used at such election." Section 5, as amended April 29, 1915, had to do with such consolidation where there was an existing bonded indebtedness on the part of either or both of the municipalities as to which assumption was desired. It provided that in such a case "the petition * * * may contain a request that the question to be submitted to the electors of the municipal corporations proposed to be consolidated shall be, whether such municipal corporations shall be consolidated, as hereinbefore in this act provided, and the property in such municipal corporations, shall after such consolidation, be subject to taxation at the same rate, to pay any of such bonded indebtedness specified in said petition." It was then provided that, if such request be made in the petition, "the question of such consolidation shall be submitted to the electors in such municipal corporation not having the greatest population, the same in all respects as upon a petition presented under the provisions of section two, excepting that the notice of election shall, in addition to the matters required by said section, distinctly state that it is proposed that the property in such municipal corporation shall be taxed at the same rate to pay such bonded indebtedness set forth in said petition." (Italics wherever used are ours.)

The petition here did ask for the submission of this question of consolidation and assumption by Sawtelle of the burden of taxation with the city of Los Angeles for certain specified portions of the bonded indebtedness of the city of Los Angeles. The ordinance of Sawtelle calling the election was one "calling a special election to submit to the electors of the city of Sawtelle" the question, "Shall the cities of Sawtelle and Los Angeles be consolidated and the property in the said city of Sawtelle thereafter be taxed * * * to pay for certain bonded indebtedness of said city of Los Angeles." The notice of election distinctly stated the proposition "to be so submitted" as including said burdening of the property in Sawtelle with a part of the Los Angeles indebtedness, such part amounting to something over $30,000,000. The notice, however, provided for an official ballot entirely silent on the question of bonded indebtedness, and containing only the questions, "Shall the cities of Sawtelle and Los Angeles be consolidated?" "Yes," and "Shall the cities of Sawtelle and Los Angeles be consolidated?" "No," with a voting square to the right of and opposite each proposition, in which the voter, to whom such official ballot was delivered at the polling place, was called upon to vote by stamping a cross. The notice of election stated if he stamped a cross in the square after "Yes" his vote should be counted in favor of consolidation, and if in the square after "No" the vote should be counted against the consolidation.

The ballot used at the election was as follows:

"Instructions to Voters.

"To vote on the question or proposition, stamp a cross (X) in the voting square after the word 'Yes' or after the word 'No.' All marks, except the cross (X) are forbidden. All distinguishing marks or erasures are forbidden and make the ballot void. If you wrongly stamp, tear or deface this ballot, return it to the inspector of election and obtain another.

Shall the cities of Sawtelle and Los Angeles consolidate?	Yes	☐
	No	☐

At the time of the proceedings, subdivisions 6 and 7 of section 8½ of article 11 of the state Constitution provided as follows:

"Subdivision 6: " * * * No property in any territory hereafter consolidated with or annexed to any city or county shall be taxed for the payment of any indebtedness of such city or city and county outstanding at the date of such consolidation or annexation and for the payment of which the property in such territory was not, prior to such consolidation or annexation, subject to such taxation, unless there shall have been submitted to the qualified electors of such territory the proposition regarding the assumption of indebtedness as hereinbefore set forth and the same shall have been approved by a majority of such electors voting thereon."

Subdivision 7: "In all cases of * * * consolidation of two or more incorporated cities, assumption of existing bonded indebtedness by * * * either of the cities so consolidating may be made by a majority vote of the qualified electors voting thereon in the territory or city which shall assume an existing bonded indebtedness."

It is obvious, in view of the constitutional provisions set forth, that consolidation upon the basis of subjecting property in Sawtelle to taxation for the payment of any part of the existing bonded indebtedness of Los Angeles was not effected "unless there" was "submitted to the qualified electors" of Sawtelle "the proposition regarding" such assumption, and such proposition was approved "by a majority of such electors voting thereon." This is conceded. But it is claimed, despite the fact that there was no word upon the official ballot to suggest that any question regarding assumption of indebtedness was involved, that the proposition was nevertheless "submitted to the qualified electors" of Sawtelle, and approved by a majority thereof, because of the statement of the proposition "to be * * * submitted" contained in the notice of election, and the requirement in said notice as to the form of ballot to be used at the election, which requirement, it is insisted, was in strict accord with the provisions of the act of June 11, 1913, as amended April 29, 1915, hereinbefore noted. By this notice, it is said, the electors were given full and specific notice that a vote for consolidation meant consolidation with assumption of the indebtedness specified in the notice, and the ballot used being, it is claimed, in the form required by the act, the proposition of assumption of indebtedness was, in fact, submitted to and approved by a majority of the electors.

The only votes for consolidation at the election in Sawtelle were such as were indicated by a cross stamped in the square at the right of the word "Yes" on such a ballot. No opportunity was given to any elector to vote in any other way or upon any proposition other than the one printed therein.

It is to be observed that under our law relative to consolidation of municipal corporations there may be a consolidation without any assumption of existing bonded indebtedness, a consolidation with the assumption of all the existing bonded indebtedness, and a consolidation with an assumption of only a part of the existing bonded indebtedness. The proposition here "to be submitted" was the last of these, a consolidation with an assumption by Sawtelle of a part of the existing bonded indebtedness of Los Angeles. It was placed upon the official ballot furnished the electors just as though it were the first of these, viz. a proposition for consolidation without any assumption of existing bonded indebtedness, a perfectly legal proposition under the law, but, in view of that very fact, one essentially misleading under the circumstances of this case. The ballot professed on its face to tell the voter what proposition he was to vote on, but told only half the story, omitting all reference to the very essential part relative to the assumption of any existing bonded indebtedness, the thing as to which it has been deemed proper by the people of the state to enact a constitutional provision requiring submission of the proposition to the electors and approval by them before it could be accomplished.

The importance of stating upon the official ballot, at least in terms sufficiently specific to bring home to the voter knowledge of the general nature of the proposition upon which he is to vote, has been uniformly recognized by all our laws relative to elections under the so-called Australian ballot system. It is a matter of common knowledge that a great proportion of the electors have no other official knowledge of the matters to be voted on. The power of the Legislature to prescribe the form of ballot may be fully conceded, but certainly it is not to be assumed that such body ever intended to provide a form of ballot that would present a proposition to the elector in such a way that it would appear to him to be an entirely different proposition from the one actually intended, even if we should assume it could legally do this. To our minds, under a fair and reasonable construction of the Consolidation Act of June 11, 1913, as amended April 29, 1915, no support can be found therein for the ballot that was used at the Sawtelle election. It cannot fairly be disputed that it was the design of the act that the proposition to be submitted was to be stated upon the official ballot in terms sufficiently specific to tell the voter in a general way what the whole proposition was. As we have noted, section 2 had to do solely with consolidations without any assumption of existing bonded indebtedness, and it was as to such a consolidation that the requirement as to the statement of the question on the ballot was made. As to such a consolidation, the statement there set forth was a full and complete statement of the proposition to be voted on, and the act, in terms, required this statement to be made on the ballot. In other words, the Legislature said that the proposition must be stated on the official ballot. Can it be fairly doubted that such, viz. that the proposition, must be stated on the ballot, was the intent of the Legislature in section 5 of the act, the section relative to consolidations with assumption of indebtedness? As we have seen, this section in terms states, as the question to be submitted in such a case, a very different question from that submitted under section 2, one expressly including the matter of assumption of indebtedness, and the section expressly provides that "the question of such consolidation" be submitted to the electors, meaning, of course, that the question theretofore described be submitted, with the reasonable implication to our minds that such be the question to be, in substantial part at least, printed on the ballot. In other words, the act, fairly construed, requires the proposition to be submitted to be printed, in substantial part at least, on the official ballot. The language of section 5 of the act that, except as to certain matter required to be distinctly stated in the notice of election, "the question" in such a case is to be submitted "the same in all respects as upon a petition under the provisions of section two," specially relied on by learned counsel, cannot be fairly construed, in the nature of things, as referring to the form of statement of the question on the ballot, and as authorizing a statement misrepresenting the question submitted, and not in accord with the fact. It is the question to be submitted that is to be submitted in all respects as on a petition presented under section 2, and the provision simply means that such question, not some other question, is to be submitted in all respects as the question arising under section 2 is submitted, which, to our mind, includes the statement of such question on the ballot.

The departure from the form of ballot requisite in this case under the consolidation act was so substantial in nature that it cannot be held not to have affected the result. It is very clear that, in view of the facts, it must be held that, under the provisions of that act, the proposition of assumption of indebtedness was never in fact submitted to the electors of Sawtelle or approved by them. This being our conclusion as to the proper construction of the act, it is unnecessary to consider any question as to its validity under a different construction.

From the foregoing it follows that there has been no consolidation of the city of Sawtelle with the city of Los Angeles.

The material facts we have discussed, which are undisputed, are sufficiently shown by the findings to warrant, as asked by the appellants, direction that judgment be entered in their favor.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment, upon the findings already made, in favor of plaintiffs, in accord with the prayer of their complaint.

WILBUR, J. I dissent. The statute under which the election was held expressly provides for the form of ballot. Ballots in this form were used at the election. Section 5 of the act, which regulates the procedure in the event that the assumption of a portion of the bonded indebtedness of the larger city is involved, after expressly providing for the filing of a petition praying that "the property in such municipal corporations, shall after such consolidation, be subject to taxation at the same rate, to pay any of such bonded indebtedness specified in said petition, * * *" then provides, as stated in the main opinion, that "the question of such consolidation shall be submitted to the electors in such municipal corporation not having the greatest population, the same in all respects as upon a petition presented under the provisions of section two, excepting that the notice of election shall, in addition to the matters required by said section, distinctly state that it is proposed that the property in such municipal corporations shall be taxed at the same rate to pay such bonded indebtedness set forth in said petition." (Italics mine.) Thus the Legislature dealt with the question of what differences are to be made in the procedure by reason of the submission to the electors of the question of the assumption of a bonded indebtedness. In the very sentence dealing with this proposition it is provided that the proceedings shall be the same in all respects as in the case where no question of bonded indebtedness is involved, with the single exception that in the former case the notice of election shall specify the bonded indebtedness to be assumed. If the form of ballot is changed so as to include therein a statement of the assumption of indebtedness, then the election is not conducted "in all respects" as it would otherwise be conducted, with the single exception mentioned in the statute; there are two exceptions, because the exception applicable to the notice of election is read into the form of ballot and made applicable thereto, as well as to the notice of election. To express this meaning the clause of the sentence in the statute under consideration should read as follows:

"* * * In all respects as upon a petition presented under the provisions of section two, excepting that (ballot and) the notice of election shall, in addition to the matters required by said section, distinctly state that it is proposed that the property in such municipal corporations shall be taxed at the same rate to pay such bonded indebtedness set forth in said petition."

It is conceded in the main opinion that the form of the ballot is a matter for legislative determination. If that is true, the Legislature of the state in such statute either did or did not provide the form of ballot. If it did provide the form of ballot in the case at bar, what is to be printed thereon as a statement of the proposition to be voted upon, and who is to determine the exact language thereof? The statement of the indebtedness contained in the election notice is as follows:

"That it is proposed to consolidate the city of Sawtelle with the city of Los Angeles (a city contiguous thereto and having a greater population), and that the property in the city of Sawtelle shall, after consolidation, be subject to taxation equally and at the same rate with property in the city of Los Angeles, to pay certain bonded indebtedness of said city of Los Angeles outstanding at the date of consolidation, or indebtedness theretofore authorized, to be represented by bonds of said city of Los Angeles thereafter to be issued from the hereinafter set forth list:

"That the improvements for which such indebtedness of said city of Los Angeles was so incurred or authorized, the amounts of such indebtedness already incurred, outstanding at the date of the first publication of this notice, and the amounts of such indebtedness of said city theretofore authorized and to be represented by bonds hereafter to be issued, and the maximum rate of interest payable or to be payable on such indebtedness, are as follows:

"Water Works Bonds' authorized September 7, 1915, in the sum of $1,500,000, to provide the city of Los Angeles with a water supply in the Owens River Valley, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, of which there is outstanding $1,087,500;

"Water Works Bonds' authorized June 12, 1907, in the sum of $23,000,000, for the purpose of acquiring and constructing waterworks for supplying the inhabitants of the city of Los Angeles with water from the Owens River Valley, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum and 4½ per cent. per annum, of which there is outstanding $20,968,400;

"Electric Plant Bonds' authorized April 19, 1910, in the sum of $3,500,000, for the purpose of acquiring and constructing works for generating and distributing electricity for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the city of Los Angeles with light, heat, and power, and bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum;

"Harbor Improvement Bonds' authorized April 19, 1910, in the sum of $3,000,000, for the purpose of opening streets, constructing docks, wharves, and warehouses at Los Angeles Harbor, and the constructing and maintaining of canals and waterways, and the acquisition of the necessary lands for said improvements, and bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, of which there is outstanding $2,625,000;

"Water Works Bonds,' authorized April 15, 1913, in the sum of $1,500,000, for the purpose of acquiring and constructing works for conducting water of the Los Angeles Aqueduct to the city of Los Angeles for domestic, irrigating, and other uses, and to be known as the 'Los Angeles City Trunk Line' and bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, of which there is outstanding $1,350,000;

"Harbor Improvement Bonds,' authorized

April 15, 1913, in the sum of \$2,500,000, for the purpose of opening streets, constructing docks, wharves, and warehouses at Los Angeles Harbor, and the constructing and maintaining of canals and waterways, and the acquisition of the necessary lands for said improvements, and bearing interest at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum, of which there is outstanding \$2,305,000;

"Electric Plant Bonds" authorized May 8, 1914, in the sum of \$6,500,000, for the purpose of acquiring and constructing works for generating and distributing electricity for the inhabitants of the city of Los Angeles with heat, light, and power, bearing interest at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum."

Is this whole statement of the nature and character of the indebtedness to go on the ballot? Must the ballot show not only the actual bonds sold, but the amount of bonds which the city is already authorized to sell by reason of the voting of the bond issue? If this whole statement is not to be incorporated on the ballot, who is to determine what portion is to be inserted and what is to be omitted? It would seem clear that if the Legislature had contemplated that any statement in regard to the indebtedness should be actually printed on the ballot, they would have indicated some short method of stating the proposition.

The scrupulous care with which the Legislature considered the effect upon the proceedings of the assumption of bonded indebtedness is shown by the special provision contained therein with reference to the particular case where the annexed territory is to assume its proportion of all of the bonded indebtedness of the city. In such case it is provided that it is sufficient in the petition and in all other proceedings to describe the same as the bonded indebtedness of [Los Angeles, for instance]. The particular language is as follows:

"Provided, however, that if such petition contains a request that the property in such municipal corporations be, after such consolidation, subject to taxation to pay all of the bonded indebtedness incurred or authorized of such municipal corporations, such bonded indebtedness and improvements for which such bonded indebtedness was incurred or authorized may be described in such petition and in all other proceedings hereunder as 'the bonded indebtedness of — (insert the names of the municipal corporations),' without specifying the improvements."

If the Legislature has not covered the form of ballot for the particular case where the question of consolidation and assumption of indebtedness are both submitted as a single proposition to the voters, the question is whether the officials conducting the election are charged with the obligation of determining the exact language to be printed upon the ballot. It would seem clear that the authority should be exercised by the legislative body or bodies intrusted with the conduct of the election rather than by the clerk who prepares the form of ballot for the printer.

The board of trustees of the city of Sawtelle by ordinance No. 186 made provision for the conduct of the election in question, and caused a notice of election to be published in accordance therewith, in which it was said:

"That upon the ballots to be used at said special election, in addition to the other matter required by law, there shall be printed the following: 'Shall the cities of Sawtelle and Los Angeles be consolidated?' 'Yes,' and 'Shall the cities of Sawtelle and Los Angeles be consolidated?' 'No;' and there shall be a voting square to the right of and opposite each proposition, and on separate lines."

Then follow directions for the marking of the ballot. This form of ballot was that by which the trustees of Sawtelle submitted to the electors thereof the single question whether the two cities should be consolidated and the territory formerly under the jurisdiction of the city of Sawtelle be subjected to taxation for the portion of the indebtedness of the city of Los Angeles specified in the notice of election.

In so far as this form of ballot fails to show on its face the results with reference to the indebtedness which are to be brought about by the affirmative vote, it is suggested that the ballot is deceptive. Surely the voters must have known that consolidation would have some effect upon the indebtedness of both cities involved. "As a rule, existing debts of the corporation contracted before the limits were extended, unless otherwise provided by law, are chargeable upon the added territory as well as that comprehended by the boundaries before they were altered or extended." McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, § 294. In the absence of any notice to the contrary, therefore, the voters voting at the election would assume that the effect of consolidation would be to charge them proportionately with the entire indebtedness of the city of Los Angeles. It is true, as pointed out in the main opinion, that the particular statute under consideration does permit a consolidation of city governments whereby neither city would assume any of the indebtedness of the other. It is fundamental in the administration of the law that every one is presumed to know the law. The voter, therefore, is presumed to know that he is to ascertain the effect of his ballot in this particular instance by consulting the notice of election and the petition originating the proceedings. No voter is entitled to have printed upon the ballot all of the information which may be necessary for him to exercise an intelligent choice. All he is entitled to in this regard is that his ballot may be deposited by him in such fashion as to clearly indicate his decision upon the question submitted to the voters. And this is usually done by merely stamping a cross in one or another of two places upon the ballot. If there is any difficulty in this case it arises not from any uncertainty in the form of ballot or as to the issues submitted to the voters, but from a failure to incorporate in the ballot information which would assist the voter in determining how he should cast his vote.

I fully agree with the majority of the court that it would have been desirable to have indicated in some form upon the ballot the fact that the effect of the vote was to charge the property within the former territory of Sawtelle with a portion of the indebtedness of the city of Los Angeles, thus calling the attention of the careless voter to the significance of his vote; but the determination of the form of the ballot is one for the Legislature, and I think that the form of the ballot is so clearly indicated in the statute in question that no executive officer charged with the preparation of ballots could think of departing from the plain terms of the statute nor would well advise city councils to do so. They would do what was done in this case to clarify the exact proposition submitted to the voters by a declaration thereof in the ordinance calling the election and in the notice of election, and by expressly providing for the form of the ballot which would be used in the determination of the question submitted, such form to accord with the statutory provision.

There was no chance for the voters of Sawtelle to be defrauded or misled in this matter. If they were not informed as to the terms of the statute, and if they were unfamiliar with the express statute, and merely relied upon general principles in voting, they knew that the property in the city of Sawtelle would have been charged with a larger indebtedness than that actually assumed by the vote for consolidation.

In view of the opinion of the majority of the court, the constitutional question raised in the petition for rehearing in this court becomes unimportant to a decision. If, however, the statute is construed as I contend it should be, the constitutional question is involved, and, as a conclusion in favor of the appellant would require a concurrence on my part in the main opinion, I briefly state my views in relation thereto. Section 8½, art. 11, of the Constitution, as amended in 1918, quoted in the main opinion, provides that no property in any territory hereinafter consolidated with or annexed to a city shall be taxed for the payment of any outstanding indebtedness of the city unless the proposition of incurring the assumption of indebtedness is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon. If this section requires that the fact of indebtedness and of its proposed assumption be printed upon the ballot, then the statute under consideration as construed by me would be unconstitutional, for it provides for the consolidation of cities and an assumption of indebtedness without such a statement on the ballot. But in order to submit a question to the voters it is not necessary that it should be printed upon the ballot; for instance, constitutional amendments are submitted to the people without printing more than a mere indication of the tenor thereof upon the ballot. The section of the Constitution under consideration (article 11, § 8½) expressly provides:

"The Legislature shall enact such general laws as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section and such general or special laws as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of subdivisions 5 and 6 of this section. * * *"

In the constitutional provision providing for the initiative and referendum (article 4, § 1), the Secretary of State is required to submit to the electors for their approval or rejection the initiative or referendum matters, but the form of the ballot by which they are to be submitted is not provided therein. It is further provided:

"This section is self-executing, but legislation may be enacted to facilitate its operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either the provisions of this section or the powers herein reserved."

The form of ballot is in the control of the Legislature. Haskell v. City of Long Beach, 153 Cal. 543, 96 Pac. 92. I therefore conclude that the city authorities having pursued the method indicated by the Legislature for ascertaining the will of the voters, and the voters having expressed their will in the form provided by law, that the annexation of Sawtelle to Los Angeles has been effected, and that the territory within the former boundaries of Sawtelle is liable to be assessed with other property within the city of Los Angeles for that portion of the indebtedness set out in the notice of election.

Ex parte HEIKICH TERUI. (Cr. 2390.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 12, 1921.)

1. Treaties ⇐1—Alien Poll Tax Law held void as to Japanese subjects.

Alien Poll Tax Law, enacted pursuant to Const. art. 13, § 12, requiring alien male inhabitants to pay a poll tax without making such requirement applicable to similarly situated citizens of the United States, held void as to Japanese subjects, being violative of the treaty between the United States and Japan of April 5, 1911 (37 Stat. 1504), providing that the citizens or subjects of each of the parties shall enjoy in the territories of others the same rights and privileges as are granted to native citizens or subjects.

2. Treaties ⇐2—May provide that subjects of foreign nation shall not be discriminated against in taxation.

Under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, art. 2, § 2, the United States has the power to provide in a treaty with a foreign nation that the subjects of such country in the territory of the United States shall not be discriminated against in the matter of taxation by reason of their alien citizenship.

3. Treaties ⇐8—Treaties between United States and Japan relating to rights of Japanese in "territories" of United States applicable to territory of the several states.

The treaty between the United States and Japan of April 5, 1911 (37 Stat. 1504), relating to the rights of the subjects of each of the parties in the "territories" of the other, held applicable to subjects in Japan in the several states as well as in the territorial possessions of the United States.

In Bank.

Application for writ of habeas corpus by Heikich Terui against the Chief of Police of the City of Oakland. Petitioner discharged from custody.

Albert H. Elliott and Guy C. Calden, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The petitioner, an alien male inhabitant of the state of California of the age of about 35 years and a subject of the empire of Japan, is held in custody by the chief of police of the city of Oakland, upon a complaint charging him with having failed to register as required by the terms of an act of the Legislature, entitled "An act to add a new chapter to title nine of part three of the Political Code, to be numbered chapter nine thereof, embracing sections three thousand eight hundred thirty-nine to three thousand eight hundred fifty-six, both inclusive, providing for the levy and collection of poll taxes pursuant to the provisions of section twelve of article thirteen of the state constitution as adopted November 3, 1920," enacted at the legislative session of 1921.

This act, commonly known as the alien poll tax law, provides that—

"Every alien male inhabitant of this state over twenty-one years of age and under sixty years of age, except paupers, idiots and insane persons, must annually pay a poll tax of ten dollars. * * *

In the year 1921 this tax becomes due and payable on the 1st day of August, and delinquent if not paid on or prior to December 1st. It contains provisions requiring "every person liable to pay such poll tax" to register as provided in the act, such registration in the year 1921 to be effected on or before July 31st.

As is stated in the title to the act, it was enacted pursuant to the mandate of section 12 of article 13 of the Constitution as amended under the initiative provisions of our Constitution, at the general election of 1920. Prior to the amendment, this section of the Constitution was as follows:

"No poll tax or head tax for any purpose whatsoever shall be levied or collected in the state of California."

By the amendment of 1920 it was made to read as follows:

"The Legislature shall provide for the levy of an annual poll tax, and the collection thereof by assessors, of not less than four dollars on every alien male inhabitant of this state over twenty-one and under sixty years of age, except paupers, idiots and insane persons. Said tax shall be paid into the county school fund in which county it is collected."

The legislation, both in the Constitution and the act, is purely for revenue purposes, an exercise solely of the power of taxation, and contains nothing in the nature of an exercise of the police power of regulation; the provisions relative to registration being solely for the purpose of facilitating the collection of the tax from those liable therefor, and merely incidental to the matter of collecting the tax. It is indeed expressly declared in section 2 of the act that it is one "providing for a tax levy," and therefore that it "shall take effect immediately." It is provided in the act that "every person subject to the payment of the poll tax hereby imposed who shall, 1. Fail, neglect or refuse to register as herein provided" shall be "guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished in the manner provided by law." It should be noted that under our laws no poll tax or capitation tax, or its equivalent, is levied upon citizens of the state.

Petitioner seeks his discharge from cus-today, claiming that the complaint fails to state a public offense. His specific claims in this regard are: First, that the act is entirely ineffective as to all aliens who are subjects of the empire of Japan in view of a provision in the existing treaty between this country and the empire of Japan, proclaimed April 5, 1911; and, second, that the act is void as to all alien inhabitants of the state in that it denies to persons within the jurisdiction of the state the equal protection of the laws, in violation of a provision of section 1 of article 14, Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

As to the first claim, viz. that the act is ineffective as to all aliens who are subjects of the empire of Japan in view of a provision in the existing treaty between this country and the empire of Japan, proclaimed April 5, 1911 (37 Stat. 1504):

Article 1 of this treaty, after providing that "the citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade," etc., "and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established," provides:

"They shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatever, to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are or may be paid by native citizens or subjects.

"The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall receive, in the territories of the other, the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or may be granted to native citizens or subjects, on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the native citizens or subjects."

It is, of course, obvious that the alien poll tax law of California does, without any pretext whatever, require Japanese subjects, as well as all other aliens, to pay taxes both other and higher than those required to be paid by citizens of the United States. No poll tax or its equivalent is required to be paid by the latter, and the alien is liable equally with the citizen for all other kinds of taxes imposed, with the result that this poll tax is an additional tax imposed solely by virtue of his being an alien. It would seem also that the effect of such a tax would be that the alien is not allowed to enjoy in respect to "the most constant protection and security for their persons and property" the "same rights and privileges as are or may be granted to native citizens, * * * on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the native citizens. * * *" No one can fairly dispute that the act openly and avowedly discriminates against alien residents in the matter of taxation for revenue purposes.

It cannot be disputed at this stage in our history that, if these provisions of the treaty were intended to be applicable in the several states of the United States, as well as in its other territorial possessions, and are within the proper scope of the treaty power of the United States, they render our alien poll tax absolutely ineffective as against alien residents who are Japanese citizens or subjects. Certain propositions with relation to treaties between the United States and other nations are now so thoroughly settled, in view of express constitutional provisions and the decisions thereunder, that they are practically elementary law. While the government of the United States is a government of delegated powers, the states retaining such powers as they have not delegated or surrendered to it, the people of the several states have surrendered the whole treaty-making power to the federal government, and vested it in the President and Senate of the United States (section 2, art. 2, Const. U. S.), and have expressly excluded each state from all power in this regard (section 10, art. 1, Const. U. S.). They have further expressly declared in the federal Constitution as follows:

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding." Section 2, art. 6.

From the first decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this subject, rendered in 1796 (Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. 199, 1 L. Ed. 568), to the present day, it is uniformly declared, as the express language of the federal Constitution unequivocally requires, that as to all matters within the treaty-making power conferred by the federal Constitution, a treaty entered into on the part of the United States by the President with the concurrence of two-thirds of the United States Senate is a part of the supreme law of the land, binding on all states and to which all state enactments in conflict therewith must yield. See Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 266, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628. As was said in Ware v. Hylton, supra:

"It is the declared will of the people of the United States that every treaty made by the authority of the United States shall be superior to the Constitution and laws of any individual state, and their will alone is to decide. If a law of a state, contrary to a treaty, is not void, but voidable only by a repeal or nullification by a state Legislature, this certain consequence follows, that the will of a small part of the United States may control or defeat the will of the whole."

As was said in Hauenstein v. Lynham, supra:

"It must always be borne in mind that the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States are as much a part of the law of every state as its own local laws and Constitution."

The learned Attorney General of course does not dispute these well-settled propositions.

[1, 2] It is suggested, however, that the subject here covered by the treaty, including, as it does, matters relative to the exercise of their sovereign power of taxation by the several states, is not within the proper scope of the treaty-making power conferred by the people in the federal Constitution. It is to be noted at once that the treaty provisions in no degree purport to limit the several states in the matter of imposing or collecting taxes, except simply to require that in such matter there shall be no discrimination as against Japanese citizens residing therein, the express provision with regard to taxes being that neither American citizens residing in Japan nor Japanese citizens residing in America shall be compelled "to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are or may be paid by native citizens or subjects." This is simply a provision to prevent discrimination on the part of one against the subjects of the other residing in its territory, placing, in so far as the kind and amount of taxes are concerned, native citizens and the subjects of the other nation upon an equal footing.

It may at once be conceded for all the purposes of this case that there are matters without the proper scope of the treaty power of the United States, matters which could not fairly be held to be included in the grant of that power by the people of the several states to the federal government. We are aware of no decision of the Supreme Court of the United States by which a treaty provision has been declared to be beyond the treaty power, but it may fairly be claimed that there are such matters. But that the treaty-making power includes such matters as are covered by the provisions here involved cannot be seriously questioned. The rule, as declared in Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 266, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 297 (33 L. Ed. 642), by the Supreme Court of the United States, the ultimate authority on such a question is that "the treaty power of the United States extends to all proper subjects of negotiation between our government and the governments of other nations," and, with regard to such matters, is "in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the government or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the government itself and of that of the states." The court there said that it would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the government or in that of one of the states, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter, without its consent. The court then said:

"But, with these exceptions [i. e., those stated in portion last above quoted], it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country"—citing cases, including our own case of People v. Gerke, 5 Cal. 381.

In Geofroy v. Riggs, supra, it was held that it was clear that the protection which should be afforded to the citizens of one country owning property in another, and the manner in which that property may be transferred, devised, or inherited, are fitting subjects for such negotiation and of regulation by mutual stipulations between the two countries. See, also, in this connection, Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 489, 490, 25 L. Ed. 628. It seems to us to be too clear to admit of argument that the protection which should be afforded to the citizens of one country residing in another against discrimination in matters of taxation based solely on their alien citizenship is a proper subject of negotiation between our government and the governments of other nations and that there is nothing in the provisions under discussion that was beyond the treaty power of the United States.

[3] We have assumed thus far, contrary to a suggestion of the learned Attorney General, that the provisions of the treaty here involved must be construed as applicable to the several states of the United States, as well as in its other territorial possessions. As to this there cannot be the slightest doubt. There is no word in the treaty to indicate an intention to make such an unreasonable limitation on its provisions relating to the rights of the citizens of one nation "in the territories of the other," and one so contrary to the whole intent and purpose of a treaty between sovereign nations. The word "territories" used in article 1 of the treaty was undoubtedly used as meaning the entire domain over which dominion was exercised by each of the sovereign nations, which, of course, in so far as the treaty-making power was concerned, included all of the states of the United States.

There is no possible escape from the conclusion that, in view of the provisions of the existing treaty between the United States and Japan, the alien poll tax law is ineffective for any purpose with relation to any citizen of Japan. The complaint under which petitioner is held charges only a violation of this act. It therefore fails to state a public offense as against him.

In view of our conclusion on the matter discussed, it is unnecessary in this case to discuss the claim made under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

It is ordered that the petitioner be discharged from custody.

Ex parte KOTTA. (Cr. 2394.)

1. Constitutional law $\S$ 229(1), 283—Taxation $\S$ 55—Alien Poll Tax Law held unconstitutional.

The Alien Poll Tax Law of 1921, imposing a poll tax on alien inhabitants without requiring such tax to be paid by similarly situated citizens of the United States, held violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, $\S$ 1.

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 210—Word "person" within equal protection of laws clause includes aliens.

The word "person" within Const. U. S. Amend. 14, $\S$ 1, prohibiting a state from denying to any "person" within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, includes aliens.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Person.]

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 211—Laws placing a higher burden on only a portion of similarly situated persons denies to such portion the equal protection of the laws.

Tax laws that avowedly lay a different and higher burden upon a portion only of all those similarly situated, that is, all those among whom no difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the matter exists, exempting the remaining portion from the burden, are not equal laws, and their enforcement would deprive persons so burdened of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, $\S$ 1.

Application by Guillermo D. Kotta for writ of habeas corpus against the Chief of Police of the City and County of San Francisco. Petitioner discharged from custody.

M. A. Thomas, Albert H. Elliott, and Guy C. Calden, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The petitioner, an alien male inhabitant of the state of California of the age of about 48 years, and a citizen of the United States of Mexico, is held in custody by the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco under a complaint charging him with failure to register as required by the terms of the act known as the alien poll tax law of 1921, discussed in the opinion filed in the matter of Terui on Habeas Corpus (Crim. No. 2390) 200 Pac. 954, on September 12, 1921. His case is the same as that of Terui in all material respects, except that he claims no protection under any treaty. It is said by his counsel that there is no treaty provision in any treaty between the United States and the United States of Mexico that affords protection against such discrimination against resident aliens in the matter of taxation as is created by the alien poll tax act. His sole claim is that this act is void as to all alien inhabitants of the state, in that it denies to persons within the jurisdiction of the state the equal protection of the laws, in violation of a provision of section 1 of article 14, Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The section referred to is as follows:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." (Italics are ours.)

It is upon the portion of this section that we have italicized that the claim of petitioner is based.

All that we have said with relation to this legislation (the alien poll tax act of 1921) in our opinion in the Terui Case is applicable in this case and need not be repeated here, further than to say that the law was enacted solely in the exercise of the power of taxation for the purpose of raising revenue for state purposes, containing no provision whatever attributable to the exercise of the police power of regulation, and that it imposes on alien inhabitants of the state between certain ages, solely because of their alien character, a tax different in kind from and additional to the taxes required to be paid by all inhabitants, citizens, and aliens, alike. No such tax or its equivalent is imposed by our laws on any except alien inhabitants. The law thus imposes an additional burden in the matter of taxation upon such aliens solely because of their alien character, and in this way discriminates against them.

[1] This being the situation, in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, there is no escape from the conclusion that the alien poll tax law cannot be enforced, for the reason that by its enforcement the state of California would deny to persons within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws, in violation of the provision of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

[2] It is settled that the word "person" as used in this amendment includes aliens. It was said in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 1070 (30 L. Ed. 220):

"The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution is not confined to the protection of citizens. It says: 'Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.' These provisions are universal in their application, to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, without regard to any differences of race, of color, or of nationality."

The rights of subjects of the emperor of China were here being discussed. In Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 36 Sup. Ct. 7, 60 L. Ed. 131, L. R. A. 1916D, 545, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283, decided November 1, 1915, the rights of an alien who was a citizen of Austria and resident of the state of Arizona, were involved. The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Hughes, said (239 U. S. 39, 36 Sup. Ct. 9, 60 L. Ed. 131, L. R. A. 1916D, 545, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283):

"Upon the allegations of the bill, it must be assumed that the complainant, a native of Austria, has been admitted to the United States under the federal law. He was thus admitted with the privilege of entering and abiding in the United States, and hence of entering and abiding in any state in the Union. * * * Being lawfully an inhabitant of Arizona, the complainant is entitled under the Fourteenth amendment to the equal protection of its laws. The description—'any person within its jurisdiction'—as it has frequently been held, includes aliens."

The court then quoted approvingly the portion of the opinion in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, supra, that we have quoted above. See, also, Fraser v. McConway, (C. C.) 82 Fed. 257. Petitioner, therefore, though an alien inhabitant of California, is by this provision of the federal Constitution guaranteed the equal protection of the laws of California.

The meaning of "the equal protection of the laws" thus guaranteed by the federal Constitution to every person within the jurisdiction of a state is not left in doubt by the decisions in so far as such an act as the one here involved is concerned. In Yick Wo v. Hopkins, supra, it is said that "the equal protection of the laws is a pledge to the protection of equal laws." This was approvingly quoted in Truax v. Raich, supra. In Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 359 (28 L. Ed. 923), the Supreme Court of the United States declared that it was undoubtedly intended thereby:

"That equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and * * * enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of any one except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition," etc. (Italics ours.)

As is shown by the opinion in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, supra, the legislation enacted by Congress for the enforcement of the amendment, popularly known as the civil rights statutes, declared that—

"All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every state and territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other" (Italics ours.)

What is said in Barbier v. Connolly, supra, and the federal statute just quoted sufficiently shows the subject-matter as to which the alien inhabitant is given by the Constitution "a pledge of the protection of equal laws," laws free from discrimination based solely on his alien character. Stated very generally, the requirement is for equal protection and security for all, citizens and aliens alike, under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights, and in the imposition of burdens, such as penalties, taxes, etc. As is stated in the opinion in Truax v. Raich, supra, the constitutional guaranty, in so far as an alien is concerned has no application to laws of a state relating to such matters as the regulation or distribution of the public domain or of the common property or resources of the people of the state, or, it is suggested, laws relating to the devolution of the real property therein. See Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 39, 40, 36 Sup. Ct. 7, 60 L. Ed. 131, L. R. A. 1916D, 545, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283. But that it does guarantee the alien "equal laws" in the matter of the imposition of such burdens on him and his property as taxes seems clear. No question of discriminatory taxation laws was directly involved in the decisions of the Supreme Court that we have cited but the rule of these decisions is clearly applicable to such a case. In the Railroad Tax Cases (C. C.) 13 Fed. 722, Justice Field, in his opinion in the Circuit Court, said:

"The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, in declaring that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, imposes a limitation upon the exercise of all the powers of the state which can touch the individual or his property, including among them that of taxation." Whatever the state may do, it cannot deprive any one within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws. * * * Unequal exactions in every form, or under any pretense, are absolutely forbidden, and of course unequal taxation, for it is in that form that oppressive burdens are usually laid."

See, also, Fraser v. McConway, etc., Co. (C. C.) 82 Fed. 257; Juniata Limestone Co. v. Fagley, 187 Pa. 193, 40 Atl. 977, 42 L. R. A. 442, 67 Am. St. Rep. 579.

[3] This is so clearly true, in view of the general principles declared by the United States Supreme Court in the cases we have cited, as not to require discussion. Tax laws that avowedly lay a different and higher burden upon a portion only of all those similarly situated, that is, all those among whom no difference "which bears a reasonable and just relation" to the matter exists (Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 155, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 257 [41 L. Ed. 666]), exempting the remaining portion from the burdens, are not "equal laws," and their enforcement would deprive the persons so burdened of the equal protection of the laws. We do not see how this can be, fairly questioned.

That the act does this very thing is clear. The sole distinction between the male inhabitants of California so burdened with the poll tax and those not so burdened, in so far as all matters material to imposition of the tax is concerned, is that the former are aliens and the latter citizens. This is the sole basis of the attempted classification. As was said in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, supra, 165 U. S. at page 165, 17 Sup. Ct. at page 261, 41 L. Ed. 666:

"It is apparent that the mere fact of classification is not sufficient to relieve a statute from the reach of the equality clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and that in all cases it must appear not only that a classification has been made, but also that it is one based upon some reasonable ground—some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification—and is not a mere arbitrary selection."

In the case at bar the only difference is such that, in view of the language of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment relative to equal protection of the laws, it cannot in the nature of things constitute a proper basis for classification; for the plain effect of that section is to forbid any distinction in such a matter as this based on that fact alone.

It follows from what we have said that the alien poll tax law must be held to be in violation of the terms of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which by the express terms of section 2 of article 6 thereof is declared to be "the supreme law of the land," binding on the judges in every state, "anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding." It is therefore ineffective for any purpose.

The petitioner is discharged from custody.

TURNER v. FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND. (L. A. 5704.)*

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 16, 1921. Rehearing Denied Oct. 13, 1921.)

1. Principal and surety ⇐97—Unauthorized alteration in obligation assumed releases guarantor.

The rule that guarantor or surety may insist on the strict terms of his contract, and any unauthorized alteration of the obligation releases the surety, is largely relaxed as far as surety companies are concerned.

2. Attachment ⇐337—Amendment of complaint increasing amount of damages does not discharge surety on bond for release.

A surety company, executing a bond to release an attachment, such bond undertaking to pay any judgment obtained in the action, is not discharged, under Civ. Code, § 2819, by an amendment of the complaint, not setting up a new cause of action, but merely increasing the amounts demanded for breach of contract.

3. Attachment ⇐337—Surety on bond to release attachment is not discharged by death of defendant before judgment.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 385, 1504, 1637, death of defendant in an attachment suit, who has given bond to discharge the attachment, and the revival of the suit against his administrators, does not discharge a surety company executing the release bond, and such company is liable on the bond, to the extent of the penalty thereof, for the amount of judgment against the administrator.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Frank C. Turner against the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. E. Vermilyea and S. L. Carpenter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stephens & Stephens, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Short, Lindsay & Woolley, of Fresno, amici curiæ.

SLOANE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment holding the defendant corporation liable upon a common-law bond given on release of an attachment in an action between the plaintiff and one John Howse. This bond recites that an action was pending wherein it was claimed that there was due and owing from the defendant Howse to the plaintiff the sum of $23,401.76, and that an attachment had been issued against the property of defendant, and that the defendant was desirous of releasing said property from the attachment. It then provides that—

"The undersigned, Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, * * * in consideration of the premises, and also in consideration of the release from said attachment of the property attached, as above mentioned, does hereby undertake in the sum of $24,000, and promises that, in case the plaintiff recovers judgment in the action, the defendant will, on demand, pay to the plaintiff the amount of whatever judgment may be recovered in said action, together with interest and costs."

The effect of this bond is that the security company guarantees the payment by the defendant on demand of any judgment recovered in said action, and, on default in such payment, to indemnify the plaintiff to the amount of the judgment, not to exceed the sum of $24,000. Pending the final determination of this suit, the defendant died, and the action was carried on against his administrators, and judgment was obtained against them for the sum of $30,813.51 and costs, to be paid from the assets of deceased defendant's estate in the due course of administration. After this judgment became final, plaintiff demanded the payment thereof from the administrators of decedent's estate, and, payment being refused, this suit was brought against the surety company upon the bond given for release of attachment, and the judgment was obtained which is the basis of this appeal. The judgment against the surety company is for $24,000, the full penal sum of the bond, together with interest thereon and costs.

The principal contention of the appellant surety company is that it was exonerated from the penalty of its undertaking by reason of amendments to the complaint in the original action, made after the bond was executed, whereby the liability of the surety was changed. The action as set forth in the original complaint against the defendant Howse alleged a contract between the plaintiff and said Howse relating to the subdivision and sale of a tract of land, whereby the latter had become liable to plaintiff for $14,800 for failure to pay a note and mortgage upon plaintiff's land, for $5,000 damages for failure to pave a certain street, and $3,601.76 on the release and transfer of certain lots.

This was the statement of the cause of action at the time the bond on release of attachment was made. Subsequently plaintiff filed an amended complaint, in which he alleged his claims under the same general contract, upon the note and mortgage for the same amount as in the original complaint, but set out in the second count, in place of the allegation of failure of defendant to "grade or pave one street" to his damage in the sum of $5,000, that the defendant "wholly failed" to put in the street work, sidewalks, and curbs as required by the contract, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $7,500, and as a third count, instead of 17 lots released at $390.62 each, in the sum of $3,601.67 and interest, as pleaded in the original complaint, he alleged 23 lots released at $390.62 each, in the entire sum of $5,945.48. The amended complaint also contained an item of $458.11 for failure of defendant to pay certain taxes covered by the contract, but this was not allowed in the judgment.

Without going into further details as to the amendment of the pleadings, it is sufficient to say that both the original and amended complaints were upon the same general contract and stated the same cause of action. The amendments did, however, serve to state a greater liability against the defendant than could have been recovered under the original complaint; and whereas, the amount demanded under the original complaint, as recited in the bond for release of attachment, was $23,401.76, the amounts claimed under the amended complaint aggregated $27,903.59, besides interest and costs, and the judgment recovered amounted to $30,813.51. It appears from the recitals of the judgment that the above total was made up of $17,296.94 on the first count, $4,988.15 on the second, and $8,528.42 on the third count.

[1] It is the settled law of this state that a guarantor or surety may stand upon the strict terms of his contract, and that any unauthorized alteration of the obligation assumed, whether detrimental to the guarantor or not, releases him from liability. Driscoll v. Winters, 122 Cal. 65, 54 Pac. 387; Tuohy v. Woods, 122 Cal. 665, 55 Pac. 683; First Congregational Church v. Lowrey, 175 Cal. 124, 165 Pac. 440; Michelin Tire Co. v. Bentel, 193 Pac. 770. This rule is succinctly stated in our Codes. Section 2819 of the Civil Code, relating to the exoneration of guarantors, provides that—

"A guarantor is exonerated, except so far as he may be indemnified by the principal, if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, or the remedies or rights of the creditor against the principal, in respect thereto, in any way impaired or suspended."

The latest expression of this court on the subject recognized this application of the rule to undertakings on release of attachments, as affected by subsequent amendments of the complaint by releasing the sureties. Michelin Tire Co. v. Bentel, supra. In that case the undertaking of the bond was to "pay the amount of the judgment recovered in the action" in case of default by the defendant in making such payment. In the Michelin Case, however, an entirely new cause of action was set out in the amended complaint. The plaintiff had instituted suit upon a claim which at the time belonged to another related corporation, and therefore the plaintiff named had no cause of action at the time the undertaking on release of attachment was given. By stipulation between the plaintiff and defendants an amended complaint was filed, setting up an assignment of the claim to the plaintiff corporation, made subsequently to the release of attachment. This was equivalent to the commencement of a new action, and the judgment obtained was not in the action in which the undertaking was given. That decision is therefore easily distinguishable from the one before us on its facts, as here there was no change in the cause of action, and the judgment sued on was the judgment recovered in the action which was pending when the bond was given.

It is argued, however, that the reasoning of the opinion applies in this case. It is there said, quoting from Cassidy v. Saline County Bank, 7 Ind. T. 567, 104 S. W. 838:

"The surety upon a bond given by the defendant to dissolve an attachment takes his obligation with reference to the cause as it then stands; and, should the plaintiff afterward so change his pleadings as to make virtually a new action, how can it be said that the surety would have obligated himself under such new order of things? He may have been satisfied that the plaintiff could not recover in the action, and may therefore have been willing to give the defendant present relief by signing as his bondsman, though he would not have signed had the suit been well grounded."

The amendment above referred to consisted in changing the cause of action from one on open contract to one on a judgment obtained in another state upon the same contract. The force of the decision in its application to the matter before us is, however, lost by the circumstance that the appellate court there held that the amended complaint stated a new cause of action. The opinion in Michelin Tire Co. v. Bentel, supra, further quoting from Quillen v. Arnold, 12 Nev. 244, recognizes the doctrine that while the power to allow amendments—

"may be and is very liberally exercised, and very properly so, as between the parties to the action in furtherance of justice, it cannot be exercised with the effect of changing the rights and liabilities of third parties."

In all but one of the cases cited in the Michelin Tire Co. Case in support of the opinion, there was by the amendments complained of either a change of the cause of action, or a change of parties to the action. In Prince v. Clark, 127 Mass. 599, there is some support to appellant's contention for exoneration, on the face of the opinion. The action in that case as originally brought was for a balance on account after allowing certain credits. The complaint was amended by omitting the credits and suing on the entire claim. This was held such a variance as to release the securities. There are other decisions cited by appellant open to the same construction.

[2] The weight of authority, however, seems to sustain the rule that unless the amendments are such as to substitute new or different parties, or to state a new and independent cause of action, the sureties or guarantors are bound by the judgment. It is generally held that, where a surety's obligation discharges from attachment the assets of the debtor upon which the attaching creditor had a right to rely for security of his claim, such surety ought not to be exempted from liability unless the obligation with reference to which he had contracted has been essentially changed without his consent. Having made himself responsible for "any judgment recovered in the action," it would be unduly limiting his agreement to permit him to plead successfully an amendment that did not alter the "nature and character" of the original claim. Warren Bros. v. Kendrick, 113 Md. 603, 77 Atl. 847, 140 Am. St. Rep. 445; Russia Cement Co. v. Le Page, 174 Mass. 349, 55 N. E. 70; Jayne's Ex'x v. Platt, 47 Ohio St. 262, 24 N. E. 262, 21 Am. St. Rep. 810; Driscoll v. Holt, 170 Mass. 262, 49 N. E. 309; Doran v. Cohen, 147 Mass. 342, 17 N. E. 647; Morton v. Shaw, 190 Mass. 554, 77 N. E. 633; Hammond v. Starr, 79 Cal. 556, 21 Pac. 971.

The confusion that has arisen in this case, and in some of the authorities cited, has resulted from a failure to distinguish between the complaint and the cause of action attempted to be stated in the complaint. The complaint filed in a suit is not the obligation, nor the basis of the obligation of the principal which the surety guarantees. The contract of the surety company in this action was that it would undertake that the defendant would pay to plaintiff the "amount of whatever judgment may be recovered in said action." The obligation which it was sought to enforce against the principal through the suit and judgment demanded was the payment of the liability arising under the contracts set out in the original complaint. There was no alteration or modification of that contractual liability of the defendant. The plaintiff was not estopped by his original complaint from making any corrections or supplying any omissions by amendment which were proper or necessary to fully set forth the liability of the defendant under the contract sued on. The surety entered upon its contract to guarantee payment of the judgment, any judgment on the cause of action, with presumptive understanding that the original complaint might be amended to cover any damages which had occurred prior to commencement of suit from a breach of the contracts which constituted the cause of action though omitted from the original complaint. Bierce v. Waterhouse, 219 U. S. 320, 31 Sup. Ct. 241, 55 L. Ed. 237.

If the liability of the release bond had been predicated upon a judgment on the precise facts pleaded in the original cause of action, then such complaint would be the measure of the liability; but the surety contracted upon the basis of whatever judgment was obtained in the action, and it will be presumed to have taken into consideration the possibility of changes by amendment in the extent and nature of the liability incident to the cause of action. Indeed, the surety company here did safeguard itself from any material increase in its liability through amendments to the complaint by fixing the penalty of its bond at a sum only sufficiently greater than demanded by the prayer of the original complaint to cover prospective interest and costs.

[3] Appellant makes the further point on this appeal that the bond is exonerated, or at least the right of recovery suspended by the death of the defendant and the prosecution of the action to judgment against the administrators of his estate. It is true that the death of the defendant is held to operate to dissolve an attachment. Myers v. Mott, 29 Cal. 359, 89 Am. Dec. 49; Ham v. Cunningham, 50 Cal. 365. The right to pursue the debtor's property under attachment ends with his death, the attached property falls into the estate, and the only right left the attaching creditor as against the decedent's estate is to follow it under the modes of disposition provided by the probate law. But here the remedy of the plaintiff is not concerned with the estate of the deceased debtor. He has an independent remedy created by his contract with the surety company.

That fact is also an answer to the objection that there is no judgment that is enforceable except in the due course of administration. As against the administrators and the property of the estate the judgment recovered is only payable from the assets of the estate in due course of administration. It is the law of California, as affecting the administration of estates, that such judgment is only the equivalent of an allowed and approved claim. Code Civ. Proc. § 1504; Hall v. Cayot, 141 Cal. 13, 74 Pac. 299; Estate of Hellier, 169 Cal. 77, 145 Pac. 1008; Haub v. Leggett, 160 Cal. 491, 117 Pac. 556.

There appears to be no reason, however, for putting this limitation upon the effect of such judgment in fixing the liability of a guarantor under an original and independent contract to respond in the penal sum of its undertaking upon failure of payment on demand of any judgment in the action. The judgment against the administrators is still a judgment, qualified only by the limitation that it may be contested by the heirs upon the settlement of the account of the administrator. Code Civ. Proc. § 1637; Haub v. Leggett, supra. The judgment in this action fixes the liability of the surety, so far as the conclusiveness of the judgment on the original claim is concerned, and the plaintiff is under obligation to look no further than to his surety in enforcing collection. Moreover, it is pleaded in the complaint, and found by the court, that the appellant's liability on this bond has been presented and allowed as a contingent claim against the estate, and confirmed by a decree settling the account of the administrators in which this claim is returned as one of the liabilities of the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 1637.

As to the survival of the right of action upon the bond for release after the death of the debtor in attachment proceedings, it is held by the Supreme Court of Illinois in a similar case (Sharpe v. Morgan, 144 Ill. 382, 33 N. E. 22) that, after attachment released on giving of bond the action proceeds in personam (Hill v. Harding, 93 Ill. 77), and in event of the death of original defendant and further prosecution of the suit to judgment against his administrators, the judgment obtained is a personal judgment, and neglect by administrators to pay the same is a breach of the bond. In its opinion in the above case the court says:

"Appellant [the surety] voluntarily joined with the attachment debtor, and took upon himself the obligation prescribed by the statute, to pay whatever judgment might be rendered in that action. He was bound to know that upon the death of Allison [the defendant] the suit would not abate, but might proceed to final judgment against his personal representative."

The undertaking in the cited case was a statutory bond, and the parties were bound by the intendments of the statute in interpreting its obligations. But the conclusion can be no different here under the implied understanding of the parties arising from the fact that they were contracting with presumptive knowledge of the law, and the surety here is presumed to have known and have in mind the fact that this suit would not abate in the event of the death of defendant but could be prosecuted against his administrators. Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

In this case the surety company stands upon a purely technical defense, and, while it is true that the rule is in its favor that it may rely upon the strict terms of its contract, there is no reason in law or equity why the same liberality of construction and interpretation of those terms should not be applied as in construing any other contract. In the matter of the obligations of corporations organized to execute surety bonds and securities as a business there is a growing disposition in the courts to hold such sureties to their obligations unless there has been some material departure from the conditions of the agreement. 21 R. C. L. p. 1160; Ann. Cas. 1912B, p. 1087.

The judgment is affirmed.

ANDERSEN et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR NAPA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 9795.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 16, 1921.)

1. Dismissal and nonsuit §45—Requirement that action be dismissed five years after answer mandatory.

The requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 583, that an action shall be dismissed, unless brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time be extended, is mandatory, and trial court is without discretion to refuse an order of dismissal.

2. Mandamus §4(3), 43—Proper proceeding to compel dismissal of action, remedy by appeal being inadequate.

If no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy exists, mandamus is a proper proceeding to obtain dismissal of an action not brought to trial within five years after answer, under Code Civ. Proc. § 583, since an appeal does not lie directly from an order refusing to dismiss an action, and defendant should not be compelled to go to trial, and then appeal from the judgment, if adverse to him, in view of section 1085.

3. Mandamus §28—Questions of fact do not necessarily make mandatory acts dependent on judicial discretion.

That some question of fact must be determined before court may act under a mandatory provision of law does not alone make the act dependent on judicial discretion, since no duty is enjoined by law which does not first require as a condition of its enforcement proof of the jurisdictional facts.

4. Dismissal and nonsuit §60(3)—Stipulation only condition defeating right to dismissal after five years.

The only condition permitted by Code Civ. Proc. § 583, to defeat defendant's right to a dismissal after five years after answer is a stipulation extending the time.

5. Dismissal and nonsuit §60(1)—No discretion in court as to dismissal after five years, conceding that there be equitable grounds of estoppel.

Conceding that there may be equitable grounds of estoppel to enforcement of dismissal of action five years after answer, under Code Civ. Proc. § 583, the question is one of law, as to whether the facts pleaded and passed on by the trial court constituted sufficient ground for denying the motion to dismiss, as it cannot be claimed that it is a matter within the discretion of the trial court to arbitrarily determine what extraneous circumstances will excuse a compliance with the statute.

6. Dismissal and nonsuit §60(3)—Death of plaintiff no defense to motion to dismiss after five years.

The fact that, from a date within a month after answer until after five years from filing of answer, there was no plaintiff in the action to bring the cause to trial, because of the death of plaintiff and failure to substitute personal representatives, could not defeat defendant's motion to dismiss, under Code Civ. Proc. § 583; there being no suspension of the running of the five-year limitation and section 353 not applying.

7. Limitation of actions §80—Death does not interrupt running of statute.

Where a cause of action arises in the lifetime of a person entitled to sue, his death does not interrupt the running of the statute of limitations, in the absence of some statutory provision to the contrary.

8. Motions §42—Statute relating to entertainment of second motion held not to go to jurisdiction.

Code Civ. Proc. § 182, does not apply to the renewal of a motion refused for informality of the moving paper or proceedings, or in cases where leave to renew is given, and in any event does not go to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain a second motion; penalty provided by section 183 being punishment for contempt and authority to the court to set aside an order obtained by a violation of the rule.

9. Motions §33—Motion to strike unauthorized motion from files proper practice.

The proper practice in case of an unauthorized motion is to strike it from the files.

In Bank.

Application by John Andersen and others for writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Napa County and Hon. R. L. Thompson, Judge thereof, to require the dismissal of an action. Writ granted.

E. L. Webber of Napa, for petitioners.

Percy King, Jr., of Napa, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. This matter comes before this court for hearing from the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District upon petition for writ of mandate to require the superior court of the county of Napa to dismiss an action under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure for failure to bring the same to trial within five years after answer filed, in which action one Henry Weaver is named as plaintiff, and the petitioners here, John Andersen, W. P. Austin, and Janie M. Andersen, are defendants. A dismissal was had as to other defendants for failure to serve them with summons within three years, under the requirements of section 581a, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The action in question was commenced in December, 1914, and the answer of the defendants, who are petitioners here, was filed on the 27th of January, 1915. The cause was never brought to trial, and no attempt to set a day for trial seems to have been made until the 29th day of November, 1920, which was some months after the expiration of five years from the date when answer was filed.

[1] It is conceded in the record that no stipulation in writing was ever made extending the time prescribed by the statute. The requirement of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure that an action shall be dismissed by the court in which it is pending on motion of the defendant, after due notice to the plaintiff, or by the court on its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time be extended, has repeatedly been held by this court to be mandatory. Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 Pac. 1002; Larkin v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 719, 154 Pac. 841, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 670; City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 197 Pac. 79; Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 200 Pac. 616; Ravn v. Planz, 37 Cal. App. 735, 174 Pac. 690; Boyd v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 197 Pac. 58.

The trial court is without discretion to refuse an order of dismissal, where it is made to appear that the action has not been brought to trial within the prescribed period and that no stipulation in writing to extend the time has been made.

[2] Under such conditions mandamus is a proper proceeding, if no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy exists. Mandamus has been frequently upheld to enforce this provision of the Code. Larkin v. Superior Court, supra; Pistolesi v. Superior Court, 26 Cal. App. 403, 147 Pac. 104; City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra. However, treating the question as open for consideration, we think the practice thus sanctioned is justified. There is no other speedy or adequate remedy provided. An appeal does not lie directly from an order refusing to dismiss the action; and to compel a defendant to submit to an unwarranted trial of the cause, and then appeal from the judgment, if adverse to him, would not afford speedy or adequate relief. It was so held by this court in the opinion by Chief Justice Beatty in White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 246, 58 Pac. 451, involving the right to a writ of prohibition after refusal to dismiss an action under section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was there claimed that the writ of prohibition should not issue, because petitioner had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal in the ordinary course of law from any judgment that might finally be rendered against him in the action. The opinion states:

"Such remedy by appeal is, perhaps, plain, but can hardly be called speedy or adequate. Petitioner has a present right to the dismissal of the action as against himself, and the removal of the lien by which his property is incumbered, and such right cannot be protected or enforced by an appeal from a possible judgment in the action to foreclose."

To the same effect is Davis v. Superior Court, 195 Pac. 390.

The proposition so strongly urged in behalf of respondent, that mandamus will not lie in this proceeding because the matters submitted under the motion to dismiss called for the exercise of judicial and discretionary powers of the court, which cannot be called in question in this manner, is not maintainable. As already pointed out, the requirement to dismiss after five years, in the absence of a stipulation in writing extending the time, is mandatory. There was no issue presented that the five years had not elapsed, or that there had been a stipulation made between the parties. If such an issue had been made and the court had found as a fact in the case that no answer had been filed, or that five years had not elapsed, or that there had been a written stipulation between the parties for an extension of time, it may be conceded that the decision of the court as to such facts could not be reviewed in this proceeding. But where the express mandatory conditions for a dismissal are clearly established, and without contradiction, the court was without discretion in the matter.

[3] The distinction between a mandatory and discretionary act is illustrated by the two provisions of section 583. The first clause provides a discretionary ground of dismissal for want of diligent prosecution of an action after two years, and the action of the court in granting or refusing to dismiss could not be controlled by mandamus or certiorari, at least in the absence of clear abuse of discretion; while the second clause makes a fixed and arbitrary rule that requires the performance of "an act which the law specially enjoins" and which gives jurisdiction for the exercise of the writ of mandate under section 1085 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The mere condition that some question of fact must be determined before the court may act under a mandatory provision of law does not make the act dependent upon judicial discretion. No duty is enjoined by law which does not first require as a condition of its enforcement proof of the jurisdictional facts. The distinction may sometimes be confusing, but it is substantial.

The cases relied upon by respondents, and in the opinion of the learned Court of Appeal in this matter, involved the decision of the question of fact upon which the law imposed the duty to dismiss. In People v. Pratt, 28 Cal. 166, 87 Am. Dec. 110, mandamus was invoked to compel a dismissal by the trial court of an action on motion of the plaintiff under provision of the old Practice Act, corresponding to subdivision 1 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The motion was opposed by defendant on the ground that he had filed a counterclaim for affirmative relief. The trial court had sustained the objection of the defendant to dismissal. This court, on the application for mandamus, says:

"We do not think mandamus will lie in this case. The real and substantial question presented for the decision of the court by the motion to dismiss was whether the defendant had set up a counterclaim against the plaintiffs upon which he was seeking affirmative relief. If he had not, the plaintiffs were undoubtedly entitled to the judgment which they asked, otherwise not. The solution of that question depended upon the judicial reading and construction of the defendant's answer and the stipulation between the parties, and the effect of the latter upon the former. It was claimed on the part of the plaintiffs, first, that the counterclaim made in the answer could not be legally made in the action; and, second, that the counterclaim had been withdrawn by the force and effect of the stipulation. Both of these propositions were denied by the defendant, and in deciding them the judge acted judicially, not ministerially; and, having decided them according to the best of his ability, a mandamus does not lie to compel him to reverse his decision and render a different one."

This is just such a case as we would have here, if the trial court had denied a dismissal upon a showing and finding that a written stipulation extending time of trial had been made.

People v. Superior Court, 114 Cal. 466, 46 Pac. 383, was a case in which the people, in a quasi criminal proceeding, had caused defendant's default to be entered on the ground that a verbal plea, entered as an answer to the complaint, was ineffective as an appearance, and applied to the court for a judgment on such default. The trial court held the plea sufficient and refused the application for judgment. In denying a petition for a writ of mandate this court says.

"But whether or not his plea of not guilty was a proper and sufficient plea is a question not here before us. That question was passed upon judicially by the court; and if it committed error in deciding that question, such error cannot be reviewed on mandamus."

If it had appeared in that case that no plea or answer at all had been made by the defendant, a question parallel to the one here might be presented.

[4, 5] Respondents, however, claim that the order of the trial court was based upon other facts in issue and upon which it passed judicially. It might be said in answer to this that the only condition permitted by the statute to defeat petitioners' right to a dismissal after five years is the existence of a stipulation extending the time. But, conceding that there may be equitable grounds of estoppel to the enforcement of the dismissal of an action under section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, as is, perhaps, intimated in Larkin v. Superior Court, supra, and Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, the question to be first presented to this court under a mandamus proceeding would be one of law, as to whether the facts pleaded and passed upon by the trial court constituted a sufficient ground for denying the motion to dismiss. It cannot be claimed that it is a matter within the discretion of the trial court to arbitrarily determine what extraneous circumstances will excuse a compliance with the statute.

[6] In this instance the facts relied upon are that from a date within a month after the answer in the pending case was filed until after the five-year period had expired, there was no plaintiff in the action to bring the cause to trial. It is claimed that the plaintiff, Weaver, died about a month after answer filed, and there was no substitution of the personal representatives of the decedent as plaintiff in the action, until after five years, and but shortly before this motion to dismiss was made. It appears that representatives of the estate of decedent, in the persons of executors of his last will, were appointed, qualified, and acting at all times subsequent to May 14, 1915, which date was less than two months after his death. We do not see how, under this state of facts, it can be held that there was any suspension of the running of the five-year limitation against decedent's estate.

[7] It is a familiar and well established rule of law that where a cause of action arises in the lifetime of a person entitled to sue, his death does not interrupt the running of the statute of limitations in the absence of some statutory provision to the contrary, McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 329, 14 Pac. 879, 2 Am. St. Rep. 814; 25 Cyc. 1277; Mereness v. Bank of Charles City, 112 Iowa, 11, 83 N. W. 711, 51 L. R. A. 410, 84 Am. St. Rep. 318; Tobias v. Richardson, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 81; Rowan v. Chenoweth, 49 W. Va. 287, 38 S. E. 544, 87 Am. St. Rep. 796; 17 Rul. Case Law, p. 850. No reason is suggested, and we can think of none, why this rule should not extend in like manner to this provision of section 583. It is in effect a statute of limitation upon the time for bringing a cause to trial.

It is true that section 353 of our Code of Civil Procedure suspends the running of the statute as to time of commencing an action, after death of the person entitled to sue, for a period of six months; but there is no authority for extending this provision beyond the proceeding to which it applies, and, if it were applicable to section 583, it would not relieve the situation for plaintiffs in this case, as the addition of six months to the five-year period of the statute would still leave them in default; the motion for dismissal not having been made for some ten months after the expiration of the five years.

This case is not affected by the portion of section 353, Code of Civil Procedure, invoked by respondents. That provision allows the commencement of an action against the representatives of a deceased person who dies pending the running of the statute within a year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration on his estate. In the case of a deceased plaintiff the action must be commenced by his representatives within six months after his death. It was incumbent upon the representatives of the estate of the deceased plaintiff to have the pending litigation brought to trial within the statutory period.

[8] As further ground of objection to the issuance of a writ of mandate in this matter, respondents urge that the motion for dismissal was properly denied for the reason that two previous motions based on the same grounds had been presented by these petitioners and denied by another judge of the same court, and that the motion before us was made in violation of the rule provided in section 182 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no transcript or record before us of the proceedings had on these previous motions. The petition for the writ of mandate on file here, however, purports to set out the substance of the prior petitions, and as the answer makes no denial of the correctness of the recitals we assume they correctly state the facts. It may be doubted therefrom if either of the former petitions stated facts sufficient to justify the relief provided by the second subdivision of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure. While the fact that five years had elapsed from the time of filing the answer in the original action could be ascertained from the dates given, the relief demanded was predicated upon the express statement that there had been a failure to set the cause for trial within five years of the date of the commencement of the action, and no allegation was made that there had not been a written stipulation extending the time. In denying the motion on these previous applications the trial court stated no grounds for its rulings.

It does not affirmatively appear that leave to renew the motion was not given. Section 182 does not apply to the renewal of a motion refused for informality of the moving papers or proceedings, or in cases where leave to renew is given, and, in any event, does not go to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain a second motion. The penalty is provided by section 183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is punishment for contempt, and authority to the court to set aside an order obtained by a violation of the rule.

[9] In any event, the proper practice in the case of an unauthorized motion is to strike it from the files. People v. Center, 61 Cal. 191. In the matter before us the motion on which this proceeding is based was the first which stated sufficiently the grounds for dismissal under the five-year provision of section 583. It was heard on the merits. The grounds upon which the denial was made are not set out further than in the statement of the court according to the petition here that it "had no jurisdiction to grant the same." Respondents' answer alleges that the motion was denied on the ground, "among others," that prior motions had been made in violation of the provisions of section 182 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In view of the obvious fact that this motion was heard on its merits, and the extreme vagueness of other details relating to the previous motions, we prefer to dispose of it upon its merits here. As heretofore pointed out, there has been a clear and unjustifiable failure on the part of the plaintiffs to bring this pending action to trial within five years after answer filed, and the motion to dismiss should have been granted.

A peremptory writ of mandate, requiring the superior court of the county of Napa, and the judge thereof, to enter an order dismissing said action as to these petitioners, is granted.

Ex parte KINNEY. (Cr. 572.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 10, 1921.)

1. Intoxicating liquors ⚡132 — Liquor ordinance not invalid because it prescribes less severe penalty than Volstead Act.

A liquor ordinance is not invalid merely because it prescribes a less severe penalty than is prescribed by the Volstead Act for similar offenses.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡62—Trustees cannot delegate legislative authority.

The trustees of a city have no power to delegate legislative authority.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡62 — Ordinance may refer to act of other legislative body, if nothing is left to judgment of other body.

The rule against delegation of legislative authority does not prohibit reference to the act of another legislative body, where nothing is left to the judgment of such other body.

4. Municipal corporations § 591—Liquor ordinance referring to Volstead Act held not void, as delegation of legislative authority to Congress.

Liquor ordinance providing that the manufacture, sale, etc., of liquor, where permitted by acts of Congress enacted for enforcement of Const. U. S. Amend. 18, shall not be deemed a violation of the ordinance, and that the definition of intoxicating liquor under the ordinance shall be the same as under the laws of Congress, held not void as against contention that it delegates to Congress legislative power vested in the city board of trustees.

5. Fines § 12—Judgment providing for imprisonment on default of payment of fine valid, though ordinance did not provide alternative.

A judgment of conviction for violation of liquor ordinance, imposing a fine or one day's imprisonment for each dollar of such fine in default of the payment thereof, held valid, though ordinance did not provide the alternative of imprisonment in case of nonpayment of fine; the provision as to imprisonment being authorized by Pen. Code, § 1446.

Application by H. S. Kinney for writ of habeas corpus against the Chief of Police of the City of Ft. Bragg. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

M. H. Iversen and Mannon & Mannon, all of Ukiah, for petitioner.

Hale McCowen, Jr., of Ukiah, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Petitioner was convicted of violating an ordinance of the city of Ft. Bragg, Mendocino county, prohibiting traffic in intoxicating liquors, and he was sentenced to pay a fine of $225, and in default of the payment thereof to be imprisoned until its satisfaction at the rate of one day's imprisonment for each dollar of said fine.

Three contentions are made by petitioner:

"1. That the ordinance is without the powers of the board of trustees of the city.

"2. That the ordinance is invalid, for the reason that it attempts to delegate to the Congress of the United States legislative powers vested only in the city and its board of trustees.

"3. That the judgment, so far as it purports to adjudge imprisonment in default of payment of fine, is without the powers given to the recorder's court by the ordinance."

[1] The reason for the first contention is that the ordinance prescribes a less severe penalty than for similar acts is prescribed by what is known as the Volstead Act (41 Stat. 305), passed by the Congress of the United States. This question, however, has been recently considered by this court, and decided adversely to the position of petitioner, and it is sufficient to cite that case. In re Caesari Volpi, 199 Pac. 1090.

[2] The legal proposition involved in the second contention is undoubtedly sound. The trustees are powerless to delegate legislative authority. This is conceded, and is so elementary that no discussion of it is called for.

This claim is urged by reason of section 3 of the ordinance, as follows:

"It is provided and intended, however, that no manufacture, sale, gift, exportation, importation, transportation, or possession of such liquor which is, at the time of its commission, allowed or permitted by the laws then in force, enacted by the Congress of the United States for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, shall be deemed or considered any violation of the ordinance; and the definition of intoxicating liquors under the ordinance shall at all times be the same as under such laws of Congress at the time in effect."

[3] The rule against the delegation of legislative authority does not prohibit such reference to the act of another legislative body. If the ordinance had set out specifically the exemptions provided in said Volstead Act and the definition therein contained of intoxicating liquors, petitioner, of course, could not and would not urge this point. But the effect of the reference to said provisions of the act is to make them a part of the ordinance. If we grant that more apt language might have been chosen to express the intention of the trustees, and that it might be considered more satisfactory if said exemptions and said definition had been expressly set forth in the ordinance, no criticism of that kind would be of sufficient gravity to justify the writ of habeas corpus.

No doubt difficulty is sometimes experienced in making application of the rule, but if nothing is left to the judgment of another agency, and the ordinance or statute fully expresses the will and intention of the legislative body on the subject, there is no room for the claim that there has been a delegation of authority, although reference for existing facts may be had to other sources. 6 R. C. L. p. 165; Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 92 Wis. 63, 65 N. W. 738, 31 L. R. A. 112. If the ordinance had left it to some future act of Congress to prescribe the exemptions and the definition of any of the terms employed, then, of course, we would have a different case, because the will of Congress would be substituted for that of the trustees. The learned district attorney of Mendocino county thus illustrates the situation:

"Had the passage of the city ordinance of Ft. Bragg preceded the enactment of the Volstead Act, then there would have been a delegation of authority, for prior to the enactment of the Volstead Act there were no laws of Congress prohibiting absolutely the traffic in intoxicating liquors and under those circumstances the ordinance would have been incomplete when it came from the trustees and would consequently have been ineffective."

[4] If Congress should amend said act, this question might properly arise; but we think there can be no serious doubt that the effect of said reference was to adopt, as far as applicable, the Volstead Act, and make it a part of the ordinance. In this connection, the district attorney quite appropriately calls attention to the following analogous cases arising under the pure food laws and those regulating the practice of medicine, wherein reference is made to standards of purity, proficiency, etc., established by organizations or bodies over which the enacting legislative body has no control. Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412, 77 Pac. 166, 66 L. R. A. 249; Arwine v. Board of Medical Examiners, 151 Cal. 499, 91 Pac. 319; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 52 L. Ed. 1061; Cleveland Macaroni Co. v. State Board of Health of California (D. C.) 256 Fed. 376; People v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380.

[5] It is true that the ordinance does not expressly provide the alternative of imprisonment in case the fine is not paid; but that is unimportant, since the general law covers the case. Section 1446 of the Penal Code is as follows:

"A judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine."

This section is a part of the chapter dealing with "Proceedings in Justices' and Police Courts," and section 1461 of the same chapter enumerates, among police courts, "all courts held by mayors or recorders in incorporated cities or towns." The sentence herein was by the recorder's court in said city, and there is nothing in the general municipal corporation act, under which it was organized, that changes or modifies in any manner any of said provisions of the Penal Code.

We are satisfied that there is no substantial merit in any of the contentions of petitioner, and the writ is therefore discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

BAR ASS'N OF SAN FRANCISCO v.
CANTRELL. (Civ. 3437.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 6, 1921.)

Attorney and client  61—Court may reinstate a suspended or disbarred attorney.

Whether the judgment is a judgment of disbarment or a judgment of suspension, the court, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 289, 290, and Civ. Code, § 3536, has a right at any future time to modify the judgment and to grant the accused such relief as he is entitled to.

In the matter of the application of the Bar Association of San Francisco against Russell W. Cantrell. Judgment of suspension vacated.

Perry Evans, of San Francisco, for accusant.

Thos. W. Forsyth, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. On the 17th day of June, 1921, the petitioner, Russell W. Cantrell, filed a petition in this court asking for a modification of a judgment rendered by this court on the 5th day of October, 1920 (193 Pac. 598), which judgment ordered the suspension of the petitioner from his office as an attorney for the period of one year. On the same date he prepared a notice of motion directed to "Perry Evans, Esq., Attorney for Accusant," and caused said papers to be served on said attorney on the same day. The notice stated that the motion would be made on the 21st day of June, 1921, etc. The petition was not verified. No citation was issued or applied for. On the 21st day of June, 1921, at the time and place stated in the notice, the petitioner made his motion through his attorney and the attorney made an informal statement to the court regarding the matter, and offered to read a letter from the district attorney of San Francisco. At this point the court suggested that counsel was proceeding very informally and that the matter should be continued until the 11th day of July, 1921, and that the matter should, at that time, be presented in accordance with settled rules of law. Thereafter the matter came on regularly for hearing on the day to which it had been continued. The bar association did not appear or make any answer and did not offer to participate. The petitioner thereupon called witnesses and tendered some testimony.

The proceedings for removal or suspension of an attorney at law are provided in the Code of Civil Procedure, § 289 et seq. The difference between a judgment of disbarment and one of suspension is a difference of degree only. The procedure is the same. To obtain a judgment, when the accusation is based on the information of a person or persons other than the court, the petition should be verified. Code Civ. Proc. § 290; In the Matter of Hotchkiss, 58 Cal. 39, 41. When a petition has been filed a citation should be taken out. Code Civ. Proc. § 292. Whether the judgment is a judgment of disbarment or a judgment of suspension the court has the right at any future time to modify the judgment and to grant to the accused such relief as he is entitled to. In the case of In re

Burris, 147 Cal. 370, 81 Pac. 1077, the court decided that relief could be extended to an attorney who had been disbarred. In the case of In re Tyler, 71 Cal. 353, 374, 12 Pac. 289, 13 Pac. 169, the court had before it a petition for disbarment. It entered a judgment of suspension. Such a judgment was logical because it is an axiom of the law that "the greater (disbarment) includes the less (suspension)." Civ. Code, § 3536. The foregoing rules apply to the initial proceeding of disbarment. To obtain a modification of such judgment the same formal procedure should be followed. In re Newton, 27 Mont. 182, 70 Pac. 510, 982. The application should show a history of the case including appropriate recitals as to what was done in court and also what new facts have occurred which render it appropriate that the judgment of disbarment or suspension should be modified. In re Newton, 27 Mont. 182, 70 Pac. 510, 982; 6 C. J. 615, § 98. The provisions of our Code of Civil Procedure on the subject in hand were copied by North Dakota (Rev. Codes, p. 106, § 506), and by Montana (Rev. Codes, vol. 2, p. 52, § 6410 et seq.). The decisions of those states are therefore quite helpful on any question that has not been passed on by the courts of last resort in California. In the case of In re Simpson, 11 N. D. 526, 93 N. W. 918, an informal application was made to the Supreme Court of North Dakota. On page 526 of 11 N. D., and on pages 918 and 919 of 93 N. W., that court said:

"On the 1st day of the September, 1902, term of this court, a motion was made by Hon. Tracy R. Bangs and Hon. John M. Cochrane for the reinstatement of Leslie A. Simpson, who was disbarred for unprofessional conduct by an order of this court dated July 12, 1900. The disbarment proceedings are reported in 9 N. D. 379, 83 N. W. 541. A similar motion for reinstatement was made at the September, 1901, term of court, and was denied. On the former motion no proof which we could judicially consider was offered, either to contradict or to excuse the unprofessional acts upon which the order of disbarment was based, or to show that the applicant for reinstatement had so altered in character, as a result of the discipline to which he had been subjected, as to render him fit to be intrusted with the privileges pertaining to the office of attorney and counselor at law of this state. The court, however, while denying the motion, at the same term, in a communication from Chief Justice Wallin, directed to Hon. Seth Newman, president of the State Bar Association, referred the application to said association, and requested that body to conduct an investigation, through its proper officers, touching the present character and fitness of Mr. Simpson to be reinstated, and to report to this court upon the following matters of fact: '(1) To what extent, if at all, has Mr. Simpson engaged in the practice of the law since the entry of the judgment of disbarment? (2) Is there any tangible evidence that the severe discipline to which Mr. Simpson has been subjected has had the effect of producing a change of his character, in such a way that he would, if readmitted to the practice of law, conduct himself hereafter with reference to proper ethical and professional standards of conduct? (3) Has Mr. Simpson been so far humbled by the discipline of disbarment that he is willing, freely and without reservation, to admit upon the records of this court that he was guilty of the offenses charged against him, and that in disbarring him the court proceeded upon proper grounds and with proper motives? (4) Does Mr. Simpson sincerely regret his attitude and conduct towards the court and opposing counsel, as manifested during the progress of the disbarment proceedings? (5) Are there any financial obligations, growing out of the subject-matter of the charges against Mr. Simpson, which remain undischarged?"

The fourth element, as stated by Chief Justice Wallin of North Dakota, does not enter into the facts presented in this case. As to the other elements stated by Chief Justice Wallin, the petitioner has presented evidence which is responsive to each of the issues framed by that learned authority. The procedure of the petitioner in this case contained certain irregularities which we are not to be understood as approving. The irregularities referred to have not been presented to us and we have not been called upon to rule thereon. None of them is of such importance as to defeat the petitioner's right to relief. The evidence which he has submitted is sufficient in our judgment to entitle him to have the suspension set aside.

It is ordered, therefore, that the judgment of the 5th day of October, 1920, be and the same is hereby vacated.

PEOPLE v. CAMERON. (Cr. 989.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 13, 1921.)

1. Criminal law — 369(2)—Evidence of other offense incidental to proof of fact pertinent to charge on trial admissible.

Evidence of an offense other than the one for which defendant is on trial is generally inadmissible, but is admissible where the commission of such other offense is merely incidental to proof of a fact pertinent to the charge on trial.

2. Criminal law — 369(7)—Evidence that defendant obtained tool used in attempting burglary by burglarizing another store admissible.

In prosecution for attempting to commit burglary of a garage, testimony, that defendant obtained possession of a bar used to pry off the garage lock from a grocery store which had been burglarized by defendant and witness, held admissible, though it included evidence as to commission of other crime.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

A. J. Cameron was convicted of an attempt to commit burglary, and from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

S. L. Mash, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rior-dan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of an attempt to commit burglary, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial.

On the eighth day of January, 1921, at about 1:45 a. m., the defendant and one Fleming were seen standing at the front door of a garage on Seventh street in Richmond by two police officers. Apparently the defendant was trying to pry off the lock of the door. The officers approached the garage, whereupon the defendant and his companion walked away. The officers followed, and as they passed the garage they noticed that the door lock was missing. They continued to follow the couple, and while doing so observed Fleming in the act of discarding certain articles. Being overtaken by the officers, and failing to satisfactorily account for their presence in that locality at such a time, they were taken into custody. On the way to the jail the defendant attempted to escape, and upon his refusal to halt was fired upon and wounded by one of the officers, and recaptured. Subsequently a flashlight was found in the neighborhood, also two tire tools and a box-opener or claw-tool. A brass Yale padlock of the garage had been pried off, and was picked up in the path of the retreat of the defendant, and a pair of pliers was found in the pocket of the defendant.

Fleming was called as a witness for the prosecution, and he corroborated the testimony of the police officers, and said that the defendant had told him that he intended to break into the Richmond garage. He also testified that the defendant had used a tire-tool and a box-opener to open the lock; that one of the tools used to open the lock had been obtained from a grocery store in Richmond burglarized that evening by the defendant and himself. It was also shown by marks on the door that one of the tools used to pry off the lock was of the size of that taken from the grocery store.

No claim is made by the defendant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, but he contends that the court erred in admitting over his objection the evidence tending to prove him guilty of robbing the grocery store, and that the judgment should be reversed for this reason.

[1, 2] It is true that the general rule is that evidence of an offense other than the one for which the defendant is on trial is inadmissible; but where the commission of such offense appears merely incidentally in proving a fact pertinent to the charge on trial, such proof is not held to violate the general rule referred to. In the case at bar it was proper to prove the possession by the defendant of an appliance used in the commission of the offense with which he was charged; and the defendant was not entitled to exclude such proof, although in making it his possession of the instrument appeared to have been unlawfully obtained. Russell, in his work on Crimes (volume 3, p. 406), cites two cases sustaining the ruling of the trial court. In one of them the defendant had committed three burglaries in one night. He stole from one of the places entered a shirt, which he left at another of them. Being tried upon one charge, it was held that the three burglaries were all so connected that it was proper for the prosecution to disclose all of them. In the second of the cases cited, two burglaries were committed in the same town, one at Keeling's and the other at Blandon's between the hours of 12 midnight and 3 o'clock a. m. At the latter place a crowbar was found which fitted some of the marks on a chest broken open at the former, and which was proved to have been in the possession of the defendant previous to the night in question. Evidence of the finding of the crowbar at Blandon's was held to be competent upon the trial of the Keeling burglary, as also of the finding in the possession of defendants of goods stolen the same night from the Blandon place; such evidence tending to show that the prisoners had been at Blandon's and might have left the crowbar there.

In the case of People v. Nakis (Sup.) 193 Pac. 92, it was held that where it had been proved that .38 and .41 bullets were found in the body of the deceased and that a pistol capable of discharging bullets of both calibers was found in the cabin where the defendant was arrested, the testimony of a witness that he had owned the pistol in question for over 30 years and that it had been taken from him about a month before the murder at a time when he and others had been robbed by a number of men, among whom was the defendant, was competent as tending to prove the defendant possessed such pistol at the time of the murder.

It results that this contention of the appellant is untenable.

Judgment and order affirmed.

ROSS v. TABOR. (Civ. 3545.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 21, 1921.)

1. Trial ⚡165—Motion for nonsuit based on the evidence presents pure question of law.

Motion for nonsuit, based on claims as to what is and what is not shown by the evidence, presents a pure question of law, only the evidence favorable to plaintiff, taking it as true and adopting the inferences most favorable to plaintiff, being considered.

2. Animals ⚡22—Question of abandonment of contract for caring for bees on shares held, under evidence, for the jury.

Relative to the question of which party breached the contract under which defendant was for three years to take care of bees furnished by plaintiff, and to make therefrom additional colonies, plaintiff to furnish a house and an automobile, to be used in the work, and the parties to share in the honey and wax, held, under the evidence, that the question of plaintiff's being justified in believing from defendant's conduct that he had withdrawn from the contract, and therefore justified in taking away the automobile, which, with the house, defendant had abandoned, was for the jury.

3. Animals ⚡22—An automobile held an "appliance," within contract for caring for bees.

An automobile, furnished by plaintiff for defendant's use, under a contract for caring by defendant for bees furnished by plaintiff, was an "appliance," within a requirement that defendant keep all tools and appliances in repair.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Appliance.]

4. Animals ⚡22—Party held entitled to recover for breach of contract to care for bees.

Where on abandonment by defendant of contract, whereby he was for three years to take care of bees furnished by plaintiff, and therefrom produce a certain number of additional colonies each year, plaintiff retook the automobile furnished by him for defendant's use, and assumed the sole care of the bees, he did not thereby deprive himself of remedy for defendant's subsequent failure to produce the additional colonies.

5. Contracts ⚡267—Cannot be rescinded by party first in fault.

A party to a contract first in fault cannot rescind it.

6. Limitation of actions ⚡46(1)—When statute begins to run for defaults subsequent to anticipatory breach of continuing executory contract, stated.

Where defendant's contract with plaintiff, to take care for three years of bees furnished by plaintiff, and therefrom to make a certain number of new colonies each year, was abandoned by defendant shortly after he made it, without plaintiff's consent, the four years limitation prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1, for action on contract, obligation, or liability founded on a written instrument did not commence to run as regards right to recover for failure to make additional colonies, at least till the end of the first year, plaintiff not having elected to rescind, and the contract being a continuing executory contract, anticipatory breach of which merely permitted plaintiff, at his option, to sue at the time of such breach.

7. Contracts ⚡256 — Mutual abandonment must be unequivocal.

Acts and conduct of the parties to a contract must, to constitute mutual abandonment of the contract, be positive, unequivocal, and inconsistent with the existence of a contract.

8. Appeal and error ⚡241 — Trial ⚡163 — Nonsuit cannot be sustained on ground not specified in motion.

A motion for nonsuit should specify the grounds on which it is made, and a ground not so specified cannot be urged on appeal to uphold a judgment of nonsuit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by J. Edgar Ross against R. W. Tabor. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hickcox & Crenshaw and Frederick J. Trude, all of El Centro, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for the alleged breach of a contract. At the trial defendant's motion for a nonsuit was granted and a judgment of nonsuit entered. From that judgment plaintiff appeals.

The evidence introduced by plaintiff discloses the following: By the terms of their contract, which was in writing and executed December 26, 1914, plaintiff agreed to furnish 500 or more colonies of bees, which defendant agreed to care for in a workmanlike manner for a period of three years from the date of the agreement. Defendant further agreed to make from the bees thus to be furnished by plaintiff 500 additional colonies during the year 1915, 1,000 additional colonies during the year 1916, and during the year 1917 a number sufficient to bring the total to 2,000 colonies on the expiration of the three-year term of the contract. The contract further provided that plaintiff would furnish defendant with a tenthouse, or other suitable dwelling place, free of rent; and that he likewise would furnish defendant with an automobile to be used by the latter in his work of caring for the different colonies of bees, which, it seems, were scattered over a number of locations covering a wide area in the Imperial valley. Plaintiff also agreed to furnish defendant with an extracting outfit with which to extract the honey and wax. Defendant, among other things, agreed to keep all tools and "appliances" in good repair, at his own expense, and, during the term of the contract, not to engage in any occupation or vocation other than the care of plaintiff's bees, without the latter's consent. The contract provided that plaintiff and defendant should receive, respectively, 60 and 40 per cent. of all the honey and wax produced by the bees during the three years that the contract was to run.

Immediately after the execution of the contract, defendant took charge of the bees. Plaintiff furnished him with a house to live in and likewise with an automobile, as he had agreed. Indeed, plaintiff furnished defendant with everything that he had agreed to supply, excepting only the extracting outfit, which, it was testified, would not become necessary until the following June or July. Defendant's counsel expressly stipulated that no question was raised on the failure to supply the extracting outfit prior to the time when its use would become necessary, in June or July of 1915.

In the latter part of March or the first of April, 1915, defendant moved into the house that plaintiff had provided for his use during the three-year term of the contract. On May 15th following defendant left the house and moved off of plaintiff's land into a house about an eighth of a mile away. On the same day, after using it for the removal of his personal effects, defendant took the automobile that plaintiff had supplied him for the care of the bees back to the house that plaintiff had supplied for his use, and left it there.

Some time between the 25th and 30th of May, 1915, plaintiff called at the house that he had provided for defendant's use and found it vacant. He also found the automobile standing in the yard without any oil or gasoline in it, exposed to the heat of the sun and the elements. From these circumstances plaintiff seems to have assumed that defendant had abandoned his contract. Thereupon plaintiff removed the automobile to his own home, some distance away, and took possession of the colonies of bees, thereafter caring for them himself.

Called as a witness by plaintiff under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, defendant testified that he quit taking care of the bees when plaintiff removed the machine to his own home; that when he found the machine was gone he walked to Brawley; that he was told that plaintiff had the machine; that he went to plaintiff's house and saw the machine in his yard; that he did not see plaintiff and did not go on his premises at all; that he turned around and went back; that he did not make any inquiry where plaintiff was, because he was told that plaintiff had said that he (defendant) "had skipped out of the valley"; that he did not explain to plaintiff that he "had not skipped out"; that after that he saw plaintiff several times passing the house where he was then staying, about an eighth of a mile south of plaintiff's ranch; that plaintiff never stopped, and that he (defendant) never talked to him; that he never went to see plaintiff to ascertain whether the latter had taken the machine; that he never made any effort to find plaintiff or to have a talk with him to ascertain whether he took the machine, or to explain that he (defendant) had not run away.

Plaintiff testified that some time between the 25th and 30th of May he went to the ranch where defendant had been living in the house that he had supplied for defendant's use; that he went to the ranch intending to irrigate, and found the car standing beside the house, which was empty; that he took the car home; that the car was in good condition, but that there was neither gasoline nor lubricating oil in it; that he tried to start it, but could not; that an automobile man who was with him supplied him with oil and gasoline, and that he then drove home with the car; that this occurred at about 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning; that he was at the ranch between an hour and two hours before he went away with the machine; that there was nothing in the house abandoned by defendant except a desk which the latter had made while he was living on plaintiff's place in Brawley; that he never thereafter saw defendant until late in the fall, and that defendant did not do any work thereafter under the contract.

Defendant's answer, in addition to denying a breach of the contract on his part, pleaded the statute of limitations, alleging that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, whereby it is provided that "an action upon any contract, obligation, or liability founded upon an instrument in writing executed within this state" must be commenced within four years after the accrual of the cause of action.

At the close of plaintiff's evidence defendant moved for a nonsuit upon two grounds: (1) That the evidence did not show any breach of the contract on defendant's part, but did show that it had been breached by plaintiff, and that that was the reason why defendant ceased work; (2) that the cause of action, if any, is barred by the above-mentioned Code section.

[1] It may be that had the case, upon the close of appellant's evidence, been submitted to the trial court for a decision on the merits, the evidence would have warranted a decision on the facts in respondent's favor. In that case the court would have been called upon to decide questions of fact only, and would have been free to deduce from all the evidence any reasonable inferences, whether favorable or unfavorable, to appellant, and regardless of whether opposing inferences might reasonably have been drawn from all the evidence. By moving for a nonsuit, however, respondent presented to the court a pure question of law. It is too well established to require the citation of authority that, on such a motion, not only must all the evidence in favor of the plaintiff be taken as true, and contradictory evidence, if any there be, be disregarded, but, if the evidence will reasonably permit of two or more inferences, those inferences only which are most favorable to the plaintiff must be adopted by the court. If any authority were needed to support this well-established principle, reference might be made to Mitchell v. Brown, 18 Cal. App. 117, 122 Pac. 426, and the long list of cases there cited. In view of the rule that thus requires the court, on a motion for a nonsuit, to resolve all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff, we think that it was error to grant the motion, and that the judgment, therefore, must be reversed.

[2] Coming now to a consideration of the evidence and the inferences favorable to appellant that are reasonably deducible therefrom: Unless the removal of the automobile by appellant warranted an abandonment of the contract by respondent, the latter breached the contract. For it is admitted that at no time since appellant took the automobile in the latter part of May, 1915, has respondent done anything under his contract. He did not make from the 500 colonies of bees furnished him by appellant an additional 500 in 1915, or an additional 1,000 in 1916, or, in 1917, a number sufficient to bring the total to 2,000 colonies at the termination of the three years during which he was to work for appellant in the care of the bees. So that the pivotal question in the case is, Was respondent justified in abandoning the contract merely because appellant removed the automobile to his own home for suitable care, upon discovering that the house which he had furnished for respondent's use was vacated and abandoned, and that his automobile, without lubricating oil or gasoline, had been left standing in the intense heat and burning sun of Imperial Valley, apparently abandoned to the destructive effects of the elements? To properly answer this question we should give consideration to respondent's conduct shortly prior to the time when appellant so removed the automobile to his own home. That is, we must consider appellant's conduct in the light of respondent's previous conduct in moving off of appellant's land and in deserting the machine that appellant had furnished for his use. The inferences that might be drawn from respondent's conduct in thus moving away from the house that had been furnished for his use, and in leaving the automobile neglected and exposed to the destructive effects of the sun and heat, are such that reasonable men might differ in their judgments thereon. This being so, there was presented, not a question of law such as arises on a motion for nonsuit, but a question of fact—such a question of fact as would have required its submission to the jury had the case been tried before a jury. From respondent's conduct during the interval of five or ten days intermediate his removal from the house that had been supplied for his use by appellant and the day when the latter found the deserted automobile and took it to his own home for safe-keeping, a reasonable man might well infer that respondent intended to abandon, and that he had abandoned, his contract, and that appellant honestly believed that respondent's conduct evidenced a determination on his part to withdraw from the contract. Particularly might this inference be warranted if respondent's conduct at that time be considered in the light of his subsequent studied evasion of appellant at all times after the latter retook the abandoned machine.

If, in consequence of his own conduct immediately prior to the appellant's retaking of the automobile for suitable protection, respondent believed that appellant was acting in the honest belief that he (respondent) had withdrawn from the contract, then, if he did intend going on with the contract, good faith required that he should have so informed appellant. Having failed to do so, and having permitted appellant to act on the belief that he had withdrawn from his contractual obligations, respondent cannot be permitted to claim that he was ready to perform, or that the contract was mutually rescinded, or that he was justified in abandoning it by reason of appellant's conduct. "If one party to an executory contract induces the other to believe that he has withdrawn from the contract, the other [contracting] party need not wait until the day of performance before making new arrangements, nor does he lose his remedy against the delinquent party by providing at once against losses likely to arise from such delinquency." Chamber of Commerce v. Sollitt, 43 Ill. 523. See, also, subdivision 3 of section 1511 of the Civ. Code.

[3] The written contract specifically imposes upon respondent the duty "to keep all tools and appliances in good repair at his own expense." The word "appliances" is very broad, and includes anything that is used as a means to an end. Cook v. Mining Co., 249 Ill. 41, 94 N. E. 90. The automobile furnished by appellant for respondent's use was an "appliance," within the meaning of the contract. It was a thing supplied by appellant to be used by respondent as a means of caring for the bees while traveling from location to location. It is not an unreasonable inference that by leaving the automobile on the abandoned premises, exposed to the burning sun, respondent thereby failed to keep that "appliance" in good repair, pursuant to the requirements of his agreement, thereby breaching his contract. Furthermore, by his contract respondent agreed "not to engage in any occupation or vocation other than the care of said bees without the consent of the said J. Edgar Ross." The condition in which appellant found the abandoned premises that he had furnished for respondent to live in while caring for the bees might well justify the inference that respondent, if he had not moved away to take up some other occupation or vocation, was at least not caring for the bees "in a workmanlike manner and to the best of his ability," as required by the terms of his contract, thus breaching the contract in a vital and important particular. In short, the inference that respondent was the first to breach the contract is not an unreasonable inference, but one which reasonable men might be warranted in deducing from all the evidence in the case.

[4, 5] If respondent was the first to breach the contract, then he is liable in this action for damages even if, after such breach by him, appellant did take the automobile to his own home and assume the sole care of the bees. The fact that appellant removed the automobile from the premises that respondent had abandoned, and placed it where it would not be subjected to the destructive effects of the sun's rays, and the further fact that appellant cared for the bees that respondent seemingly had abandoned, instead of depriving appellant of all claim for damages, might justly be regarded as an effort on his part to reduce the damages sustained by him. Nor was it incumbent upon appellant to hunt up respondent and offer to return to him the automobile, or ask him to go back to the house that he had supplied for respondent's use. The contract was a continuing executory contract, requiring of respondent continuous service over a three-year period. And if, as might be inferred from his conduct in leaving the house and the automobile, respondent had abandoned his contract, thereby breaching it, appellant was under no obligation to demand that respondent continue to perform his contract. Respondent cannot escape liability because appellant did nothing other than to take steps to prevent a further loss and an increase of damages. The rule is that a party to a contract cannot take advantage of his own omission to observe the requirements of his contract. If he breaches the contract he cannot interpose the breach as a defense to an action on the contract. "The rule is general, that the right to rescind a contract rests only with the party who is without default. One party cannot * * * violate the contract himself, and then seek a rescission on the ground that the other party has followed his example." State

v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 458. See, also, California Sugar, etc., Agency v. Penoyar, 167 Cal. 274, 280, 139 Pac. 671. For these reasons we are satisfied that the evidence afforded no basis for the first ground of the motion for a nonsuit.

[6] Nor was the court justified in granting the motion on the second ground, namely, that the action was barred by subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The action was commenced within four years after the time within which respondent was to make the first of the additional colonies of bees; that is, it was commenced within four years after December 25, 1915.

Appellant, if he and respondent did not mutually abandon the contract, could wait until the time arrived for a complete performance of the contract on respondent's part, and then bring an action thereon for damages. McCurry v. Purgason, 170 N. C. 463, 87 S. E. 244, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 907; Ga Nun v. Palmer, 202 N. Y. 483, 96 N. E. 99, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 922. As we have stated, the contract was a continuing, executory contract. Respondent, when he ceased caring for the bees, did not breach the contract in its entirety. It still had more than two and a half years to run, during which respondent was to render services in caring for the bees. At any time during that period, if appellant did not elect to rescind or abandon the contract, respondent might have returned and resumed his work. Appellant is suing to recover, not for injury done to his bees by reason of neglect in their care, but for damage resulting from respondent's failure to perform that part of his contract whereby he obligated himself to make from the original colonies of bees furnished by appellant 500 additional colonies by the end of the first year of the contract, i. e., on or before December 25, 1915; 1,000 additional colonies by the end of the second year; and by the end of the third year a number sufficient to bring the total to 2,000 colonies. Though the contract was partially executed, the breach here complained of resulted from a failure to perform the unexecuted parts of the contract, and the case, therefore, comes squarely within the doctrine as announced by the New York Court of Appeals in Ga Nun v. Palmer, supra, where it is said:

"It is quite true that there is a distinction made in the authorities with reference to contracts which still are wholly executory and are to be performed in the future; but the distinction pertains to that which would constitute a breach of such contracts. Where the contract is wholly executory, there must be some express and absolute refusal to perform, or some voluntary act on the part of the individual which renders it impossible for him to perform, in order to constitute an anticipatory breach for which an action will lie; whereas, by a partially executed contract, the breach may result from a failure to perform some of the provisions of the contract. But in either case, after a breach by one party, the rights of the other party and his remedies are the same as to the unexecuted provisions of the contract." (Italics ours.)

There is an abundance of authority for the position that appellant, if he did not elect to abandon or rescind the contract when respondent ceased caring for the bees, could wait until the expiration of the time when respondent was to complete his contract, and then bring his action, meanwhile holding the contract as prospectively binding for the exercise of his right to bring suit at the end of the term of service contemplated by the contract. Thus in Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, the defendant, on April 12th, had agreed to employ the plaintiff in the capacity of a courier for a period of three months from the 1st day of June. But subsequently, and before the 1st day of June, the defendant gave the plaintiff notice that he would not require his services. Lord Campbell, after discussing the authorities, states, as a part of his conclusions, the following:

"The man who wrongfully renounces a contract into which he had deliberately entered cannot justly complain if he is immediately sued for a compensation in damages by the man whom he has injured; and it seems reasonable to allow an option to the injured party, either to sue immediately or to wait till the time when the act was to be done, still holding it as prospectively binding for the exercise of this option, which may be advantageous to the innocent party, and cannot be prejudicial to the wrongdoer."

And in Ga Nun v. Palmer, supra, the court says:

"* * * The general rule is that a right of action does not accrue upon a contract until it is executed, or payment thereunder becomes due by its terms, and the statute of limitations does not commence to run until that event happens. The right to bring an action previous to that event is exceptional, and is only permitted in cases of a breach of a contract by one of the parties which permits the aggrieved party, at his option, to maintain an action for such breach and recover the damages he has suffered on account thereof." (Italics ours.)

See, also, 13 C. J. p. 653.

There never was any attempt formally to rescind the contract in this case, and it only remains to consider whether the testimony definitely showed a mutual abandonment, evidenced by the conduct of both parties. For if appellant did not elect to rescind or abandon the contract when he discovered that respondent apparently had ceased to do the things required of him by his agreement, then, as we have seen, his cause of action accrued on the expiration of the time provided by the contract within which respondent was to make the additional colonies of bees, i. e., on the expiration of the three-year term of the contract, which was less than four years prior to the commencement of this action, and, consequently, within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. Meanwhile appellant could hold onto the contract as prospectively binding on both parties for the exercise of his optional right to bring his action at the expiration of the time within which complete performance by respondent became due by the terms of his agreement.

[7] Does the evidence necessitate the conclusion that there was a mutual abandonment of the contract more than four years before the action was commenced? As to whether a contract has been abandoned presents a mixed question of law and fact. McCurry v. Purgason, supra. And though the parties to a contract may abandon it by matter in pais, still the acts and conduct which may be relied on to constitute the abandonment must "be clearly proved, and they must be positive, unequivocal, and inconsistent with the existence of a contract." May v. Getty, 140 N. C. 310, 53 S. E. 75. There is no unequivocal evidence of any abandonment of the contract on the part of appellant. His conduct in removing the automobile for safekeeping and in caring for his bees after respondent apparently had deserted the house and the automobile furnished for his use, is not so unequivocal that it necessarily evidences an intention on appellant's part to relinquish all rights under the contract. In order to hold onto the contract as prospectively binding upon both parties, so that a right of action for damages might accrue to him on the expiration of the time for complete performance by respondent, it was not necessary that appellant should permit his property—his automobile and his bees—to continue abandoned and deprived of all suitable care.

For the foregoing reasons we are satisfied that the nonsuit was not warranted by the second ground upon which the motion was made.

[8] Respondent claims that the evidence introduced by appellant to prove his damages was wholly insufficient for that purpose. This was not specified as one of the grounds of the motion for a nonsuit, and therefore it may not now be urged in an effort to uphold the judgment. It is the settled doctrine that a motion for a nonsuit should specify the grounds upon which it is made, and the general rule is that a ground which is not stated cannot be considered.

TIBBITS-PAC. CO. v. FIRTH. (Civ. 3454.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 8, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations ☞514(1)—Court, in setting assessment aside because of irregularity, may order new assessment made.

Under Vrooman Act, § 12¼, added by St. 1913, p. 409, requiring a court, which has set aside an assessment not entirely without the power of the city to issue, for omission, irregularity, illegality, informality, or noncompliance with the statute, to order a new assessment to be made, where the work has been done in good faith under the contract, an appeal to the city council under section 11, in the event of irregularities, is not the exclusive remedy, but the court is authorized to review alleged errors and to order a new assessment, notwithstanding the irregularity, if the city, but for such irregularity, has the power to make the assessment, and if the work was done in good faith under the contract.

2. Municipal corporations ☞514(1) — Court, having set aside assessment for irregularity, properly ordered new assessment.

Under Vrooman Act, § 12¼, added by St. 1913, p. 409, requiring a court, which has set aside an assessment not entirely without the power of the city to issue, for omission, irregularity, illegality, informality, or noncompliance with the statute, to order a new assessment to be made, where the work has been done in good faith under the contract, the court, in setting aside assessment because an extension of the time for completion of the improvements was made two days after the time given by a previous extension had elapsed, properly ordered new assessment made, where the work had been done in good faith under the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by the Tibbits-Pacific Company against Emil Firth. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. T. Lightfoot, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to foreclose a lien for street improvements under proceedings in accordance with the Vrooman Act (Stats. 1885, p. 147). The assessment which was the basis of the action was made by the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles on September 4, 1915. The trial court, acting under the provisions of section 12¼ of the act (added in 1913 by Stats. 1913, p. 409), held that the assessment was unenforceable, because an extension of the time for completion of the improvements was made two days after the time given by a previous extension had elapsed. The court found that the work was actually done in good faith under a valid contract, that the proceedings were within the power of the city, and that the only informality in the proceedings was that regarding the extension of time for completion. It thereupon ordered that a reassessment be made in accordance with section 12¼. This was done and notice was duly given. No objections were made to the reassessment, and it was accordingly approved, confirmed and recorded on July 23, 1917. The defendant refused to pay the reassessment, and this suit was then commenced to collect the sum found due thereon. From the judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The only point involved is the construction of section 12¼. Appellant concedes that the Legislature had constitutional power to enact it. Its provisions were strictly followed in the present litigation. Briefly, the section provides that—“Whenever any assessment made and issued under the provisions of this act * * * [has] been set aside by any court of competent jurisdiction * * * then the superintendent of streets shall cause a new assessment to be made for the same purpose. * * * It is hereby made the duty of any court of competent jurisdiction in rendering its judgment holding invalid any assessment * * * to make a finding as to whether or not the issuing of such assessment was entirely without the power of the said city to issue, and if not, then what omission, irregularity, illegality, informality, or noncompliance with the requirements of the statute * * * has occurred. * * * In the event that the court shall find that the work * * * was done in good faith under the contract * * * it shall be the duty of the said court to order the making of a new assessment.”

The section then provides that the city council may without such order set aside an assessment which is irregular, and order a new assessment to be made. Such assessment, whether made after decree of court or pursuant to a resolution of the council, shall be based upon the special benefit of the improvement to the respective lots assessed, and shall become a charge upon the property, notwithstanding the previous irregularity, informality or defect. The purpose and intent of the section is declared to be to make the cost and expense of all local improvements payable by the real estate benefited by the improvements actually made, though the proceedings may not have been in full technical accord with the statutory requirements. Upon the filing of the new assessment the city clerk is required to advertise the facts, stating the time set for hearing objections. After hearing had, the council may revise, correct, and modify the assessment and shall thereupon pass a resolution approving and confirming the same.

"Such decision shall be a final determination of all matters relating to the actual benefits derived from the improvement by the respective lots."

The obvious effect of the section is to relieve a contractor from the rule of the early decisions interpreting the Vrooman Act, to the effect that any irregularity or informality in street improvement proceedings rendered the assessment void and defeated recovery. Recent decisions involving proceedings under the Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730), and similar acts containing curative sections, have held that the courts are prohibited from wholly invalidating such proceedings solely upon the grounds of irregularity and informality not directly affecting the jurisdiction of the municipal authorities. Oakland Paving Co. v. Whittell Realty Co. (Sup.) 195 Pac. 1058; City Street Imp. Co. v. Watson, 195 Pac. 967; Federal Const. Co. v. Newhouse, 199 Pac. 519.

[1] In the first two cases just cited it was held that the failure of a contractor doing street work under the 1911 act to procure an extension of time until one or two days after the contract period had expired was a mere informality which was cured by section 26 of the act. Because section 11 of the Vrooman Act, providing that no assessment should be held invalid for mere informalities, contained the expression "except upon appeal to the city council," it was held that the section did not cure any defects which the city council could not have cured upon such an appeal. Manning v. Den, 90 Cal. 610, 616, 27 Pac. 435. Thus, in the absence of section 12 $\frac{1}{4}$, if section 11 of the Vrooman Act read as section 26 of the 1911 act, the court would be without power to declare an assessment void for mere irregularities in procuring an extension of time for completion of the contract. Oakland Paving Co. v. Whittell Realty Co., supra; City Street Imp. Co. v. Watson, supra. Therefore, by the provisions of section 12 $\frac{1}{4}$, the court is given a limited jurisdiction, not to deny recovery altogether, but to order a new assessment based upon the benefits derived from the improvement. The effect of the enactment is that, instead of making the appeal to the city council the exclusive remedy in such cases, the court is authorized to review the alleged errors and to order a new assessment, if it finds that the conditions of the statute have been met.

[2] As the statute was in full force when the proceedings were taken, it was notice to all parties interested. As the Legislature could have authorized extensions of time after the expiration of the contract period, it could also waive the informality of the lapse. This could be done either by legislation such as is found in section 26 of the 1911 Improvement Act, or by the method provided in section 12 $\frac{1}{4}$ of the Vrooman Act. The proceedings here were in full accord with the requirements of the Vrooman Act. Judgment affirmed.

BROWN v. PACIFIC COAST AGENCY et al.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 9, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 6, 1921.)

1. Release ⇨28(4)—A qualified release to one of two or more joint debtors held not a release to the others.

Civ. Code, § 1543, providing that a release of one of two or more joint debtors does not extinguish the obligation of any of the others, unless they are mere guarantors, has reference to a general release, and does not change the common-law rule that a release of one joint debtor with a reservation of the right to proceed against the others will not discharge the latter, and hence it is immaterial that joint debtors, two of whom are given a qualified release on partial payment by them, were guarantors; this construction being consistent with section 2819, specifying the manner in which guarantors may be discharged.

2. Execution ⇨74—Affidavit setting up fact of unsatisfied judgment is sufficient showing for order directing issuance of writ of execution.

It is sufficient that the affidavit on which an order directing the issuance of execution is made set out affirmatively that the balance of the judgment is unpaid; such affidavit not having to stand the test of a complaint.

3. Execution ⇨102—Once issued, set aside on legal grounds only.

The right to have execution issue is statutory, and, any discretion given a court having been exercised, the order so made can be set aside on legal grounds only.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by A. M. Brown against the Pacific Coast Agency and others. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order setting aside an order for execution, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

G. E. Weaver, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sterling Carr, of San Francisco, and John J. Coghlan, of Madera, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside an order directing that execution issue. Plaintiff, on September 20, 1911, obtained a judgment against Jacobi, Rothchild, Conant, and Muller, joint guarantors on a promissory note. The judgment called for $9,231.57, $1,000 attorney's fees, and costs of suit. On December 29, 1911, the defendants Rothchild and Conant paid on said judgment $8,500, taking a satisfaction of judgment to that extent, and a release, which contained the express reservation that it should "not operate to release said I. L. Jacobi and said Otto Muller from the payment of the balance of said judgment." On October 7, 1920, the balance of the judgment being still unpaid, plaintiff obtained an order directing that execution issue and the judgment be enforced. Thereafter, on motion of defendant Muller, this order was set aside on the ground that the partial satisfaction of December, 1911, released Muller also under the provisions of section 1543, Civil Code, because he was a mere guarantor. From the order granting Muller's motion, plaintiff brings this appeal.

[1] The order is attacked upon two grounds: (1) That the reservation in the release protected plaintiff's rights against Muller; and (2) that he was not a "mere guarantor," under section 1543, Civil Code. This section of the Code was enacted in 1872, being copied verbatim from section 743 of Field's draft of the New York Civil Code. It reads:

"A release of one of two or more joint debtors does not extinguish the obligations of any of the others, unless they are mere guarantors; nor does it affect their right to contribution from him."

By the English common law a general release of one of two or more joint debtors released as to all. But a qualified release, expressly providing that the joint debtors not mentioned in the release were not discharged, was recognized in the English courts and in New York by statute as early as 1838. Laws N. Y. 1838, c. 257. Section 1543 of our Civil Code gives the same effect to a release in general terms as was given to the qualified release by the English courts. Northern Ins. Co. v. Potter, 63 Cal. 157, 158. The statute was a distinct departure from the common-law rule as to the effect of a general release, but did not alter the rule as to the effect of a qualified release. Being based upon the New York Civil Code of 1865, which in turn was drafted while the statute authorizing a qualified release was in full force, the contemporaneous interpretation by the New York courts will assist in arriving at the meaning of the Code section. Without any deviation, the decisions of the New York courts have held that a reservation in a release of one of two or more joint debtors will not result in a discharge of the debtors not mentioned. Rowley v. Stoddard, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 207; Cat-skill Bank v. Messenger, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 37; Irvine v. Millbank, 56 N. Y. 635; Murray v.

Fox, 104 N. Y. 382, 390, 10 N. E. 864; Hood v. Hayward, 124 N. Y. 1, 26 N. E. 331; Whittemore v. J. L. & S. O. Co., 124 N. Y. 565, 574, 27 N. E. 244, 21 Am. St. Rep. 708; Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 66 N. E. 133, 61 L. R. A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623. To the same effect is Northern Ins. Co. v. Potter, 63 Cal. 157, 158, where the court said:

"Independent of the code the release of Jacobs and Easton would not have discharged the defendant, because it was expressly provided by the parties to it that it should not have that effect."

In the same case the court recognized the English rule that a release of a joint debtor might be qualified so as not to discharge a codebtor. Thompson v. Lack, 3 Com. B. 551; North v. Wakefield, 13 Q. B. 541.

Thus, independent of the Code section, the release must be given the effect intended by the parties. If the defendants were mere guarantors and a general release of one would discharge all, then the qualified release must follow one of two courses to the same result. (1) If the proviso is to be given full effect, Muller is not discharged; (2) if it is not to be given full effect, so that a discharge would result by operation of law, then the condition of the paper having failed, Rothchild and Conant were not released. Hence there was no discharge of any one, but merely a part payment on account of the judgment. Barnum v. Cochrane, 139 Cal. 494, 73 Pac. 242.

As the order must be reversed for the reasons given, it is not necessary to determine the status of these four defendants, which seems to be a mixed relation of guarantor and surety. But it may be said that the proper construction of section 1543 would seem to be that a release of one of two or more joint debtors does not extinguish the obligations of the others, unless they (the others not included in the release) are mere guarantors. Such construction would treat the section in harmony with section 2819, Civil Code, which specifies the manner in which a guarantor may be released. There is no reason why two or more joint guarantors (whose relation among themselves is in the nature of cosureties), should be discharged by the release of one from a joint judgment on the guaranty. But if the principal on the original obligation is released by the creditor, then under the section the guarantor is discharged.

[2] In support of the order respondent urges that the affidavit upon which the order directing issuance of execution was made does not sufficiently allege that the debt is not paid. The point is that the affidavit alleges that the balance of the judgment is unpaid and respondent argues that some one may have paid the balance of the note and the attorney's fees and costs without paying it on the judgment. Such an affidavit does not have to stand the test of a complaint, and if any part of the debt has been paid other than that for which satisfaction has been given, respondent has had ample opportunity to make that showing.

[3] It is also argued that the granting of the motion directing execution is within the discretion of the court; hence that the court could set aside the order at will. The right to have execution issue is statutory. Whatever discretion the court is given by the statute was exercised when the order for the enforcement of the judgment was made. An order so made can be set aside on legal grounds only. The only ground assigned in respondent's motion was that he was discharged by the release of his codebtors under section 1543.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to set aside the order appealed from and to restore the order of October 7, 1920.

HASBROUCK v. CAVILL. (Civ. 3791.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 10, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 6, 1921.)

1. Navigable waters §39(5)—Maintenance of ark interfering with riparian owner's access to water a private nuisance.

The maintenance of an ark in a navigable creek, so as to interfere with riparian owner's access to the water, is a private nuisance, which the riparian owner could maintain an action to abate.

2. Navigable waters §37(4)—Land conveyed by tideland commissioners held to extend merely to established canal line, and not to creek as it existed naturally.

Where tide land lots were conveyed by tideland commissioners under St. 1869-1870, pp. 541, 542, § 3, in accordance with tide land map prepared and filed under section 2, showing the land to be bounded by Corte Madera Canal, and were described in deed as bounded by the line of such canal, the land extended merely to the canal line as established by such commission, and not to the Corte Madera creek as it existed naturally and as declared navigable under St. 1861, p. 469.

3. Navigable waters §37(4)—Tide land map controls over description in tide land commissioners' deed.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 6, tide land map, prepared and filed by tide land commissioners under St. 1869-1870, p. 541, § 2, would control over description in tide land commissioners' deed conveying lots under section 3 in accordance with such map, where description does not accord with the lot as shown by map.

4. Navigable waters §26(2)—One not riparian owner could not abate maintenance of ark as a nuisance.

Owner whose land was not riparian to creek could not abate the maintenance of an ark in the creek, on theory that ark interfered with her access to the water, since she had no other right than that enjoyed by the public.

5. Nuisance §71 — Private person cannot abate public nuisance.

A private person, who has no other right than that enjoyed by the public, cannot abate a public nuisance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Action by Anginette Hasbrouck against Sid Cavill. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. Clark Sargent, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action brought by plaintiff to have an ark belonging to defendant declared a private nuisance as to her and abated. She claims no special damage, but alleges her riparian rights on Corte Madera creek (due to the location of her land on said creek) entitles her to access to said creek, and that the ark prevents access at the point where it is located.

The ark Frolic, owned by defendant, is moored in Corte Madera creek on the west side in such a way that it floats at high tide, but at low tide the landward side rests on the bank. It is moored to the shore by chains. The defendant has no license from the state to moor his ark in Corte Madera creek, which is tidewater. Plaintiff claims that defendant, in addition to maintaining a public nuisance, maintains a private nuisance with respect to her—this claim depending on her land being riparian to the creek. The lower court gave judgment for defendant for his costs, finding that plaintiff's land was not bounded by the creek; that defendant had not entered upon nor moored a houseboat to plaintiff's land, nor to state land immediately to the north or east of her land; that the houseboat does not cut off plaintiff's access; and that plaintiff is not deprived of use of her waterfront at point where moored, as plaintiff's land has no water front.

[1] If plaintiff's land is riparian to Corte Madera creek, the maintenance of an ark immediately to the north or east of her land would constitute a private nuisance, and she could maintain an action for the abatement of it. Her title to the land is derived from a patent from the tide land commissioners, made in 1873. In 1861 Corte Madera creek was declared navigable as follows:

"The creeks situated in Marin county, known as Guaymas creek, San Rafael creek, Corte Madera creek, and Saucelito creek, are hereby declared navigable from their mouths as far as tide flows. * * * Stats. 1861, p. 469.

In 1870 the tide land commissioners of California were given jurisdiction over the tide lands of Marin county as follows:

"Sec. 2. Said commissioners shall have the said lands lying outside the boundary lines of said county [San Francisco] and within five miles thereof, as aforesaid, surveyed to a depth of nine feet of water at the lowest stage of the tide, and subdivided into lots of not more than twenty acres or into lots of not less than fifty feet front by one hundred feet deep, as in the judgment of said tide land commissioners, approved by the state board, may seem fit for the best interests of the state; * * * said commissioners shall have power to locate and establish canals and basins upon the marsh and tide lands lying outside of the exterior boundaries of the county of San Francisco, * * * whenever they deem them necessary for the purposes of drainage, navigation and the wants of commerce; and shall cause to be prepared the necessary maps, exhibiting the property as surveyed, the number, area and location of each subdivision or lot, and all other matters proper and necessary to be shown thereon. The commissioners shall file certified copies of said maps with the surveyor general of the state and with the recorder of the city and county of San Francisco, retaining the original field notes and maps of said survey in their office at San Francisco.

"Sec. 3. After the commissioners shall have complied with the provisions of section 2, they shall proceed to sell at public auction, to the highest bidder * * * such sale shall be by lots, in accordance with the maps provided for in section 2 of this act. * * *

Stats. 1869-79, pp. 541, 542.

In pursuance of this authority the tide land commissioners on April 3, 1871, passed the following resolution:

"That open canals for the purpose of navigation, drainage, and the wants of commerce, be fixed and established * * * on and along Corte Madera creek, * * * to be called Corte Madera Canal; * * * the routes and widths of said canals to conform as near as practicable to the present meanderings and widths of the respective creeks upon which they are located."

On May 10, 1871, the commissioners approved tide land map No. 2, prepared after the establishing of Corte Madera Canal, showing the canal line and the location of lots of marsh land to be sold. The deed of the tide land commissioners to Justice Uhler Haley, dated March 8, 1873, conveyed two lots, lot 24½ and lot 26. The eastern boundary of lot 26 is the boundary line in question. The call reads:

"North 5.81 chains to the southerly line of Corte Madera Canal; thence along the same S. 61¾° E. 2.51 chains."

Tide land map No. 2 shows Corte Madera canal as established by the commissioners as running in a generally similar line to Corte Madera creek (the natural creek); but it is almost never identical. Along the line mentioned in the call in question there is a space of about 175 feet between the canal line and the natural creek, which is marsh land.

Plaintiff claims her line carries to the creek and that she thereby is riparian to the creek; that the tide land commission did not intend to alter the line of the creek, but merely to rename the creek Corte Madera Canal, and that they probably did not observe the variation of their engineer's map from the creek, and that the calls in her deed are lines of measurement, not boundaries; that, if the commissioners did intend to alter the line of the creek, they had not the power to do so, as the Legislature had declared Corte Madera creek a navigable stream, and only the Legislature could alter the stream line; that 50 years have passed since the map was made, and that the state has done nothing toward making Corte Madera creek correspond with the canal line as established; that the deed to Justice Haley intended to convey riparian rights to the canal, and that plaintiff has riparian rights on the actual creek until the canal is constructed.

Plaintiff places great reliance on the case of City of Los Angeles v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Co., 182 Cal. 652, 189 Pac. 449, to support her position that meanders are lines of measurement and not boundaries. In the syllabus to the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Jefferies v. East Omaha Land Co., 134 U. S. 178-198, 10 Sup. Ct. 518, 523 (33 L. Ed. 872), (quoted in City of Los Angeles v. San Pedro, etc., Co., supra), the law on that point is stated as follows:

"Meander lines are run in surveying public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but to ascertain the quantity of the land subject to sale; and the water course, and not the meander line, as actually run on the land is the boundary."

In these cases, the descriptions of land—carrying to water—were not in fact correct, and it fell to the courts to determine that the intent of the grantor that the land should extend to the water should prevail, and not the actual calls. The intent of the grantor is the test, and it is to be derived from the whole deed, and not from the calls alone.

[2] In the instant case it is necessary to determine whether the tide land commission auctioned the land to the canal as established by them, or to the creek as it existed naturally. Tide land map No. 2 contains on its face a chart of the calls of the canal as established. The canal very clearly is not coincident with the natural creek, and we find no reason to believe the tide land commission intended otherwise than its documents indicate. The tracts of marsh land as divided up without exception follow the line of the canal, sometimes extending into the actual creek and sometimes leaving tracts of land untouched, depending on the line of the canal. Furthermore, the description of the land as conveyed is correct, and corresponds absolutely with the map by which it was sold; the north and east boundary is the "southerly line of Corte Madera Canal," etc. It is the manifest intent of the tide land commissioners that lot 26 extend only to the canal line as established by them.

[3] Were the description at variance with the lot as evidenced by the map by which it was sold, the map would control. Section 2077, subd. 6, Code Civ. Proc. But no such condition exists here. Since we conclude that the intent was to convey to Corte Madera Canal, the rule of construction invoked in City of Los Angeles v. San Pedro, etc., Co., supra, is not necessary, because the commission accomplished what it intended to do; there is no variance between geographical fact and the calls of the deed.

With regard to plaintiff's contention that this commission had no power to alter the shores of a stream declared navigable by statute, the language of the statute creating the tide land commission, "Said commissioners shall have power to locate and establish canals * * * upon the marsh and tide lands, * * *" would seem to give them authority to do what the resolution in pursuance thereof, "that open canals * * * be fixed and established * * * on and along Corte Madera creek, * * * the routes and widths of said canals to conform as near as practicable to the present meanderings and widths of the respective creeks upon which they are located," caused to be done; i. e., to survey and establish a canal along Corte Madera creek to conform as near as practicable to the present creek, and to lay out lots on the marsh lands and to auction off the same.

However, it is not necessary here to determine whether the tide land commissioners had or had not power to alter the present line of a stream; they had power to divide up the marsh land (subject to the approval of the state board) and to sell it by map; the map showed very clearly the boundaries of the lots and showed that lot 26 was bounded by the artificial canal line—not by the creek line. It is difficult to imagine how the tide land commissioners can be presumed to have intended to convey four acres more of land than they embodied in a description which corresponds with the course of the canal they established.

[4, 5] We believe this is conclusive of plaintiff's case, as her other contentions have no support in law. The title to the land between plaintiff's eastern boundary and the actual creek remains in the state; since plaintiff's land is not riparian to Corte Madera creek, she has no other right than that enjoyed by the public, of access to the creek; therefore the maintenance of an ark on the creek is not a private nuisance as to her, and a private person cannot abate a public nuisance.

LAKE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 9770.)(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 19, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1921.)1. Appeal and error ⇨1194(1)—Decision on appeal must be read in connection with issues and parties.

Where only a portion of defendants appeared from a judgment against them, the decision of the appellate court, "Judgment reversed," will be confined to the issues arising on the appeal and the parties.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1173(2)—Appellate court may direct retrial as to appealing defendants only.

In suit to quiet title, in which defendants appeared separately and by separate answers, and filed cross-complaints setting up their respective undivided interests, although the appealing defendants served notice of appeal on their codefendants, who did not appeal and whose interests were not adverse to the appellants, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to direct a retrial as to them.

3. Appeal and error ⇨863—Appeal from judgment by some of defendants is in effect an appeal from a portion of the judgment.

An appeal from a judgment by some of the defendants, although the notice of appeal is general in its terms, is an appeal only from that portion of the judgment which injuriously affects appellants, unless the reversal or modification of the whole judgment is essential to protect their interests.

4. Appeal and error ⇨863—On appeal from portion of judgment, appellate court has jurisdiction to review only part appealed from.

On appeal from a portion of the judgment only, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to review any part of the judgment, except the part to which the appeal is directed, and an order of reversal, though general in terms, will be construed to apply only to the part brought up for review.

Application for a writ of prohibition by Fred W. Lake, against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Hon. Daniel C. Deasy, Judge, to prevent the trial of a certain cause. Writ granted.

R. P. Henshall, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Daniel C. Deasy, of San Francisco, for respondents.

Fabius M. Clarke, of San Francisco, for Hugh E. Springer and A. L. Wiel, administrators, etc.

WILBUR, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the defendant from proceeding with the trial of the case of Lake v. Sterling Development Company and others as to certain defendants, upon the ground that the court is precluded from trying the issues between plaintiff and such defendants by reason of a previous adjudication of those rights from which the defendants referred to failed to appeal. The other defendants took an appeal, and on such appeal a judgment was rendered reversing the judgment. The question is as to the effect of the judgment of reversal upon the rights of the defendants who failed to take an appeal.

The order of the appellate court, "Judgment reversed," taken literally, reversed the entire judgment and sent the case back for a new trial. 2 Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, § 299, subds. 2 and 4. This the respondent claims is the effect of the judgment. The suit was one brought by Lake to quiet his title to certain land described in the complaint. The plaintiff's title was based upon a school land certificate issued to one Brackett, and referred to as the Brackett certificate, while the title claimed by all the defendants, who were tenants in common, was deemed from a certificate issued to one Phillips, whose heirs and successors are the defendants in the case. The controversy between the parties was as to the validity of the respective certificates upon which their respective claims of title depended. The lower court held the Brackett certificate valid and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Upon the appeal this certificate was declared void, from which it followed that the judgment was erroneous, not only as to the defendants who appealed, but also as to those who failed to appeal. Under these circumstances, if the appellate court had jurisdiction to render a judgment reversing the case and sending it back for a trial of the issues between all the parties thereto, it is clear that such an order was made and would be in furtherance of justice. The terms of the judgment rendered, unless limited by the nature of the questions presented, or because of a lack of jurisdiction, was a direct decision that the entire judgment be reversed, and an implied order for the retrial of the entire case. There is nothing in the nature of the case to justify the conclusion that it was the intention of the appellate court to limit the reversal to the five-twelfths of the property owned by the defendants who served notice of appeal. That it was the intention of the District Court of Appeal to reverse the entire judgment is further manifested by the fact that in the briefs in the District Court of Appeal and in the petition for a transfer to this court the respondent, the petitioner herein, particularly called attention to the fact that some of the defendants had not appealed, and asked that the judgment on appeal be rendered in such form that as to the nonappealing defendants the plaintiff's judgment would be affirmed. The request was not granted.

[1, 2] The question, then, is whether or not the appellate court had the power under the circumstances of this case to direct a retrial of the issues as to all the defendants. In considering this question of jurisdiction, it should be stated that the defendants not only appeared separately by separate answers, but also filed cross-complaints setting up their respective undivided interests. The cross-complaints were ignored in the findings and judgment, for the reason that the judgment adjudicating the validity of the plaintiff's title was in effect a denial of the prayer of the cross-complaint. The appealing defendants served notice of appeal upon the plaintiff and upon their codefendants. If the nonappealing codefendants were in any sense adverse parties to the appealing codefendants, it may be that the appellate court had jurisdiction over the entire judgment. While it is true that the rights of the nonappealing defendants would be affected by a lawful reversal of the entire judgment, their interests were in no sense adverse to the appellants. Their rights would be in no sense affected by a reversal of the judgment as to the appealing defendants. Code Civ. Proc. § 940; Johnson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 146 Cal. 571, 80 Pac. 719. The rights of the several defendants, although cotenants, were as distinct as though each owned a separate and distinct piece of property within the limits of the certificate upon which the plaintiff based his right of recovery. The judgment having declared that the several defendants were without right or title in or to the particular property claimed by them, they could not be injuriously affected by any judgment rendered on an appeal, where the only remedy sought by the appealing defendants was a reversal of the judgment. The only difficulty in the case here is that the defendants who are now seeking a retrial of the issues as to them are seeking to reap where they have not sown.

[3, 4] So far as the retrial of the case is concerned, there is no reason why that trial cannot be had with relation to the undivided interest claimed by the appealing defendants without in any wise affecting the rights of the plaintiff and nonappealing defendants as determined by the previous judgment. The broad expression "the judgment is reversed" will be confined to the issues arising upon the appeal and the parties appealing. Whalen v. Smith, 163 Cal. 360, 125 Pac. 904, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1319.

An appeal from a judgment by some of the defendants, although the notice of appeal is general in its terms, is of necessity an appeal from only that portion of the judgment which injuriously affects the appealing defendants, and is thus, in effect, an appeal from a portion of the judgment; that is to say, the portion of the judgment adverse to their interests, unless the reversal or modification of the whole judgment is essential to protect the interests of the appealing defendants. It is well settled that upon an appeal from a portion of the judgment only the appellate court has no jurisdiction to review any part of the judgment except the part to which the appeal is directed and that an order of reversal, although general in terms, will be construed to apply only to the part brought up for review. Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Weinsveig, 163 Cal. 664, 143 Pac. 1025. It is true that in the case just cited there were a number of consolidated mechanics' liens, so that, although there was only one judgment, there were a number of separate cases consolidated, and that the case is therefore readily distinguishable from the one at bar. But in principle, as has been stated, an appeal by only a portion of the defendants, however broad in terms the notice of appeal may be, is in legal effect an appeal only from a portion of the judgment affecting them, and gives jurisdiction to the appellate court to reverse or modify the judgment only in so far as it affects the interests of the appellants. The effect of a reversal of the judgment where only a portion of the defendants appeal is discussed in the following cases, and the conclusions therein arrived at conform to the views we have here expressed: Title & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 164 Cal. 58, 127 Pac. 502; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Superior Court, 178 Cal. 512, 174 Pac. 51.

It is ordered that a writ of prohibition be granted as prayed for.

1. Constitutional law — 275(1)—Person pursuing any lawful business cannot be deprived thereof without due process of law.

It is the right of any person to pursue any lawful business or vocation he may select, subject to such legal restrictions and regulations as the proper governmental authority may impose for the protection and safety of society, and such right is valuable and must be protected and secured and cannot be taken from those who possess it without "due process of law."

2. Constitutional law — 80(2)—Statute permitting revocation of broker's license not unconstitutional.

That portion of the Real Estate Act conferring upon real estate commissioner authority to hear and determine proceedings to revoke a broker's license issued pursuant to its terms is not in violation of Const. art. 6, § 1, providing where the judicial power of the state shall rest.

3. Brokers — Real estate commissioner held to have jurisdiction of proceeding to revoke broker's license; "dishonest dealing."

In a proceeding before the real estate commissioner under St. 1919, p. 1252, to revoke license of a real estate broker, the commissioner was authorized to determine as to whether or not broker was guilty of acts involving embezzlement, false representations, and gross moral turpitude, which certainly constituted "dishonest dealing" within the meaning of the statute and presented an issue which the commissioner was clearly authorized to hear and had jurisdiction to determine.

In Bank.

Application by T. L. Brecheen for certiorari to review an order of Ray L. Riley, Real Estate Commissioner, and an order of Honorable George Samuels, Judge of the Superior Court, sustaining commissioner's finding. Writ denied.

A. A. Montague, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Robert W. Harrison, and R. L. Chamberlain, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHURTLEFF, J. This is an application for the issuance of a writ of review. The petition alleges that at all the times in it mentioned petitioner was a licensed real estate broker, doing business in the county of Alameda, this state; that he was duly served with a complaint filed in a proceeding before the real estate commissioner of the state of California asking the revocation of his license theretofore issued to him as such broker pursuant to the provisions of an act commonly known as the "Real Estate Act" (Stats. 1919, p. 1252); that petitioner answered such complaint denying in effect the allegations thereof; that a hearing was had before the commissioner, at which the petitioner was represented by his attorneys; that, preliminary to such hearing, petitioner objected to proceeding with the same on the ground "that the main question involved * * * was the determination of a judicial fact as to whether or not * * * petitioner was guilty of the commission of acts involving embezzlement, false representations and gross moral turpitude," which the commissioner had no right to determine because not legally vested with judicial powers, which objection the commissioner overruled, and proceeded with the hearing; that thereafter petitioner was served with a copy of the findings and conclusions of the commissioner, pursuant to which he revoked petitioner's "license and right to act as agent, broker and representative in the sale or exchange of real property, thus depriving him of a means of livelihood"; that thereafter petitioner, as the act gives him the right to do, appealed from the determination of the commissioner to the superior court of the county of Alameda; that petitioner was not accorded a hearing by said last-mentioned court, but said court "merely reviewed the transcript of the evidence before the commissioner and sustained the latter's findings." The petition also contains specific allegations touching the illegal deprivation of property and property rights of petitioner and concludes with the following:

"That the commissioner is not a judicial officer nor clothed with judicial powers; that he has no power as a branch of our judiciary under the Constitution of the state of California or of the United States. That he has no power to deprive your petitioner of a property right or to impose any penalty or forfeiture upon your petitioner without due process of law. * * * That your petitioner has no speedy and adequate remedy at law."

To this petition respondents demur, alleging that it "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or to entitle said petitioner to the relief prayed for in said petition," and it is the disposition of this demurrer that is before the court.

It is conceded there is no appeal from said order of the superior court.

The act provides that "it shall be unlawful for any person * * * to engage in the business, or act in the capacity of a real estate broker, or a real estate salesman within this state without first obtaining a license therefor"; for the creation of a "state real estate department," the chief officer of which department shall be the "real estate commissioner"; that applications for a license as real estate broker shall be made in writing to the commissioner, who may grant the same; that he "may, upon his own motion, and shall upon the verified complaint in writing of any person, investigate the actions of any person * * * engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real estate broker, or a real estate salesman, within this state," and shall have the power to temporarily suspend or permanently revoke licenses issued under its provisions, at any time and in cases where the holder thereof, in performing, or attempting to perform, any of the things mentioned in section 2 of the act, of which acting as a real estate broker is one, is guilty of any act "which constitutes dishonest dealing"; that, before suspending or revoking the license, the commissioner "shall notify, in writing, the holder of such license of the charges against him and afford an opportunity to be heard * * * in reference thereto"; that the decision of the commissioner shall be subject to review in accordance with specified provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The act further provides for an appeal from the decision of the commissioner to the superior court of the county in which the person affected by the decision resides, or has his place of business, and indicates the procedure to be followed in perfecting such appeal, and that upon the hearing thereof the court shall receive and consider any pertinent evidence, oral or documentary, concerning the action of the commissioner, but is "limited to a consideration and determination of the question whether there has been an abuse of discretion on the part of the commissioner in making such decision." Stats. 1919, p. 1252.

The Code declares that to grant a writ of review, it must appear that an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded its or his jurisdiction; that there is no appeal from the judgment sought to be reviewed, nor, in the judgment of the court to which the application for the writ is made, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy (Code Civ. Proc. § 1068), and that the review upon such writ cannot be extended further than to determine whether the inferior tribunal, board, or officer had regularly pursued its or his authority (Code Civ. Proc. § 1074).

Petitioner confines his attack upon the act to the single point that the portion thereof conferring upon the commissioner authority to hear and determine proceedings to revoke a license issued pursuant to its terms is in violation of our state Constitution, which declares that—

"The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, District Courts of Appeal, superior courts and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county, or city and county." Article 6, § 1.

[1] It is firmly established that it is the right of every person to pursue any lawful business or vocation he may select, subject to such legal restrictions and regulations as the proper governmental authority may impose for the protection and safety of society, and that such right is valuable and must be protected and secured, and cannot be taken from those who possess it, without "due process of law." Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 592, 84 Pac. 40, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750; Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 Pac. 965.

[2] The act in question violates none of these fundamental principles, but is in harmony with them, in that it is a measure looking to the protection of the public, and provides a method of procedure in all respects ample to protect the rights of the licensee, which was followed in the instant case, and must be followed in order that the license can be legally revoked by the commissioner.

It is apparent that the commissioner is acting in a quasi judicial capacity when passing upon applications for a license, and when hearing petitions to revoke, and revoking, a license issued under the act, for he is deciding property rights and determining what shall be decreed in the matters before him, all of which is the exercise of a "judicial function"; but, as said by this court in Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 250, 187 Pac. 965, 966:

"It is now well established in this state that tribunals such as the board of medical examiners or other boards empowered to revoke licenses which they have previously granted, for cause defined by the law, are not courts in the strict sense; they are not exercising 'the judicial power of the state' as that phrase is used in the Constitution conferring judicial power upon courts, and that statutes creating such boards and conferring upon them such powers are constitutional."

To the same effect is the following, taken from Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 179, 77 Pac. 879, 884 (1 Ann. Cas. 13):

"It is not at all uncommon for inferior boards or officers to be invested with power which calls for the determination of facts and the exercise of discretion in the discharge of the duties of their office. This power, it is true, is in a sense judicial, but it cannot be said that it is an exercise of 'judicial power' as that term is used in the Constitution in conferring judicial power upon courts. The question is, however, not an open one in this state, and seems to have been settled adversely to petitioner's contention in County of Los Angeles v. Spencer, 126 Cal. 670."

[3] As we have stated the petition herein recites that the "main" question involved in the proceeding before the commissioner "was the determination * * * as to whether or not * * * petitioner was guilty of the commission of acts involving embezzlement, false representations and gross moral turpitude," which charges, if true, and in the absence from the record filed here of a copy of the findings of the commissioner we must assume they were found to be true, certainly constituted "dishonest dealing" within the meaning of the phrase used in the act, and presented an issue which the commissioner was clearly authorized to hear, and hence had jurisdiction to determine.

For the foregoing reasons we conclude that the act in question is constitutional; that the commissioner did not exceed his jurisdiction, and in all respects "regularly pursued his authority"; and, having so determined, it is not necessary to consider the contention of respondents that petitioner has a plain, speedy and adequate remedy.

The demurrer is sustained, and the application for the issuance of a writ of review denied.

FLICKINGER v. HECK et al. (L. A. 6154.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 17, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1921.)

1. Contracts ⇨172—"Option" embodies offer obligating optioner to perform when offer is accepted.

An option contract embodies an offer, the optioner becoming obligated to perform when the optionee accepts in accordance with the terms of the option.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Option.]

2. Contracts ⇨172—Option contract may itself control as to what constitutes election.

An option may specify the particular act or acts which constitute an election to accept the offer embodied in the option, in which case the contract itself controls as to what constitutes an election.

3. Corporations ⇨120—Notice of intention to require sellers to repurchase stock held sufficient exercise of option without tender of the stock.

Where contract of sale of corporate stock required sellers to repurchase within one year on notice from buyer of his intention to exercise the option ten days before expiration of the year, buyer having given timely notice was not required to tender the stock within the year, in absence of provision in contract as to time of performance; tender and demand within a reasonable time after expiration of the year being sufficient.

4. Limitation of actions ⇨66(15)—Demand where condition precedent to right of action for recovery of money must be made within a reasonable time.

Where an actual demand is essential as a condition precedent to a complete right of action for the recovery of money, such demand must be made within a reasonable time after it can lawfully be made, or within a reasonable time after the contract by its terms contemplates that it should be made, and, unless there are peculiar circumstances affecting the question, a time coincident with that of the statute of limitations will be deemed reasonable.

5. Limitation of actions ⇨68—Statute does not run against action for breach of contract until tender, where obligation to perform does not commence until tender.

Where a party may call for the performance of the agreement upon the part of another only by a tender or offer to perform his own agreement, there can be no breach of the contract by the one until such offer or tender by the other, and the statute will not begin to run until that time.

6. Limitation of actions ⇨68—Action for breach of contract to repurchase stock held not barred by limitations.

Action by purchaser of stock for sellers' breach of contract to repurchase, on exercise of option to resell by purchaser within one year from date of purchase, brought within four years from tender of stock by purchaser to sellers two years from expiration of such year, held not barred by limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 337; the sellers not being in default until such tender, and the tender being within a reasonable time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by M. P. Flickinger against O. O. Heck and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. W. Kaye and Alfred Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

George E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff, M. P. Flickinger, from a judgment for the defendants in an action to recover the purchase price of certain corporate stock.

On March 1, 1910, J. C. Flickinger purchased 25 shares of corporate stock from the defendants and paid therefor the sum of $2,500. In part consideration for this purchase and other acts on the part of J. C. Flickinger, defendants entered into a written agreement with said Flickinger whereby they undertook to repurchase the said stock for $2,500 at Flickinger's option at the expiration of one year from March 1, 1910. It was provided that Flickinger was to give ten days' notice before the expiration of the year of his intention to exercise the option. On February 17, 1911, Flickinger gave the ten days' notice of his intention to require a repurchase of the stock by defendants and thereafter, in September, 1911, brought suit against defendants to recover the purchase price of the stock. Although Flickinger served the ten days' notice upon defendants, he had not, at the commencement of his action, followed up the notice with a technical tender of the stock to and demand of the purchase price from defendants. For this reason he was nonsuited and on appeal the nonsuit was upheld by this court. Flickinger v. Wrenn Investment Co., 172 Cal. 132, 155 Pac. 627. Thereafter, having made a tender of the stock to defendants and demanded the purchase price on November 29, 1912, J. C. Flickinger assigned his rights to M. P. Flickinger, plaintiff herein, who instituted the present proceedings.

The complaint sets forth four causes of action. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the first cause of action upon the ground that it was barred by subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, upon the other causes of action, made findings to the effect that the option in question was not exercised at the expiration of one year from the date of the contract and that all three causes of action were barred by subdivision one of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff appeals upon the grounds that the court erred in finding that the option was not exercised at the expiration of a year from the date of the contract and holding that the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

The controversy over these two points resolves itself into the issue whether it was essential to an exercise of the option that the stock be tendered to defendants and a repurchase demanded at the expiration of one year from the date of the contract, to wit, on the 1st day of March, 1911. If such be the case, then the option was never exercised, for the tender was not made by plaintiff's assignor until November 29, 1912, and, moreover, even if a tender had been made on March 1, 1911, an action for the refusal to comply with the terms of the option would be barred by March 1, 1915, whereas the present complaint was filed in May, 1916. The question upon which the rights of the parties depend is, therefore, whether an effective tender and demand might be made after March 1, 1911. This question was not passed upon in Flickinger v. Wrenn Investment Co., supra. In that case it was decided that an action was not maintainable in the absence of any tender of the stock or demand of the purchase price, and plaintiff's assignor was nonsuited upon the ground that—

Therefore, in the present case, it is necessary to proceed upon the premise that a tender and demand are essential to put defendants in default and prerequisite to the maintenance of the present suit. To that extent only does the previous decision operate as res adjudicata, the question as to the precise time within which a valid tender and demand may be made coming before this court for the first time on this appeal.

[1, 2] An option contract may be regarded as embodying an offer. When the optionee, or person to whom the offer is made, signifies his desire to accept in accordance with the terms of the option, the optionor, or person making the offer, becomes obligated to perform. This acceptance of the offer contained in the option contract is called "election," and it gives rise to a subsequent contract between the parties to buy or sell, or perform whatever other acts have been specified in the option contract. Penn. Min. Co. v. Smith, 207 Pa. 210, 56 Atl. 426. "The particular act or acts which constitute an election may be fixed by the terms of the option, as also the time when, the place where, and the person to whom it shall be made." James, Law of Option Contracts, §§ 801, 817. The language of the contract itself controls as to what act or acts constitute an election. Under the terms of one option, election may consist of a tender of the property to be sold or purchase price to be paid; under the terms of another option, it may consist of a mere notice of election to purchase or sell, leaving payment of the price and delivery of the property as subsequent matters in performance of the executory contract raised by the election. Breen v. Mayne, 141 Iowa, 399, 118 N. W. 441; Byers v. Denver Circle R. Co., 13 Colo. 552, 22 Pac. 951; James, Law of Election Contracts, § 817. If the tender of property or purchase price constitutes an "election," it must be performed in order to turn the offer contained in the option contract into a contractual obligation and, if not performed as provided in the option contract, no subsequent contractual liability arises; if the tender is merely in performance of the contract created by a notice of election, it is controlled by the terms of that contract and "in the absence of anything in the contract itself the obligation of the parties in the performance of the contract is governed by the law applying generally to bilateral contracts for the purchase and sale of property. * * *" Cates v. McNeil, 169 Cal. 697, 147 Pac. 944.

"The said first parties [defendants] will at the option of the party of the second part, at the expiration of one year from the date hereof purchase from the said second party the said twenty-five shares of the capital stock of the said corporation for said sum of $2,500 gold coin of the United States to be paid by the said parties of the first part to said second party at the exercise of said option provided that said second party may give ten days' notice before the expiration of said year of his intention to exercise said option."

In other words, if the second party, plaintiff's assignor, desired the defendants to repurchase the stock, he was to give notice, ten days before the expiration of one year from the date of the contract, of his acceptance of defendants' offer. This notice, which was given as required, gave rise to a binding bilateral contract for the repurchase of the stock. There is nothing in the option clause which requires a tender or demand in order to constitute an election to accept the option. The tender of the stock to defendants was an act in performance of the contract created by the election and, while necessary to put defendants in default under this subsequent bilateral contract, it was a step in pursuance of the contract, not in its creation. Cates v. McNeil, supra. The time for performance is not specified by the parties. If plaintiff's assignor elected to accept the option, defendants' obligation to repurchase arose "at the expiration" of the year, March 1, 1911; but there is no requirement that the terms of the contract must be performed on the day upon which the obligation arises. In other words, the contract does not provide that the stock must be tendered or delivered or payment made on the day upon which defendants' duty to repurchase comes into existence. Consequently, all that was required was that, after due notice of election, plaintiff's assignor offer to perform, by tender and demand, on or within a reasonable time after March 1, 1911, the date upon which defendants' obligation to perform arose. Cates v. McNeil, supra; Breen v. Mayne, supra; Penn. Minn. Co. v. Smith, supra. "The general rule is that where an actual demand is essential as a condition precedent to a complete right of action for the recovery of money, such demand must be made within a reasonable time after it can lawfully be made, or within a reasonable time after the contract by its terms contemplates that it should be made, and that, unless there are peculiar circumstances affecting the question, a time coincident with that of the statute of limitations will be deemed reasonable." Vickrey v. Maier, 164 Cal. 384, 389, 129 Pac. 273, 275. The demand in the instant case was made within less than two years after the right to make it arose. "Where a party may call for the performance of the agreement upon the part of another only by a tender or offer to perform his own agreement, there can be no breach of the contract by the one until such offer or tender by the other, and the statute will not begin to run until that time." 25 Cyc. 1210; Vickrey v. Maier, supra. A right of action arose against defendants, therefore, in November, 1912, upon their refusal to accept the tender and comply with the demand, and the present action having been brought within less than four years thereafter, it is not barred by subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment is reversed.

HOLLY SUGAR CORPORATION et al. v. LEONARDT. (L. A. 6228.)

Rehearing Denied Oct. 20, 1921.)

1. Warehousemen $\hookrightarrow$ 34(7)—Evidence held to establish contract to store sugar received in fireproof warehouse.

In an action to recover the value of sugar burned while in a shed or upon a platform, evidence consisting of letters held to establish a contract on the part of the defendant to store the sugar in a fireproof warehouse.

2. Warehousemen $\hookrightarrow$ 24(3)—Entitled to reasonable time for transferring sugar from cars to fireproof warehouse.

One who contracted to store all sugar shipped in a fireproof warehouse was entitled to a reasonable time and to the use of reasonable and ordinary methods for making transfer of the sugar from the cars to the warehouse.

3. Warehousemen $\hookrightarrow$ 34(7) — Finding that reasonable care was exercised in removing sugar from cars to fireproof warehouse sustained.

In an action to recover the value of sugar burned in a shed or upon a platform in the course of removal from cars to fireproof warehouse, where defendant had contracted to store it, evidence held to sustain a finding that there was no lack of reasonable care and diligence in allowing the sugar in question to accumulate in the temporary quarters on the platform where it was burned, and plaintiff did not break his contract to store such sugar in a fireproof warehouse.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by the Holly Sugar Corporation and others against C. Leonardt. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, of Los Angeles, and George K. Ford and Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Sheldon Borden, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This action was brought to recover for the loss by fire of 14,526 bags of sugar which the plaintiff Holly Sugar Company had delivered to the defendant for storage in his concrete fireproof warehouse.

The sugar, in the process of transfer from the cars in which it was delivered to the storage warehouse, had been stacked for several days upon the concrete unloading platform between the warehouse and railroad track. The part of the platform where the sugar was stacked was covered by a wooden roof, and for the further protection of the sugar from the elements a temporary inclosure on the sides and ends was constructed of boards lined with tar paper. While thus temporarily stored the sugar was destroyed by the accidental burning of this platform structure.

The Aetna Insurance Company, Phoenix Insurance Company of Hartford, Orient Insurance Company, and North British & Mercantile Insurance Company had issued policies of insurance to the owner upon the sugar, and, having paid this loss, claimed the right of recovery against defendant by subrogation, and are joined as plaintiffs in the action.

Plaintiffs allege in their complaint two causes of action—one for breach of contract to store the sugar in a fireproof building, and the other for negligence in the care and handling of the sugar.

Judgment was for the defendant. Plaintiffs appeal, and rely upon the alleged breach of contract for fireproof storage for a reversal.

The findings of the trial court covering the issues involved in the appeal are in substance as follows:

That the defendant was not at any time engaged in the business of conducting a warehouse, but that he was the owner of the platform building referred to and certain contiguous warehouses, one of which, designated as No. 1, was entirely of concrete construction and practically fireproof. Another, designated as No. 3, was of concrete excepting the roof, which was of wood. That pursuant to special and several arrangements made during each of the years 1913 and 1914 between defendant and Holly Sugar Company and the American Beet Sugar Company he accepted from them for storage certain shipments of sugar. "That the shipments so accepted during the year 1913 were stored in warehouse No. 1, and of the shipments so accepted in the year 1914, the greater part thereof was stored in warehouse No. 1 and the remainder, excepting the quantity of approximately 14,000 bags hereinafter mentioned, was stored in warehouse No. 3, and that in the year 1914 he accepted for storage in said warehouse from the American Beet Sugar Company certain barley seed; that, with said exceptions, the defendant at no time received or solicited goods or other commodities for storage in said warehouses, or either of them, and no other person or persons actually did, at any time, store or deposit for storage with the defendant, goods or commodities to be deposited in the said warehouses, or either of them.

"That on or about August 7, 1914, the defendant and said Holly Sugar Company made an agreement whereby said Holly Sugar Company agreed to deliver unto defendant approximately 20,000 bags of sugar out of its production during the season of 1914, and defendant agreed to store said sugar in said warehouse No. 1, storage thereon to be charged and paid at the rate of 20 cents per ton per month; that thereafter and prior to the 9th day of November, 1914, said Holly Sugar Company delivered unto defendant, in cars upon the aforesaid spur track, approximately 50,000 bags of sugar, which said sugar was unloaded from said cars by the defendant and stored in said warehouses Nos. 1 and 3; that the portion of said deliveries in excess of the 20,000 bags covered by said arrangement of August 7, 1914, were tendered by Holly Sugar Company and accepted by the defendant without the making of any supplemental or additional express arrangement applicable thereto; that on or about the first week in November, 1914, said Holly Sugar Company requested defendant to store an additional quantity of sugar estimated at from 15,000 to 25,000 bags, to which request defendant agreed; that thereafter and between November 9 and November 25, 1914, said Holly Sugar Company delivered to defendant in railroad cars upon the aforesaid spur track, additional sugar, amounting to not less than 20,000 bags; that said additional sugar was delivered faster and in larger quantities than the deliveries previously made and under circumstances and conditions which required the removal of said sugar from the railroad cars with such rapidity that defendant was unable, in the exercise of ordinary care, to pile and store said sugar in said warehouses as fast as the same was removed from said railroad cars; that defendant employed as many men as could be reasonably and conveniently used in the unloading and handling of said sugar and in the course of transferring same from the said railroad cars into said warehouse No. 1, a large quantity of said sugar, to wit, upwards of 14,000 bags thereof, was temporarily deposited and accumulated on said unloading platform; that Holly Sugar Company had no knowledge or notice prior to the happening of said fire that any of its sugar had been deposited or placed on said unloading platform, nor did it have any knowledge or notice that defendant was experiencing or had experienced any unusual inconvenience or difficulty in receiving or handling any of the sugar theretofore shipped by said Holly Sugar Company, either by reason of the rapidity or rate of said shipments, or for any reason; it is not true that defendant stored said sugar or any part thereof in or upon said platform or in any shed or platform, or that the same was negligently or carelessly placed upon said unloading platform; that on or about November 16th, 1914, on account of the approaching rainy season, defendant, for the purpose of protecting said sugar on said platform against damage from rain or storm, constructed temporary outside walls on the three sides of said unloading platform which had been theretofore uninclosed; that said temporary walls were constructed of wood and lined with tar paper for the purpose of rendering the same water tight and protecting said sugar on said platform against the weather until the same could be removed and piled in said warehouse No. 1; that the allegations of the complaint in this action relating to the construction, character, and purpose of the said unloading platform, which are at variance with this finding, are untrue; it is not true that defendant at all or any of the times stated in said complaint carelessly or negligently failed or neglected or failed or neglected at all to supply the necessary apparatus for the extinguishing of any fire which might attack the said platform, or the said sugar deposited thereon, as hereinbefore found; that said platform was a reasonably safe place for the temporary deposit thereof of said sugar under the circumstances and conditions hereinbefore found, and was not an unsafe place for the temporary deposit of said sugar while the same was being transferred from the railroad cars into the said warehouse as aforesaid; that in so depositing said sugar on said unloading platform the defendant was not negligent or lacking in the exercise of ordinary or reasonable care and diligence for the protection and preservation of the said sugar so deposited on said unloading platform by the defendant.

"That late in the afternoon of November 25, 1914, and while said sugar, to an amount in excess of 14,000 bags, was deposited on said unloading platform, and while its removal into said warehouse No. 1 was going on, the same was partly injured and damaged by fire and by water used in the extinguishment of said fire; that said fire was of unknown origin and was not due to or caused by any negligence or want of ordinary or reasonable care on the part of the defendant or to any failure on his part to exercise ordinary or reasonable care and diligence for the protection and preservation of the said sugar; that neither said warehouse No. 1 nor said warehouse No. 3 were damaged by said fire, nor were the contents of said warehouses or either thereof injured or damaged by said fire, with the exception that a small portion of the sugar theretofore deposited in said warehouse No. 1 was damaged by water used in the extinguishment of the said fire; that said last-mentioned damage was not due to or caused by any negligence on the part of the defendant, or any failure on his part to exercise ordinary or reasonable care and diligence for the protection and preservation of the said sugar."

The only material points of controversy on this appeal are: First, whether or not the evidence establishes a contract on the part of the defendant to store all the sugar received in a fireproof warehouse; and, second, whether, if such was the contract, the temporary storing of the sugar destroyed upon the loading platform was a breach of that contract.

[1] We are satisfied that the first proposition must be answered in the affirmative. The contract for storage of the 1913 consignments of sugar was expressly entered into between the parties by correspondence in which the defendant solicited the patronage of the sugar company and represented that he would be in a position to store at least 50,000 bags of sugar and probably more.

One of the defendant's letters to the sugar company contained the following passage:

"I believe you have seen my warehouse and know that it cannot be beaten for sugar storage or for any other purpose as I use only my reinforced warehouse for this purpose and it is absolutely moisture and vermin proof."

In another letter he refers to it as "Warehouse No. 1, which is the reinforced concrete fireproof building." Under these express representations the sugar company stored about 20,000 bags of sugar with defendant for the season of 1913.

In the summer of 1914 negotiations were again entered into for the storage of sugar for the approaching season of 1914, in which the sugar company proposed to furnish for storage approximately the same quantity of sugar that had been stored the previous year, some 20,000 bags, and on August 7th defendant's manager addressed the following letter to the sugar company:

"Manager Holly Sugar Company, Huntington Beach, California—My Dear Mr. Johnson: Since your telephone message of a few days ago to the effect that you expected to commence shipping me sugar for storage in my warehouse I have been expecting to hear further from you. I have cleaned out my warehouse No. 1 where I stored sugar last year and where I will do the same this year and have removed the lime and other objectionable material so that the place is absolutely clean in every respect, and I will also cover your sacks with canvas. I will appreciate it very much if you will kindly advise me if you have as yet received the instructions you stated you expected from the East in reference to making shipments to me. I have everything arranged to receive your sugar and a day or two's notice while not absolutely necessary would be appreciated, especially if you are in position to inform me as to the approximate number of bags which you will ship me every day.

"I assure you I am in position to give you the same satisfactory service I know I rendered you on last year's shipments.

"Very truly yours, C. Leonardt,
"By Merrill."

In September, 1914, the sugar company began delivering sugar for storage pursuant to the terms, expressed and implied, in the foregoing letter. There can be no question that there was at least an implied agreement to accept at least 20,000 bags of sugar for storage under the same terms and conditions as of the previous year.

Under this arrangement the sugar company consigned and delivered for storage between September 1st and the early part of November not only the suggested amount of 20,000 bags, but some 25,000 or 35,000 bags in excess of this amount. All, or practically all, of this sugar was stored in warehouses Nos. 1 and 3 before the transactions relating to the consignments of sugar that were damaged by fire. Whether or not the storage of part of the sugar in warehouse No. 3 was in violation of the contract is not material on this appeal as none of the damage complained of resulted from such storage.

These latter deliveries were made under the following circumstances: On or about the 1st of November the representative of the sugar company called up the defendant by telephone and inquired if he could take care of from 15,000 to 25,000 additional bags of sugar. Defendant replied that they had already shipped him approximately twice the amount agreed upon and that he could not tell positively whether he could take it or not. But on the following day the sugar company was notified that defendant would receive the additional shipments.

Nothing was said and no inquiry was made as to how or where this extra quantity of sugar was to be stored.

We are satisfied, however, that there was implied in this transaction, in the absence of notice to the consignor to the contrary, an agreement for the same fireproof storage covered by the former agreements.

The court has not found explicitly on this point; but as the probative facts found would only justify such an ultimate conclusion, we will treat it as so found.

The remaining question is: Was there a breach of this contract? The answer depends upon whether or not there was a failure on the part of the defendant to exercise reasonable care and diligence in transferring the sugar from the cars in which it was delivered at defendant's unloading platform, into the permanent storage warehouses.

[2] Clearly the defendant was entitled to a reasonable time and to the use of reasonable and ordinary methods for making such transfer. That the plaintiffs, the sugar company and the insurance companies, contemplated that there was likely to be some period in which the sugar would be exposed to possible risk upon the platform of defendant's warehouse, is indicated by the fact that the policies contained the following clause of insurance:

"On sugar and containers; all while contained in the one-story concrete building known as Leonardt's warehouse No. 1, and/or while on platforms adjoining, or in railroad cars on tracks within 300 feet thereof. * * *

It was a question of fact for the court whether or not the defendant used due skill and diligence in the process of handling this sugar in transit from the cars to the warehouse. To repeat the findings on this point it is declared by the court:

"That said additional sugar was delivered faster and in larger quantities than the deliveries previously made and under circumstances and conditions which required the removal of said sugar from the railroad cars with such rapidity that defendant was unable, in the exercise of ordinary care, to pile and store said sugar in said warehouses as fast as the same was removed from said railroad cars; that defendant employed as many men as could be reasonably and conveniently used in the unloading and handling of said sugar, and in the course of transferring same from the said railroad cars into said warehouse No. 1. * * * That said platform was a reasonably safe place for the temporary deposit thereon of said sugar under the circumstances and conditions hereinbefore found, and was not an unsafe place for the temporary deposit of said sugar while the same was being transferred from the railroad cars into the said warehouse as aforesaid; that in depositing said sugar on said unloading platform the defendant was not negligent or lacking in the exercise of ordinary or reasonable care and diligence for the protection and preservation of the said sugar so deposited on said unloading platform by the defendant. * * * That said fire was of unknown origin and was not due to or caused by any negligence or want of ordinary or reasonable care on the part of the defendant, or to any failure on his part to exercise ordinary or reasonable care and diligence for the protection and preservation of the said sugar."

Here, again, there is a lack of an explicit finding that it was reasonably necessary to store said sugar temporarily upon the platform and that it was left there no longer than in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence was necessary. But from the general facts found there can be no doubt that such was the conclusion intended by the court.

There were several circumstances shown in evidence tending to support such an ultimate finding. The defendant without having previous notice had received twice as much sugar as had been contracted for prior to the arrangement for taking the last extra consignment of upwards of 20,000 bags. In order to make room for this last consignment, he had found it necessary to restack much of the sugar already stored. The sugar was delivered in larger and more frequent consignments of carload lots than previously, and as the warehouse became filled and the surplus had to be placed at higher elevations the work of storing was necessarily retarded and the work of storing was hampered.

[3] Under all these circumstances, we cannot say as a matter of law that there was lack of reasonable care and diligence in allowing this quantity of sugar to accumulate in the temporary quarters on the platform during the 10 or 15 days of this extra delivery. There is no significance in the fact that some of the sugar first delivered about the 9th of September was still on the platform when the fire occurred on the 25th. When practicable to do so without subjecting the cars to demurrage charges, the sugar was unloaded directly into the warehouse. It thus resulted that sugar received the day before the fire was safely stored in the warehouse, while sugar received the early part of the month was still stacked under the platform shelter. But it can make no difference in plaintiff's loss or defendant's liability whether the 14,000 sacks of sugar damaged were of the first or last deliveries. The question is: Did defendant keep the sugar moving into the warehouse as rapidly as he reasonably could?

The evidence is sufficient to indicate that the defendant was exercising reasonable diligence in prosecuting the work of storing the sugar in view of the congested condition of the warehouse and the unexpected increase in the quantities delivered.

There is one circumstance, however, which is strongly urged by appellant as reflecting against defendant's care and diligence. The evidence discloses, and the court finds, that defendant sent no notice to the sugar company that the shipments were coming in faster than they could be taken care of or that sugar was being left upon the unloading platform. On the other hand, the sugar company did know that they had sent in quantities of sugar largely in excess of the amount originally stipulated for; that when it had asked for storage of a further lot of 15,000 to 25,000 sacks, the defendant had expressed uncertainty as to whether or not he had room for it and no conditions were made as to how it was to be handled. It was perhaps incumbent upon the sugar company to make some inquiry and investigation as to the facilities of the defendant for speedily receiving and storing this large excess of deliveries.

If this was a matter of first impression in this court the conclusion might be different. But as against the findings of the trial court we are not justified in reversing its judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

LOS ANGELES & ARIZONA LAND CO. v. MARR. (L. A. 6541.)

1. Deeds ☞155—Building restriction held condition subsequent.

A clause in a deed that, "in the event of a violation of any of these conditions or reservations, this instrument shall become null and void, the grantee herein shall forfeit all right or title to said property, and all interest therein shall revert without notice to the grantor herein," held to render a building restriction clause in the deed a condition subsequent, the breach of which might defeat grantee's title.

2. Deeds ☞156—Claimant of reversion on breach of condition subsequent must show transfer from grantor.

A right to reconveyance of property, upon a breach of a condition subsequent that there would be a right in grantor to forfeit if grantee did not comply with building restrictions in the deed, is a contingent estate which may be transferred, but an actual transfer of the reversion or right of re-entry by succession, will, or assignment is essential, and, in order to successfully sue for and enforce a reconveyance of the property, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove allegation of his complaint, denied in the answer, to the effect that the right of re-entry reserved to defendant's grantor has passed to plaintiff.

3. Appeal and error ☞719(6)—Finding binding in absence of specification of insufficiency of evidence.

In the absence of a specification of insufficiency of evidence to sustain a finding, it must be considered as binding and as warranted by the evidence adduced at the trial.

4. Deeds ☞156—Instrument held not to convey right to reconveyance of lot excepted.

A deed by a land company of tract of land, expressly excepting defendant's lot and making no mention whatever of rights reserved under previous sales of lots or rights to enforce forfeitures of such lots, was no evidence of a conveyance of a right to the reconveyance of defendant's lot upon breach of a condition subsequent.

5. Corporations ☞617(2)—No conveyance of property after failure to pay license tax.

Where a corporation has failed to pay its license tax and a forfeiture of its charter has been declared, it thereupon ceases to be a corporation and has no right to dispose of its property.

6. Judgment ☞256(1)—Not supported by irreconcilable findings.

Where findings of material facts are at variance and irreconcilable, a judgment cannot be based thereon.

7. Deeds ☞166—Breach of condition subsequent waived by accepting payment.

Grantor, and those claiming under it, were estopped from seeking to enforce a forfeiture of title against grantee of a lot for breach of a condition subsequent concerning building restrictions, where grantor accepted grantee's final payment and delivered a deed to the lot with knowledge of grantee's breach of such condition, such acts constituting a waiver.

8. Deeds ☞166—Conditions subsequent may be waived.

A condition subsequent in a deed permitting forfeiture by grantor on breach of building restrictions, although valid, may be enforced only at the instance of one who has not waived his right to maintain such an action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles & Arizona Land Company against Winifred F. Marr. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Winifred F. Marr, in pro. per.

Goodrich & Martinson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to enforce a forfeiture of title to real property in the county of Los Angeles.

On July 11, 1910, the Verdugo Canyon Land Company entered into a contract with the defendant, Winifred Marr, for the sale to the latter of a vacant lot which was situated in a tract owned by the said company designated as "Tract No. 250." Defendant at that time entered into possession of the land and on August 4, 1910, erected on the property a small cottage which she still maintains thereon. Upon completing payment of the purchase price, on July 29, 1911, defendant received a deed to the property from the said Verdugo Canyon Land Company. Both the deed and the contract of sale in pursuance of which the deed was executed contained the "express condition" that "no residence, hotel, church or schoolhouse shall be erected or maintained upon the property last above described of a less value than $2,000.00," providing further that—"In the event of a violation of any of these conditions or reservations, this instrument shall become null and void, the grantee herein shall forfeit all right or title to said property and all interest therein shall revert without notice to the grantor herein.

"And it is further understood that the stipulations aforesaid are to apply to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of the respective parties."

Plaintiff, Los Angeles & Arizona Land Company, claims, and the trial court found, that plaintiff became and now is the owner of the right to sue for and enforce forfeitures against those who purchased property in tract No. 250 from said Verdugo Canyon Land Company in the event that they violate the conditions of their respective deeds. The trial court also found that plaintiff became and now is the owner of various lots in the vicinity of defendant's lot and has sold and conveyed to various other purchasers divers and sundry other lots in said vicinity; that the restriction above quoted was imposed for the purpose of enhancing the value of those lots in the vicinity of defendant's lot which were owned by the Verdugo Canyon Land Company at the time of the deed to defendant; that the cost and value of the house on defendant's lot does not exceed the sum of $225, and that the said building is a detriment to the surrounding property. Apparently no complaint was made on account of the maintenance of the cottage on defendant's lot until the month of April, 1913, when plaintiff informed defendant of its intention to enforce the condition as to the value of buildings maintained upon the property and requested her to remove the cottage from the lot or to move it in the rear in the position of an outhouse. Defendant having refused to comply with the notice, plaintiff instituted the present action wherein it sought and obtained a decree that all defendant's right, title, and interest in and to the land in question was forfeited to plaintiff and that the deed to defendant was set aside and canceled. From this decree defendant appeals.

[1] At the outset it must be conceded that the uncompromising language of the deed to defendant requires that the building restriction clause above quoted be construed as a condition subsequent, the breach of which may defeat defendant's title. Firth v. Marovich, 160 Cal. 257, 116 Pac. 729, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190; Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 179, 183 Pac. 945. Whether the said restriction amounts also to a covenant and, if so, whether such covenant can be enforced by plaintiff or other owners of property in the vicinity of defendant's lot, is immaterial for the purposes of the present suit, for plaintiff is not attempting to enforce a covenant for the benefit of neighboring lands. Upon the happening of a subsequent contingency, namely, the violation of the building restriction clause, defendant's interest in the land was to revert to the grantor, his heirs, successors, or assigns; plaintiff takes the position that the subsequent contingency has occurred and, as assignee of defendant's grantor, brings the present suit for forfeiture.

[2-4] It is settled in this state that a right to the reconveyance of property upon breach of a condition subsequent, such as that reserved to defendant's grantor, is a contingent estate which may be transferred. Johnston v. City of Los Angeles, 176 Cal. 479, 168 Pac. 1047. However, an actual transfer of the reversion or right of re-entry by succession, will, or assignment is essential, and, in order to successfully sue for and enforce a reconveyance of the property in the instant case, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove the allegation of the complaint, denied in the answer, to the effect that the right of re-entry reserved to the defendant's grantor has passed to plaintiff by assignment. Werner v. Graham, supra; Hannah v. S. P. R. Co. (App.) 192 Pac. 304. Upon this phase of the case the trial court found that—

"On or about December 8, 1911, the said Verdugo Canyon Land Company [defendant's grantor] sold and conveyed all its right, title, and interest in and to said tract 250 to the Fruit World Publishing Company, a corporation, together with its rights to enforce forfeiture for violation of the terms and conditions in said contracts and deeds made with its purchasers and that on or about July 29, 1912, the said Fruit World Publishing Company sold and conveyed all of its right, title, and interest in and to said tract No. 250 to the Verdugo Park Land & Water Company, a corporation, with like rights to enforce forfeiture."

This finding, in strict accordance with the allegations of the complaint, is not specified in the bill of exceptions as unsupported by the evidence, nor attacked in any manner on this appeal. In the absence of a specification of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the finding, it must be considered as binding and as warranted by the evidence adduced at the trial. Estate of Heaton, 135 Cal. 385, 388, 67 Pac. 321; Realty & Rebuilding Co. v. Rea, 194 Pac. 1024; Robben v. Benson (App.) 185 Pac. 200. The court then finds that—

"Said last-named corporation [Verdugo Park Land & Water Company] sold and conveyed all of its right, title, and interest in and to said Tract No. 250 to plaintiff, with like rights to enforce forfeitures." (Italics ours.)

This finding is assailed in the bill of exceptions as unsupported by the evidence. The deed of said tract 250 from the Verdugo Park Land & Water Company to the plaintiff, which is the only evidence in the record on this question, expressly excepts defendant's lot, together with other lots in the tract which had previously been sold to individuals, from the operation of the deed and makes no mention whatever of rights reserved under previous sales of these lots or rights to enforce forfeitures of such lots. There is therefore no evidence to support the finding that these rights were conveyed to plaintiff by the Verdugo Park Land & Water Company, and so far as appears from the record before us, the rights in question are still retained by the latter company. Necessarily it must be held that the finding to the effect that the Verdugo Park Land & Water Company transferred to plaintiff its right to sue for forfeiture of defendant's lot is wholly without support in the evidence.

[5, 6] But the plaintiff contends that, notwithstanding the insufficiency of the evidence to support this particular finding, nevertheless the trial court has made other findings of fact from which can be deduced the ultimate finding that plaintiff is the owner of the right to sue for and enforce a forfeiture against defendant. However, the remaining findings on this issue fail to sustain a judgment in plaintiff's favor. As previously stated, the trial court found that, on December 8, 1911, the Verdugo Canyon Land Company conveyed to the Fruit World Publishing Company all of the former's interest in and to the tract in question, including the right to enforce forfeitures. There is a subsequent finding that the Verdugo Canyon Land Company forfeited its charter for nonpayment of the annual license tax and has never been rehabilitated or revived (there being no finding of the date of forfeiture), that thereupon the directors of said corporation became its trustees with full power to settle its affairs, and that said trustees, by deed dated December 10, 1913, conveyed to plaintiff all the said company's right, title, and interest in and to tract 250, including lot 54 (defendant's lot), and in the sales of lots made by it to purchasers, together with its right to sue for and enforce forfeitures of said lots. The court's failure to find the date upon which the charter of the Verdugo Canyon Land Company was forfeited was evidently due to an oversight, for blank spaces are left for the insertion of the dates. Although there is no express finding of the date of the forfeiture of the charter, there is a necessary implication that the conveyance of December 8, 1911, to the Fruit World Publishing Company was executed by the Verdugo Canyon Land Company before it forfeited its charter, for, where a corporation has failed to pay its license tax and a forfeiture of the charter has been declared, it thereupon ceases to be a corporation, and has no right to dispose of its property. Newhall v. Western Zinc

Mining Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 Pac. 1040; Aalwyn's Law Institute v. Martin, 173 Cal. 21, 159 Pac. 158. Consequently, any conveyance found to have been made by the Verdugo Canyon Land Company must have been executed prior to the forfeiture of its charter. This conclusion is confirmed by the fact that it appears from the certificate of the secretary of state and Governor's proclamation, set forth in the bill of exceptions, that the charter was forfeited in November, 1912. If the Verdugo Canyon Land Company conveyed the right to enforce forfeitures of lots in tract 250, including defendant's lot, to the Fruit World Publishing Company in December, 1911, no such right remained in the former company at the time its charter was forfeited, no such right passed to its directors as trustees, and therefore the deed of the trustees to plaintiff in December, 1913, could not convey the aforesaid right. Obviously, the finding that the right to sue for a reconveyance of defendant's property was conveyed to plaintiff by the trustees of the Verdugo Canyon Land Company after that corporation had ceased to exist is inconsistent with the finding that the Verdugo Canyon Land Company itself conveyed the said right to the Fruit World Publishing Company, which, in turn, transferred the right to the Verdugo Park Land and Water Company. If the latter finding is true, then it would appear that the Verdugo Park Land & Water Company is now the owner of the right, in view of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the further finding that the Verdugo Park Land and Water Company conveyed the right to plaintiff. The findings of material facts being thus at variance and irreconcilable, there is no showing that the facts found warrant or support the judgment rendered, and a reversal of the judgment is necessary. Manly v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94; Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 18 Pac. 872, 21 Pac. 11; Estep v. Armstrong, 91 Cal. 659, 27 Pac. 1091; Rand v. Columbian Realty Co., 13 Cal. App. 444, 110 Pac. 322.

[7] There is an additional reason for the reversal of the judgment. In her second amended answer defendant pleads that, in the month of July, 1911, the Verdugo Canyon Land Company, with knowledge of the existence of the building on defendant's lot, accepted defendant's final payment of $1,350 and delivered to her a deed to the lot. These acts, defendant alleges, constitute a waiver and estop the said grantor, and those claiming under it, from seeking to enforce any forfeiture of title against defendant for the maintenance of the said building upon the lot. The conceded facts fully support this contention and justify defendant's claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that defendant's lot is still subject to the building restriction, in so far as the present building is concerned.

[8] While the validity of conditions of this kind is not questioned (L. A. & Ariz. Land Co. v. Marr, 178 Cal. 244, 173 Pac. 83), nevertheless such condition may be enforced only at the instance of one who has not waived his right to maintain such an action. In the case of Union Realty Co. v. Best, 160 Cal. 263, 265, 116 Pac. 737, 738, it is said:

"In so far as the covenant was made for the benefit of the grantor, who alone is complaining here, it might be waived, and the facts found establish a clear case of waiver. The argument of appellant that evidence of an oral understanding * * * cannot vary the terms of a written contract is not to the point. The facts pleaded in defense were not relied upon to prove that the agreement did not prohibit the construction of the building where located, but to establish a waiver of the covenant or an estoppel to rely upon it. Such waiver and estoppel may be shown by parol."

Waiver of such right is recognized as a valid defense to such an action. Brown v. Wrightman, 5 Cal. App. 391, 393, 90 Pac. 467; Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855.

The court found that the Verdugo Canyon Land Company consented to the erection of a temporary building by defendant upon the understanding that it should not remain upon the land for a longer period than six months. As pointed out by defendant, this finding is totally without support in the evidence. The uncontradicted evidence does show that the building remained on the lot without objection for nearly three years, and that in July, 1911, about a year after the building was erected, the Verdugo Canyon Land Company accepted payment of the purchase price and delivered the deed of the property to defendant, with knowledge of the existence of the building and without complaint concerning the same. This evidence clearly establishes a waiver of the grantor's right to enforce a forfeiture of defendant's lot because of the erection and maintenance of the building in question.

In the case of L. A. & Ariz. Land Co. v. Marr, supra, an earlier appeal in an action involving this same matter, the court merely interpreted the language of the restrictive clauses in defendant's deed and decided that plaintiff had made a prima facie showing of a violation of the building restriction clause by defendant, and therefore that a nonsuit was improper. However, upon that appeal the court did not have before it any evidence of waiver.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. CALPESTRI. (Cr. 975.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 19, 1921.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1158(4)—Trial court's determination as to whether confession voluntary conclusive, where evidence conflicting.

Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether a confession was voluntary, the appellate court is bound by the trial court's determination.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 372(12)—Other checks admissible if forged in furtherance of general plot or conspiracy.

In a prosecution for forgery, where defendant was one of several employees, who, by so manipulating the pay checks as to cause the employer to pay certain ones in the belief the payee was in its employment, obtained the proceeds thereof, other forged checks than that described in the information were admissible in evidence, if such facts constituted a general plot or conspiracy.

3. Forgery $\S$ 44(1/2)—Evidence held sufficient to make prima facie case.

In a prosecution for forgery, the similarity of defendant's writing to that of the forged signature, together with testimony of the person whose name was forged that the writing was not his, and that he had never authorized defendant to write his signature for him, held sufficient to make a prima facie case.

4. Forgery $\S$ 35—One in possession of and cashing forged check not presumed guilty; "presumption."

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1959, defining a "presumption" as a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts, and sections 1962 and 1963, enumerating conclusive and disputable presumptions, instructions in a prosecution for forgery that, if defendant had in his possession and obtained money on a forged check, this raised a presumption of guilt, were erroneous, no such presumption being enumerated in the Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Presumption.]

5. Criminal law $\S$ 759(1)—Instruction as to presumption of guilt from possession and cashing of forged check held erroneous, as telling jury it must infer guilt.

In a prosecution for forgery, instructions that, if defendant had in his possession and obtained money on a forged check, this raised a presumption of guilt, were erroneous, though "presumption" was synonymous with "inference," the jury being told that it must infer guilt, thus invading its province.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Elia Calpestri was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Reversed.

John J. Greeley and Theodore A. Bell, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rior-dan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of forgery, and he has appealed from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial. The information on which he went to trial pleaded in one count (1) the forging, and (2) the uttering of a check purporting to be indorsed by the payee therein named, G. Cerruti. A trial was had, and the jury brought in a general verdict of guilty as charged.

[1] In support of his appeal the defendant contends that the trial court erred in allowing evidence of the confession of the defendant, because it had not been shown that the confession was voluntary. As to whether the confession was voluntary or otherwise, a great deal of time was taken up during the trial of the case in the examination of each witness who was present at the time of the confession. The interview in which the defendant confessed was a long one, covering four hours or more. During that time much conversation was had, but it does not appear that anything occurred which can be said was in the nature of a threat or a promise. We are not inclined to say that the evidence on those subjects was even conflicting, but, conceding that it was, such is the broadest summary in favor of the defendant, and the conflict was for the trial court to determine, and this court is bound by that determination.

[2] For the purpose of showing that the forgery of the check described in the information was but a part of a larger plot and plan, the prosecution introduced other forged checks. It was the contention of the prosecution that the defendant Calpestri, together with one Sindici and one Rinaudo, were coworkers in one department of one of the plants of the California Packing Corporation; that they had such charge of the time books, checks, and payments, as to enable them to manipulate the pay checks in such manner as to be able to cause the employer to pay certain checks under the belief that the payee was in its employment, and that the proceeds of the forged checks were so obtained by the manipulators. If we call this a general plan and plot, the evidence was admissible. People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, 517-519; 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) pp. 71-74 and note 73. Or, if the foregoing facts be said to be and to constitute a conspiracy, then, and in that event, the evidence was admissible. As tending to prove a conspiracy, some of the forged instruments, it was testified, were forged by the defendant, and some were forged by Sindici. Whether forged by the defendant or by Sindici, certain of the checks, after being forged, were presented for payment by the defendant, the individual whose duty it was ordinarily to go to the bank in the ordinary and proper transaction of the business of the employer.

[3] Much testimony of this kind was introduced before the prosecution called witnesses regarding the confession. The appellant calls to our attention the rule stated in People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 Pac. 44. The court was there speaking of the force and effect of the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. In this case we are concerned with the confession of the defendant. The facts of this case do not throw it within the rule stated in the Compton Case. Nor is this case ruled by People v. Baird, 105 Cal. 126, 129, 38 Pac. 633. Aside from the confession there were such facts introduced in evidence that the prosecution might have gone to the jury without the introduction of the confession at all. It would serve no purpose to attempt to restate all the testimony that may be said to be independent of the confession. However, it may be stated that the exhibits have been certified up and are before this court. The check set forth in the information is before us. On the face of the check the same is made payable to G. Cerruti. It was indorsed (as one at first would be inclined to read it) "G. Cerrutie."

When, however, one picks up the exemplars of Calpestri's writing, and studies the signature of Calpestri, the fact stands out prominently that his name is Calpestri, and that he writes the same as though the spelling were "Calpestrie." The terminal letters in the forged signature, G. Cerruti, and in the ordinary writing of his own name by Calpestri, have such a strong peculiarity and resemblance that slight study of the writings demonstrates that the signature might just as well have been written "G. Cerruti by E. Calpestri." When the evidence stood in that form, and the prosecution took the next step and proved by G. Cerruti that the writing was not his, and that he had never authorized Calpestri to write the signature for him, a very strong prima facie case had been made out for the prosecution.

[4] On the request of the prosecution the court gave two instructions as to the effect of evidence showing possession of, or obtaining money on, a forged instrument. The appellant contends that those two instructions were prejudicially erroneous. People v. Mitchell, 55 Cal. 236, and Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 177, 116 Pac. 530. The instructions complained of are as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that where one is found in possession of a forged instrument and is endeavoring to obtain money or advances upon it, this raises the presumption that he either forged or consented to the forging of such instrument, and, nothing else appearing, the person will be presumed to be guilty.

"The court instructs the jury that, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the indorsement upon the check in this case (People's Exhibit 4), is a forgery, and that the defendant had it in his possession and obtained money from the Bank of Italy upon it, then this raises a presumption of guilt and unless the defendant has rebutted it, you will find a verdict of guilty." (Italics ours.)

If there are any such presumptions in California the same must be printed somewhere in the Codes or other statutes, because section 1959 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts."

Conclusive presumptions are enumerated in section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No one claims that the presumption recited in the above instructions fall within that section. Section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates the most of the disputable presumptions. It is a long section. Read it from the beginning to the end and one finds no such presumption as the one that is recited in the instructions. Search the Codes and statutes and one fails to find such presumptions.

[5] In a long line of cases the Supreme Court of this state has uniformly pointed out the distinction between the word "presumption" and the word "inference." Many of those cases are collected in Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 177, 116 Pac. 530. However, if the above instructions are read as though the word "presumption" was used as being synonymous with the word "inference," still the instructions were prejudicially erroneous, because each instruction in effect told the jury that it must infer the guilt of the defendant. As the power to draw inferences rests with the jury, the trial court takes the case away from the jury when it tells the jury that it must infer. As the Supreme Court said in denying the application for a hearing in that court of the case entitled People v. Stephens, 29 Cal. App. 616, at page 622, 157 Pac. 572 at page 573:

"The existence of such intent was a matter to be proved by the prosecution, and while the jury were at liberty to infer such intent from such facts and circumstances as were stated in the instruction, it cannot be held to be a correct proposition of law to say substantially that they must so infer." (Italics the court's.)

In several of the common-law states like North Carolina and Missouri, there is a different classification, and they speak of presumptions of law and presumptions of fact. Instructions perfectly sound in those other states are not necessarily sound propositions of law in the state of California where we have different rules established by statute. It is patent that the two instructions complained of were erroneous, and that they were prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

The judgment of conviction and the order denying a new trial are both reversed.

TRAYNOR v. MCGILVRAY. (Civ. 3857.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨970(2)—Question of remoteness of evidence in discretion of trial court.

The question of remoteness of evidence as to the actions and conduct of a party, particularly as to the rate of speed and method of driving an automobile just before a collision, rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, the ruling of which will not be disturbed except on a clear showing of an abuse of discretion.

2. Highways ⇨184(2)—Testimony as to speed and manner of operation of automobile shortly before collision held not too remote.

Testimony of witnesses as to the speed and manner of operation of an automobile within 500 or 600 feet of the point of collision with another car a few seconds later and near enough to hear the sound, though they did not see the impact, did not relate to conditions at prior times and other places, so as to bring it within the rule against remoteness.

3. Trial ⇨96—Motion to strike out whole of testimony part of which admissible properly denied.

In an action for injuries in an automobile collision, where defendant's witness, to rebut plaintiff's testimony that defendant offered her no help, testified that defendant asked her to inquire if he could help plaintiff, stating that he had already asked plaintiff but she would not answer, motion to strike all such witness' testimony on ground that plaintiff was not present at the time was properly refused; the testimony as to making witness an intermediary not being subject to such objection.

4. Trial ⇨240—Comment as to meaning of statute properly stricken from instruction as argumentative.

In an action for injuries in an automobile collision, a comment as to the meaning of a portion of the Motor Vehicle Act was properly stricken from an instruction, being unnecessary in view of the clear language of the act and argumentative and foreign to the extent of obscuring rather than clarifying it.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Gabrielle G. Traynor against J. D. McGilvray, Jr. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. F. Hanlon, of San Francisco, for appellant.

B. M. Aikins and McCutchen, Willard, Mannon & Greene, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment based upon a verdict in favor of the defendant in an action for damages for personal injuries received by the plaintiff as the result of a collision between the automobiles of the respective parties which occurred on the afternoon of January 18, 1917, upon the state highway, between Burlingame and Millbrae, in San Mateo county.

The defendant was driving his car, a sedan, southward from San Francisco on his way to San Jose. The plaintiff was driving her car, also a sedan, northward from Burlingame on the way to San Francisco. A short distance ahead of her was a wagon, and just behind it another car, a Metz; both proceeding northward. The Metz car turned outward toward or upon the center of the road in order to pass the wagon, and the plaintiff at or about the same moment attempted to pass both the wagon and the Metz car. The approaching defendant first observed the wagon and the cars behind it when about 500 feet away, and saw the Metz car turn outward in its attempt to pass the wagon; but, according to the defendant's assertion, did not observe the plaintiff's effort to pass both the Metz car and the wagon until so short a distance away as to render a collision between his own car and the car of the plaintiff inevitable. The testimony is quite conflicting as to the respective speeds and also as to the precise position of the automobiles of the respective parties at and immediately before the time of the collision; but the evidence is practically conclusive that at the precise moment of collision the plaintiff's car was upon the left side of the highway, and the defendant's car was well over toward the edge of that side of the highway and in the dust of that portion thereof which was unbituminized. The jury returned its verdict in favor of the defendant.

The appellant's first contention upon this appeal is that the trial court committed reversible error in its admission in evidence of the testimony of two witnesses, Mrs. Margaret Warner and her daughter, Miss. Elsie L. Warner, called by the defendant. The testimony of these two witnesses was to the effect that they were standing by the side of the highway a short distance north of Burlingame and about the distance of a city block away from the point of collision, which point, however, they were unable to see for the reason that there is a slight elevation in the road between their points of vision and the point of impact. They were near enough, however, to hear the sound of such impact, and their testimony to which the plaintiff's objection went was to the effect that at the time the plaintiff passed the point where they were standing and went on up the incline in the road her car was driven very rapidly and, as the witnesses described it, "was running from one side of the road to the other, zigzagging across the road." The plaintiff objected to the defendant's offer to make this proof, and also objected to the witnesses' testimony when presented, upon the ground that it was too remote for the reason that it referred to the conduct of the plaintiff and the action of her car at a time prior to and at some considerable distance from the point of collision, which point was beyond the witnesses' visions.

[1] We think that this objection was not well taken. The question of the remoteness of evidence which is offered with relation to the actions and conduct of a party, particularly as to the rate of speed and method of driving an automobile just before a collision occurs, is one which rests so largely within the discretion of the trial court that no positive rule upon the subject can be laid down, and for that reason the ruling of the trial judge as to the admission or rejection of that sort of evidence will not be disturbed except upon a clear showing of an abuse of such discretion. 1 Wigmore on Evidence, 514 et seq.; Olsen v. Levy, 8 Cal. App. 487, 97 Pac. 76; Bauhofer v. Crawford, 16 Cal. App. 676, 117 Pac. 931; Scragg v. Saltee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 140 Pac. 706; Dilger v. Whittier, 33 Cal. App. 15, 164 Pac. 49.

[2] We do not regard it as significant that these witnesses did not actually see the impact of the machines, since they were within 500 or 600 feet of the point of impact, which occurred within a few seconds after the existence of the conditions which they related, and near enough for the sound of the impact to reach their ears. Their testimony did not, therefore, relate to conditions at prior times and other places so as to bring it within the range of the cases which the appellant cites as supporting her contention.

[3] The appellant's next contention relates to certain further testimony given by one of these same witnesses, and which was offered to rebut the testimony of the plaintiff to the effect that the defendant did not offer her any assistance just after the collision, or, to use her own language, "never offered me one bit of help," and "his manner was very threatening." Miss Elsie Warner was called by the defendant, and testified that immediately after hearing the impact of the collision she and her mother got into their car and drove to the place of the accident, where they saw the plaintiff standing on the ground near her car, and the defendant standing near his car a short distance away; whereupon, to quote from the record, the witness testified:

"I went over to look at his (the defendant's) car, and he asked me to ask Mrs. Traynor if there was anything in the world he could do for her, and he said he had offered to help her but she would not listen to him, and would not even speak to him.

"Mr. Hanlon: I move to strike that out."

A little later and before ruling upon this motion, Mr. Hanlon renewed it as follows:

"Mr. Hanlon: I move to strike out the conversation between Mr. McGilvray, our opponent, and this witness in our absence."

The court denied both motions, and its action in so doing is assailed as error.

We cannot give our assent to the appellants' contention in this regard. No ground of objection to this offered evidence was stated in either of said motions, except possibly that the conversation was objected to as in the absence of the plaintiff. This would not be a good objection to that portion of the witness' conversation with McGilvray wherein he asked her to be his intermediary in proffering his aid to the plaintiff; and as to what he said otherwise as to his own previous offer of aid to the plaintiff, the objection was not confined to this probably objectionable portion of the witness' testimony, but went to the whole statement of the witness, a portion of which was clearly admissible. It was not, therefore, error of the trial court to deny the plaintiff's motions to strike out the whole of this testimony in the form in which such motions were made. Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 449, 11 Pac. 659; Lucy v. Davis, 163 Cal. 611, 126 Pac. 490; Est. of Huston, 163 Cal. 166, 124 Pac. 852.

[4] The appellant makes several objections to alleged errors of the trial court in modifying one of her proposed instructions, and in refusing to give certain other instructions requested by her. As to the first of these objections relating to the court's modification of the plaintiff's proposed instruction, we find that such modification consisted in part in striking from said instruction an excerpt from the Motor Vehicle Act, which the court had already given to the jury in another portion of its instructions; and consisted further in striking from said requested instruction a comment which the plaintiff proposed as to the meaning of the portions of the Motor Vehicle Act which had been embodied in the offered instruction. This comment was unnecessary in the presence of the clear language of the act itself, and it was also argumentative in form to the extent of obscuring rather than clarifying the act. It was therefore properly stricken from the instruction.

As to the other instructions offered by the plaintiff and refused by the court, we do not deem it profitable to deal with these in detail, since we find that they were each and all subject to the vice of argumentativeness, and in each instance the questions of law to which they related were amply and correctly covered by the very full and fair instructions of the court, which were given to the jury.

We find no error in this record.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Corporations ⇐82—Contract with intending purchaser of stock to buy it back on demand enforceable by purchaser.

An agreement of a corporation with an intending purchaser of stock to take back the stock on demand is enforceable by such purchaser.

2. Corporations ⇐82—Incorporators agreeing to pay reasonable value of stock on return thereof by purchaser must repay such sum on tender of return.

Under Civ. Code, § 3302, providing that the detriment caused by breach of an obligation to pay money only is deemed to be the amount due by the terms of the obligation, with interest, two incorporators, who, as an inducement to a third to engage in the enterprise, agreed that the latter, if dissatisfied, might return his stock and receive a sum equal to its reasonable value at the time of surrender, were obligated, on tender of the return of the stock, to repay such sum; their liability being measured by the rules of accountability as though the corporation itself were the obligor.

3. Corporations ⇐82—Plaintiff alleging promise to pay reasonable value on return of stock need not allege he was damaged in such sum.

Where a purchaser of stock, in an action to recover its value on a tender of the return thereof pursuant to an agreement to such effect, alleged that defendants had promised to pay the fair and reasonable value thereof, which was stated, and prayed judgment for such amount as determined by the court, it was unnecessary to allege that he had been damaged in such sum; there being but one form of action in California, and a complaint stating facts entitling plaintiff to relief, either legal or equitable, not being demurrable on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by G. N. Williamson against B. F. Marshall and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Francis V. Keesling and C. A. S. Frost, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

L. Seidenberg, of San Francisco, A. P. Crist, of Oakland, and Fabian H. Hillebrandt, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in favor of the defendants, after demurrer sustained without leave to amend. While the demurrer attacks a number of alleged defects in the complaint, none of the special assignments would have justified it being sustained without leave to amend. Consequently the main question to be considered upon this appeal is the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action.

Concisely stated, it is alleged that the plaintiff and the defendants entered into an agreement for the formation of a corporation to be known as the California Food Specialty Company, to take over the business and property of an insolvent firm of which defendant Marshall was at the time the liquidating partner. It was agreed that the corporation should have an authorized capital stock of $30,000; that plaintiff should purchase one-third of such stock for the sum of $10,000, at par; that defendant Palmer should sell and deliver to the corporation certain land which she would buy for that purpose from the insolvent firm, together with the buildings and equipment thereon, she to take in payment 200 shares of the stock of the corporation of the par value of $20,000, the plan being that plaintiff and defendants would own and hold, upon the completion of the organization, its entire capital stock. As part of the transaction it was agreed that plaintiff should be a director and officer of the company, at a compensation of $225 per month, and should, jointly with the defendant Marshall, have control and management of the executive affairs of the corporation. It was further agreed between the parties that if the plaintiff disagreed with the defendants about the conduct or management of the business, or should become dissatisfied with the acts of the defendant Marshall, or disagree with him concerning those matters, the defendants would at any time, upon demand of the plaintiff, purchase from him all of his 100 shares of the capital stock of the corporation at the fair value of said shares. This offer, which was not in writing, was accepted by the plaintiff, who, at the request of the defendants and in performance of his agreement, forthwith paid $1,000 upon contracts for machinery for the use of the corporation with which to begin business.

The corporation was organized according to the agreement. Defendant Palmer purchased the real estate, buildings, and equipment from the insolvent copartnership of Post, Marshall & Post, and transferred the property to the California Food Specialty Company, receiving in exchange 200 shares of the stock of the corporation of the par value of $20,000. Plaintiff paid into the treasury of the company the balance of $9,000, due on his part of the agreement, and received 100 shares of the capital stock of the par value of $10,000. Defendant Palmer placed one share of her stock in the name of the defendant Marshall to qualify him, and the corporation was organized with plaintiff and the two defendants as directors. The board of directors elected Marshall president, and the plaintiff vice president, respectively, each with a salary of $225 per month and by resolution made Marshall as president, and plaintiff as vice president, jointly the managers of the corporation, with all powers usual in such matters.

This arrangement continued for nearly a year, after which time the defendant Marshall ignored plaintiff entirely in the conduct of the business of the corporation. Plaintiff then for the first time became aware that the defendant Palmer had not transferred the property of the insolvent firm to the corporation at the price agreed. Shortly thereafter, by the votes of defendants Marshall and Palmer, over the protest and objection of plaintiff, defendant Marshall was made sole manager of the California Food Specialty Company, and the salary of plaintiff as vice president was reduced to $25 per month. Being dissatisfied with this arrangement, the plaintiff notified the defendants of such fact, and demanded that they purchase from him the 100 shares of stock of the corporation standing in his name, at $125 per share, which price, it is alleged in the complaint, was a fair and reasonable value of the stock at that time. The defendants refused this offer, admitting there was no question about the price for which the stock was offered, but giving as a reason that the business would need more money, which the defendants would have to furnish. It is alleged that plaintiff's stock is practically worthless in his hands without joint participation in the management and control of the business, which is a close corporation. All of the issued and outstanding shares of stock are owned by the parties to this litigation and no other persons can become interested without purchasing shares from either the plaintiff or defendants. None of the stock is or ever has been on the market, and it has no market value. The prayer is for a decree declaring the fair and reasonable value of the 100 shares of stock standing in the name of the plaintiff on the books of the corporation; that defendants jointly and severally pay plaintiff such sum as the court shall determine to be the fair and reasonable value of the stock, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the demand for repurchase, upon receiving the certificates duly indorsed by plaintiff, transferable upon the books of the corporation to defendants, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem equitable, and for costs.

[1] In support of the action of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer, the respondents advance a number of reasons why the contract, as pleaded, should not be specifically performed; but we think the complaint contained a sufficient statement of facts to have warranted the court in overruling the demurrer. The great weight of authority supports the view that when a corporation enters into a contract with an intending purchaser of stock, by which it obligates itself to take back the stock under circumstances like those disclosed here, such an agreement is enforceable by the purchaser. Schulte v. Boulevard Gardens Land Co., 164 Cal. 464, 468, 470, 129 Pac. 582, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1013. In that case an agreement by a corporation obligating itself, at the election of the stockholders, to repurchase the stock at a stated price, was under consideration, and the court said:

"The plaintiff is seeking to enforce a part of an entire contract under which the stock was originally issued to him. The right to return the stock and to receive the sum agreed to be paid upon such return was a material and indivisible part of the consideration upon which the plaintiff agreed to become a stockholder. As between the parties, it would be manifestly unjust to permit the corporation to retain the money paid by plaintiff, and at the same time to repudiate the promise which it gave in exchange for the money. The obligation to pay, upon a return of the shares, the sum agreed to be paid, is not to be viewed as an undertaking arising after the plaintiff has assumed the relation of stockholder. It came into being coincidentally with the contract by which plaintiff became a stockholder."

[2] In this case it would be hard to disassociate the defendants from the corporation. They were, in fact, the corporation which they formed as a convenient method of taking over the property and affairs of the defunct partnership. As an inducement to the plaintiff to engage with them in the enterprise, the defendants agreed that the plaintiff, if dissatisfied, might return his stock and receive a sum equal to its reasonable value at the time of the surrender. Under the fact, we think the liability of the defendants should be measured by the rules of accountability as though the corporation itself were the defendant. The sole purpose of the present action, notwithstanding the form of the prayer of the complaint, is to recover from the defendants the sum of money agreed to be repaid, in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The tender of the return of the stock, if such tender was necessary, left nothing to be done by the plaintiff. The consideration had passed to the obligor, and the only duty imposed upon the defendants was the obligation to repay the sum of money specified. Dickinson v. Zubiata Mining Co., 11 Cal. App. 656, 662, 106 Pac. 123; Hellings v. Heydenfeldt, 107 Cal. 577, 40 Pac. 1026. The facts bring the case within the provision of section 3302 of the Civil Code, which provides that—

"The detriment caused by the breach of an obligation to pay money only, is deemed to be the amount due by the terms of the obligation, with interest thereon."

[3] We do not think it matters, as urged by the respondents, that the plaintiff has not followed the usual and ordinary form of alleging his damage. Under our Code there is but one form of action, and if the complaint states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief, either legal or equitable, it is not demurrable upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 73, 58 Pac. 376. "When the plaintiff, as here, alleges facts to exist, which, if proved, would entitle him to recover the sum of money he demands from the defendant, he has shown, so far as the recitals of the complaint can, that he has sustained damages." Bartlett v. Odd Fellows Savings Bank, 79 Cal. 218, 223, 21 Pac. 743, 744 (12 Am. St. Rep. 139). Having alleged that the defendants had promised to pay the fair and reasonable value of the stock, which is stated, and for which, when determined by the court to be fair and reasonable, judgment is prayed, it was unnecessary to allege that plaintiff had been damaged in such sum. Dickinson v. Zubiata Mining Co., supra, 11 Cal. App. 663, 106 Pac. 123.

The judgment is reversed. The cause is remanded to the lower court, with directions to overrule the demurrer and make such further order as may be proper.

PEOPLE v. CATALINE. (Cr. 1002.)

1. Larceny $\S$ 64(7)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for larceny of automobile.

In a prosecution for grand larceny of automobile, evidence as to his recent possession of automobile, his false denials, and his conduct at and about the time of his apprehension, held sufficient to sustain conviction.

2. Larceny $\S$ 64(7)—Evidence that defendant was found in possession of recently stolen property sufficient with slight corroborative evidence.

When a person is found in possession of recently stolen property, slight corroborative evidence of other inculpatory circumstances tending to show his guilt will support a conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; M. F. McCormick, Judge.

John Cataline was convicted of grand larceny, and from judgment of conviction and order denying new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

B. M. Benson, of Fresno, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of grand larceny and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The only question presented for determination is the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict.

The evidence tended to show that the property forming the object of the larceny, a Chandler motorcar, belonged to one Grant Falkenstein. The defendant, upon his arrest in San Francisco, denied his identity, but when shown his picture and confronted by a detective from a neighboring city he admitted that his name was Cataline. He also denied that he had stolen the car in the city of Fresno, adding that he was unable to run a car of that make, or, indeed, of any other, and that he knew nothing whatever of such an automobile. The arresting officers, however, found in his possession a Chandler ignition key. In giving to the officers details about himself, he stated to them that he was living in the outskirts of San Francisco with a friend, whose address he did not know, but who met him evenings at Eighth and Market streets and escorted him to his home. The officers found the stolen car at the "Senate" garage. The defendant denied that he had ever been in that establishment, but upon being taken there he was identified by the night watchman as the person who had left the car in the garage on certain dates.

The defendant took the witness stand in his own behalf, and denied that he had stolen the car or had left it in the Senate garage, or that he had ever been in that place. He admitted his former conviction of felony, and complained that he had been grossly mistreated physically by police officers in an endeavor to make him confess that he was guilty of the offense charged.

[1, 2] We think it clear that the evidence abundantly supports the verdict of the jury. The recent possession by the defendant of the stolen car, together with his false denials and his conduct at and about the time of his apprehension, are sufficient to sustain the verdict of conviction. When a person is found in possession of recently stolen property, slight corroborative evidence of other inculpatory circumstances tending to show his guilt will support a conviction. People v.

CALISTOGA JOINT UNION HIGH SCHOOL DIST. v. WEBBER. (Civ. 2357.)

Schools and school districts §97(4)—Election in favor of bonds not rendered invalid because of disfranchised electors whose votes could not have changed the result.

Submission of bond issue to electors of high school district at polling place in one county was not rendered invalid, under Const. art. 2, § 1, and Pol. Code, §§ 1083, 1598, 1600, because electors residing in an adjoining county were denied the right to vote, where votes in favor of bonds were sufficient without them, and their votes could not have changed the result.

Application for writ of mandate by Calistoga Joint Union High School District against S. J. Webber, as Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Napa County. Writ granted.

Clarence N. Riggins, Dist. Atty., and Wallace Rutherford, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Napa, for petitioner.

FINCH, P. J. This is an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to sign an issue of bonds voted by the people of the high school district. The high school district is composed of eight elementary school districts. One of these, named Oat Hill, is a joint district, the larger part thereof being in Napa county and a small portion in Lake. It is shown without contradiction that but two electors, at the time of the bond election, resided in that part of Oat Hill district lying within Lake county, and that neither of them voted at the election. The polling place in that district was in Napa county. The only objection made by respondent to signing the bonds is that, under the provisions of section 1, art. 2, of the Constitution, and sections 1083, 1598, and 1600 of the Political Code, the electors of Oat Hill district residing in Lake county could not legally vote at the polling place of the district in Napa county, and that therefore they were deprived of their right to vote upon the question of issuing the bonds. Whether these electors could have legally voted at such polling place need not be determined, for the reason that their votes could not have changed the result. A total of 600 votes were cast at the bond election in the high school district. Of this number 419 votes were cast in favor of issuing the bonds, and 177 were cast against the issuance thereof. Where, after counting all of the votes of the disfranchised electors against the proposition for which the returns show a majority, that proposition still has a majority, such disfranchisement cannot be considered as materially changing the result. 20 C. J. 183.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandamus be issued by the clerk of this court directed to the respondent above named, requiring and directing him as such chairman of the board of supervisors of Napa county to sign the bonds of the said Calistoga joint union high school district, in accordance with the order and resolution of the board of supervisors of Napa county, made on the 12th day of April, 1921.

PEOPLE v. BRACKLIS. (Cr. 568.)

1. Criminal law ☞814(3)—Instruction inapplicable to evidence properly refused.

An instruction inapplicable to the evidence, though stating a correct proposition of law, is properly refused.

2. Criminal law ☞720½—Prosecuting attorney's statement of belief of defendant's guilt based on evidence does not require reversal.

While, as matter of ethics, an attorney should not in argument assert his belief in the justice of his cause, a prosecuting attorney's statement of his belief of defendant's guilt, it fairly appearing therefrom that the belief is based on the evidence, is not misconduct requiring a reversal.

3. Criminal law ☞729—In view of withdrawal and request to disregard, improbable that jury was influenced by prosecutor's remark as to reputation.

It is improbable that any juror was influenced by the prosecutor's remark, in effect, that he would show the reputation of state's witness is far higher than defendant's, prosecutor on objection promptly withdrawing the remark, and requesting the jury to disregard it.

4. Criminal law ☞720(7)—Argument from physical appearance of paper proper.

Relative to the disputed question in an embezzlement prosecution, whether the name of the purchaser was written in a sales slip, which was otherwise written and signed by defendant, before or after defendant delivered the paper, it was proper for the prosecuting attorney to argue from the physical appearance of the paper that there was taken a carbon copy of it, by which the truth of the matter in dispute could be shown.

5. Criminal law ☞721(2)—Where defendant testifies, his failure to testify on certain points subject to comment.

Where defendant testifies, his failure to testify on certain matters can be commented on in argument, as can like failure of any other witness.

6. Criminal law ☞730(8)—Prejudice from remark of prosecutor prevented by court's admonition to jury.

If it was improper for the prosecutor to state in argument that defendant had a carbon copy of a paper in evidence executed by him, prompt admonition of the court that the jury disregard the statement must be held to have prevented any prejudice therefrom.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

A. P. Bracklis was convicted of embezzlement, denied a new trial, and appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 198 Pac. 659.

A. B. Reynolds and Charles B. Harris, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the embezzlement of 150 sacks of potatoes alleged to belong to E. C. Armstrong, the prosecuting witness in the action, and this appeal is from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. Appellant admits that the evidence is technically sufficient to support the verdict of guilty, but it is argued that such evidence is so weak and unsatisfactory that the alleged errors hereinafter considered were especially prejudicial to his rights.

The people's case depends largely upon the testimony of Armstrong, who was a salesman in the employ of Gale Bros., wholesale produce merchants of San Francisco. Armstrong testified that he purchased 150 sacks of potatoes from the appellant, and paid $500 in cash therefor; that he left the potatoes in the appellant's possession, with directions to hold them until called for; and that the appellant appropriated them to his own use.

Appellant testified that he ordered 200 sacks of potatoes from Gale Bros. through Armstrong; that when the potatoes arrived he discovered that the shipment contained 300 sacks; that he informed Armstrong that he could not use all of the potatoes, and that Armstrong thereupon instructed appellant to place 150 sacks of the potatoes in the latter's place of business, and said to him, "Sell the potatoes just as soon as you can, and send the money to the company, or I call here for it;" and that appellant sold the potatoes pursuant to such instructions.

The price of the 300 sacks of potatoes was $1,009, and appellant paid Gale Bros. a total of $500 on account of potatoes purchased. Armstrong and appellant contradict each other in their respective accounts of what occurred.

[1] Counsel for appellant correctly state, if appellant's testimony be true, that—

"Armstrong was the agent of Gale Bros. & Co., who had sold defendant some of the potatoes, and as such had the authority to authorize defendant to sell the other portion of said car of potatoes which Armstrong had induced him to place in his store."

Based on the facts so stated, the defendant requested and the court refused the following instruction:

"Upon an indictment for embezzlement, it is a sufficient defense that the property was appropriated openly and avowedly, and under a claim of title preferred in good faith, even though such claim is untenable."

The defendant did not claim the right to appropriate the property to his own use. If his testimony be true, and the inference of his counsel therefrom correct, then appellant was a bailee for Gale Bros., with authority to sell, and under obligation to account for the proceeds. Embezzlement of the proceeds of such sale might constitute a different crime from that charged, but not an appropriation under a claim of title preferred in good faith. While the proposed instruction states a correct proposition of law, it is not applicable to the evidence. Even if there had been evidence upon which to base the proposed instruction, the jury could not have convicted the defendant, if his testimony was given credence, under other instructions given. Of its own motion the court instructed the jury that in order to convict the defendant it must first appear from the evidence, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt—"that the said personal property then and there belonged to said E. C. Armstrong and had been purchased by said Armstrong from said Bracklis."

[2] It is urged that the deputy district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his argument to the jury. In his opening argument he addressed the jury as follows:

"I am glad to tell you, and I say it with all sincerity, that not once during the time which you sat here as jurors have I ever asked of you a verdict that I did not absolutely believe in, * * * and so, when I arise to ask you at this time, with all the sincerity that is within me, for a verdict of guilty in this case, I do it conscientiously, knowing that I am asking for the correct verdict. * * * Now, I ask at your hands a verdict of guilty in this case; I am convinced that this man is guilty, and I shall argue his guilt to you and I shall not go one jot from the evidence in this case."

From the concluding sentence it fairly appears that the prosecutor was basing his opinion of the defendant's guilt upon the evidence. Such expression of opinion was not misconduct requiring a reversal. It was long ago stated, as a rule of ethics, that an attorney ought not to add the weight of his personal opinion to the evidence in support of his cause. This rule is expressed in the Code of Ethics adopted by the American Bar Association, as follows:

"It is improper for a lawyer to assert in argument his personal belief in his client's innocence or in the justice of his cause."

Strict compliance with this rule by attorneys who defend, as well as by those who prosecute, would tend to a higher respect for the profession. It may be further said that in this case the statement of which complaint is made was not assigned as misconduct, nor was any request made that the court instruct the jury to disregard it.

[3] The prosecutor, evidently referring to the defendant, said:

"Now, pay attention to these things; when I get to them I will show you that Armstrong's reputation is far, far higher than that man; it towers above him—"

He was here interrupted by counsel for the defendant, who assigned the statement as misconduct. Thereupon the prosecutor said:

"I will withdraw that. * * * I ask the jury to disregard it."

In view of the prompt withdrawal of the objectionable statement and the request that the jury disregard the remarks, it is improbable that any juror was influenced thereby.

[4-6] There was introduced in evidence by the prosecution and marked Exhibit A, what appears to be an ordinary sales slip in the handwriting of defendant, reciting, in effect, that the defendant had sold to Armstrong 150 sacks of potatoes for $500, marked "paid" and signed by the defendant. Armstrong testified that the name "E. C. Armstrong" appearing therein was written prior to the delivery of the paper to him. The defendant testified that the name "E. C. Armstrong" was not written by him, and did not appear upon the paper at the time of its delivery; that it was written on a sales tab of the California Fruit Market which the defendant was using temporarily while having some of his own printed; that when he received his own tabs from the printer he threw away the remaining pages of the California Fruit Market tab, or maybe used them for scratch paper. The reverse side of the paper in evidence seems to have been a carbon surface for the purpose of making a copy. Production of the carbon copy would have been almost conclusive proof as to whether the name "E. C. Armstrong" was originally written into the paper in controversy. In the closing argument for the prosecution the following occurred:

"Mr. Farrell: The clinching thing in this case as to that, and that is this, that the same pencil wrote it. Imagine that. How could Armstrong get the pencil away from him? And if it wasn't the same pencil, how in God's name, I will ask you as sensible men and women, that Armstrong could take a pencil the graphite of which was identical with the one Bracklis had down in that store.

"Mr. Harris: That question was asked specifically; he couldn't tell about the matter.

"Mr. Farrell: Well, I am afraid we won't get through if I am going to be continually interrupted.

"Mr. Harris: It is a false statement. He couldn't tell that graphite in each and every letter was the same.

"The Court: Yes, that is a question for the jury to determine. * * *

"Mr. Farrell: Now, let me call your attention to this, and bear this well in mind: Look at the back of it (referring to People's Exhibit A); there is a carbon or two of it some place; there is a carbon. Who has got the carbon? Where is it? He has got it. That could not be written without a carbon copy. Where is it?

"Mr. Reynolds: We assign that as misconduct on the part of the district attorney; no evidence in this case that there was a carbon copy.

"The Court: You can't make that as a statement of fact. He can argue it. The jury will disregard the statement.

"Mr. Reynolds: The evidence in the case wasn't to that effect. The evidence was that Bracklis' store was attached and everything taken by the constable. * * *

"Mr. Farrell: I say to you again, the clinching feature in this case is, where is the carbon copy? Dismiss the handwriting from your minds—

"Mr. Reynolds: I again cite that as error on the part of the district attorney.

"The Court: There is no evidence of that. The jury will disregard it.

"Mr. Reynolds: Misconduct of the grossest kind.

"Mr. Farrell: I argue from the physical appearance of the carbon back. That could not be written unless there was a carbon—or a carbon was made."

It was not misconduct for the prosecutor to draw any logical inference from the physical appearance of the exhibit. Since it is usual for the maker to retain the carbon copy in such transactions, it was not wandering far afield to argue that the copy must have been in the possession of the defendant. While the defendant is not required to take the stand, and the illogical rule prevails that no unfavorable inference is to be drawn from his failure to do so, yet, when he does testify, his testimony is to be weighed by the same standards and subjected to the same tests as that of other witnesses. In the case of People v. Mead, 145 Cal. 500, 78 Pac. 1047, the defendant was convicted of the crime of conniving at, consenting to, and permitting his wife to be placed in a house of prostitution. The defendant had taken the stand in his own behalf. It was claimed that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in commenting upon the failure of the defendant to deny that the woman was his wife, a vital issue in the case. The court said:

"There was no impropriety in the district attorney commenting upon the fact that he had made no express denial of the fact."

If it was improper for the prosecutor to state as a fact that the defendant had the carbon copy, the prompt admonition of the court to the jury to disregard the statement must be held to have prevented any prejudice therefrom.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

RAYBURN v. RAYBURN. (Civ. 2336.)

1. Husband and wife — 266—Understanding that wife's earnings should be her separate property held inferable from husband's statement and conduct.

Conduct of the husband in exercising no control over his wife's earnings after marriage, and his statement, prior to purchase of land by her and her mother, that he had no money to put into the place, but had advised his wife and her mother to purchase it, and that his wife would put up her half if her mother would put up her half, afforded sufficient ground for the inference that it was understood that the wife's earnings should be her separate property.

2. Husband and wife — 264 — Finding that property deeded to wife was her separate property warranted.

Evidence, including presumption under Civ. Code, § 164, held sufficient to support finding that property deeded to a married woman was her separate property.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Florence A. Rayburn against Charles Rayburn. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. Fitzgerald, of Placerville, and Robt. H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for appellant.

C. A. Bliss and Downey & Downey, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. In this action both parties alleged grounds for divorce, and asked the court to adjudicate their property rights. Neither was granted a divorce, but the decree entered determines their respective rights in the property described in their pleadings.

The record title of an undivided half of what is known as the "Rayburn Orchard" is in the name of the plaintiff, and that of the other half in the name of the defendant. The court adjudged the undivided half standing of record in the defendant's name to be community property, and that the other half was the separate property of the plaintiff. From that part of the judgment relative to the plaintiff's separate estate the defendant appeals.

[1, 2] The land in dispute was conveyed to plaintiff and her mother, Mrs. Marks, March 1, 1910, each taking an undivided half interest therein. Mrs. Marks conveyed her half interest to the defendant January 31, 1911. At the time of the purchase of the property $400 was paid thereon by Mrs. Marks and $400 on account of the half interest therein conveyed to the plaintiff. The plaintiff and Mrs. Marks joined in the execution of a mortgage to secure the remainder of the purchase price, $1,825. The plaintiff claims to have paid the whole of the $400 initial payment for her half interest. The defendant testified that the plaintiff paid but $80 thereof, and that he paid $320. The evidence shows without conflict that on March 1, 1910, there was a balance to the credit of the plaintiff's bank account of $300.09, and that she drew it all out on that day. Appellant contends that the greater part of the money on deposit in the plaintiff's name consisted of her earnings since the marriage of the parties, and therefore was community property. The parties were married January 14, 1909. Prior and subsequent to the marriage both were employed by the Earl Fruit Company, the plaintiff working under the direction of the defendant. Her employment continued throughout the summer of 1909. She seems to have received her salary and to have deposited the same to the credit of her personal bank account after her marriage in the same manner as prior thereto. Apparently the defendant exercised no control over his wife's earnings or her bank account. From his testimony it appears that he had a bank account of his own. Some of the plaintiff's witnesses testified that when the purchase of the land was under consideration the defendant stated that he had no money to put into the place, and advised the plaintiff and her mother to purchase it. Worthy Marks testified that the defendant "told me he had talked to Florence, and Florence would put up her half if we could convince our mother and get her to put up her half." The defendant denies making the statements attributed to him. The statements, if made, and the defendant's conduct relative to his wife earnings, indicate that he did not regard such earnings as community property, but rather as the separate property of his wife. There was no direct evidence as to whether or not the parties considered the wife's earnings to be her separate property. In the absence of more certain proof, such statements and conduct of the defendant afford sufficient grounds for the inference that it was understood between them that the wife's earnings should be her separate property. Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 596, 79 Pac. 272; Smith v. Smith, 191 Pac. 60. These facts, considered in connection with the presumption arising from the conveyance to the wife, as provided by section 164 of the Civil Code, sufficiently support the finding that the property standing of record in the plaintiff's name is her separate property. There was evidence enough favorable to the defendant to support a contrary finding, but the weight of such evidence was for the determination of the trial court. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. Corporations — 503(4)—Right to sue corporation in county where liability arose not waived.

The right under Const. art. 12, § 16, to sue a corporation in the county in which the liability arose was not waived by joining with such corporation individuals residing in another county, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 395, entitling defendants in actions other than those enumerated to be tried in the county of their residence; the effect thereof being merely to entitle the individual defendants to have the action tried to the county of their residence.

2. Venue — 41—Individual defendant entitled to be sued in county of his residence though joined with corporation defendant.

An individual defendant is entitled to be sued in the county of his residence under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, though a corporation is joined with him as a defendant, notwithstanding Const. art. 12, § 16, providing that a corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs, or the county where the principal business of such corporation is situated, but the right to have the action transferred to the county in which the individual defendants reside must be asserted by such defendants, and is not available to the corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Isaac Strassburger against the Santa Fé Land Improvement Company, the Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company, and others. From an order denying their motion for change of venue, the named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

U. T. Clotfelter, Robert Brennan, and M. W. Reed, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Henry Ach and J. D. Lederman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying an application for a change of the place of trial.

The plaintiff commenced this action in the city and county of San Francisco against the defendants to recover damages for alleged false representations and fraudulent concealments whereby the plaintiff was induced to part with an undivided one-fourth interest in certain lands described in the complaint for a sum greatly less than their value. The two defendants sued under the fictitious names of John Doe and Richard Roe, have not been served with a summons, nor have they appeared in the action. The corporate defendants appeared by demurrer, and at the same time filed and served a demand in writing for a change of the place of trial from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Los Angeles. They also filed an affidavit of merits, and an affidavit showing substantially that at the time of the filing of the complaint the two corporate defendants were residents of, and their principal place of business was and is, the county of Los Angeles. It is also averred in said affidavit, but upon information and belief only, that neither of the defendants sued under fictitious names resides in the city and county of San Francisco.

According to the allegations of the complaints, the liability of the defendants forming the basis of the action arose in the city and county of San Francisco; and plaintiff's position is that, so far as any right is given by law to a defendant corporation in relation to the place of trial of an action of the character here involved, he is entitled to have the present action tried in the city and county of San Francisco by virtue of the provisions of section 16 of article 12 of the Constitution of this state. That section reads as follows:

"A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases."

as defendants (whom they assume to be individuals, and not corporations) the plaintiff waived his right to commence his action in the county in which the alleged liability arose, if such county was not the residence of the defendants or any of them, and that accordingly it was the duty of the trial court to grant the motion of the defendant corporation to change the place of trial to the county of their residence or principal place of business upon showing by affidavit that none of the defendants, corporate or individual, resided within the city and county of San Francisco.

[1] With this contention we cannot agree. Granting, for the sake of argument, that John Doe and Richard Roe are not corporations or associations, but individuals residing without the city and county of San Francisco, nevertheless we cannot see that such facts confer upon the defendant corporations any right to have the place of trial changed upon that ground. With the exception of actions concerning title to and possession of real property, and enforcement of liens thereon, actions may be commenced in any county in the state subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure, which in section 395 provides that all actions other than those thus enumerated must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside. The rule thus laid down antedates the adoption of section 16 of article 12 of the Constitution above set forth, and is necessarily modified by it to the extent that corporations and associations are now permitted to be sued in the county where the alleged liability arose or breach of contract occurred. Construing this new provision of the Constitution, the Supreme Court, in the case of Fresno National Bank v. Superior Court, 83 Cal. 491, 24 Pac. 157, said:

"Without leading to any conflict, this section has the effect to permit a corporation to be sued in certain counties other than that of its residence or principal place of business, at the option of the plaintiff, and to deny to corporations the absolute right of a change of venue when sued in such other counties. This effected an important change in the law as it existed before the adoption of the present Constitution, in so far as it denies the absolute right of the corporation to a change of venue to the county of its principal place of business, when sued in any one of the other counties named in the section; and this seems to be the only effect intended."

[2] It is, however, clear that it was not the intention of the framers of the constitutional provision in question to deprive an individual defendant of his right to have an action against him tried in the county of his residence, and he is not deprived of this right because a corporation is joined with him as a defendant. Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia Co., 107 Cal. 378, 380, 40 Pac. 495. In the case at bar John Doe and Richard Roe have made no demand for a change of the place of trial. They may or may not exercise that right, but in any event it is no concern of a codefendant corporation. We can conceive of no reason why, because a plaintiff's right of action is against both a corporation and an individual, he is deprived ipso facto of a right given by the Constitution to commence his action in a particular county. It is true that that right may become ineffective by the exercise of the right of an individual defendant to have the action removed to the place of his residence; but, in the absence of the exercise of that right, the right given to the plaintiff remains intact.

These views are not in conflict with any case relied upon by the appellants. In Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 144 Cal. 205, 77 Pac. 918, the Times-Mirror Co., a corporation, was the only defendant, and its motion was denied.

In the cases of Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 Pac. 209, Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 Pac. 495, and Nelson v. East Side Grocery Co., 26 Cal. App. 344, 146 Pac. 1055, all the individual defendants had appeared and moved for a change of the place of trial, either alone, as in the first-named case, or in conjunction with their corporation codefendants, as in the other two cases. In speaking in those cases of a "waiver" by the plaintiff of his right as against the corporation defendant to have the cause tried in the county in which the liability arose, through the joining of individual defendants resident in another county, the term cannot be construed in any technical sense. Clearly what was meant is that the right given to the plaintiff as against a corporation defendant could be rendered ineffective by the absolute right of the individual defendants to have the cause tried in the county of their residence. If a plaintiff's right of action is joint as against a corporation and an individual, if he desires to pursue the individual, he is bound to join him as a defendant. This necessity confers no additional right upon the corporation defendant; and if the plaintiff brings his action where the liability arose, it is not for the corporation to set up the right of a codefendant for its own advantage. In none of the cases cited by the appellants was the motion made by the corporation alone, and consequently they do not sustain the principle for which the appellants here contend.

Order affirmed.

Geo. D. Squires, of Redwood City, and Archie D. Mitchell, of Ontario, for appellant.

McNabb & Hodge, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the contestant from a judgment in favor of the petitioner, on a petition to have a publication declared to be a newspaper of general circulation, as that term is defined in section 4460 of the Political Code.

The petitioner, D. D. McDonald, was the editor and publisher of the Ontario Weekly Herald. In accordance with the provisions of section 4462 of the Political Code, he petitioned the superior court of San Bernardino county to have the said publication declared a newspaper of general circulation, and entitled to print publications, notices by publication, official advertising, or public or legal notices. Section 4462 provides:

"Whenever a newspaper shall desire to have its standing as a newspaper of general circulation, as that term is defined in section four thousand four hundred and sixty, ascertained and established, it may * * * file a verified petition in the superior court of the county, or city and county, in which it is established, printed and published, setting forth the facts which justify such action. * * *"

Section 4460 of the Political Code is as follows:

"A newspaper of general circulation is a newspaper published for the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, having a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers, and which shall have been established, printed and published at regular intervals, in the state, county, city, city and county, or town, where such publication, notice by publication, or official advertising is given or made, for at least one year preceding the date of such publication, notice or advertisement."

The material allegations of the petition were to the effect that the Herald was a newspaper published for the dissemination of local and telegraphic news; that it had a bona fide subscription list; that it was established July 18, 1918; that it was published at Ontario, Cal., every Thursday for more than one year preceding the filing of the petition; and that it was not devoted to or published in the interests of any particular class or group. The petition was contested by the California Press Association; the only objection to its sufficiency being that it did not allege that the paper was "printed" at Ontario.

Upon the trial, petitioner, who was the only person examined, testified that the physical printing of the paper was not done at Ontario, but at Colton, Cal., but that the office was at Ontario, which was the princi-

Newspapers — 3(3)—Held "printed and published" in a town, within statute defining "newspaper of general circulation."

Where a newspaper is published and circulated in a particular town, and where the publisher has its office and pays the tax for conducting the business in such town, the newspaper is a "newspaper of general circulation," within Pol. Code, §§ 4460, 4462, defining such newspaper and requiring it to be "printed and published," in the town in which the publication, notice by publication, or official advertising is given or made, though the mere setting up of the type and making the impressions on the paper is done in another town; the words "printed and published" in a town not requiring the physical act of printing to be done therein.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Rex B. Goodcell, Judge.

In the matter of the application of D. D. McDonald, publisher, to have the standing of the Ontario Weekly Herald, of Ontario, Cal., as a newspaper of general circulation, as defined in section 4460 of the Political Code, ascertained and established, contested by the California Press Association. Judgment for petitioner, and contestant appeals. Affirmed.

pal place of circulation, and that a city license to conduct the business of a newspaper was paid to the city of Ontario. Judgment was rendered for petitioner, and the contestant appeals.

The only question to be decided is whether the fact that the physical printing of the paper is done in one town, and the publication and circulation in another, prevents it from being a newspaper of general circulation within the meaning of the statute. Appellant contends:

"The point in this case is that the Legislature has undertaken to define a newspaper of general circulation, a term often used by it in the Codes and statutes of the state, for the evident purpose of securing publicity for public or official advertising and preventing the abuses in public affairs which would result from its concealment in newspapers devoid of standing, character and circulation."

And it insists it is—

"not unreasonable to assume that the Legislature, when it defined a newspaper of general circulation, meant all that it said in section 4460, and that all of the words therein used are to be given force and effect. * * * The petition in this case at bar assiduously eschews all reference to the place where said paper is printed."

It was said in the case of In re Le Favor, 35 Cal. App. 146, 169 Pac. 413:

"From these findings made by the trial judge, it is very apparent that the only ground upon which the denial of the petition was made was because seven issues of the newspaper were not actually 'printed' in the city of Watts. The newspaper was circulated there and was a paper local to that community. We think to construe the statute in such a close and literal sense is to narrow its meaning more than was intended by the Legislature. The object to be accomplished was to define newspapers in which public notices might be made and which would fairly express such notices to the particular community intended to be reached. * * * The case of Bayer v. Hoboken, 44 N. J. L. 131, is directly in point. There a statute required the printing of a notice in a newspaper 'printed and published' within the limits of a municipality. The newspaper in which the publication was made was printed altogether on presses in the city of New York, but was distributed in Hoboken. The court held that such a newspaper was 'printed and published' as required by the statute."

In Stanwood v. Carson, 169 Cal. 640, 647, 147 Pac. 562, 565, it was said that—

"The vital consideration being notice by publication, such publication is the publication contemplated by law, with little or no regard paid to the mere place of printing, even when the word 'printing' coupled with publication is embraced in the statutory requirement. State v. Hoboken, 44 N. J. L. 131; Ricketts v. Hyde Park, 85 Ill. 111; Brown's Estate v. West Seattle, 43 Wash. 26, 85 Pac. 854; Hinchman

v. Barnes, 21 Mich. 558; Greenlee v. Marks, 62 Ind. 420; Hart v. Smith, 44 Wis. 229."

In Nebraska Land, Stock-Growing & Investment Co. v. McKinley-Lanning Loan & Trust Co., 52 Neb. 410, 72 N. W. 357, in considering a statute which required a notice to be published in a paper "printed" in a county, the court said:

"We do not think that the word 'print' was by the Legislature used in the specific and somewhat technical sense of designating the purely mechanical act of impressing the characters upon the paper. The object of the statute was to give notice, and, if the Legislature had the distinction at all in view, it would not, for that purpose, have selected the place of printing, instead of that of publication. 'Print' is familiarly used in the sense of 'publish,' and in that sense the word receives recognition in many, if not all, of the dictionaries, and in that sense we are satisfied the Legislature used it."

"To put in print, or cause to be put in print or issued from the press; carry or send forth in print; publish; as, the newspaper printed the story."

The Century Dictionary defines it thus:

"To cause to be printed; obtain the printing or publication of; publish."

And in Webster's Dictionary this definition is given:

"To publish a book, article, music, or the like."

To give a reasonable construction to the language of the statute, and keeping in view the object sought to be served by the legislation—that of having an effective medium of publicity for legal notices in the community—it must be held that by the conjunctive "and" it was not intended to require that the physical act of printing was to be done in the place of publication, but merely that the paper be printed and circulated there. We think it clear from this fact and the authorities cited that the word "printed" was used in the statute in the sense of the definitions we have given.

In this case the office of the paper is at Ontario, where it is established, and the tax for conducting the business is paid there. The paper is caused to be printed in Ontario; the printing matter is obtained in, it is published in, and it is circulated at, Ontario. In the production of the publication, everything is done at Ontario, save the setting up of the type and making the impressions on the paper. It would be giving too narrow a meaning to the word "printed" to hold that these acts alone were contemplated by its use in the statute. The only reasonable construction that can be given to "printed and published" is that the paper must be produced in the community where it is aimed to have it recognized as a legal advertising medium.

Appellant cites numerous authorities to the well-recognized principle that—

"Some effect is to be given to every word in the statute, without rejecting any word as redundant or treating it as merely synonymous with some other word or words."

But in arriving at our conclusion we have not failed to give effect to the word "printed." Appellant also cites Application of Devlin & Judah, 12 Cal. App. 403, 107 Pac. 583, but that case is not in point for the reason that another statutory qualification was involved—the necessary period the publication must have been established.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Benjamin M. Frees. From an order fixing inheritance taxes, the Controller of the State appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

John W. Carrigan and Karl R. Levy, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Allen E. Rogers, of San Diego (James L. Atteridge, of Sacramento, of counsel), for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal by the controller of the state from an order fixing inheritance taxes. The question involved is as to the exemption of the wife's interest in community property under the Inheritance Tax Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 880), in effect at the time of the death of the decedent, which occurred May 28, 1920.

The deceased left property appraised by the inheritance tax appraiser at $1,526,858.76. The inheritance tax appraiser in his report had fixed a tax upon the widow's interest of $91,506.18, said amount being estimated upon $933,301.47, appraised as follows: Bequest, $100,000; residuary legacy, $833,301.47. This report was objected to by the widow, Ella R. Frees, the respondent, who claimed a deduction from the appraised value of the property bequeathed to her of an amount equal to one-half the value of the entire community property, to wit, of $677,706.82. The court sustained the widow's contention and made the deduction claimed from the value of the estate bequeathed to the widow ($933,301.47), leaving a balance of $255,594.65 upon which the tax was estimated, after allowing a $25,000 exemption. The amount of the tax thus fixed was $15,069.47. The appellant claims that the order fixing the tax was erroneous because of the deduction of $677,706.83.

Ella R. Frees, the respondent, was married to Benjamin M. Frees April 10, 1867, in the state of Wisconsin. At the time of their marriage the husband had property valued at $20,000. It was admitted by the respondent that this amount, together with 5 per cent. interest per annum, aggregating $23,000, was separate property. The deceased and his wife, the respondent, went to Chicago, Ill., immediately after their marriage, and remained as residents thereof until November, 1910, at which time they came to California, and resided here from that time until the death of the husband. At the time the amendment of 1917 of section 164, Civil Code, went into effect, there had been accumulated as rents, issues, and profits of the property brought to California by the decedent $300,000, and thereafter up to the time of his death from the same sources the estate was increased $200,000. The balance of the property, about $1,000,000, was personal property accumulated in the state of Illinois. The decedent left a will wherein a legacy of $100,000. was made to his wife, and she was also made the residuary legatee. The latter bequest is appraised at $833,301.47. No question is raised as to the value of the estate given to the wife or as to the proper interpretation of the will. The only question presented is as to the proper interpretation of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1917, with relation to community property, and as incidental thereto the question of the effect of the new definition of community property contained in the amendment to section 164, Civil Code (Stats. 1917, p. 827), which was approved May 23, 1917, and went into effect July 27, 1917, on the same days that the Inheritance Tax Act of 1917 was approved and took effect.

Section 1, subdivisions 1 and 2, of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1917, is as follows:

"Section 1. (1) This act shall be known as the 'inheritance tax act.' (2) The words 'estate' and 'property' as used in this act shall be taken to mean the real and personal property or interest therein of the testator, intestate, grantor, bargainor, vendor, or donor passing or transferred to individual legatees, devisees, heir, next of kin, grantees, donees, vendees, or successors, and shall include all personal property within or without the state; provided, that for the purpose of this act the one-half of the community property which goes to the surviving wife on the death of the husband, under the provisions of section one thousand four hundred two of the Civil Code, shall not be deemed to pass to her as heir to her husband, but shall, for the purpose of this act, be deemed to go, pass, or be transferred to her for valuable and adequate consideration and her said one-half of the community shall not be subject to the provisions of this act; provided, further, that in case of a transfer of community property from the husband to the wife, within the meaning of subdivisions (3) or (5) of section two of this act, one-half of the community property so transferred shall not be subject to the provisions of this act; and provided, further, that the presumption that property acquired by either husband or wife after marriage is community property, shall not obtain for the purpose of this act as against any claim by the state for the tax hereby imposed; but the burden of proving such property to be community property shall rest upon the person claiming the same to be community property." (Italics ours.)

Section 1402, Civil Code, referred to in the above-quoted section provides that—

"Upon the death of the husband, one half of the community property goes to the surviving wife, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband, and in the absence of such disposition, goes to his descendants, equally. * * * In case of the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband, the entire community property is equally subject to his debts, the family allowance, and the charges and expenses of administration."

For a definition of community property we must look to section 164, Civil Code, above referred to. As amended in 1917, that section reads as follows:

"164. What is community property. All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, including real property situated in this state, and personal property wherever situated, acquired while domiciled elsewhere, which would not have been the separate property of either if acquired while domiciled in this state, is community property; * * *" (Italics ours.)

The property involved in this litigation is all personal property, and it is conceded that under the provisions of section 164, Civil Code, it would be community property if that section is retroactive and constitutional. Sections 172, 172a, Civil Code, were amended on the same day as section 164, Civil Code. Previous to the amendment, section 172, Civil Code, gave the husband the management and control of all the community property with like power of disposition other than testamentary as he has of his separate estate, except that he could not give it away without consideration or sell the household furniture or wearing apparel without the written consent of the wife. By the amendment his absolute power was confined to personal property (section 172, Civ. Code; Stats. 1917, p. 829), and as to community real property the husband was given the management and control thereof, subject to the requirement that the wife must join in any conveyance or incumbrance thereof except a lease for a year or less.

Two rules have uniformly been adhered to in the interpretation of section 164, Civil Code, and its amendments: First, that the law has been construed as applying only to property acquired in California, or by persons domiciled here; second, that amendments are not to be construed as retroactive, unless the language thereof compels such a construction. Thus, notwithstanding that the definition of community property has in terms included all property acquired by the husband or wife after marriage, other than that acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, it has uniformly been held that property acquired in other states by persons domiciled therein, and subsequently brought to California by them at the time of establishing residence in this state, retained the status that it had in the state where it was acquired, regardless of our definition of community property. As in most of the states property acquired after marriage was the separate property of the husband, it remained such, when brought to this state by the husband. Kraemer v. Kraemer, 52 Cal. 302; Estate of Burrows, 136 Cal. 113, 68 Pac. 488; Estate of Nicolls, 164 Cal. 368, 129 Pac. 278; Estate of Warner, 167 Cal. 691, 140 Pac. 583; Estate of Boselly, 178 Cal. 715, 175 Pac. 4; Estate of Arms, 199 Pac. 1053. Under the law of the state of Illinois the personal property acquired by the decedent during his marriage and while domiciled in the state of Illinois would constitute his separate property. Estate of Arms, supra; Kraemer v. Kraemer, supra. It was so stipulated on the hearing of the report of the inheritance tax appraiser. Thus section 164, Civil Code, as originally enacted, was construed to have no extraterritorial force, but the amendment of 1917 to section 164, Civil Code, expressly applies extraterritorially to "personal property wherever situated, acquired while domiciled elsewhere, which would not have been the separate property of either if acquired while domiciled in this state," and the decision in this case hangs upon the proper application of this section to the facts. The Inheritance Tax Act of 1917 exempts from taxation the portion of the community property to which the wife succeeds under section 1402 of the Civil Code. The determination of that question in turn depends upon the definition of community property. We must therefore determine the rights of the wife as successor or heir to the community property in order to determine the proper deduction from her bequests.

The appellant advances two propositions with reference to the proper construction of these sections: First, that section 164, Civil Code, is unconstitutional in so far as it seeks to convert the separate property of the husband or wife theretofore recognized as such by the laws of California into community property; and, second, that the statutes of 1917 should not be given a retroactive effect. In support of the first proposition, the appellant relies upon the decision in Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170. If however, the statute cannot be given any retroactive effect, we need go no further in this case for all the property acquired in the state of Illinois by the spouses was acquired and brought into the state before section 164, Civil Code, was amended.

[1,2] The Civil Code expressly provides that "no part of it is retroactive unless expressly so declared" (Civ. Code, sec. 3), and this rule applies to the amendments to the Civil Code as well (Sharp v. Blankenship, 59 Cal. 288; Central Pacific Railroad Co. v. Shackelford, 63 Cal. 261; Bank of Ukiah v. Moore, 106 Cal. 673, 680, 39 Pac. 1071; Estate of Richards, 133 Cal. 524, 527, 65 Pac. 1034). It is also a general rule of statutory construction that statutes should not be construed retrospectively unless it is clear that such was the legislative intention. Bascomb

v. Davis, 56 Cal. 152. In Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, it is said:

"* * * it is a sound rule of construction that a statute shall have a prospective operation only, unless its terms show clearly a legislative intention that it should operate retrospectively." 7th Ed., p. 529.

In Endlich on the Interpretation of Statutes (page 362), it is said:

"* * * Indeed, the rule to be derived from the comparison of a vast number of judicial utterances upon this subject, seems to be that, even in the absence of constitutional obstacles to retroaction, a construction giving to a statute a prospective operation is always to be preferred, unless a purpose to give it a retrospective force is expressed by clear and positive command, or to be inferred by necessary, unequivocal, and unavoidable implication from the words of the statute taken by themselves and in connection with the subject-matter, and the occasion of the enactment, admitting of no reasonable doubt, but precluding all question as to such intention."

See, also, Greer v. Blanchar, 40 Cal. 194, 197; Gates v. Salmon, 28 Cal. 320, 321; Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 Pac. 48; Willcox v. Edwards, 162 Cal. 455, 123 Pac. 276, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1392; Cyc. 1205.

[3] The clause of section 164, Civil Code, as amended, now under consideration, construed prospectively and not retrospectively, as required by our Code (Civ. Code, sec. 3) and by our decisions, should be read as follows:

"Personal property wherever situated [hereafter] acquired while domiciled elsewhere, which would not have been the separate property of either if acquired while domiciled in this state, is community property."

So construed, all of the personal property owned by the decedent at the time he removed to the state of California would be his separate property, in accordance with the laws in force at the time of the transfer (1910), and would be unaffected by the amended definition of community property. Section 1402, Civil Code, providing for the succession to the community property of deceased, would have no application to such separate property, and section 1 of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1917, which refers only to the community property to which the wife would succeed under section 1402, Civil Code, would have no application to such separate property. If this is the proper construction of section 164, Civil Code, we are not concerned with the question of whether or not the Legislature could exempt such separate property so acquired from inheritance or succession taxes, or could provide that the wife should succeed to one-half thereof. Conceding such power, it was not exercised in the passage of the laws in question.

[4] From this conclusion it results, not only that the million dollars or thereabouts brought to the state of California by the decedent, but also the $200,000 rents, issues, and profits thereafter accumulated in this state before 1917, and that the $300,000 rents, issues, and profits thereto accruing subsequent to the enactment of the amendment of 1917 to section 164, Civil Code, was the separate property of the decedent. Although the $300,000 was the product of property acquired elsewhere, which property would have been community property if acquired in this state, it is not acquired in another state, nor the product of such property acquired in another state after the enactment of the law of 1917, because from and after 1917 the $1,300,000 principal was in contemplation of law within the state, and the rents, issues and profits were therefore the separate property of the husband. Civ. Code, § 163.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the trial court to fix the inheritance tax payable by the widow, upon the valuations already determined and in accordance with this opinion.

FRY v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO.

Libel and slander — 130—Vendor cannot recover as damages for slander of title amount paid to secure release of judgment as condition precedent to issuance of title guaranty.

In a vendor's action against a title insurance company for slander of title, where defendant represented to purchaser that property was subject to a judgment lien, plaintiff, though he tendered a registrar's certificate of title issued under Land Registration Act, § 91, providing that no judgment shall be a lien until a certified copy is filed and a memorial entered, cannot recover amount paid to secure release of such judgment as a condition to issuance of a guaranty of title, whether or not law was invalid or defendant so believed, plaintiff's loss being due, not to defendant's interference, but to his own voluntary payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Armstrong Fry against the Title Insurance & Trust Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Chas. H. Brock and J. N. Hastings, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an action to recover $1,000 damages for slander of title. The defendant interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was sustained and judgment entered accordingly, from which plaintiff appeals. The main question thus presented for our consideration is as to whether or not the complaint states facts sufficient to state a cause of action. The slander complained of is alleged as follows:

"That on the 30th day of December, 1919, * * * the defendant maliciously and without cause spoke in the presence of Jacob Bosma and others of and concerning the plaintiff and his property as follows: 'That said property was subject to the lien of a judgment for $5,479.65 plus costs and attorneys' fees, and that said title could not be transferred free and clear until the release of said judgment lien,' and 'that the said statement was false, which defendant then and there knew.'"

The other allegations of the complaint may be summarized as follows:

"The defendant is engaged in the business of searching titles. The plaintiff and one Jacob Bosma entered into a written contract whereby plaintiff agreed to sell to Bosma a certain piece of real estate for the consideration of $4,500, and to furnish in connection with such sale a certificate of title from the defendant showing said property to be free and clear of all incumbrances. The plaintiff was the owner of the fee-simple title 'subject only to' a mortgage of $14,000 and certain street proceedings. 'That plaintiff's title was evidenced by registrar's original and owner's duplicate certificates of title No. 7926, dated November 29, 1919, issued pursuant to the provisions and requirements of the law enacted by the people of the state of California on the 3d day of November, 1914, under the reserved legislative power, known as the initiative, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the certification of land titles and the simplification of the transfer of real estate," approved March 17, 1917,' and brought under first registration by certificate No. C-4318 on the first day of May, 1918.' That the plaintiff deposited with the defendant his owner's duplicate of title, No. 7926, together with a deed to Bosma and releases of the incumbrances "and instructed defendant to deliver an owner's duplicate certificate to the said Bosma, together with its certificate showing the said title to be vested in him free and clear of all incumbrances, and thereupon to turn over to plaintiff the balance of said purchase price, and the said Bosma joined in said instruction." That the said defendant, with the consent of plaintiff, retained the sum of $1,000 out of the money so deposited as aforesaid for the purpose of procuring a release of said property from the said alleged judgment lien, and plaintiff consented thereto solely on the representation of the defendant that there was such a lien and on the further representation of the defendant that it would not issue its said certificate showing said property free and clear of incumbrances unless a release of said alleged judgment lien be procured, and that it could and would procure such release for the sum of $1,000. That thereupon the plaintiff sought to obtain from the said Bosma a rescission of said contract, but the said Bosma refused to consent to a rescission thereof, and notified plaintiff that he would insist upon a specific performance of all its terms and conditions and of the issuance of the said certificate by defendant title company showing said property to be vested in him free and clear of all incumbrances, including said alleged judgment lien, and also at the same time notified plaintiff that any unusual delay in completing said transaction would cause him loss and damage in excess of $1,000. That plaintiff thereupon sought legal advice, and, after stating all the facts and circumstances fairly and fully to his attorney, was advised that said contract could be specifically enforced by the said Bosma. That solely by reason of the facts and circumstances as herein alleged, plaintiff yielded to the demand of the defendant and authorized it to retain the sum of $1,000 out of the purchase price of said property and to close the transaction in accordance with instructions theretofore given. That the defendant during all the times mentioned in the complaint "maliciously represented that the said registration law under which plaintiff's title for said property was registered was invalid and unsafe, and that the defendant would not and did not recognize said law nor attach any force and effect thereto in its business of making reports and issuing contracts of guaranty of title."

It is not alleged that there was no judgment for the amount of $5,479.65 of record in the county recorder's office, or in the office of the county clerk, except as such fact may be inferred from the plaintiff's allegation that the statement of the defendant, "That the property was subject to the lien of a judgment," etc., was "false, which the defendant then and there well knew." Taking the complaint as a whole, it is apparent that the plaintiff was claiming, as he now does, that the real property was not subject to any liens not shown on the registrar's certificate, and that the defendant "maliciously" claimed that the certificate was not conclusive because the law for its issuance was invalid. The plaintiff's allegation that defendant's statement as to the judgment lien is false evidently takes issue with the defendant upon the validity of the lien, rather than upon the existence of the judgment. That this is the proper construction of the complaint is made manifest by the statements of the attorney who drew it, made in his brief on behalf of appellant in this court, wherein he states as follows:

"The amended complaint alleges that there was no judgment lien as claimed by defendant, and that the defendant 'maliciously represented that said registration law under which plaintiff's title to said property was registered was invalid,' etc. In view of the decisions of this court in Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 42, 90 Pac. 129, 121 Am. St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. Cas.

829, and in the Application of Scott, 182 Cal. 83, 187 Pac. 9, and of the appellate court, Second division, in the Application of Julius Seick (Civ. No. 2559) decided February 26, 1920, 189 Pac. 314, we believe that the defendant merits the charge of malice. Section 91 of the Land Registration Act (Stats. 1915, p. 1932) provides: 'No judgment, or decree, or order of any court shall be a lien on or in any wise affect registered land, or any estate or interest therein, until a certified copy of such judgment, decree, or order, under the hand and official seal of the clerk of the court in which the same is of record, is filed in the office of the registrar, and a memorial of the same is entered upon the register of the last certificate of the title to be affected.'

"In the Application of Seick, supra, the court, in construing section 77 of the same act, requiring notice of tax sale to be filed with the registrar within five days, the contention being that the statute is directory, and not mandatory, says: 'We cannot accede to this construction of the plain and unambiguous language of the act.' And again the court says in the same opinion: 'The prime purpose of the Torrens Law is that there shall be in the registrar's office in the book known as the "register of titles" a leaf or folium to which any person dealing with any particular piece of land that has been brought under the act may look in order to ascertain the exact condition of the title before purchasing, leasing or loaning money secured by mortgage.'

"All of the allegations of the amended complaint for the purpose of the demurrer are to be taken as true. It is clear, therefore that the amended complaint states a cause of action for slander of title, and if the proof sustains the allegations plaintiff is entitled to recover."

It is apparent from a reference to the cases cited by appellant in this paragraph of his brief, and from the brief itself, that the allegation of the plaintiff that the statement of the defendant was "maliciously false" was made in the complaint, because the Torrens Land Law is plain in its terms, and has been upheld by the courts in the cases cited, and that therefore the statement by the defendant of the condition of the title could not have been an honest expression of opinion. In short, the situation disclosed by the complaint is as follows: The plaintiff presented to his vendee a duplicate certificate of title issued by the registrar under the Torrens Land Law; the purchaser demanded as additional assurance of title a guaranty of the defendant, and this the plaintiff agreed to furnish; the defendant declined to furnish such a guaranty of title unless a judgment of $5,479.65 of record was specifically released; the plaintiff agreed to secure such release, and paid $1,000 for such purpose to the defendant; thereupon the defendant wrote its guaranty of the title to the purchaser, and the plaintiff secured the purchase money; he now seeks to recover the $1,000, which the defendant required him to pay as a condition of entering into a guaranty with a third person, plaintiff's vendee, leaving the defendant obligated by its guaranty; if the defendant had retained the $1,000 as a consideration for its outstanding guaranty, could the plaintiff recover it and his purchaser retain the guaranty secured by the payment of the $1,000? Obviously not. If not, it is even more clear that, where the $1,000 was paid out to so perfect the title that the purchaser would accept it, and the defendant guarantee it, the plaintiff, having consented to this transaction and enjoyed the benefit of it, ought not be allowed to recover the money he paid out in order to get the benefit.

The question as to whether the Torrens Land Law was valid or invalid, or whether the defendant honestly so believed, is entirely beside the question. The plaintiff knew all about his title; the purchaser did also. Both knew of the registrar's certificate, and they differed as to its effect, the purchaser being unwilling to accept the certificate alone. Plaintiff contracted to buy for his purchaser a guaranty issued by the defendant. The defendant sold to plaintiff the required guaranty, for its usual fees, plus $1,000, to be paid to a lien claimant. Plaintiff agreed to pay this amount after securing the advice of an attorney and with full knowledge of the facts solely because he felt bound to his purchaser to do so, and being fully aware that defendant's contention was based upon a "maliciously" wrong and "false" view as to the effect of a statute. It is therefore clear that the loss or damage to the plaintiff was due, not to the interference by the defendant with the contractual rights and obligations of the parties to the contract, nor to the prevention of any sale, but to the defendant's insistence that it would not furnish a certificate of title unless the plaintiff conformed to its demand for the satisfaction of the judgment lien.

The defendant had a right to fix the terms upon which it would enter into the contract of guaranty. Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 175 Pac. 466, 8 A. L. R. 249; Taggart v. Graham, 39 Cal. App. 621, 179 Pac. 688. The damages alleged by plaintiff did not result from a slander of title. In the case of Burkett v. Griffith, 90 Cal. 532, 27 Pac. 527, 13 L. R. A. 707, 25 Am. St. Rep. 151, an agreement of sale had been entered into between the plaintiff and his vendee. The vendee, because of the alleged slander of title, declined to carry out his agreement. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover. This court there stated the rule as follows:

"In an action like the present, the plaintiff can recover only such damage as he may have sustained by reason of an intending purchaser being prevented from making the contract; but the complaint herein shows that, whatever statements or declarations were made by the defendant prior to the making of the contract did not have the effect to prevent Sketchley from entering into the same, and those which he made thereafter have not caused the plaintiff any damage which can be said to have resulted therefrom. We know of no case in which it has been held that, when the plaintiff has a valid contract of sale, he can recover damages for its breach against one whose words, however false and malicious, have induced the other contracting party to violate such agreement."

The court held that, if the purchaser was released by the vendor on account of the slander, such release was his own voluntary act, and the vendor could not recover. 90 Cal. 541, 27 Pac. 527, 13 L. R. A. 707, 25 Am. St. Rep. 151. If not, that he had not been damaged. Here the plaintiff with less justice is complaining, not that he lost a sale, but that he was forced to complete one. It is clear in any view of the case that the statement of the defendant as to the condition of plaintiff's title was not the proximate cause of his loss, which resulted from his voluntary payment, with full knowledge of all the facts. Burkett v. Griffith, supra. See, also, as to voluntary payments, Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265-271, 79 Am. Dec. 176; Burke v. Gould, 105 Cal. 277, 38 Pac. 733.

We cannot see that plaintiff has made out a case of payment under duress. Plaintiff in this behalf relies upon Burke v. Gould, supra, and McTigue v. Arctic Ice Cream Co., 20 Cal. App. 708, 718, 130 Pac. 165. These cases recognize that the possessor of personal property may exercise duress over the owner in certain cases by unlawfully refusing to surrender the possession thereof to the owner until his illegal demands are met, and have no applicability to the facts of this case, for the defendant had no possession of any property which it refused to deliver. The payment made by plaintiff was not made to secure his property from the defendant, but to secure a contract of guaranty from the defendant which it would not otherwise have entered into.

Judgment affirmed.

MILLOTT et al. v. ASSOCIATION OF MARE ISLAND EMPLOYEES et al. (Sac. 3218.)(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 31, 1921.)1. Corporations ⇐82—Shares held by stockholder in excess of certain number held stock, and not evidence of indebtedness, though articles provided for repurchase.

Though articles of incorporation of corporation organized by employees of navy yard to operate ferry for benefit of such employees provided for the creation of a fund to repurchase stock held by any stockholder in excess of 10 shares, but under the by-laws all shares of stock drew dividends and were transferable, the stock held by a stockholder in excess of 10 shares was corporate stock, and not merely evidence of indebtedness.

2. Corporations ⇐82—Corporations held not compelled to repurchase stock held by a stockholder in excess of certain number of shares.

Where articles of incorporation of corporation organized by employees of navy yard to operate ferry in the interests of such employees provided for the creation of a fund wherewith to purchase the stock held by a stockholder in excess of 10 shares, the corporation and its officers could not be compelled to repurchase such excess stock before distribution of assets on dissolution of corporation.

Petition for writ of mandate by J. P. MilloTT and others against the Association of Mare Island Employees, a corporation, and its directors. Judgment denying writ, and petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of the superior court, given upon sustaining a demurrer to the petition, denying an application for a writ of mandate requiring the corporation and its directors to repurchase from the funds of the corporation certain corporate stock styled "excess stock," prior to a distribution of the assets of the corporation among the stockholders.

It appears from the petition that the corporation has sold all of its personal property and is preparing to dissolve, with the result that the money constituting its net assets will be distributed among the stockholders. Petitioners seek to compel purchase by the corporation from the assets before distribution of all the so-called "excess stock" for an amount per share specified in the by-laws and the consequent extinction of such stock. The result would be that upon a division of the residue pro rata among the remaining stockholders a larger amount would be received by them than if the distribution was made without such purchase among all the stockholders, including those holding "excess stock."

The theory of petitioners is that under the articles of incorporation this "excess stock" —is not "stock" in the real sense of the word, but that it in fact simply evidences a loan to the corporation which should be paid before distribution, and that in any event it is the duty of the corporation and its officers to purchase the same at the price fixed by the articles and by-laws.

The corporation was one formed by employees of the federal government at the Mare Island navy yard; its special object being to acquire and operate a ferry between the city of Vallejo and Mare Island in the interest of employees of such navy yard. The articles provided for the sale and issuance of the stock "with the object of keeping" it, so far as permitted by law, in the hands of employees of the yard, and "under such proxy conditions as to voting same as will assure equal voice and vote to all the stockholders." One of the purposes was to operate such ferry "at a transportation charge that will pay the expenses of operating the ferry together with eight (8%) per cent. per annum to all stockholders subscribing for stock in the corporation, and to create a fund to pay all money borrowed by the corporation and to purchase all the stock that any stockholder may have obtained or acquired in the corporation in excess of 10 shares, the stock of the corporation to be sold and issued with the condition that the corporation may at any time call in and acquire each share of stock that any stockholder holds or has acquired in excess of 10 shares by paying therefor the par value of each such share together with interest at the rate of eight (8%) per cent. per annum on the par value of the stock from the date of its issue, provided that all interest theretofore paid on said stock shall be deducted from the interest to be paid by the corporation in the event of its purchasing such stock." It was provided that the capital stock shall be $75,000, divided into 75,000 shares of the par value of $1 each.

The term "excess stock," as used in these proceedings refers to the stock that "any stockholder holds or has acquired in excess of 10 shares." So far as the articles of incorporation are concerned, there is nothing to distinguish it from any other stock issued by the corporation, and the articles simply in effect provided that all stock should be sold subject to the condition that the corporation might call in, on payment of the specified price and interest, any stock held by a stockholder in excess of 10 shares; in other words, that all stock should be sold subject to the condition that the corporation might at any time reduce any stockholder's holding to 10 shares, by purchasing at the specified rates the additional amount held by him. All was included in the 75,000 shares of the par value of $1 each.

Examination of the by-laws discloses nothing to indicate that any stock issued by the corporation was not to be considered as ordinary stock, or its holders other than ordinary stockholders. The holders of all stock were undoubtedly "stockholders" within the meaning of article II, relative to the election of directors, and of article IV. All stock was to share in dividends under paragraph 2 of article V, whereby the directors were authorized to declare dividends out of the surplus profits, "when such profits shall, in the opinion of the directors, warrant the same, and after all debts have been paid, and eight per cent. (8%) interest to all stockholders." All stock issued was to be issued as ordinary stock, the only limitation as to issuance to one stockholder of more than 10 shares being that in such event a power of attorney or proxy, designed to secure "equal voice and vote to all stockholders," be executed. Paragraph 3, art. V, and article XIII. All stock was to be transferred in the same way. Article XIV. All stock issued was "subscribed stock" and its holders "stockholders" within the meaning of articles XV and XVI relative to meetings and voting. The contention of petitioners is necessarily based on certain other provisions to which we will now refer. By article XX it was provided that all stock was to be sold "subject to the right of the corporation to repurchase the same at any time upon paying" $1 per share and interest, and to such other conditions as the board of directors may deem advisable, "except that no compulsory action shall be taken by the corporation that will reduce the ownership of stock to less than ten shares for each member." It is further declared in this article that this provision is "to the end that the business and affairs of the corporation shall be conducted, maintained, and carried on, in the interest of the majority of its stockholders," and that "the corporation shall repurchase (the financial condition of the corporation permitting), first, such shares of stock owned and held by any stockholder in excess of 10 shares, thereby limiting the ownership of stock to 10 shares for each stockholder, and giving to each equal rights and privileges." It is then provided that—

"The corporation may at any time through its board of directors, pursuant to the terms and conditions of sale and issuing of stock, repurchase the same whenever it is deemed for the best interests of the corporation and stockholders so to do."

It is then provided:

"To the end that the stockholders may have equal say and voice, it is deemed advisable that a form of proxy, agreement of sale, and power of attorney be executed and required of each stockholder as a condition to be complied with before any stock in excess of 10 shares may be purchased by any person."

The form of this is set forth. By it the purchaser appoints some specified stockholder his agent and attorney to represent him and vote said stock at all meetings while he remains owner of the stock, limiting the power of such attorney to vote "as the majority of the persons present as stockholders voting cast their votes," and agrees that, if he revokes the power of attorney, he will sell the stock for $1 per share (its par value) to said agent, as of the date of revocation. It is further declared that this power of attorney and proxy is not to affect the right of the corporation to purchase said stock "at any time * * * by paying me" $1 per share and interest.

In article XVII it is provided that no repeal or amendment to the by-laws shall affect the obligations of the corporation to pay 8 per cent. interest "to its stockholders, or any funds that it may borrow, or any security it may give for funds borrowed, or affect the obligation of the corporation to pay one dollar ($1.00) per share and interest at eight per cent. (8%) to stockholders who have assisted the corporation by purchasing more than 10 shares of stock to permit it to raise funds with which to purchase equipment of the ferryboats Vallejo, Ellen, equipment," etc.

The corporation has during its existence repurchased from stockholders so-called excess stock of the value of approximately $16,000. It is in such financial condition that it can repurchase all such stock without detriment to claims of creditors. It sufficiently appears that it had closed the business for which it was incorporated, sold its property, and is preparing to dissolve, and that the real burden of the complaint of petitioners, who with other stockholders presumably belong to "the 10 share only" class, is that the value of their shares will be smaller on distribution of the assets, by reason of the existence of the so-called excess stock, than it would be if such stock were repurchased by the corporation before distribution at $1 per share and interest. The corporation has finished its work, and no reason whatever appertaining to the conduct of the affairs of the corporation as a going concern exists for the purchase of any outstanding stock.

the by-laws, no lawful foundation for a conclusion that this so-called "excess stock" is evidence of an indebtedness, or its holders simply creditors of the corporation. The object of the issuance of all the stock was, of course, to secure money to buy property essential to the establishment and maintenance of the proposed business, but we had thought that such was always a purpose of the issuance of stock. Each person who acquired stock, whether 10 shares only or more, became a stockholder in the corporation with all the rights and liabilities of a stockholder as to all of the stock held by him for so long as he continued to hold it, subject only in so far as any amount over 10 shares was concerned to the right of the corporation, under the terms of the contract, to repurchase the same from him at its par value, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum. The provision for the payment of par value and interest was simply the fixing by the parties of a purchase price in the event of the exercise of its option by the corporation. The provision in article XVII precluding repeal or amendment of the by-laws in certain particulars, in so far as material here, simply precludes any repeal or amendment of the provisions securing to the stockholder the designated price in the event of a repurchase by the corporation. The general guaranty of 8 per cent. interest on stock, whatever it means or may be worth, runs invariably, in so far as the by-laws are concerned, to all stockholders.

[2] The remaining question is whether the corporation officers can be compelled to repurchase at the fixed price all stock held by any stockholder in excess of 10 shares, under the existing circumstances. We may concede for the purposes of the decision the validity in all respects of the provisions of the by-laws relative to this matter. Careful consideration of articles and by-laws leaves no doubt as to the full purpose and scope of these provisions; the same being substantially stated therein. The object was to have the business of this corporation, which was to be confined as far as possible to employees of the Mare Island navy yard, run, in so far as was practicable, according to the desires of the majority of persons who were stockholders rather than according to the desires of the holders of the majority of stock. Equality of "say and voice" to every individual stockholder in the management of the business of the corporation as a going concern, regardless of the amount of stock held by him, was the sole object of all these provisions as to repurchase, as it was with regard to the provisions as to manner of voting, and requirement of proxy. There is to our minds nothing in articles or by-laws to warrant a conclusion that for some purpose not at all incident to the management of the corporation as a going concern, in this case in the closing of the affairs of the corporation, the mere increase in value of certain stock held by certain stockholders to be attained by extinguishing by purchase of their stock the rights of others to participate as stockholders in the distribution of the corporate assets, the corporation or its officers can compel a retransfer of any stock. As we have seen, this corporation has ceased to do business, has sold its property, and is about to dissolve, and apparently has a large residue of money to distribute pro rata among its stockholders. So far as the corporation is concerned and the management of its affairs, there is no longer any necessity for or propriety in the repurchase of any stock. The only thing remaining to be done is to dissolve and distribute the assets among the existing stockholders according to their respective holdings. We are satisfied that respondents are not acting in violation of articles of incorporation or by-laws in refusing at this stage to attempt a repurchase of any stock.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Counties $\S$ 61—Statutes $\S$ 89—County engineer act held unconstitutional in that it creates offices and delegates authority to supervisors, and permits departure in uniformity of county government.

St. 1919, p. 1290, providing for the appointment of a county engineer, held unconstitutional in that it creates a county office and delegates to the board of supervisors of counties not having charters under Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½, 7½a, authority to fix the compensation of such county officer in violation of section 5, and in that it permits a departure from uniformity in county government provided for by section 4, by making it optional with supervisors of county as to whether such officer shall be appointed; the county engineer so provided for being a county officer, and not a mere employee, notwithstanding provision of statute that he shall be deemed an "employee and not a county officer."

2. Statutes $\S$ 181(1)—Construed according to legislative intent.

A statute will be construed according to the legislative intent if consistent with the real object and purpose of the statute.

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 47—Constitutionality not dependent on legislative declaration as to purpose, but on scope and effect of statute.

A legislative declaration, whether contained in the title or in the body of a statute, that the statute was intended to promote a certain purpose, is not conclusive on the courts, and they must inquire into the real as distinguished from the ostensible purpose of the statute, and determine whether it in its scope and effect departs from the declared legislative design and contravenes the Constitution.

4. Officers ⚡3—Test as to whether statute creates public office or really provides for employment of employee.

Whether a statute creates a public office or provides for the employment of the employee depends, not upon the name given the particular office, but upon the power granted, the duties and functions to be performed, and other circumstances manifesting the true character of the position.

5. Officers ⚡1—"Public officer" defined.

A "public officer" is a public agent, and acts only on behalf of the public, whose sanction is generally necessary to give his act the authority and power of a public act or law, a public officer being distinguished from a mere employee in that a public duty is delegated and intrusted to him, and in that there is a fixed tenure of position, the execution of a public oath of office, and generally of an official bond, the liability to be called to account for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office, and the payment of a salary from the general county treasury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Officer.]

6. Counties ⚡61—"County officer" defined.

A "county officer" is a public officer who fills a position usually provided for in the organization of counties and county governments, and is selected by the county to represent it continuously and as part of the regular and permanent administration of public power in carrying out certain acts with the performance of which it is charged in behalf of the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, County Officer.]

7. Statutes ⚡89—"System" within constitutional provision as to system of county governments, defined.

The word "system," within Const. art. 11, § 4, providing that the Legislature shall establish a "system" of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the state, means an organized plan or scheme in keeping with which the constituent parts thereof are rendered similar and are connected and combined into one complete harmonious whole, and imports both a unity of purpose and entirety of operation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, System.]

8. Highways ⚡113(4)—Contractor who performed work on order of county supervisors entitled to compensation.

Contractor who performed work on order of county supervisors under Pol. Code, §§ 2641, 2645, subsequent to appointment of county engineer, held entitled to payment in view of the invalidity of the county engineer act.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Application by Paul Coulter for a writ of mandamus against C. A. Pool, as Auditor of the County of Sonoma, and others. Writ refused, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

G. W. Hoyle, Dist. Atty., of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

LENNON, J. In this proceeding the plaintiff sought, and was denied, mandamus to compel the defendants, respectively the auditor and the treasurer of the county of Sonoma, to audit and pay the claim of plaintiff presented against said county in the sum of $39.24 for labor alleged to have been performed by the plaintiff upon certain of said county's highways.

The claim in controversy is founded primarily upon the admitted fact that plaintiff performed labor upon said highways under and by virtue of the direction and authority of one of the supervisors of said county elected from and representing the supervisorial district in which the labor was performed, and who, by virtue of his office, was road commissioner for said district, and, as such commissioner was given supervision of the highways in his district. Pol. Code, §§ 2641, 2645. The labor which is the basis of the claim in controversy was performed on July 26, 1919, subsequent to the appointment by the board of supervisors of a county engineer, made pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled:

"An act providing for a county engineer for each county in this state, * * * his appointment, manner of removal, qualifications, compensation and duties; transferring to such engineer certain powers, functions and duties heretofore vested in and performed by county surveyors and members of the board of supervisors; * * * to provide for abolishing the office of county surveyor and for the fixing and levying of taxes for road purposes." Stats. 1919, p. 1290.

Section 13 of this act provides that it shall be known and designated as "the county engineer act," and it will be hereinafter referred to by that title. Stats. 1919, pp. 1290, 1295. In keeping with the provisions of this act, the board of supervisors, when appointing the county engineer for a term of four years, fixed his salary at the sum of $350 per month, and the number and compensation of his assistants. Said labor was performed by plaintiff without, and never has had, the authority, inspection, and approval of said county engineer as required by the provisions of subdivision "b" of section 5 of said act. The claim in question was, however, approved and allowed by the board of supervisors as a legal charge against the county, apparently upon the theory that, inasmuch as an ordinance passed subsequent to the ordinance appointing the county engineer, with apparent intent to do so, excluded the supervisorial district in which the labor involved was performed from the scope and operation of the ordinance appointing the engineer, it thereby, in effect, left the supervisor of that district as the ex officio road commissioner thereof in control of the work to be done on the highway therein to the exclusion of the authority and direction of the county engineer. The writ seeking an order directing the auditing and payment of the claim thus allowed was denied by the court below upon the theory that the county engineer act, having been adopted by the board of supervisors of Sonoma county, applied throughout that county; that the board of supervisors had no authority to except one district of that county from the operation of the act, and that plaintiff's claim was therefore void on its face because the work performed by plaintiff was not performed under the provisions of the county engineer act. The proceeding in mandamus is now here upon appeal of the plaintiff.

[1] We shall concern ourselves only with the constitutionality of the act, for if it be held, as we think it must, to be unconstitutional, then it does not invalidate the plaintiff's claim, and there is no need to discuss and decide the several remaining questions involved in the appeal.

[2, 3] At the outset we are satisfied that the act in question contemplates the creation of a county office, and does, in fact, provide for something more than a mere employment by the board of supervisors of a person to be known as the county engineer. And we are convinced that this is so despite the verbiage of the act, industriously employed, which, among other things, declares that the county engineer appointed by the board of supervisors "shall be deemed an employee and not a county officer * * * subject to the control and supervision of the board of supervisors." We are not unmindful of the cardinal rules of statutory construction which require an interpretation of a statute which will give effect to the legislative intent, which, if consistent with the real object and purpose of the statute, must be adopted, and doubtless the express legislative declaration found in section 1 of the act purporting to designate the official character of the county engineer and specifying the category in which, when appointed, he and his duties must be considered and treated, tends in some degree to show the legislative intent to provide that the county engineer was to be a mere employee of the board of supervisors, and not a county officer who was to be part and parcel of that uniform system of county government contemplated and commanded by the Constitution. Const. of California, art. 11, § 4. While ordinarily it is the rule that, when the lawmaking power distinctly states its design in the enactment of a particular statute, no room is left for construction, nevertheless, as the District Court of Appeal well said during its discussion of this phase of the case:

"The label placed by the Legislature upon its work cannot be permitted to give it a meaning not fairly contemplated within its terms."

In other words, a legislative declaration, whether contained in the title or in the body of a statute, that the statute was intended to promote a certain purpose, is not conclusive on the courts, and they may and must inquire into the real, as distinguished from the ostensible, purpose of the statute, and determine the fact whether, after all has been said and done by the Legislature, the statute, in its scope and effect, departs from the declared legislative design and contravenes the fundamental and supreme law of the state. Matter of Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 110, 50 Am. Rep. 636; State v. Redmon, 134 Wis. 89, 107, 114 N. W. 137, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 229, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 15 Ann. Cas. 408; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205. This being so, it cannot be rightfully held that, standing alone, the legislative declaration in the instant case compels the conclusion without more ado that the act in question did no more than provide for the mere employment of a county engineer, and did not, in truth and in fact, attempt to create a county officer to be known as the county engineer. A proper construction of the act requires that due regard be given to the real object of the act. People v. Dana, 22 Cal. 11; Genilla v. Hanley, 6 Cal. App. 614, 92 Pac. 752. This may, we think, be readily ascertained, despite the legislative declaration to the contrary, by a consideration of the requirements of the act as gathered from the context of the act in its entirety.

[4] Looking, then, to the context of the act in its entirety for the purpose of ascertaining its real, as distinguished from its ostensible, purpose, we are first brought to a consideration of the question of what distinguishes a public office from a mere employment. The words "public office" are used in so many senses that it is hardly possible to undertake a precise definition of the meaning and purpose of the phrase which will adequately and effectively cover every situation. It is far less difficult to conceive and comprehend the requirements which characterize a public office than it is to formulate a definition thereof which will have universal application and be entirely free from fault. Its definition and application depend, not upon what the particular office in question may be called, nor upon what a statute may call it, but upon the power granted and wielded, the duties and functions performed, and other circumstances which manifest the true character of the position and make and mark it a public office, irrespective of its formal designation. Knox v. L. A. County, 58 Cal. 59; Mechem on Public Offices, § 4; Hartigan v. Board, 49 W. Va. 14, 38 S. E. 698. A public office is ordinarily and generally defined to be the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, the tenure of which is not transient, occasional, or incidental, by which for a given period an individual is invested with power to perform a public function for the benefit of the public. State v. Jennings, 57 Ohio St. 415, 49 N. E. 404, 63 Am. St. Rep. 723.

[5] A public officer is a public agent, and as such acts only on behalf of his principal, the public, whose sanction is generally considered as necessary to give the act performed by the officer the authority and power of a public act or law. The most general characteristic of a public officer, which distinguishes him from a mere employee, is that a public duty is delegated and intrusted to him, as agent, the performance of which is an exercise of a part of the governmental functions of the particular political unit for which he, as agent, is acting. There are other incidents which ordinarily distinguish a public officer, such, for instance, as a fixed tenure of position, the exaction of a public oath of office, and, perhaps, an official bond, the liability to be called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office and the payment of his salary from the general county treasury. U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. Ed. 830; U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 511, 25 L. Ed. 482; People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673; State v. Jennings, supra; Knox v. L. A. Co., supra.

[6] As a matter of course, in keeping with these definitions, a county officer is a public officer, and may be specifically defined to be one who fills a position usually provided for in the organization of counties and county governments and is selected by the political subdivision of the state called the "county" to represent that governmental unit, continuously and as part of the regular and permanent administration of public power, in carrying out certain acts with the performance of which it is charged in behalf of the public. Sheboygan County v. Parker, 70 U. S. 93, 18 L. Ed. 33; State v. Samuelson, 131 Wis. 499, 111 N. W. 712; State v. Higginbotham, 84 Ark. 537, 106 S. W. 484.

Measuring the provisions of the act hereinabove referred to by the authorities just cited, it seems evident, beyond argument, that the so-called "employee" provided for in the statute in question is, in fact, a public and a county officer. The act specifies (section 2) that the tenure of the position of county engineer shall be a term of four years from the date of his "appointment," providing for removal only in the event of inefficiency, malfeasance, or misconduct in office, and then upon written charges filed with the board of supervisors and after a hearing of the charges by said board, and, if found guilty, the board must forthwith remove him from "office" and shall immediately appoint his "successor" in the manner provided in the act. The act also requires (section 2) that "prior to entering upon the duties of his employment the county engineer shall file with the county clerk the oath of office as prescribed for the county officers and a bond conditioned upon the faithful performance of his duties, with sufficient sureties approved by a judge of the superior court, in the sum of five thousand dollars." (Italics ours.) The salary, which is to be fixed by the board of supervisors, "shall be paid monthly out of the county treasury of the county in which he is appointed and in the same manner as county officers; * * * provided, however, that the compensation of the county engineer in any county shall not be less than the compensation received by the county surveyor of that county at the time said county engineer is first appointed." Section 3. With respect to duties, it is provided that, among other things, "the county engineer shall be ex officio road commissioner of and for each and every road district of his county, and, subject to the control and supervision of the board of supervisors as herein provided" (section 4), and "shall * * * make, or cause to be made, all surveys, maps, plans, specifications and estimates necessary or required for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the county roads, highways and bridges, and shall, from and after the first Monday in September, 1919, have and exercise all the powers and duties, and perform all the functions which are now by law conferred or imposed upon county surveyors * * *" (section 5 [a]). The act further provides that the county engineer "may also hold and perform the duties of the office of county surveyor, but in all such cases no salary or other compensation shall be paid to him as county surveyor" (section 5 [f]), and that he shall, at regular monthly meetings of the board make a report to the board containing "the recommendation of acceptance or rejection of any public work, completed, and all official announcements or statements which the engineer is required to make to the board" (section 5 [h]), and "submit to the board of supervisors a certificate over his signature and official seal to the effect that such work by the contractors thereof has been completed in accordance with the specifications thereof and recommending its acceptance" (section 9). The act in terms provides that, upon the appointment of the county engineer, the county office of county surveyor shall, in certain specified contingencies, be deemed abolished. Nevertheless, as is evidenced by some of the provisions above set forth, the office and duties of the county surveyor are, in effect, by the act in question merged into the office and duties of the county engineer. The county surveyor, under the general law in force throughout the state, is a county officer (Pol. Code, § 4013), and as such is required to do certain designated county work, not specially mentioned in the act in question, pertaining to the governmental functions of the county (Pol. Code, § 4214 et seq.). The Legislature therefore attempted to transfer the burden of the duties of the county surveyor to the so-called county engineer, in conjunction with the added and different duties imposed upon him by the act in question. That this is so is further evidenced by an amendment to the county engineer act in 1921 by which a provision was added to the effect that, upon the petition of a certain percentage of qualified electors of the county, the board of supervisors in any county which shall have adopted the provisions of the act "shall discontinue such office of county engineer by ordinance declaring their intention so to do and in such ordinance the board shall provide that the person holding the office of county engineer at the time the ordinance becomes effective shall be and become the county surveyor of such county until the next ensuing general election. * * *" Stats. 1921, p. 934.

That the position of county engineer is in fact a county office is apparent, in view of the authorities previously cited, from the provisions of the act above quoted and referred to, namely, the provision for trial and removal of the county engineer in the event of misfeasance or nonfeasance in office, the fixing of the tenure of office, the requirement of a bond and the taking of the oath prescribed for county officers, payment of salary from the general county treasury, the political and governmental nature of his duties, and the relation between the position of county engineer and the office of county surveyor. "Clearly, it was a county office." Reed v. Hammond, 18 Cal. App. 442, 123 Pac. 346. This being so, it may be stated, in passing, that it follows that the county engineer act is practically inoperative for the reason that the act itself specifies no compensation for the office, and any ordinance of a board of supervisors attempting to fix the salary of a person appointed to the position of county engineer is void to that extent for the reason that the Constitution imposes upon the Legislature exclusively the duty of regulating the compensation of all county officers, unless a county has adopted a charter in accordance with the provisions of sections 7½ or 7½a of article 11 of the Constitution, or there is some other express constitutional exception. The state Legislature cannot directly delegate to the boards of supervisors of the various counties the power of fixing the compensation of a county officer. Const. Cal. art. 11, § 5; Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161.

Concluding, as we do and must, that the position of "county engineer" which the Legislature attempted to provide for by the act under consideration is in truth and in fact a county office, we are then confronted with the question of whether or not the act, if permitted to become operative, is in keeping with and does not violate the mandatory provision of the Constitution which requires that "the Legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the state. * * *" Const. Cal. art. 11, § 4.

We may concede, for the purpose of discussion, that the rule prohibiting the delegation of legislative powers by a state Legislature does not necessarily prohibit a conditional statute, the taking effect of which in each locality may be made to depend upon such subsequent event as its approval by the electors of that locality. Likewise it may be conceded that the act in question may be said to be a general and uniform law because the general provisions thereof are applicable alike to every county in the state. The fact remains, however, that the Constitution contemplates and commands that the system of county governments shall be uniform throughout the state, except in those special instances where the Constitution itself sanctions a departure from uniformity, such, for instance, as in the case of counties or consolidated cities and counties which adopt charters in accordance with the provisions of sections 7½ and 7½a of the Constitution. There is no section of the Constitution which specially excepts the political functions dealt with by the act in question from the requirement that the general scheme of county governments provided for by the Legislature must be uniform throughout the state. Therefore, if the county engineer act will, in its operation, necessarily tend to interfere with this uniformity, it is unconstitutional and void.

Section 1 of the act provides that—

Section 11 provides that, if the provisions of the act are adopted in a county by the appointment of a county engineer, the office of county surveyor shall be abolished either upon the date upon which the appointment is made and accepted if the person who holds the office of county surveyor is the one appointed county engineer, or, in other cases, upon the expiration of the term of the person who holds the office of county surveyor at the time the appointment of county engineer is made. By the 1921 amendment previously mentioned, the office of county engineer may be abolished, and that of county surveyor reinstated, upon the petition of a certain percentage of electors. It is evident, therefore, that the act is not mandatory in its operation. To the contrary, it is provided in the act that the question as to whether its provisions shall become operative in any particular county or whether that county shall continue under the provisions of the general law on the subject heretofore in force is a matter to be determined, in the last analysis, solely by a percentage of the electors of that county. This being so, the act by its express terms renders possible and probable a situation where in one or more of the counties of the state the duties of surveying and fixing the boundaries of the public lands and roads, etc., would be performed by the county surveyor, an officer elected by the people of the respective counties and subject to the rules governing elected officials, while in another or other counties there might be an arrangement whereby these same duties would be performed by an official appointed by the board of supervisors, which official would, in addition to the duties prescribed by the general law for county surveyors, also perform the various duties set forth in section 5 of the county engineer act. In the counties operating under the general law each supervisor is ex officio road commissioner in his supervisorial district, whereas in counties electing to adopt the provisions of the county engineer act the county engineer would be "ex officio road commissioner of and for each and every road district of his county."

[7] The word "system," as employed in the Constitution, means an organized plan or scheme in keeping with which the constituent parts thereof are rendered similar and are connected and combined into one complete, harmonious whole, and it necessarily imports both a unity of purpose and entirety of operation. Welsh v. Bramlet, 98 Cal. 219, 33 Pac. 66; Board v. State, 26 Okl. 366, 109 Pac. 563; State v. Riordan, 24 Wis. 484. As previously indicated, uniformity means consistency, resemblance, sameness, a conformity to one pattern. In this resemblance, in this sameness, in this conformity of a class to one pattern, consists the uniformity of system which is essential to the creation and continuity of a uniform system. And therefore the constitutional mandate to establish a uniform system of county government throughout the state means one system applicable alike in all its parts and continuously operating equally in all of the counties of the state. If a particular county were expressly exempted from the operation of the act in question, there would be no doubt but that it would violate the uniformity of system contemplated and required by the Constitution. And, while in the act under consideration no particular county is expressly exempted from the operation of the law, nevertheless people of any one or more counties may, without regard to any action taken by the remaining counties, determine that they will or will not be subject to the operation of the law, and thereby, of their own volition, create an exception to the general and uniform system of county government. In other words, the Legislature by the act in question attempted to do by indirection that which it could not do directly; that is to say, having no power to exempt one or more counties from the operation of the act, it could not confer that power upon the people of the different counties. The Legislature itself must by its own enactment establish in the first instance a system of county government uniform throughout the state, and it necessarily follows that such system when once established must, in so far as its uniformity is concerned, be kept intact by the Legislature, and must not be impaired by any subsequent legislation authorizing in counties a material difference in the manner of performing functions of government intrusted to them.

Inasmuch as the county engineer act provides for a county office involving the exercise of political functions, we conclude that the said act violates the constitutional requirement that the system of county governments prescribed by the Legislature shall be uniform throughout the state, by reason of the fact that it is not mandatory in its operation, but that it is optional with each county whether or not the office provided for by the act shall be established therein. L. A. County v. Kirk, 148 Cal. 385, 83 Pac. 250.

This conclusion is not in conflict with the cases relied upon by respondents. In Scott v. Boyle, 164 Cal. 321, 128 Pac. 941, the court had under consideration a statute which authorized the appointment of sealers of weights and measures, but left the determination as to whether or not this authorization should be availed of to the different counties and municipalities. The statute dealt with an office which was specifically provided for by a special section of the Constitution (Const. art. 11, § 14), and which the court held was "distinct from the general political functions of counties and cities and the general scheme of county or municipal government." Likewise the statute upheld in the case of Board of Law Library Trustees v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Cal. 571, 34 Pac. 244, left to the election of the different counties the matter of the establishment of law libraries, but such institutions are not part of the system of county government, at least in so far as the execution of "political functions" is concerned, and consequently the point here presented was not discussed in that case. In Tulare County v. May, 118 Cal. 303, 50 Pac. 427, the act provided for one additional deputy sheriff and two deputy clerks in any county in which an additional judge of the superior court was created by the Legislature. This provision was valid, for, as stated in the opinion, it operated in each county alike upon the creation of an additional judge in that county by the Legislature.

[8] The employment of plaintiff to perform the work in question was ratified by the board of supervisors by allowing his claim for compensation for the work (Power v. May, 123 Cal. 147, 55 Pac. 796), and, in view of the fact that the county engineer act must be held unconstitutional, the record discloses no valid objection to the payment of the claim thus allowed. Disregarding the findings concerning the proceedings under the said county engineer act, the remaining findings of the trial court are sufficient to support a judgment in plaintiff's favor. Accordingly the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to grant the relief prayed for in plaintiff's petition.

PACIFIC PORTLAND CEMENT CO., CONSOLIDATED, v. PLACER COUNTY LAND CO. (Sac. 2912.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⚡31—Conveyances of land in chain of title, naming center line of track as a boundary held notice to purchaser of railroad's claim.

A call in several conveyances in chain of title for the center line of a railway track as one of the boundaries gave notice to purchaser of the adverse occupation and claims of a railroad right of way extending to the fence bordering on the apparent right of way.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⚡44—Evidence held not sufficient to support finding that the inclusion of right of way of a railroad in a deed was a mutual mistake.

On a purchaser's claim for deficiency in quantity, evidence that the inclusion of railroad right of way in the deed was a mutual mistake held not sufficient to support judgment for purchaser.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⚡31—Purchaser, with notice that railroad claimed right of way, had duty to investigate extent of claim.

Where a purchaser claiming damages for deficiency in quantity had notice from conveyances in chain of title and from a fence on the land that a railroad occupied and claimed a right of way in the land, he was bound to investigate the extent of the railroad's rights.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⚡31—Public statute of Congress, granting right of way to railroad, was constructive notice to purchaser of railroad's claim.

The act of Congress under which a right of way was granted to railroad company, being a public statute, was constructive notice to both vendor and purchaser of the adverse claim of the railroad company.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⚡37(3)—In absence of fraud or an agreement, express or implied, for a good or particular title, purchaser of land buys at his peril.

In absence of fraud or an agreement, express or implied, for a good or particular title, a purchaser of land buys at his peril, and the vendor's representation that he had title to a disputed strip occupied as railroad right of way, of which the purchaser had notice, was a mere statement of opinion.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⚡37(3)—Mere expressions of opinion by vendor as to sufficiency of title do not constitute fraud or deceit.

Mere expressions of opinion as to sufficiency of title, when means of information are equally accessible to both parties and no confidential relation exists between them, do not constitute fraud or deceit on the part of the vendor.

7. Vendor and purchaser ⚡31—Purchaser with notice of adverse possession of part of land cannot avoid liability for purchase price.

Where the purchaser had notice, through conveyances in chain of title, naming as a boundary the middle of a railroad track, and from the fact that the railroad ran across the land and its right of way was fenced, that part of the land was held by the railroad as a right of way, he cannot avoid paying the purchase price of the entire tract for which he bargained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Portland Cement Company, Consolidated, against the Placer County Land Company. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, and A. E. Roth, of Stanford University, (Marshall P. Madison, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Geo. W. Hamilton, of Auburn, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This action was begun by plaintiff to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage on land conveyed by plaintiff to defendant. There was a cross-complaint by defendant to recover damages from failure of title to a portion of the land. Judgment was for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

The only matters in dispute arise under the averments of the cross-complaint that the agreement with and deed to the defendant called for a tract containing 22½ acres, whereas plaintiff only had title to 16 acres of the tract conveyed. The deed to defendant described the land by courses and distances as follows:

"Beginning at the northeast corner of the west half of the northeast quarter of section 10 in township 12, north, range 8 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and running thence south along the line between the east half and the west half of the northeast quarter of section 10 a distance of 1320 feet to a stake; thence at right angles west a distance of 802 feet to the center line of the Central Pacific railway track; thence in a northerly direction along said center line of said railroad track to its intersection with the north line of said section 10; thence east along the north line of said section 10 a distance of 669 feet to the place of beginning; being a fractional part of the north half of the west half of the northeast quarter of said section 10."

No reference is made in the deed to the acreage of the tract, but it is in evidence that a computation of the area inclosed within the described boundaries shows that it comprises 22½ acres.

[1] It is conceded that the Southern Pacific Company, as successor to the Central Pacific Railway Company, at all times affected by these proceedings, owned a strip of the above-described premises 200 feet in width along the entire westerly line, described as the "center line of the Central Pacific Railway track," and to the east thereof, comprising about six acres, and to which strip the plaintiff at no time had any title. For many years prior to the conveyance in question the railway companies had occupied the westerly part of this strip as a right of way for their tracks, and had maintained a fence on the easterly line between such strip and the remaining premises covered by plaintiff's deed. It is from the failure to obtain title to this strip of land under the deed from plaintiff to defendant that the controversy on this appeal arises.

The trial court, after finding the facts as above stated, further found that the plaintiff and its agents had knowledge of "the existence of the tracks and fence lines constructed and maintained over and across such mortgaged premises," and were advised and informed of the fact that all the right, title, or interest or estate that they or either of them had in or to said strip was "subject and subordinate to the rights, claims and title of the railway company," but that neither plaintiff nor its agents advised or informed the defendant thereof. This finding is followed immediately by the further inconsistent and apparently irreconcilable finding that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant "had knowledge or were otherwise informed or advised" of the fact of ownership and right of possession by the railway company of the strip or parcel of land hereinbefore described.

As the evidence indisputably shows that all of the parties to this action knew and had known for years that the railway company was maintaining its tracks upon this strip of land and was maintaining the fence hereinbefore referred to, and as the deed itself carries the west line of the land conveyed to and along the center of a railway track, the only explanation for the finding that neither plaintiff nor defendant knew of the railway's ownership or right of possession is that the court intended to find that neither of them was informed of the nature or validity of the railway company's right or title. That such was the situation is a fair inference from the testimony in the case. It is clearly evident from the testimony of the agents of defendant who conducted the negotiations for the purchase of this land that they knew of the occupancy of this strip, or some portion of it, by the railway company, and that it was claimed and used by said company for a right of way, and that the railway company was maintaining the fence along the easterly border of this strip, thus separating it from the main part of the tract. Before the purchase was consummated defendant was furnished with an abstract of title to the entire tract, and in one of the transfers set out in the abstract there was a reservation "saving and excepting the right of way of the said Central Pacific Railroad Company." The call in each of the several conveyances for the "center line of the Central Pacific Railroad track," as one of the boundaries, must have served as notice that the railway company was claiming and occupying some portion of the tract as a right of way. Defendant's agents admitted that they had previous knowledge of litigation between the railroad and other landowners over this 200-foot right of way extending across adjacent lands. This 200-foot strip is claimed by the railway under an early congressional grant. The title of the company had, it was claimed, in one instance at least, been successfully contested, and defendant's agent and representative testified to knowledge that similar litigation had occurred on other sections of the railway line in that neighborhood, and "that sometimes the railroad company wins and sometimes loses." That defendant had notice that some portion of the tract it was bargaining for was occupied and claimed as a railroad right of way is beyond question.

That such claim extended from the railway track to the line of fence was suggestively apparent. The only reasonable conclusion is that both parties to the transaction understood that the disputed strip was included in the conveyance, as it had been in the several previous deeds in the chain of title, to pass to the grantee any interest that might be maintained against the railroad company, but with full knowledge of the railway's possession and subject to any valid claim it might have.

[2, 3] The theory upon which the trial court made its findings in favor of defendant, namely, that the inclusion of the entire acreage in this conveyance was the result of the mutual belief of both parties to the transaction that plaintiff had an undisputed title to this right of way strip clearly cannot be maintained, and upon no other theory presented by the facts or the findings can the defendant defeat plaintiff's action or recover on its cross-complaint. Fraud is not alleged in the pleadings, and the defendant at least had sufficient notice of the railroad's right of way to put it on inquiry. Indeed, it knew of the adverse claim to some portion of this tract, and the duty was imposed upon it to make investigation as to the extent of the railroad's rights.

[4] That the deed to defendant calls for this 200-foot strip is undisputed, but it is equally clear that the grantor knew that it did not have title thereto, or at least that the railroad company was occupying and claiming it adversely, and the grantee was aware that at least some portion of the strip was claimed and occupied by the railroad as a right of way. Even the act of Congress under which the 200 feet of land claimed by the railway company was granted, being a public statute, was constructive notice to both parties of this adverse claim. Central Pac. Ry. Co. v. Droge, 171 Cal. 32, 42, 151 Pac. 663.

[5] Eliminating the findings of mutual mistake, and any question of fraudulent misrepresentation, or express covenants of title, and the application of the rule of caveat emptor becomes too plain to require argument or authority. The general rule applicable is stated in 39 Cyc. p. 1252, as follows:

"It is well settled that, in the absence of fraud or an agreement, express or implied, for a good or particular title, a purchaser of land buys at his peril, and is bound to look to the title and competency of the vendor. Therefore a purchaser cannot rescind on the ground that he was mistaken as to his vendor's title. But where both parties are under a mistake as to the vendor's title, equity will relieve the purchaser from the contract."

[6] The most that can be said in support of defendant's case here is that the plaintiff, its vendor, represented that it had title to this disputed strip; but in the face of the fact that both parties to the transaction had knowledge of the adverse claim and possession of the railroad company, this representation becomes a mere statement of opinion as to the legal effect of the adverse claim.

"Mere expressions of opinion as to the sufficiency of the title, when the means of information are equally accessible to both parties, or the same facts are within the knowledge of both parties, and when no confidential relation exists between them, do not constitute fraud or deceit upon the part of the vendor. It is a mere statement of opinion, and does not justify the party to whom the statement is made in relying thereon." Choate v. Hyde, 129 Cal. 580, 62 Pac. 118; Nounnan v. Sutter County Land Co., 81 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 515, 6 L. R. A. 219; Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 119 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140.

[7] If defendant was misled in entering into this purchase, it was not because of any mistake as to the acreage of the tract. It is not disputed that the deed purported to convey the entire 22½ acres bargained for. The mistake, if any, was as to the title to the strip included in the railroad's right of way, and, as has been pointed out, both parties were in possession of the facts which showed that plaintiff's claim of title was at least doubtful and its representation of ownership merely matter of opinion.

The undisputed facts in this case clearly indicate that the conveyances of this strip by the owners of record through a considerable chain of title were accepted with knowledge of the adverse claim of the railroad, and the defendant here in its turn took a sporting chance, which it confessedly thought at the time of the purchase was good, that the railroad's title could be defeated. Under such conditions it cannot avoid its liability for the purchase price.

The judgment is reversed.

STANDARD LUMBER CO. v. MADARY'S
PLANING MILL et al. (Civ. 2337.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 30, 1921.)

1. Trespass ⇨10—Public right to use railroad spur does not carry right of access over adjoining land.

The right of the public to the use of a spur track of a railroad does not carry with it the right of access thereto over an adjoining owner's lands not dedicated to public use.

2. Injunction ⇨12—Not refused for injury accomplished where continuation threatened.

Injunction will not be refused because injury has been accomplished where apparent continuation is threatened.

3. Injunction ⇨135—Granting temporary injunction largely discretionary.

The granting of a temporary injunction is largely discretionary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by the Standard Lumber Company against Madary's Planing Mill and others. From an order granting a temporary injunction, defendants appeal. Order affirmed.

J. C. Webster and J. T. B. Warne, both of Sonora, for appellants.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, and J. B. Curtin, of Sonora, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction. The Sugar Pine Railway and a spur track therefrom run through plaintiff's land. Included in said land and line between the spur track and plaintiff's east boundary line is a triangular parcel about 400 feet long from north to south and 60 feet wide at the north side. The land immediately east of the triangle belongs to the railway company. From the southerly point of the triangle for about 200 feet in a northerly direction along the west side of the spur track are skids for the purpose of loading lumber on cars. These skids seem to cover an area 30 or more feet in width. The plaintiff's east boundary line runs diagonally through the space occupied by the skids, somewhat less than half of such area being on the plaintiff's land.

[1] Appellants state that the land which the defendants are enjoined from using had "become subject to the use of a common carrier of freight, the Sugar Pine Railway Company and its shippers." Defendant Madary, in his affidavit in opposition to the motion for a temporary injunction, states that for more than four years "said lands have been * * * used under claim of right, by the Sugar Pine Railway Company, a common carrier, for its spur track and for loading facilities to permit defendants, as shippers of lumber, to load their cars for shipment." This evidence is contradicted by that of the plaintiff. D. H. Steinmetz, secretary and general manager of the plaintiff, testified that three or four different men were given personal permission by plaintiff to use its lands and the skidway for the purpose of loading cars, but that such permits had been revoked; and that, during the year 1919, Madary's planing mill used part of said lands of plaintiff, but without "right or permission or authority so to do." If the evidence produced by plaintiff is true, and for the purposes of this appeal it must be taken as true, then the principle announced in Southern California Railway Co. v. Slauson, 138 Cal. 342, 71 Pac. 352, 94 Am. St. Rep. 58, and Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 160 Cal. 699, 117 Pac. 906, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, cited by appellant, has no application. The right of the public to the use of the spur track does not carry with it the right of access thereto over the plaintiff's lands not dedicated to a public use.

[2] It is contended that any damage to plaintiff's land was suffered prior to the commencement of the action, and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. As said in Smithers v. Fitch, 82 Cal. 158, 22 Pac. 935:

"The evidence indicated that the trespasses already committed would probably be repeated indefinitely, and to avoid a multiplicity of actions, for damages, and perhaps breaches of the peace, an injunction was called for and properly awarded."

A trespass of a continuing nature may be enjoined. Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 378, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74; United Railroads v. Superior Court, 172 Cal. 80, 155 Pac. 463.

"It is almost axiomatic to say that an injunction against a continuing trespass will not be denied merely because acts of trespass actually have been accomplished." Farrel v. City of Ontario, 36 Cal. App. 754, 173 Pac. 392.

It may be further stated, in support of the holding of the trial court, that the plaintiff introduced evidence to the effect that it had a million feet of lumber ready for shipment, and needed all of said lands for its use in handling and shipping such lumber, and that the use of said lands by the defendants would prevent the plaintiff from using the same and shipping such lumber. It was also shown that there is another spur track on the opposite side of the main line available for the use of the defendants.

[3] The granting of a temporary injunction is largely in the discretion of the trial court, and there is nothing in the record to indicate an abuse of such discretion.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SPENCER. (Cr. 575.)

1. Larceny — Intoxicating liquors not the subject of larceny.

Intoxicating liquor manufactured for beverage purposes after Const. U. S. Amend. 18, has taken effect cannot be the subject of larceny, since such liquor cannot in legal contemplation be property, inasmuch as there cannot be ownership thereof, in view of Volstead Act of the United States and Civ. Code, § 654.

2. Burglary — One who enters building with intent to take intoxicating liquor cannot be convicted of burglary.

One who entered building with the intent to take intoxicating liquor which had been manufactured for beverage purposes since Const. U. S. Amend. 18, has taken effect is not guilty of burglary, since the liquor is not in legal contemplation property, inasmuch as it is not subject to ownership, in view of the Volstead Act of the United States and Civ. Code, § 654.

3. Burglary — Information need not describe particular property defendant intended to steal.

Information charging burglary need not describe the property which defendant intended to steal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. S. Preston, Judge.

Annet Spencer was accused by information of the crime of burglary with intent to steal intoxicating liquors, and from order sustaining demurrer to the information, the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

Charles Kasch, of Ukiah, for respondent.

HART, J. The defendant was accused by an information filed by the district attorney of Mendocino county in the superior court of said county of the crime of burglary.

The defendant demurred to the information on the grounds: (1) That said information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense; (2) that said information contains matters which, if true, would constitute legal bar to the prosecution of said offense. The demurrer was sustained, and the information thereupon dismissed. The people appeal from the judgment of dismissal after demurrer sustained.

The charging part of the information reads as follows:

"That the said defendant, Annet Spencer, on the 19th day of February, A. D. 1921, at the said Mendocino county, state of California, and before the filing of this information, did then and there willfully, unlawfully, and burglariously enter the outhouse of one Lorenzo Albonico at the ranch of said Lorenzo Albonico, about 1¼ miles east of the town of Covelo, in said county, with the intent then and there and therein to steal, take, and carry away certain intoxicating liquor, to wit, wine containing more than ½ of 1 per cent. by volume of alcohol, said wine having been manufactured since January 20, 1921, for beverage purposes of the value of less than $50 and more than $1 lawful money of the United States of America and of the personal property of one Lorenzo Albonico, contrary," etc.

The theory upon which the demurrer was sustained by the court below and upon which insistence upon an affirmation of the judgment is urged in this court is that the article which the information charges that the defendant entered the building with the intent to steal is not property or a thing of value and consequently is not a subject of larceny. This theory is founded upon the provisions of the act of Congress, known as the Volstead Act (41 Stat. 305), which was enacted for the purpose of properly enforcing or of facilitating the proper enforcement throughout the United States of the provisions of the Eighteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, transportation, possession, etc., of intoxicating liquors.

Under the provisions of said act any liquors which contain one-half of 1 per centum or more of alcohol by volume to be used as beverages, come within the ban of the statute. It will be noted that the information in this case alleges that the wine which the defendant is charged with having stolen contained more than one-half of 1 per cent. by volume of alcohol and that the same had been manufactured, for beverage purposes, since January 20, 1921.

Section 8351b of said act, as the same has been codified (Barnes' Federal Code, 1921 Supplement), provides that—

"No person shall on or after the date when the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this act. * * *

Section 8351t of the same act declares that any room, house, building, or other structure, where intoxicating liquor is manufactured, sold, kept, or bartered in violation of this title, etc., is a common nuisance and annexes a penalty for the maintenance of such nuisance.

Section 8352, among other things, provides:

"It shall be unlawful to have or possess any liquor or property designed for the manufacture of liquor intended for use in violating this title or which has been so used, and no property right shall exist in any such liquor or property."

It is clear, from the foregoing provisions of the Volstead Act, that intoxicating liquors are not property within the meaning of the law. Civ. Code, § 654. Said section reads:

"The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others. In this Code, the thing of which there may be ownership is called property."

[1] It is obvious that there cannot be under the law as it exists to-day in this country an ownership of intoxicating liquors manufactured for beverage purposes since the enactment of the Volstead Act, and manifestly, if there cannot be an ownership of such liquors, they cannot be in legal contemplation property. It necessarily follows that the charge of larceny cannot be predicated of the act of taking intoxicating liquors by one from the possession of another.

[2] It is true that the gist of the crime of burglary is the entering of a building with the intent to commit either grand or petit larceny or other felony, and, although no property may be taken by a person so entering a building or other felony committed therein, the crime is nevertheless consummated upon an entry of the building being effected with the intent to commit any of the crimes mentioned in the statute. The description or specific mention in this case of the particular property which the defendant entered the building with intent to steal is evidentiary, wholly surplusage, and unnecessary to incorporate into that pleading, and it seems to us that the district attorney has thus "surplusaged" himself out of court in this case, for, having alleged in the information that the defendant entered the building with the intent to steal the particular property described therein, we are authorized to assume that he could only support the charge so preferred by evidence showing that the defendant did enter the building with the intent to steal the wine that was stored therein, and with no intent to steal any other property which might be in said building; in other words, we have a right to assume from the nature of the averments of the information that the district attorney thus purposely restricted himself to the right to prove the case by showing that the intent of the defendant in entering the building was only to take the wine, and this probably for the reason that the evidence available to him to establish the allegations of the information would and in fact could only show, if anything at all, that the defendant entered the building with the intent to take no other article therefrom than the wine which was stored or kept therein. This being so, the defendant could not be guilty of the crime of burglary, since, as we have above suggested, wine or other intoxicating liquors which come within the prohibition of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act, not being property, cannot be the subject of larceny. Although a person, himself having no right to its possession, may intend to and in fact take intoxicating liquor from the possession of another, he cannot be proceeded against either criminally or civilly because of such intent or of the taking thereof.

The soundness of the foregoing views would seem to be unquestionable; yet we are not without authority for their support. In People v. Caridis, 29 Cal. App. 166, 154 Pac. 1061, the defendant was charged by an information with the crime of grand larceny in that he had feloniously stolen and taken from another person a certain lottery ticket of a certain lottery company. A demurrer to the information was sustained upon the ground that the facts stated therein did not constitute a public offense, "in the particular that it affirmatively appeared that the subject-matter of the alleged larceny had no legitimate value," and the action was thereupon dismissed. The people appealed, and in affirming the judgment the court said:

"The lottery ticket which was the subject-matter of the larceny charged in the present case had no relative value save, as affirmatively alleged in the information, as the evidence of a debt due from an enterprise which was denounced by law and which apparently existed and was conducted by its promoters in defiance of the law. Pen. Code, § 319 et seq. It is a well-settled principle that an obligation which exists in defiance of a law which denounces it has, in the eye of the law, neither validity nor value."

In State v. Lymus, 26 Ohio St. 400, 20 Am. Rep. 772, the indictment charged the defendant with the crime of entering a building in the nighttime with intent to steal a dog kept therein, the property of the owner of the stable, of the value of $25. The trial court sustained a motion to quash the indictment, and upon appeal the Supreme Court said, in upholding the judgment, that under the laws of the state of Ohio a dog was not property and therefore could not be the subject of larceny. The court further said:

"It will be time enough for the courts to say that a dog is the subject of larceny when the lawmaking power of the state has so declared. 'Constructive crimes are odious and dangerous.'" Findlay v. Bean, 8 Serg. & Rawle (Pa.) 571.

Parenthetically we may observe that in this state dogs, in derogation of the common-law rule, are declared to be personal property, "and their value is to be ascertained in the same manner as the value of other property." Pen. Code, § 491.

There are other cases to the same effect as the above, but, as before stated, the proposition seems to be so clearly tenable that further citations are deemed unnecessary.

[3] It may be suggested that the district attorney, if he conceived it proper or necessary to name the specific property which the accused entered the building with the intent to steal, could have mentioned the bottles or other vessels containing the wine, and thus have described what in law is property and subject to asportation. But, be that as it may, the judgment, for the reasons herein given, should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

NORRIS v. CAMPBELL ELECTRIC CORPORATION et al. (Civ. 3878.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 23, 1921. Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1921.)

1 Appeal and error $\S$ 880(2)—Error in finding as to common ownership of defendant corporations held available only to those with which plaintiff had no contract.

Though a finding of the court, in an action against two manufacturing corporations and a sales corporation to recover commissions due under a contract with the latter for the sale of products of the former, that all three corporations were owned and operated by the same persons, and that plaintiff's services were rendered at the request of all, was not supported by the evidence, such error was available on appeal only to the manufacturing corporations, with which the evidence showed plaintiff had no contractual relations.

2. Work and labor $\S$ 22—Complaint for services under express promise held sufficient.

In an action to recover commissions on sales, the complaint, alleging that defendants were indebted to plaintiff for services rendered at their special instance and request, being in the form of a common count for services rendered under an express promise to pay therefor, was sufficient on demurrer.

3. Principal and agent $\S$ 89(4½)—Manufacturing corporations and sales agent properly joined in action to recover commissions.

In an action to recover commissions due on a contract with a sales corporation for the sale of products of two manufacturing corporations, for which it was sales agent, all three corporations were properly joined as joint debtors.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by George F. Norris against the Campbell Electric Corporation and others.

Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed in part.

Arthur H. Barendt, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Louis H. Brownstone and Louis E. Goodman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This action is to recover money alleged to be due the plaintiff as commission on sales of X-ray equipment and similar articles manufactured and sold by the defendant corporations. Plaintiff alleged that each of the defendants was a corporation organized under the laws of a state other than California; "that within two years last past the said defendants became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $4,832.43 for services rendered to said defendants by plaintiff at said defendants' special instance and request, in the sale of merchandise for said defendants."

It is then alleged that a portion of said sum has been paid and that there remains due and unpaid the sum of $1,566.54, for which sum judgment is prayed. A joint judgment was rendered against the defendants for the sum of $1,294.15, from which they appeal.

Respondent justifies the joint judgment rendered in this case by the finding of the trial court:

"That the defendants herein, while organized as three distinct corporate entities, are owned by and operated by the same persons and have the same officers and the same place of business in Lynn, Mass., and the services rendered by the plaintiff herein were rendered to, for, and at the request of all of said three defendant corporations."

That finding is attacked by the appellants as being unsustained by the evidence. The testimony of the plaintiff regarding at least one of the defendants, Vacuum Glass Company, is so vague and unsatisfactory as to give it little value as evidence. The record contains, then, practically undisputed, the following testimony of Fred R. Campbell, the treasurer of all three corporations defendant, and the only officer common to the three corporations:

"The Campbell Electric Company was incorporated in 1909 for the purpose of manufacturing X-ray and electro-medical and other electrical apparatus with factory and offices in the Keith Bldg., at 54 Central Square, Lynn, Mass. The Vacuum Glass Company was incorporated in 1909 for the purpose of manufacturing incandescent lamps, X-ray tubes and electro-medical glassware, and took up its quarters in the Fabens Building at 316 Union street, Lynn, Mass. In the year 1912 the Vacuum Glass Company sold its machinery for the manufacture of incandescent lamps, but continued the manufacture of X-ray tubes. In 1913 the Campbell Electric Company bought a large factory building at 17 Stewart street, and moved its quarters from the Keith Building in Central Square to the building at 17 Stewart street. At the same time the Vacuum Glass Company was rented small quarters in the building at 17 Stewart street, to which its machinery for the manufacture of X-ray tubes was removed, and where it manufactures in entirely separate quarters from the Campbell Electric Company or the Campbell Electric Corporation."

It also appears by the testimony of the same witness that the Campbell Electric Corporation was incorporated in 1917 for the purpose of selling the Campbell Electric Company's apparatus and supplies, and maintains entirely separate quarters from either of the other two defendants, and has its own corps of clerks entirely distinct from the Campbell Electric Company or Vacuum Glass Company. The list of directors of the Campbell Electric Corporation is furnished, and Mr. Campbell stated, in answer to interrogatories, that "none of these directors except myself were officers of either the Campbell Electric Company or Vacuum Glass Company, and none of them except myself were identified in any way with the Campbell Electric Company or Vacuum Glass Company."

[1] There is no evidence to support the portion of the finding relating to the ownership of the three corporations and no inquiry was made as to that fact. Though the finding as a whole is not, therefore, supported by the evidence, the error is available on this appeal only to the Campbell Electric Company and the Vacuum Glass Company. The evidence is without conflict that plaintiff's services were rendered under contracts, both written and oral, with the Campbell Electric Corporation, which was the sales agent for the products of the other concerns, and that plaintiff had no contractual relations with the other corporations. The written contract of the plaintiff with the Campbell Electric Corporation provided for payment of commissions to the plaintiff of 33½ per cent. on all goods sold, with certain exceptions. Payments of such commissions were to be made, not only on cash sales, but as to all sales which were made on installments and where notes were accepted in part payment, the agent was to be paid a portion of the cash actually received until two-thirds only of the commission had been paid. The remaining one-third was to be held by the company until the customer had made final payment. The oral contract for the sale of the products of the Vacuum Glass Company was indefinite as to the manner of payment of commissions, but throughout the entire transactions the plaintiff was led to believe that he was dealing with the corporation upon the same terms as those specified in the written contract. All correspondence and orders covering the products manufactured by either the Campbell Electric Company or the Vacuum Glass Company were sent by plaintiff to the Campbell Electric Corporation and the orders were filled without question.

The trial court found that the services had been rendered as alleged in the complaint, and that the commission due and unpaid thereon was $2,294.15. It also found that there was no open and mutual book account existing between plaintiff and any of the defendants as alleged in the cross-complaint of the Campbell Electric Corporation, and that plaintiff was not indebted to any of the defendants as claimed in said cross-complaint.

[2, 3] It is strenuously argued that the complaint is insufficient, and that the demurrers thereto, which were both general and special, should have been sustained. The complaint is in the form of a common count for services rendered under an express promise to pay therefor. This form of pleading has been expressly approved in Pike v. Zadig, 171 Cal. 273, 278, 152 Pac. 923. The three defendants were properly joined in the action as joint debtors. Pike v. Zadig, supra; Montgomery v. Dorn, 25 Cal. App. 666, 670, 145 Pac. 148. The demurrers were properly overruled.

The findings are sufficient to support the judgment against the Campbell Electric Corporation, but in the absence of evidence showing that all three corporations were in fact one concern, the findings are insufficient to support the judgment against the Vacuum Glass Company and the Campbell Electric Company.

The judgment in so far as it denies recovery upon the cross-complaint or counterclaim, and in so far as it relates to the defendant Campbell Electric Corporation, is affirmed; in so far as it relates to the other defendants it is reversed.

The defendants Vacuum Glass Company and Campbell Electric Company shall be entitled to such portion of the costs of this appeal as upon the filing of the remittitur the trial court shall find they have expended.

1. Pleading ⚡121(4)—Denial of allegation of due recordation of assessment for want of information and belief insufficient.

In an action to foreclose street assessment liens, in which plaintiff alleged the proper recordation of the assessment, defendant's denial of proper recordation for want of information and belief held insufficient.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡483(3)—Recordation of assessment in loose-leaf book by superintendent of streets held sufficient.

Superintendent of streets' recordation of assessment by inserting copies of the originals in loose-leaf book and keeping them so inserted subject to public inspection, held sufficient.

3. Evidence ⚡344—Copies of assessments and warrants contained in certified records of superintendent of streets admissible in lien foreclosure action.

In an action to foreclose street assessment liens, copies of the assessments and warrants contained in the certified records of the superintendent of streets held admissible under Street Improvement Act 1911, § 37, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1855 and 1893.

4. Evidence ⚡344—Omission of seal from copy of affidavit of demand and nonpayment held immaterial.

In an action to foreclose street assessment lien, omission from copy of affidavit of demand and nonpayment offered by plaintiff of the copy of the notary's seal held immaterial, where pleadings admitted that a proper return of demand and nonpayment was made by plaintiff.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡515(1)—Omission of seal from copy of affidavit of demand and nonpayment held not to affect right to foreclosure of lien.

In an action to foreclose street assessment lien, omission from certified copy of affidavit of demand and nonpayment offered by plaintiff of the copy of the notary's seal held immaterial; the omission being a mere irregularity which was cured by Street Improvement Act, 1911, § 26.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡572—Defendant's offer pending assessment foreclosure action to pay assessment without costs insufficient to deprive plaintiff of right to recover costs.

Defendant's offer, pending action to foreclose street assessment liens, to pay the assessments in full without the costs that had accrued, did not deprive the plaintiff of the right to prosecute the action and to recover costs under Street Improvement Act 1911, § 27, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, subd. 5.

7. Municipal corporations ⚡474—Assessment lien will not be held void on the ground that property not within the district was benefited by the improvement.

Assessment liens will not be held void on the ground that all property benefited was not embraced within the district; the limits of the district being a matter committed solely to the discretion of the municipal legislative body.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Consolidated actions by G. H. Stokes against Henrietta P. Watkinson, individually and as executrix of the last will of Joseph Henry Thomas Watkinson, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. T. Kearney, of Richmond, and Edward C. Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Faulkner & Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal on the part of the defendant individually and as the executrix of the last will of her deceased husband, Joseph H. T. Watkinson, from a judgment of foreclosure of certain street assessment liens.

The property affected by the action consisted of a large number of lots situate along the northeasterly side of Pullman avenue in the city of Richmond, all of which lots belonged to the appellant's testator in his lifetime. The street improvement in question consisted of certain sewer construction work along the line of Pullman avenue, performed under and pursuant to the provisions of the Street Improvement Act (St. 1911, p. 730), approved April 7, 1911, and having its inception in the month of August, 1914, through the passage of a resolution of intention to make said improvement by the council of the city of Richmond on that date. The work proceeded thereafter under said act until its completion, approval, and acceptance by the street commissioner of said city in the month of March, 1915, whereupon the said superintendent of streets proceeded to make the assessments against the several lots owned by the defendant's testator, who was then still living, and also to make and record and deliver the warrants for each of said assessments to one Fred Meyers, the assignee of the original contractor, and who, as such, was authorized under said improvement act to demand and receive the amount due from the owner of the lots in question according to each of the assessments levied against each of them. The plaintiff alleges that such demand was personally made by said Meyers upon said Joseph H. T. Watkinson in his lifetime, and that he failed and refused to pay the several amounts so demanded. Thereafter said Meyers assigned to the plaintiff herein all of his right, title, and interest in and to the money due upon said warrants and assessments, and thereafter the said plaintiff commenced 43 separate actions to foreclose his assessment lien upon each separate parcel of land upon which such several assessments had been levied. In each of said actions the plaintiff prayed for an attorney's fee of $15, to which he claimed to be entitled under the terms of said improvement act, together with costs in each case. Prior to the inception of these several actions Joseph H. T. Watkinson had died, and his widow, Henrietta P. Watkinson, had succeeded to his interest in said several tracts of land and had been duly appointed executrix of his will. She was therefore made individually and as such executrix the defendant in said several foreclosure suits, and upon her motion, after the institution thereof, the court in which said actions were pending ordered a consolidation of them, whereupon the plaintiff, while objecting to said order, complied with the same by filing a supplemental complaint in which all of said actions were consolidated, and in which, in asking for a foreclosure of said liens, the plaintiff prayed for a reasonable allowance of counsel fees and for his costs. Upon the trial of these actions, as thus consolidated, the court decreed a foreclosure of said liens, and in the matter of counsel fees allowed the plaintiff in each of said original actions an attorney's fee of 60 cents, together with the costs accrued in each action. From the judgment of foreclosure thus decreed the defendant has prosecuted this appeal.

There is also another appeal by plaintiff from that portion of said decree awarding counsel fees and which is dealt with in a separate opinion.

Upon the present appeal the appellant's first contention is that the assessment which forms the basis of each of these several liens was never properly recorded. In making this contention the appellant relied upon the case of Federal Construction Co. v. Curd, 179 Cal. 479, 177 Pac. 473, which case was decided by the Supreme Court some time after the date of the trial and judgment in the instant case. The respondent meets this contention with the showing that in the plaintiff's consolidated complaint it was alleged that the documents constituting those records of the superintendent of streets which were required by the terms of the improvement act in question to be recorded in his office were and each of them was duly recorded therein, that these allegations of matters of public record were denied by the defendant in her answer for want of information and belief, and that such denials were insufficient in point of law to put in issue the due recordation of these documents. The respondent further urges, and the record shows, that no objection was made by the defendant at the trial to the form or substance or physical character of the record book or books showing the recordation of these documents. The respondent further urges that the record does not affirmatively show that the method of recordation of the documents in question which was condemned in the case of Federal Construction Co. v. Curd, supra, was the one adopted by the street superintendent in the proceedings involved in this case. We have carefully examined the record herein with a view to determining the merit of the objections urged by the respondent against the consideration of this point upon appeal.

[1] As to the pleadings of the parties, we find the plaintiff does allege the proper recordation of the documents which the superintendent of streets was required by law to record and to keep a record of. This averment would suffice to put the defendant upon notice and inquiry as to the existence and state of such record, and, this being so, the defendant is not permitted by a well-established rule of pleading to base her denial of the due and proper recordation of such documents upon a want of information and belief. Such denials have been uniformly held insufficient to put in issue the due recordation of documents required by law to be recorded and alleged to have been so recorded. Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484, 35 Pac. 144; Mendocino County v. Peters, 2 Cal. App. 24, 82 Pac. 1122; Rogers Bros. v. Beck, 184 Pac. 515; Brickley, etc., v. Silman, 33 Cal. App. 643, 166 Pac. 371; Wm. Wilson Co. v. Trainor, 27 Cal. App. 43, 148 Pac. 954; Art Metal Construction Co. v. Anderson Co., 182 Cal. 29, 186 Pac. 776.

This being the law, it becomes unnecessary to determine whether or not the objections which the defendant interposed to the introduction of the record book of the superintendent of streets in evidence were sufficient to predicate the attack which the appellant makes upon their sufficiency to comply with the statute upon this appeal; for, if the averments of the complaint with respect to the due recordation of the documents in question were admitted by the defective form of the defendant's denials, it follows that no evidence was required upon that subject, and hence no objections which were urged nor assignments of error which were made to the introduction of such evidence need be considered upon appeal. Mendocino County v. Peters, supra.

[2] But aside from the foregoing considerations, which we think disposes of the appellant's first contention herein, we may say that from our inspection of this record we are by no means satisfied that it affirmatively appears therefrom that the recordation of the documents above referred to was subject to the infirmities existing in the record before the Supreme Court in the case of Federal Construction Co. v. Curd, supra; for, while in both cases a so-called "loose-leaf book" was used by the superintendent of streets for purposes of recordation, the infirmity disclosed in the Curd Case was not in the form or physical features of said book, but consisted rather in the fact that the originals of the documents required to be recorded by the terms of the act had been placed in the book and then at once withdrawn and handed to the contractor for the purpose of making his demand, and that during the period of their absence for that purpose there was no record whatever of these documents in the office of the superintendent of streets. It does not appear that such was the method or practice pursued by the superintendent of streets in the instant case, but, on the contrary, it does appear that the papers inserted and kept in the loose-leaf book of the superintendent of streets in this case were copies of the originals handed to the contractor for the purposes of his demands, and that such copies at all times after their insertion in said book were kept there subject to public inspection. We are of the opinion that the requirements of the statute would be satisfied and fully subserved by such a procedure.

[3] The next contention of the appellant is that the plaintiff's evidence as to the existence and substance of the assessments and warrants upon which he relies to support his alleged liens was insufficient for the reason that the plaintiff rested his proof of the existence and substance of these documents, not upon the production of the original documents, but upon the copies thereof contained in the certified records of the superintendent of streets. We see no merit in this contention nor in the refinement of argument with which appellant seeks to support it. The Street Improvement Act, under which the proceedings involved in this case were had, in section 37 thereof, and in respect to be records to be kept by the superintendent of streets, provides that—

"The records so kept and signed by him, shall have the same force and effect as other public records, and copies therefrom duly certified, may be used in evidence with the same effect as the originals."

Language could not be plainer than this in order to place the records of the superintendent of streets upon the same basis as to evidentiary value as other public records possess by virtue of sections 1855 and 1893 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[4, 5] The appellant's next contention is that the affidavit of demand and nonpayment, a certified copy of which was offered by the plaintiff, was irregular and insufficient to prove the existence and substance of such original demand, for the reason that it appears that there was absent from the copy of this document so introduced in evidence the copy of the seal of the officer who attached his jurat to the original document. The respondent makes several answers to this contention, all of which appear to be good. The first is that the pleadings admit that a proper return of his demand and of the fact of nonpayment was made by the assignee of the contractor. A second, and we think also sufficient, answer is that the absence of a notary's seal from the original or of a copy of the impression of such seal from the recorded copy of such original would constitute a mere irregularity which would be cured by the provisions of section 26 of the Improvement Act, under which these proceedings were taken, and which provides as follows:

"No assessment, warrant, diagram or affidavit of demand and nonpayment, after the issue of the same, and no proceedings prior to the assessment, shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality, or other defect in the same, where the resolution of intention of the council to do the work, has been actually published as herein provided, and said notices of improvement have been posted along the line of the work, as provided in section 5 of this act, before the passage of the resolution ordering the work to be done."

[6] The appellant's next contention is that the trial court erred in its award of costs to the plaintiff in each of the cases which were consolidated into the single proceeding in which the plaintiff was allowed judgment. This objection is predicated upon the fact that many months after the institution of these several actions the defendant made and filed an offer to pay the several assessments in full, without costs. Such an offer, however, would be ineffectual to prevent the plaintiff from the recovery of costs already accrued, and would also be ineffectual under the Code section permitting such offers to allow judgment to be filed for the reason that it did not embrace an offer to pay the costs accrued to the date when it was made. The plaintiff, having the right to commence and prosecute these several actions, if he had a right to his judgment of foreclosure, had also the right under the provisions of section 27 of the Improvement Act, and also under the provisions of section 1022, subd. 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure, to recover his costs.

[7] The final contention of the appellant, to the effect that the proceedings which form the basis of these assessment liens were void because all of the property benefited by the improvement was not embraced within the district assessed for such work, is without merit, since the question as to the limits of assessment districts in the matter of making such improvements is one that is committed solely to the discretion of the municipal body determining upon such improvement under the district plan. Larsen v. City and

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court, In Bank,
Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the district court of appeal of the first appellate district, division one, is denied.

In denying the application we withhold our approval from that portion of the opinion which holds that the denial for want of information and belief of the allegation that the assessment was duly recorded in the office of the superintendent of streets was not a sufficient denial. This portion of the opinion is not essential to the judgment of the district court of appeal in view of the further answer contained in the opinion to the claim of want of proper record.

All concur except SHAW, J., absent.

SCHUYLER v. PANTAGES et al. (Civ. 3860.)

1. Corporations ⇨452—Contract bearing only signature of president and manager held to bind corporation.

A contract on its face purporting to be a contract of a corporation, bearing only the signature of person expressly stated to be president and manager, and in whose name it was doing business, bound the corporation.

2. Contracts ⇨282—Theater company held to have right to terminate engagement.

A clause in an agreement under which plaintiff was to produce vaudeville upon defendant's circuit reciting that, if defendant determined the services to be unsatisfactory to it, defendant might thereupon cancel and terminate the agreement, gave defendant right to terminate the contract at the close of the first regular performance, in absence of bad faith, and a declaration of a local manager that plaintiff's performance was unsatisfactory was sufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Elise Schuyler against Alexander Pantages and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

A. J. Treat and Wm. A. Kelly, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

R. H. Countryman and John T. Pidwell, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for the breach of a written contract alleged to have been entered into between herself and the defendants, by the terms of which the plaintiff was to produce upon the circuit of the defendants for a period of 14 weeks a vaudeville production which she had written and was, with the aid of another, to perform in the various playhouses of the defendants throughout said circuit, and for which she was to receive the sum of $115 per week and her traveling expenses.

The plaintiff's complaint is in five counts; all, however, being based upon the same transaction. In the third of said counts the plaintiff includes in her averments and demands for damages the value of a drop curtain alleged to be the sum of $500, ordered by her for the purposes of her production, and rendered valueless by the defendants' refusal to permit her to perform her said agreement; while in the last of said counts the plaintiff includes a demand for damages in the sum of $25,000 for injuries to her reputation as a writer and producer of plays, and to her physical health, arising out of the defendants' refusal to permit the production in their playhouses of her performance.

The defendants in their answer deny entering into the agreement with the plaintiff which she pleads in substance in her complaint; but they allege that the plaintiff and Alexander Pantages did enter into a written agreement for the production of her play, a copy of which agreement they attach to their answer. They also deny the breach of said agreement, and that the plaintiff sustained any damages from any such breach. For a counterclaim they allege that the defendant Alexander Pantages loaned plaintiff the sum of $200, for which he seeks the recovery.

The findings of the trial court were generally in favor of the plaintiff, the court fixing the plaintiff's damages at the sum of $2,860, without differentiating how such sum was to be apportioned among the plaintiff's several demands for damages, except as the court allowed interest upon the sum of $1,410, as indicating that to be the portion allowed as damages for the direct breach of a written contract. The defendants appeal from the judgment rendered and entered upon these findings.

The appellants' first contention is that in so far as said judgment is against the defendant Pantages Circuit of Vaudeville Theaters, Inc. (a corporation), it is not sustainable, since the contract upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery does not purport to have been signed by said corporation, but only by the defendant Alexander Pantages in person.

[1] This contention we hold to be without merit. The contract on its face purports to be the contract of the corporation of which Alexander Pantages is expressly stated to be the president and manager. It refers throughout to the circuit of theaters conducted by said corporation and to the production of the plaintiff's performance therein.

In addition to this, the complaint alleges, and the answer admits, that the defendant Alexander Pantages did business under the name and style of Pantages Circuit of Vaudeville Theaters. Such being the condition of the contract and the pleadings, we deem the signature of the contract by Alexander Pantages sufficient to bind the corporation of which he was the president and manager, and in the name of which he was engaged in the business with direct relation to which this contract was entered into.

[2] The next contention of the appellants, however, is more serious, and is to our minds determinative of this appeal.

The contract in question contains, among its several provisions, the following clause:

"VI. If before or during this engagement the first party determines that the second party has reduced or changed the personnel or number of performers, or changed or lowered the quality of act contemplated herein, or if it determines the services herein contemplated to be unsatisfactory to it, the first party may thereupon cancel and terminate this agreement."

It is the appellants' contention that under the foregoing clause of said contract the party of the first part thereto reserved the absolute right, in the absence of bad faith, to cancel and terminate the agreement at any time during the plaintiff's engagement "if it determines the services herein contemplated to be unsatisfactory to it," and that, having exercised this right at the beginning of the plaintiff's engagement, or, in other words, at the close of her first regular performance, and no bad faith in so doing being shown, there is an end to the plaintiff's case.

We are constrained to hold that this contention must be sustained. In the case of Tiffany v. Pacific Sewer Pipe Co., 180 Cal. 700, 182 Pac. 428, 6 A. L. R. 1493, the Supreme Court (Mr Justice Shaw writing the opinion) discusses quite lucidly the two classes of contracts in which one party is required to do something which expressly is to be the satisfaction of the other party, namely:

"(1) Where fancy, taste, sensibility, or judgment are involved; and (2) where the question is merely one of operative fitness or mechanical utility."

In relation to the first of these two classes of agreements the opinion adopts the rule laid down in 13 Corpus Juris, p. 675, as follows:

"In contracts involving matters of fancy, taste, or judgment, when one party agrees to perform to the satisfaction of the other, he renders the other party the sole judge of his satisfaction without regard to the justice or reasonableness of his decision; and a court or jury cannot say that such party should be satisfied where he asserts that he is not."

We are of the opinion that the agreement in the instant case comes clearly within the first class of agreements above referred to, and hence within the rule last above quoted. The cases cited in Corpus Juris as illustrating the rule deal with such agreements as those for the painting of a portrait (Gibson v. Cranage, 39 Mich. 49, 33 Am. Rep. 351); the writing of articles for a newspaper (Crawford v. Mail, etc., Co., 163 N. Y. 405, 57 N. E. 616); the preparation of a literary or scientific article for an encyclopedia (Walker v. E. D. W. Thompson Co., 37 App. Div. 536, 56 N. Y. Supp. 326); a play to be written by an author for an actor (Haven v. Russell [Sup.] 34 N. Y. Supp. 292); a design for a banknote (Gray v. Alabama Nat. Bank [City Ct.] 10 N. Y. Supp. 5); and the like. Being an agreement of the class illustrated in the foregoing citations, it follows that the act of the local manager of the corporation defendant in declaring the plaintiff's attempted performance of the same unsatisfactory, and in refusing to permit the further performance thereof, and the further act of Alexander Pantages himself in ratifying the local manager's said action, were within the rights of the defendants under said agreement, and hence were acts upon which the plaintiff had no right to any or all of her several alleged causes of action.

In so deciding we take note of the respondent's contentions that the terms of the contract required the exercise of the personal judgment of Alexander Pantages as to whether her performance was satisfactory; that this personal judgment on his part had not been exercised, since he was not personally present when the performance which was objected to was given; that this function of determining whether or not the plaintiff's performance was satisfactory could not be delegated to the person who essayed to exercise it, and hence that Pantages' attempted ratification of the local manager's action could avail the defendants nothing. We do not find that the contract is susceptible of the construction which the respondent seeks to give to it in this respect. The clause above quoted does not require that the plaintiff's performance shall be satisfactory to Alexander Pantages personally, but to the corporation itself, which must, of course, act through its officers and agents. There are other provisions of the contract which would seem to invest the local managers of the numerous theaters of the corporation upon its somewhat widespread vaudeville circuit with full discretion as to the performances to be given thereat, while the evidence in the case discloses without contradiction that the local managers of vaudeville theaters are invested with the power of determining whether or not a certain performance is being satisfactorily given.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the plaintiff's engagement under her said agreement was terminated by the declaration of the defendants' local manager that her performance was unsatisfactory and that it could not go on. The good faith of the defendants' local manager in so determining, while impugned by the respondent in her brief, is not seriously assailed either in her pleadings or the proofs in the case, nor is it questioned in the findings of the trial court. On the contrary, the evidence preponderates in negating such a conclusion.

It follows from the foregoing that, since the defendants were within their rights in declaring the plaintiff's performance unsatisfactory and in refusing to permit its further production, her whole case falls, and her several claims for damages, having thus no foundation, are insufficient to sustain any portion of the findings and judgment of the trial court in her favor.

This conclusion renders unnecessary a discussion of the further questions presented in the case. It follows that the judgment must be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

METZLER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR HUMBOLDT COUNTY et al.

Ex parte METZLER et al.

(Civ. 2351; Cr. 573.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 23, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 20, 1921.)

1. Certiorari ☞29—Habeas corpus ☞30(1)
—If court had jurisdiction, writ must be discharged despite errors of law.

If a court, whose action or judgment is attacked by application for habeas corpus or writ of certiorari, had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter, the writ must be discharged, though the court committed some errors of law.

2. Certiorari ☞50—Entire record of proceedings must be certified to appellate court.

On application for writ of certiorari, the entire record of the proceedings, eventuating in the judgment against petitioners, must be certified to the appellate court.

3. Contempt ☞54(1)—Affidavit charging contempt out of presence of court is necessary.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209, 1211, the court's jurisdiction to punish for contempt, committed out of its immediate presence, cannot be put in motion, in the absence of the filing of an affidavit charging facts constituting such contempt.

4. Contempt ☞54(1)—Court informed by attorneys of contempt by them out of its presence exceeded jurisdiction in adjudging them guilty thereof.

Though attorneys for a minor in a proceeding to adjudge her a ward of the juvenile court admitted before the court that they caused witnesses to be subpoenaed after it had been stipulated by them that the court might make an order adjudging such minor a ward, and the witnesses appeared while the proceeding was being heard, the court, who did not know of such fact until informed by the attorneys, exceeded its jurisdiction in adjudging them guilty of contempt, in the absence of an affidavit charging the facts, as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209, 1211, in case of contempts committed out of presence of the court.

Application by S. E. Metzler and Ernest S. Mitchell for certiorari and habeas corpus to review a judgment of contempt of the Superior Court of California in and for the County of Humboldt, Denver Sevier, Judge. Judgment annulled, and writ of habeas corpus discharged.

V. A. McGeorge, of Sacramento, and Metzler & Mitchell, of Eureka, for petitioners.

Arthur W. Hill, Dist. Atty., and J. J. Cairns, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Eureka, for respondents.

HART, J. The petitioners were, on June 2, 1921, by the superior court of Humboldt county adjudged guilty of contempt of court and each sentenced to pay a fine of $100, with the alternative of imprisonment in the county jail of said county, "until such fine be paid, at the rate of one day's imprisonment for every two dollars of said fine." They refused to pay the fines so imposed and were committed to the county jail, where they remained until the 4th day of June, 1921, at which time, upon the issuance by this court, upon their petition, of a writ of habeas corpus looking to their release from what they alleged to be the illegal restraint of their persons, they were set at liberty, having given the bail to which they were ordered to be admitted by this court upon the issuance of said writ.

[1] Subsequently to the issuance of said writ of habeas corpus, and prior to the hearing thereof, the petitioners filed in this court a petition praying for a writ of certiorari for the review of the proceedings culminating in the judgment of contempt against petitioners. Both proceedings pending before us, therefore, involve precisely the same judgment of contempt, and the office of each of the writs applied for here by the petitioners is to determine precisely the same ultimate question, to wit: Whether the action of the court in adjudging petitioners guilty of contempt of court and punishing them therefor, upon the record upon which each of the applications is supported, remained within its jurisdiction. Abstractly speaking, it is well understood that the sole question which may be determined, either upon habeas corpus or upon a writ of review, is that of jurisdiction, and if it be found in either case that the court whose action or judgment is thus attacked had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter, the writ must be discharged although it may appear upon the record that the court, in passing upon and deciding the matter, had committed some errors of law.

[2] In the proceeding before us upon the application for the writ of certiorari, as the very name of that writ implies shall be done, and in consonance to the remedial function peculiar thereto, the entire record of the proceeding bearing upon and eventuating in the judgment of contempt against each of the petitioners has been certified to this court, and although, in view of the conclusion at which we have arrived, the ultimate question of law submitted here could be determined upon the record supporting either application, we prefer to confine ourselves, in determining whether the judgment of contempt against the petitioners was beyond the jurisdiction of the court to a consideration of the petition for the writ of certiorari, for the reason that, as we feel constrained to hold that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in the matter, a petition for a hearing in the Supreme Court after the decision on certiorari here will lie, while a discharge on habeas corpus would wholly terminate the matter, so far as is concerned the particular proceeding to which both petitions here are addressed.

The record certified to this court in response to the writ of review issued by this court herein discloses that the proceeding out of which grew the judgment of contempt against both petitioners involved a matter pending and being heard by the respondent court, sitting in separate session in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a juvenile court. It is thus made to appear that, on the 10th day of May, 1921, the probation officer of the county of Humboldt filed in the superior court of said county, as in the exercise of its juvenile jurisdiction, a petition, alleging that a certain unmarried Indian female "comes within the provisions of subdivision 2, 4, and 11, of the Juvenile Court Law of the state of California, in this: That said — has no parent or guardian willing to exercise or capable of exercising proper parental control, and has no parent or guardian actually exercising such proper parental control, and that said — is in need of such control," and further alleged that said minor "has within three months last past given birth to an illegitimate child, which has since died; that the father and mother of said minor are living separate and apart, that said minor has been living with her father, who is, by reason of his acts of cruelty and depravity, an unfit person to have the care, custody and control of said minor; that the home of the mother of said minor is not a fit and proper place for said minor to reside or to live in." It appears, at least inferentially, from the record, that the father of the said minor was accused of being responsible for the motherhood of the minor, although it does not so appear that the father was at the time of the proceeding before the superior court or under arrest.

Upon the filing of the petition above referred to a citation, directed to the father of said minor, was issued by the court, ordering his appearance with said minor before said court on the 16th day of May, 1921, and to show cause why said minor should not be adjudged a ward of the juvenile court. On the day named the matter came up for hearing, the minor being represented by the petitioners, who were law partners, and, after certain testimony had been received in support of the allegations of the petition, the minor was called to the stand, and before any attempt was made to question her the judge observed:

"Now it might be possible that this recital [doubtless referring to a statement by the minor] may be spared. Isn't it possible," the judge proceeded to inquire, "that this girl can be placed in some home?"

To this question the petitioner, Metzler, replied:

"That is all we ask, that this girl be placed in a home, a good home."

After the court had asked whether the father would bear the expense of the support of the minor and an affirmative reply to said question by Mr. Metzler, the court declared:

"Then it is a matter of selecting a party under whom we will place her, some good woman and some good family."

The court thereupon inquired:

"Is it satisfactory to both sides that Miss Beasley [executive secretary of the Welfare Department of the county of Humboldt] find parties that will be satisfactory to the court?"

To which petitioner, Metzler, answered:

"We will be satisfied with the family that Miss Beasley selects. We feel that Mr. — [naming the father of the girl] should be permitted to visit his daughter at the Detention Home [the minor being in the custody of said home pending the final disposition of the proceeding], or that she be released. I feel that he should be given that right as a father."

To this suggestion the district attorney declared that he would object, unless the parties in charge of said home were present when the father visited and conversed with the minor.

The further hearing of the proceeding was then postponed until the 19th day of May, 1921, at which time, in objecting to the application of the district attorney for a further continuance of the matter until the following day, petitioner, Metzler, insisted that the minor, since she had not down to that time been adjudged a ward of the court, should be taken from the detention home and returned to the custody of her father, who, he declared was compelled to support the minor, "no matter whether she was born in or out of wedlock." The petitioner proceeded to say that he desired to interview the little girl in order to get at the facts relative to the charge that her father had been guilty of the acts towards her of which he had been accused, intimating that he could not secure a truthful statement from the child as to the charge against her father while she was in the presence of the managers of the detention home. This proposition was objected to by the district attorney. Metzler thereupon stated to the court that he desired to withdraw from the stipulation previously entered into respecting the disposition that should be made of the minor by the court, and the court in reply to that proposition stated that counsel could not withdraw from the stipulation without the consent of the court, nor could he do so without making a motion based upon a showing which would justify the court in permitting him to withdraw from the stipulation. The court also declared that he did not think that counsel (the petitioners) were acting in good faith in making their application to interview the little girl without the presence of her then custodians or in making their application to withdraw from the stipulation by which they agreed that the court could place the minor in the care and control of some good family pending her minority.

The matter then was continued until the following day, the 20th of May, 1921, and on said day Miss Beasley reported that she had up to that time been unable to secure a home or a proper person to whom the care and custody of the minor might be committed, and asked for further time within which to find such a home and person. Thereupon the district attorney moved for a further continuance of the matter "until Miss Beasley's report is prepared and then the court inform the attorneys." At this juncture the petitioner, Mitchell, addressed the court as follows: "The other day a stipulation was entered into for the purpose of avoiding going into the sordid details of a minor of that age. It becomes necessary to go into it, and we informed the court after the stipulation was entered into that we withdrew our stipulation. We have sub-pœnaed our witnesses to-day." He proceeded to say that the witnesses were present in court at that time, "and if it is continued we would like to have it continued to a day certain in order to have our witnesses here. if necessary." To this the court replied:

"You entered into a stipulation in this court, and it went down in the record; there is just one way for you to get relief from that stipulation, you know that as well as I do, that you will have to make a motion and do it upon affidavits and serve it properly. You or no other attorney has a right to say this stipulation is off, and you are not bound by it. You know that as well as I do, and as to subpoenaing witnesses here at this time, I told your partner yesterday that he could not do that. When did you get the subpoenas out of this court?"

"Mr. Mitchell: The day we were in court.

"Court: Yesterday?"

"Mr. Mitchell: No, prior to that time.

"Court: What day?"

"Mr. Mitchell: It was delivered to the sheriff day before yesterday I believe.

"Court: Now you have no right to issue any subpoena when there is no hearing at this time. There was no hearing at this time.

"Court: What for? Who gave that subpoena to the sheriff, you or Mr. Metzler?"

"Mr. Mitchell: I am not certain, I think Mr. Metzler gave it, but I am not certain.

"Court: Did you tell him to do it?"

"Mr. Mitchell: Yes, your honor.

"Court: And you knew there was no hearing here at that time. We will take this matter up next Thursday. Under section 1209 of the Code of Civil Procedure, disobediences are contempt of court, and various items are set forth. The fourth is 'abuse of the process or proceedings of the court.' Now the county is not going to pay the witnesses. You had no right to subpoena these witnesses here at this time, and you and your partner are cited to appear in court next Thursday to show cause why you should not be punished for contempt of court, and you shall pay those witnesses out of your own pocket—summoning people here to come at their own expence. (To Mr. Cairns, Asst. District Attorney:) I want you to look up this proposition, I don't know whether it is contempt of court or not, but it seems to me to verge very strongly on it.

"Mr. Cairns: Do you desire me to give any further notice?"

"Court: You may serve the regular notice on the firm because Mr. Metzler is not here. The motion of the attorneys Metzler & Mitchell for an order of this court to have control of this girl is denied.

"Mr. Mitchell: Is the hearing continued until next Thursday?"

"Court: No, sir. This contempt proceeding is a different proposition. The other will be when Miss Beasley has found a suitable home, when she reports she has found a home, suitable for this girl."

Immediately following the above proceedings a citation entitled, "In the Matter of S. E. Metzler and Ernest S. Mitchell, in Contempt," was issued and signed by the judge of said court, and the same served upon the petitioners, reciting the history of the proceedings relating to the matter of the petition to have the said minor adjudged a ward of the court, and referring to the statement of petitioners that they desired to withdraw from the stipulation mentioned and had subpoenaed witnesses to appear in court for the purpose of contesting the petition to have the minor declared a ward of the juvenile court, and requiring the petitioners to appear in said court at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of the 26th day of May, 1921, "then and there to show cause, if any you have, why you, and each of you, should not be adjudged to be guilty of contempt of this court for misbehavior in office and a willful violation of duty as officers and attorneys of this court, and for an abuse of the process of this court, as hereinabove set forth, and why you, and each of you, should not be punished therefor as provided by law."

The citation above referred to was unverified, and was the only document or paper supporting the proceeding in contempt, there having been no affidavit or affidavits filed charging the petitioners with contempt of court or the abuse of the process thereof. On the 26th day of May the contempt matter was called, and the petitioners demurred to the citation upon numerous grounds, among which were the following:

(1) That the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the proceeding or of the persons of the petitioners, for the reason that no affidavits or complaint have or has been filed "in this cause charging respondents with the commission of the matters and things set forth in the said order to show cause; * * * (2) that the court has no jurisdiction to punish respondents for contempt for the reason that none of their acts, or acts set out or mentioned in said order to show cause, constitute a contempt of court."

Petitioners also filed a motion to quash the proceeding on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to issue the said order to show cause, for the reason that "no affidavit, complaint, or other paper has ever been filed in said cause upon which to predicate said order to show cause," and "the acts, facts and things stated in said order to show cause do not constitute contempt of court."

From the demurrer and the motion to quash the proceeding, it is to be seen that the points upon which the petitioners claim the right to the nullification of the judgment of contempt pronounced against them are that the court was without jurisdiction to pronounce said judgment, and that the facts upon which the proceeding was founded do not constitute or show contempt of court or a contumacious or any abuse of the process thereof.

The power or jurisdiction to impose punishments as for contempt of court not only inheres in the courts, but, in this state, is expressly conferred upon them by the law. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209, 1211. The latter section reads:

"When a contempt is committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, or judge at chambers, it may be punished summarily; for which an order must be made, reciting the facts as occurring in such immediate view and presence, adjudging that the person proceeded against is thereby guilty of a contempt, and that he be punished as therein prescribed. When the contempt is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, or judge at chambers, an affidavit shall be presented to the court, or judge, of the facts constituting the contempt, or a statement of the facts by the referees or arbitrators, or other judicial officer."

It will be noted, on an examination of the foregoing section, that, while a contempt committed in the immediate view or presence of the court may be summarily punished—that is to say, that, in such case, no formal charge or proceeding is requisite to start in motion the court's jurisdiction or power to act in the premises—where the alleged contempt is constructive or committed out of the view or immediate presence of the court, the court's jurisdiction to punish for a contempt so committed cannot operate or be put in motion in the absence of the filing of a formal charge, duly verified, or, in other words, in the absence of the filing of an affidavit reciting the facts constituting the alleged contempt. Indeed, in a case of contempt not committed in the immediate view or presence of the court, the affidavit upon which the proceeding in contempt must be founded constitutes a complaint, and unless it, upon its face, charges facts constituting a contempt, the court is without jurisdiction to proceed. Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 415; Hutton v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 159, 81 Pac. 409; Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 284, 63 Pac. 372; Rogers v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 91, 78 Pac. 344; Frowley v. Superior Court, 158 Cal. 220, 226, 110 Pac. 817; Mitchell v. Superior Court, 163 Cal. 423, 125 Pac. 1061; In re Selowsky, 38 Cal. App. 569, 577, 177 Pac. 301.

[4] We are not prepared to say that the facts upon which the court acted in adjudging the petitioners guilty of contempt are not sufficient to constitute that offense, nor is there any necessity for expressing herein an opinion upon that proposition, since we are of the opinion that the alleged contempt was one that was not committed in the immediate view or presence of the court, and that therefore the court did not acquire jurisdiction to punish the petitioners as for contempt. It will be observed that the sole ground upon which the adjudication of contempt is founded was in the act or acts of the petitioners in subpoenaing witnesses to be present in court in the proceeding initiated for the purpose of adjudging the minor referred to a ward of the juvenile court under certain provisions of the juvenile court law, after it had been stipulated by the petitioners, as counsel for said minor, that the court might make an order adjudging said minor a ward of said court. The mere fact that the witnesses for whom the subpoenas in question were issued responded to the process and appeared in court while the proceeding against the minor was being heard does not and could not itself constitute an act of contempt. Their presence in court was merely the effect of the alleged act of contempt on the part of petitioners.

There can be no possible doubt that the acts of the petitioners constituting the alleged contempt were committed outside the view and immediate presence of the court. A subpoena issued for the purpose of compelling the attendance of a witness in any proceeding in the superior court is issued by the clerks thereof, under the seal of the court, the act of issuing it is in its nature purely ministerial and with the physical act of issuing the subpoena neither the court nor the judge thereof has anything to do. It maybe, and generally is, issued without the judge or the court having any knowledge thereof until the witnesses appear in the proceeding in which their testimony is required, and then the court may only assume that such witnesses have been regularly subpoenaed. In this case, it is clear that the judge of the court had no knowledge whatever of the act of the petitioners in causing the witnesses to be subpoenaed until he was informed thereof by the petitioner Mitchell himself, during the course of the proceeding involving the question of the disposition to be made of said minor. Thus it is plainly manifest that, as stated, the act of the petitioners in causing the subpoenas to be issued was committed outside of the immediate view and presence of the court. It has, however, been suggested that the admission of the petitioners before the court that they caused the subpoenas to be issued was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the petitioners and the subject-matter of the alleged contempt. We do not assent to that proposition. As we have shown above, and as all the cases clearly and positively declare, to give the court jurisdiction to punish for contempt where the alleged contempt has been committed outside of its immediate view and presence, there must be an affidavit or affidavits or something in the nature of a complaint charging facts clearly disclosing that the contempt claimed has been committed. The situation is no different from that in which a person might appear before a court and openly confess in its presence that he had committed a crime. No one would for a moment undertake to maintain that in such case there being no complaint or indictment or other accusatory pleading on file charging the person with the crime of which he thus admitted he was guilty, the court in whose presence such admission was made would have jurisdiction to punish the party for the offense. Indeed, if the court should undertake to impose a penalty upon a person admitting his guilt in its presence in the absence of any formal complaint or indictment charging him with the offense, the act of the court would be wholly nugatory or coram non judio.

In accordance with the foregoing views the judgment of contempt rendered and entered by the respondent court against each of the petitioners, S. E. Metzler and Ernest S. Mitchell, is hereby annulled, set aside, and vacated, and the petition for the writ of habeas corpus dismissed, and said writ discharged.

MACCHI v. LA ROCCA (LA ROCCA, Intervener). (Civ. 3957.)

1. Marriage 54—Woman's interest in property acquired during illegal marriage vests irrespective of amount contributed.

Since a legal wife's interest in community property vests without contribution of any part of the actual purchase price, it is immaterial how much money for the purchase of property acquired by a man and woman while cohabiting under an illegal marriage was actually contributed by the woman; the same rule, though strictly speaking there can be no community property, being applicable by analogy as would obtain under a valid marriage.

2. Trusts 81(4)—Minor son acquires no interest in property purchased with his earnings by father.

Since the earnings of a minor automatically become the earnings of his father (Civ. Code, § 197) who may use them as he sees fit, a minor son acquired no interest in property purchased in part with earnings contributed by him for the payment of household expenses, and no trust resulted in his favor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edward P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Maria Macchi against Augustino La Rocca, in which Francisco La Rocca intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant and intervener appeal. Affirmed.

Jos. L. Taaffe, of San Francisco, for defendant appellant.

Leon Samuels, of San Francisco, for intervenor appellant.

J. H. Morris, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff commenced this action for an equal division of certain property acquired by defendant and herself during the period of an illegal marriage. Defendant answered, admitting the illegality of the marriage, the cohabitation of the parties during the period alleged, and the acquisition of the property, but denied that plaintiff contributed one-half of the purchase price thereof, and alleged that plaintiff contributed but one-third of said purchase price, and that the remaining two-thirds was contributed by defendant from his own earnings and from a portion of the earnings of his minor son which had been delivered to defendant during the period of cohabitation. The defendant then prayed judgment awarding plaintiff an undivided one-third interest in the property in suit and for a determination of the respective rights of himself and son in the remainder. This son filed a complaint in intervention, setting up practically the same set of facts, and prayed for an undivided one-third interest in the property. Upon plaintiff's motion for judgment upon the pleadings, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, awarding her an undivided one-half interest in the property against both defendant and the intervenor. From this judgment the defendant and intervenor appeal on the same record.

The facts admitted in the pleadings are that in November, 1906, plaintiff and defendant procured a marriage license from the county clerk in the county of Santa Clara and thereafter, without solemnization of any kind, lived together as husband and wife until about the 8th day of July, 1920, when plaintiff for the first time discovered that their cohabitation had been illegal. During this period the parties acquired a piece of property in San Francisco, which they occupied as their home, and it is this property, together with the household furniture and personal property located therein, which is the subject-matter of this litigation. During the period of cohabitation both plaintiff and defendant worked in various canneries and other establishments and contributed their earnings to the household expenses and the acquisition of this property. Plaintiff had a minor daughter by a former marriage, while the defendant had two minor sons by a former marriage, these children living for the greater part of the period with their parents. They also worked from time to time and contributed their earnings to their parents to help meet the household expenses. It is alleged in the complaint that during this period the plaintiff earned and turned over to defendant the sum of $8,500, and that her minor daughter during the last four years of the same period earned the sum of $1,750, which was also turned over to the defendant, and that a portion of said sum so contributed to the defendant was used in the purchase of this property. On the other hand, the defendant denied that he had received these sums, but alleged that the earnings of plaintiff which were turned over to him did not exceed the sum of $2,500, and that the earnings of plaintiff's minor daughter were received by her mother and at no time turned over to defendant. It is also alleged in the answer and in the complaint in intervention that plaintiff's minor son during this period earned approximately $5,600, and the greater portion thereof was used by defendant in the purchase of this property. The value of the property in suit is admitted to be $8,500 with an outstanding indebtedness of $1,350.

The only issue raised by the answer is as to the amount of actual cash contributed by plaintiff and used by defendant in the purchase of the property. The only issue raised by the complaint in intervention is one of law purely, and that is the right of a father to use the earnings of his minor son without accounting therefor to the son.

[1] The issue of fact raised by the answer is wholly immaterial to the determination of the case. Where a man and woman have acquired property while cohabiting as husband and wife under an illegal marriage, though, strictly speaking, there can be no community property, the same rule will be applied by analogy as would obtain under a valid marriage. Under such rule it is immaterial how much money the wife has actually contributed to the purchase of the property involved, because, if a legal wife, her interest in the community property would vest by reason of her services as a wife and without contribution of any part of the actual purchase price of the property. Upon this point the case is controlled by Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 675, 118 Pac. 441, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844, and Schneider v. Schneider, 191 Pac. 533, 11 A. L. R. 1386.

[2] As to the rights of the intervenor, his earnings while a minor automatically became the earnings of his father. Section 197, Civ. Code. The father, being entitled to the earnings of his son, might use them as he saw fit, and whether they were used to meet the household expenses or in the purchase of property was no concern of the son. In the absence of an express agreement (and none is pleaded), the minor son acquired no interest in the property purchased in part with his earnings, and no trust resulted in his favor.

Neither the answer nor the complaint in intervention raised a material issue of fact which would have required a trial, and judgment on the pleadings was therefore properly entered.

Judgment affirmed.

DI FIORE et al. v. BOHNETT. (Civ. 3911.)

Sales  411—Complaint held not good as one on contract.

A complaint alleging that defendant sold plaintiff an entire fruit crop, and plaintiff advanced a portion of the price, but that defendant failed and refused to deliver any more than a portion whereby plaintiff was damaged in a certain sum sued for, was in assumpsit for money had and received, and not upon the contract, since to sue for breach plaintiff should have alleged performance, offer to perform, or readiness and willingness to perform.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by S. Di Fiore and D. Di Fiore, a partnership doing business under the firm name of D. Di Fiore Canning Company, against F. O. Bohnett. From a judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

S. G. Tompkins, of San Jose, for appellants.

Bohnett & Hill, of San Jose, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued defendant for $417.95, the amended complaint alleging that on the 14th day of June, 1917, the defendant and S. Di Fiore, doing business under the name of D. Di Fiore Canning Company, entered into an agreement whereby the defendant sold and the canning company purchased the defendant's crop of fresh apricots grown during the season of 1917 at the price of $75 per ton, the estimated quantity being 40 tons. The complaint also alleges that at the time of the execution of the contract S. Di Fiore paid and advanced to defendant on account of the purchase price of said fruit the sum of $500, that but 2,188 pounds of said fruit was delivered, of the value of $82.05, and that defendant has failed, neglected, and refused to deliver any more. It is then alleged that, by reason of defendant's failure to deliver the balance of the apricots, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $417.95, the amount sued for. A demurrer was interposed, specifying as grounds thereof that the complaint did not state a cause of action, that the plaintiffs did not have legal capacity to sue, in that they had failed to comply with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code, and that the cause of action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1, § 339, of the Code of Civil Procedure. This demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and from the judgment following the plaintiff appeals.

It does not appear when the original complaint was filed, but appellant concedes that, if the action was in assumpsit, and not an action on the contract, it is barred by the statute of limitations. The "action upon the contract" to which appellant refers would be an action for damages for its breach. That the complaint does not contain the essential averments for such an action is apparent. It being evident that the contract called for the purchase of the entire crop grown by respondent during the 1917 season, appellant would not be permitted to take such portion of the crop as he chose and refuse to take the balance. In order to sue for breach of the contract, it was therefore necessary for appellant to allege his performance, offer to perform, or readiness and willingness to perform. Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 486, 488; L. A. Gas. & Elec. Co. v. Amalgamated Oil Co., 156 Cal. 776, 778, 106 Pac. 55.

Here the complaint does not contain any of such averments, but it is apparent from the face of the complaint that the contract was abandoned, and that appellant did not seek its performance. His cause of action, then, was one in implied assumpsit for money had and received, and as such was concededly barred by the statute of limitations.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ENGLISH. (Cr. 560.)

Elections  329—Evidence that person personated in fraudulent voting was entitled to vote sufficient.

Evidence on prosecution under Pen. Code, § 46, for fraudulent voting, held, in view of Pol. Code, § 52, as to residence, and section 1239 as amended by St. 1917, p. 416, as to determining place of residence for voting purposes, sufficient to warrant finding that the person personated by defendant was legally entitled to vote at the time and place.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

John English was convicted of fraudulent voting, and appeals. Affirmed.

S. Luke Howe and Sheridan Downey, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, himself a duly qualified elector and entitled to vote in precinct No. 83 of Sacramento county, was indicted by the grand jury of said county for the crime of voting at the general primary election held throughout the state on the 31st day of August, 1920, in said precinct No. 83 of said county, upon the false and fraudulent representation that he was one John Henry Miller, who, the indictment alleges, was "a duly qualified elector of the county of Sacramento" at the time of said election, "and then and there duly and legally qualified and entitled to vote as such elector at said election at August primary" in said precinct No. 83 of said county.

A trial of the accused resulted in his conviction by the jury of the offense so charged, and he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The indictment was based on section 46 of the Penal Code, which is as follows:

"Every person not entitled to vote, who fraudulently attempts to vote, or who, being entitled to vote, attempts to vote more than once at any election, or who personates, or attempts to personate, a person legally entitled to vote, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than two years."

It will be noted that by the foregoing section, three different offenses against the election franchise are described or defined, the indictment being founded upon the last part of the section, whereby it is made a crime for one, himself being entitled to vote at an election, who personates, or attempts to personate, a person legally entitled to vote. Under the indictment upon which the defendant was tried and convicted, it was, to justify a conviction, essential for the people to establish by the requisite degree of proof these facts or elements: (1) That the defendant himself was under the law entitled to vote at the primary election referred to in the indictment; (2) that the said John H. Miller was likewise entitled to vote at said election; (3) that the defendant voted at said primary election under the name of John Henry Miller, and upon the false representation that he was said person.

No question is raised here of the sufficiency of the proof to support the finding of the jury, as implied from the verdict, that the defendant himself was legally entitled to vote, and that he represented himself to be and did vote at said primary election as "John Henry Miller." Nor is it questioned that a person named John Henry Miller was registered as a voter in precinct No. 83 of Sacramento county, and that he did not himself vote at the primary election in question. It is contended, however, that the evidence is wholly insufficient to show that said John Henry Miller was legally entitled to vote in said precinct at the time of the holding of the primary election in said county of Sacramento on the 31st day of August, 1920, and this point constitutes the sole ground of complaint against the legal integrity of the verdict.

The rules of law in this state by which the question of residence is to be determined are set forth in sections 52 and 1239 of the Political Code. The section first named, among other things, declares:

"Every person has, in law, a residence. In determining the place of residence the following rules are to be observed:

"1. It is the place where one remains when not called elsewhere for labor or other special or temporary purpose, and to which he returns in seasons of repose;

"2. There can only be one residence;

"3. A residence cannot be lost until another is gained. * * *

Section 1239 of the same Code, which is under the title and chapter of said Code relating to "voting and challenges" at elections, provides, in part as follows:

"The board of election, in determining the place of residence of any person, must be governed by the following rules, as far as they are applicable:

"1. That place must be considered and held to be the residence of a person in which his habitation is fixed, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning; * * *

"3. A person must not be considered to have lost his residence who leaves his home to go into another state, or precinct in this state, for temporary purposes merely, with the intention of returning;

"4. A person must not be considered to have gained a residence in any precinct into which he comes for temporary purposes merely, without the intention of making such precinct his home. * * *

"10. The mere intention to acquire a new residence, without the fact of removal, avails nothing, neither does the fact of removal, without the intention."

See Stats. 1917, pp. 416, 417.

The question here is whether the record discloses evidence which, when tested by the rules above stated herein, is such as to preclude us from justly declaring that the fact that said Miller was a resident and entitled to vote in said precinct No. 83, at the time of the primary election mentioned, was sufficiently established, the existence of the other elements of the crime charged being, as seen, conceded.

It was shown that the John Henry Miller named in the indictment was a laboring man, and had lived at a hotel owned and conducted by a Mrs. Mary McIsaac, at 1401 Front street, in Sacramento city, for about 17 years down to the 15th day of June, 1921. Said Miller was a registered voter from said hotel, and had at a number of elections voted in the election precinct in which the hotel was situated. Miller would often, during the years he resided at said hotel, leave Sacramento to work for others, but upon finishing the work for the performance of which he had been employed, would return to Sacramento and to the said hotel, where he resided, and would remain until any work he might obtain would again require him to leave the city. For several months he was employed by Mrs. McIsaac about the hotel. He was thus employed down to the 15th day of June, 1920. Mrs. McIsaac, testifying for the people, stated that Miller was at times "nervous and unstrung," and when in that state would quit working for her. She said that, on the 15th day of June, 1920, Miller ceased working for her, and she paid him in full what she owed him; that Miller, having been at some time previously operated upon to correct some physical ailment, stated to her on the day just named that it was necessary for him to submit to another such operation, and that he was going to a hospital in Sacramento that day for that purpose; that she then said to Miller that she was tired of his presence at the hotel, that as both were of a nervous disposition and could not get along together, it was her desire that he would not return to her place, or words to that effect, and that Miller, replying to that suggestion, said that he intended, after he was operated upon and discharged from the hospital, to go to Oakland, where he would remain with his brother, who resided in that city, until his health was restored. Continuing, Mrs. McIsaac stated that she assisted in getting Miller to the hospital, but that he remained at the institution only a few hours, leaving for the purpose of taking work "up the river"; that she would say, so far as she was able to recollect, that Miller never stopped at or slept in her house after June 15, 1920, although she did say that, after that date, he left with her for safe-keeping some money he had earned in his more recent employment. On redirect examination the witness testified:

"Q. Isn't it a fact that the man, John Henry Miller, was in the habit of going out into the country and returning to your place, making that as his home? A. Well, I know he would work on the boats, then he would come back and ask me if I had any place for him, but he never asked me to keep a room for him. Q. Oh, I understand that, but it was his custom, during the 17 years, when he came to Sacramento, to make your place his residence; wasn't that it? A. Well, yes. Q. That is correct, isn't it? Mrs. McIsaac? A. Yes, sir. Q. And when he left, in June, and went to the hospital, and then he came back to your place didn't he? A. Yes. Q. Did he stay there, at all? A. No, he did not. He went to the country—no. Q. Well, you told Mr. Howe that he left and went to the hospital and didn't stay there, and came back to your place. A. He went to the hospital, yes—oh, yes. My son-in-law took him out, made arrangements with the Sisters at the Sister's Hospital, and was going—now, whether he paid the bill or not I don't know; but he went and bought two night-shirts, and went out there and made arrangements, and when I came back in the morning, he was up there. Q. Up in your house? A. Yes. He came in, and I said: 'Miller, you can't stay here.'"

John H. Miller was called by the defendant and, testifying as to his residence at 1401 Front street, stated that he left the hotel of Mrs. McIsaac on the 15th day of June, 1920, for the purpose of going to the Sisters' hospital in Sacramento for an operation; that he remained there but a few hours, when he returned to Mrs. McIsaac's place; that Mrs. McIsaac said to him that he could not live at her hotel any longer, and he thereafter secured a position as a watchman on the steamer Flora, plying the Sacramento river and which was moored at a station known as Vernon, a number of miles north of Sacramento on the Sacramento river. He testified that upon taking the position as watchman on the steamer Flora, he considered that his residence was on the boat. When asked what he meant by residence, he replied that it was the place where he ate his meals and slept. He said that he left the McIsaac Hotel with the intention of not returning to the city of Sacramento and taking up his residence; that he intended to go to Oakland and reside. He testified on cross-examination that for the past 17 years he had frequently worked on the boats on the Sacramento river, and that "every time that I finished I would come back to 1401 Front street"; that he was registered as a voter from 1401 Front street (the McIsaac Hotel), and that he had on several occasions voted at elections from that place. He likewise testified that when he left the Sisters' hospital on the 15th day of June he returned to the McIsaac Hotel and remained there several days, or until he went to Vernon to take the position on the steamer Flora as a watchman; that after he ceased working on the steamer he went to the Holland land district, which is on an island south of the city of Sacramento; that he got sick while there, and was for that reason unable to work longer, and came back to Sacramento in the month of July, 1920; that he slept "up town, but I guess some nights I slept in the corner," referring, as he later explained, to the McIsaac place; that after he recovered from his illness he again went to Vernon and resumed work as a watchman on the steamer Flora and remained there until he came to Sacramento; that he shortly thereafter went over to the Yolo county side of the Sacramento river, where the boat was "tied up," and worked there as a watchman on the boat until the 17th of September. He further stated that he had not gone to Oakland after the 15th of June, that he had no residence there and that he had no residence in Yolo county, other than living on the boat while engaged in his work as watchman. He testified that he had known the defendant about 35 years and knew him while he stopped at the McIsaac place.

The foregoing brief recapitulation of the evidence is sufficient to show that, tested by the rules of law (above stated herein) whereby the matter of residence is to be determined, the case as made by the proofs is such that the question whether the said Miller was, on the 31st day of August, 1920, the time of the holding of the primary election at which the defendant is charged with having voted upon the false representation that he was said Miller, entitled to vote as a registered voter of precinct No. 83 of said county, was one for decision by the jury; and, the jury having accepted the testimony as being sufficient to establish in their minds the truth of that element of the crime charged beyond a reasonable doubt, we are not prepared to say that the conclusion so arrived at was not justified. We can say, however, that, upon its face, the testimony is sufficient to support the verdict.

There is nothing in the evidence to show that the witness Miller ever changed or abandoned his residence at the McIsaac hotel or that he attempted to establish a residence at any other place or intended to do so. It is true that he stated that he left the McIsaac hotel with the intention of abandoning it as his place of residence, and it is also true that he stated that, after leaving said hotel on the 15th of June, 1920, to work on the steamer Flora at Vernon, his residence was on said steamer. The latter statement involved a legal conclusion, and as so made by the witness it was shown to be wholly without probative force upon that question by his explanation that he considered the place here he took his meals and slept sufficient to constitute a legal residence. As to his statement that he took his leave from said hotel with the intention of not returning thereto, it is clear that, under the law, such intention, even if it were in his mind, was not of itself sufficient to constitute an abandonment of said place as his residence or to effect any such result. As we have seen, under the law, every person has a residence (Pol. Code, § 52), and "that the mere intention to acquire a new residence, without the fact of removal," cannot have the effect of changing a person's residence from the place where he has established it to some other place. Pol. Code, § 1239. There is no evidence that he registered at any other voting precinct, and such evidence would readily have been available in documentary form had it existed, because the records of the registration office would have shown that his registration as a voter in precinct No. 83 of Sacramento county had been canceled. Indeed, the affidavit of registration of Miller, which was introduced and received in evidence in this case, constituted some evidence of the fact that he was not registered as a voter in any other precinct or county, otherwise said affidavit would probably not have been in existence. It is clear that said precinct No. 83 at the time of the holding of said primary election was his residence, even though he had therein no room or house in which to dwell. In Huston v. Anderson, 145 Cal. 320, 328, 78 Pac. 626, 635, which involved an election contest and in which an objection was raised to the right of a certain person who had voted at the election to vote, said person having previously to the election moved to another precinct to undertake temporary employment only, the court said, referring to said objection:

"The evidence was sufficient to sustain a conclusion that he had no intention of making the precinct into which he moved his residence. * * * If the voter had no intention of making the precinct into which he moved his home, but went there for temporary purposes only, he did not gain a residence there, and consequently did not lose his legal residence in the precinct from which he moved, notwithstanding that he may not have had any certain house, room, or place therein that he could call his home. [Italics ours.] That precinct continued to be his legal residence until he gained a legal residence elsewhere. The evidence was such that it might have sustained a contrary finding, but not such as to warrant us in disturbing the findings of the court below. See, in this connection, Smith v. Thomas, 121 Cal. 533; Stewart v. Kyser, 105 Cal. 459."

See, also, Sheehan v. Scott, 145 Cal. 634, 79 Pac. 350.

What is said in the above case is cogently pertinent to the case here, although we are not prepared to say that the evidence, taking it at its face value, would have warranted the jury in reaching any other conclusion than that evidenced by their verdict. Our conclusion is that the verdict is amply supported by the evidence, and, accordingly, the judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

McCULLY v. McARTHUR. (L. A. 6222.)

1. Deeds ⚡56(2)—Delivery depends on intention to unconditionally transfer title.

No set form of delivery is necessary, and whether a delivery has been effected depends upon the intention of the parties to unconditionally transfer the title to the property.

2. Appeal and error ⚡994(3), 995—Weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses for trial court.

It is the exclusive function of the trial court to weigh the evidence and determine the credibility of the witnesses.

3. Deeds ⚡208(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding of delivery of deeds.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of delivery of deeds.

4. Cancellation of instruments ⚡53—Finding that neither grantor nor her estate was owner of certain property at all times held correct.

Where there was a finding that grantor executed deeds and made a delivery of them, a further finding that neither she nor her estate was the owner of the property is correct, since delivery passed title from the grantor.

5. Cancellation of instruments ⚡53—Finding that for sufficient consideration grantor of her own free will executed and delivered deeds supports finding that it is not true that deeds were without consideration.

A finding that for sufficient consideration the grantor of her own free will executed and delivered deeds upholds a finding to the effect that it is not true that the deeds were without consideration, since the execution of the deeds voluntarily with knowledge of their contents, and with intent to convey, makes consideration unnecessary to support the deeds, as valid conveyances of land, by Civ. Code, § 1040.

6. Appeal and error ⚡1071(5)—Immaterial finding that deeds were not made in contemplation of death held not prejudicial.

Where the trial court made a finding that deeds were delivered during the lifetime of the grantor, and that title was in the grantee, whether delivery was in contemplation of death is immaterial, and a finding that the deeds were not made in contemplation of death was not prejudicial.

7. Deeds ⚡208(1)—Evidence held sufficient to support findings that delivery of deed had been effected.

Evidence of an unconditional delivery of deeds held sufficient to support findings that at the time of delivery grantor did not wish them returned, and that they were not returned to grantor.

8. Evidence ⚡314(2)—Testimony of grantor as to what physician told her about her health was properly excluded.

Testimony of a grantor as to what a physician told her concerning the state of her health was hearsay and properly excluded.

9. Cancellation of instruments ⚡43—Testimony as to whether grantor feared grantee where there was no claim of coercion, was properly excluded.

In an action to cancel deeds, testimony as to whether grantor feared the grantee where there was no claim of coercion, was properly excluded.

10. Witnesses ⚡245—Questions which had already been asked and answered were properly excluded.

Testimony concerning destruction of deeds was properly rejected, where the same questions had already been asked and answered.

11. Judgment ⚡251(2)—Relief to defendant not limited to that claimed by cross-complaint if within issues raised by complaint.

In an action to cancel deeds, where defendant set up cross-complaint, alleging that he was owner of a half interest in the property, he is not limited in relief to his affirmative defense claiming a half interest in the property, and a judgment that he was owner of all the property was within the issues made by the complaint asking a cancellation of the deeds.

12. Appeal and error ⚡189(3)—Objection to dismissal of cross-complaint and separate defense must be made below.

Where at the end of the case defendant on motion dismissed his cross-complaint and separate defense, it cannot be attacked for first time on appeal.

13. Judgment ⚡251(3)—Withdrawal of cross-complaint and separate defense carried with it its corresponding prayer for relief.

In suit to cancel deeds, where defendant set up cross-complaint and separate defense, alleging a half interest in the property, the withdrawal of the cross-complaint and separate defense carried with it the corresponding prayer for relief, and left only the general prayer of the answer, for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and proper.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Suit by Earl J. McCully, executor of the estate of Lulu M. McArthur, deceased, against Clifford W. McArthur, also known as Clifford B. Whitmore. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Earl J. McCully and Robt. T. Linney, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John B. Haas and Gilbert F. Wyvell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant, in an action for the cancellation of four deeds to real property located in several counties of the state, in which Lulu M. McArthur, the original plaintiff herein, was the grantor, and the defendant the grantee, and to quiet the title to the property. Lulu M. McArthur died prior to the trial of the action, and Earl J. McCully, executor of her estate, was substituted as plaintiff.

The facts about which there is no dispute are these: Mrs. McArthur and respondent had resided together in the relation of mother and son for 20 years preceding the execution of the deeds in question. No kinship existed between them, and Mrs. McArthur had not adopted respondent. She was 60 years of age and very ill at the time of the transaction. At that time she was living on a ranch at Rivera. Her deposition was taken prior to the trial. She testified therein that she was told by the nurse, Rose Morrison, that she might die before morning. The matter of transferring the property had been under consideration for some time previous to the day on which the deeds were executed, November 3, 1917. On that date respondent brought a notary, Estelle Le Sage, and his attorney, Mrs. Mabel Willebrandt, from Los Angeles to the ranch. Mrs. Willebrandt presented the deeds to Mrs. McArthur, who signed them while propped up in bed. The execution was witnessed by the notary and two other women, Mrs. McArthur declaring she did not desire to have the deeds recorded. It was discovered that Miss Le Sage had not brought her notarial seal along. The deeds were taken to Los Angeles the same day by respondent, Mrs. Willebrandt, and Miss Le Sage, where the seal was affixed, and the deeds given to respondent, who retained them and caused them to be recorded in April of the following year. Between November 3, 1917, and April, 1918, Mrs. McArthur destroyed what she believed at the time were the original deeds, but which proved to be copies. This action was brought on May 2, 1918. The facts which are involved in dispute will sufficiently appear in the summary of the evidence.

The complaint alleged the material facts, and prayed for a cancellation of the deeds, and that they be declared null and void, be released of public record, and that appellant be declared the owner of the property. Respondent in his answer denied the allegations of the complaint. As a special defense and by way of cross-complaint he alleged that he was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the property described in the complaint, and prayed that he be adjudged the owner of such interest. In a separate defense he alleged that he "since the 3d day of November, 1917, held and does now hold the said undivided one-half interest of the said Lulu M. McArthur in trust for said plaintiff." The allegation of the cross-complaint is that appellant was the owner of some interest adverse to respondent, and respondent prayed that appellant be required to set forth the nature of her several claims, and that the title to one-half of the premises be declared to be in respondent. At the conclusion of the trial the court granted respondent's motion to dismiss the cross-complaint and separate defense without prejudice, and gave judgment for the respondent, quieting his title to all the property.

The court found:

"That on the 3d day of November, 1917, for a sufficient consideration, the said Lulu M. McArthur, * * * of her own free will, made, executed, and delivered to the defendant * * * four grant deeds, deeding in fee simple the above-described property to the said defendant, * * * and that the title and fee in and to said property now stands in the name of Clifford W. McArthur; that all denials and allegations in defendant's answer are true."

1. Appellant contends that—

"The evidence in this case is clear and uncontradicted that there was no valid delivery of the deeds"; that "the judgment given was in excess of that demanded in the answer, and this in itself requires a reversal"; that the "court in our opinion, committed several errors in its rulings on the admission of testimony"; and that other findings beside those on the subject of delivery of the deeds are not supported by the evidence.

In answer to this contention respondent correctly states the rule and cites authorities to the effect that where the evidence is sufficient as matter of law, and presents a substantial conflict, the findings will not be disturbed on appeal. He also claims that from the testimony of appellant's own witnesses it might be properly contended that there is a sufficient conflict to justify an affirmation of the judgment.

As appellant asserts, "The defendant makes no claim that there was a delivery of the deeds at any other or subsequent time" than November 3, 1917, the day of their execution, and at the trial respondent's attorney expressly stated that no claim was made of a subsequent delivery. It therefore must be shown that a delivery was made on November 3, 1917.

[1] The question of delivery is essentially one of fact, and depends upon the intention of the parties to unconditionally transfer the title to the property. No set form of delivery is necessary, and whether a delivery has been effected in a particular case must be determined by the facts and the circumstances, including the conduct of the parties. In Tiffany on Real Property, volume 2, § 461, p. 1738, it is said:

"While, as before stated, the necessity of delivery in connection with the instruments last named [deeds and contracts under seal], and others of an analogous character, is still fully recognized, the crude conception of a manual transfer of the instrument as the only means of making it legally effective, which gave birth to the expression 'delivery' as used in this connection, has been superseded by the more enlightened view that whether the instrument has been delivered is a question of intention merely, there being a sufficient delivery if an intention appears that it shall be legally operative, however this intention may be indicated. * * * Such a transfer to a third person, if not made with the intention that the instrument shall be legally operative, does not constitute a delivery; nor does a transfer to the grantee himself, if the transfer is not with such intention, but is for another purpose, as, for instance, to enable him to examine the instrument."

In Follmer v. Rohrer, 158 Cal. 755, 112 Pac. 544, it is declared:

"A valid delivery is accomplished when the conduct and acts of a grantor manifest a present intent to dispose of the title conveyed by the deed. No particular form of delivery is necessary; but any act or thing which manifests such an intent is sufficient to establish it. It is always a question of fact, and must be determined by the circumstances surrounding each transaction." Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 40 [citing other cases]. Manual tradition of the instrument is not enough; the transfer of possession must be with the intent of presently passing title, and must not be hampered by the reservation of any right of revocation or recall." "It is settled that delivery is not complete until the grantor has voluntarily surrendered all control over it." Drinkwater v. Hollar, 6 Cal. App. 117, 91 Pac. 664.

"The delivery is sufficient and complete if from any or all of the circumstances the grantor has made known his intention irrevocably to part with his dominion and control over the instrument, to the end that it may presently vest title in another." Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 268, 122 Pac. 462.

See, also, Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703; Stone v. Daily, 181 Cal. 571, 185 Pac. 665.

[2, 3] Considerable evidence was admitted on the issue of delivery. Respondent on cross-examination testified that—"When the matter of making these deeds came up, I discussed that with her several weeks before."

Nellie Allen Bell, a witness for appellant, testified that—

She "heard defendant say to Mrs. McArthur before the papers were signed, 'Well, mother, we are ready to sign those papers,' and Mrs. McArthur said, 'All right; I suppose it is the thing to do.'"

Respondent testified:

"The signing took place in Mrs. McArthur's room; she was in bed at the time; I think Mrs. Willebrandt handed those deeds to Mrs. McArthur; and in detail Mrs. Willebrandt explained these deeds to her, when she handed them to her; those deeds were prepared under the request of Mrs. Lulu M. McArthur; the request was made to me, and the deeds were prepared by me and under my immediate direction; these deeds were handed to her one at a time, when they were signed; when she took the deeds she asked a number of questions about the deeds, and Mrs. Willebrandt explained each deed to her in detail."

He also testified that—

"She signed each deed separately, and handed it to me," that Mrs. McArthur said, "'I would like to have her [Mrs. McArthur's sister] sign as a witness,' so that there was no chance thereafter to make any trouble over the deeds."

Estelle Le Sage testified:

"Mrs. McArthur spoke to Mrs. Willebrandt about the deeds, and I said that I had to take them up and put the seal on them; she seemed to be very disappointed, and she said, 'Well, I wanted everything done up this afternoon,' she said, 'I wanted it all done right now,' * * * yes, she said she wanted—very anxious to see them, to see that everything was finished up on them; she was disappointed because I didn't bring my seal; * * * she said she wanted him to have all the property, but there was one that she wanted to hold for a while."

Respondent further testified:

"I put the deeds that night in my desk, in my room. Mrs. McArthur had access to my desk. They remained in the desk from November 3 until I brought them in and put them in the safety deposit box. I think it was several weeks afterwards; I don't remember just exactly the date. I had the box in the Hellman Bank. Why, Mrs. McArthur never demanded of me either the original deeds, during the time the deeds were on the ranch there; she never asked me for the deeds until a very considerable time, months afterwards, and I don't remember of her ever making a demand for the deeds; I can't—I would not say positively that she didn't—but I can't recollect of her having asked me for the deeds until the friction started months and months afterwards," and that she "tried to get me to record them at the time they were first made out"; that "when she handed the deeds to me, she said she wanted the property to stand in my title; she said she wanted it to go to me. She said that I had been instrumental in making all the property. It was understood between us that whichever one should pass out first, the other should get the property."

We quote further:

"The Court: What occurred at the bank the day you and Mrs. McArthur went there to get the deeds? A. The day Mrs. McArthur and I went?

"The Court: Yes. A. I never went to the bank with her to get the deeds.

"The Court: When and where did you deliver her the copies? A. I didn't deliver them; they were in the bank; I didn't know they were taken for—or a long time afterwards, I don't remember just how long."

Mrs. Willebrandt testified:

"Miss Le Sage placed the seal on the deeds, and handed them to Mr. McArthur, saying, 'Well, they are finished, that is your mother's wish.' * * * I don't think I mentioned about mailing the deeds to her. I don't think I stated that night that I would return the deeds to her to-morrow, after the notarial seal was put on. I didn't understand that she wanted them returned to her. I understood that she wanted it finished; didn't want them in the hands of the notary."

It is appellant's contention that the evidence clearly shows there was no delivery of the deeds. The testimony of his witnesses is set forth, and asserted inconsistencies in the testimony of respondent are pointed out. Appellant also contends that the testimony of respondent is not to be credited; that respondent was anxious to secure the property; that he had "had some words" with deceased at the time she asked him for the deeds; and that these facts make his testimony untrustworthy. He lays stress on the testimony of Mrs. McArthur, "I told her [Mrs. Willebrandt] I wanted the deeds returned to me by mail, and to remember that if I did not die that night I did not wish them delivered," and that Mrs. Willebrandt told her that she would return the deeds; on that of Mrs. Nellie Allen Bell, Mrs. Lottie Foster, and Estelle Le Sage, who testified that Mrs. McArthur requested Mrs. Willebrandt to return the deeds; on Mrs. Foster's further testimony that, "She [Mrs. McArthur] said there should not be a delivery of the deeds; I don't think she said anything further about that delivery; she said to the lady lawyer that they were not to be delivered," that Mrs. McArthur "wanted them back by mail and offered to pay the postage," and that "she said, 'The deeds are not to be delivered now.'" Appellant refers to the testimony of Estelle Le Sage that Mrs. McArthur said, "I don't want them recorded." He claims the testimony of respondent corroborates that of appellant's witnesses in many respects, that respondent testified Mrs. McArthur said she wanted the deeds back, and that she made the request of Mrs. Willebrandt that they be mailed to the ranch.

Appellant points to the happenings subsequent to the signing of the deeds and says:

"It appears from the testimony of other witnesses which need not be reviewed in detail that after the defendant had confessed to Mrs. McArthur that he had the deeds, she obtained from him what he led her to believe were the deeds that she signed; that in the presence of her friend, Alta I. Hitchcock, and Miss Prince, in charge of the safety deposit vault, she destroyed the deeds; that these deeds were in fact merely copies; that McArthur had kept the original deeds, and afterwards recorded them. From the foregoing review it appears that the testimony that Mrs. McArthur did not intend to deliver the deeds, or have them delivered to the grantee, the defendant, by any other person, is absolutely uncontradicted."

Because of the state of the evidence on the question whether Mrs. McArthur intended to and did deliver the deeds, and the apparent force of appellant's contention that the evidence fails to establish a delivery, we have deemed it proper to set it out at some length. It is strongly urged by appellant that, inasmuch as the evidence shows that Mrs. McArthur did not want the deeds recorded, but did want them returned to her after the notarial seal was affixed, and that she attempted to obtain the deeds from respondent, but that he deceived her by retaining the originals and giving her copies—thereby evidencing his recognition of her right to the deeds—it is clear she did not intend to deliver them, and that therefore the findings cannot be sustained.

It is the exclusive function of the trial court to weigh the evidence and determine the credibility of the witnesses. Keeping this rule in view, it must be held under the evidence that we are bound by the findings of delivery. There is evidence that Mrs. McArthur handed the deeds to respondent, and said she wanted the property to stand "in his title"; that she asked her sister to witness the conveyance that there might be no trouble over them, that she said she wanted the transfer completed at that time, and that later she requested respondent to have the deeds recorded. The evidence of the relationship and friendly feeling existing between Mrs. McArthur and respondent at the time of the making out and signing of the deeds, and that it was understood between them that one or the other should eventually get the property, may have been regarded as significant by the court in finding for respondent. The evidence that Mrs. McArthur did not wish the deeds recorded at the time they were delivered is not, of itself, necessarily inconsistent with a delivery. The court may have concluded from the evidence that the reason Mrs. McArthur did not desire the deeds recorded was because she did not wish respondent to trade one of the pieces of property at that time. Nor is the evidence that she later attempted to recover the deeds necessarily conclusive of nondelivery, for the court may have decided that she changed her mind concerning the transfer when the "friction" developed between them. As the evidence relied upon by appellant is in greater or less degree involved in conflict, and the testimony of respondent alone, if accepted, is sufficient to sustain a finding of delivery, it cannot be held that the trial court could not have found from the evidence that Mrs. McArthur intended to and did deliver the deeds.

[4] 2. Appellant contends that certain findings other than those of delivery are not supported by the evidence. Finding 2, which is to the effect that neither Mrs. McArthur nor her estate was the owner of the property at all times, is one of these. Manifestly, this finding is correct, for upon the theory that there was a delivery on November 3, 1917, neither she nor her estate could have been the owner after that date.

[5-7] The other findings complained of are to the effect that it is not true the deeds were without consideration; that it is not true they were made in contemplation of death; that it is not true that Mrs. McArthur instructed Mrs. Willebrandt to return the deeds if she did not die; that it is true respondent had the deeds on November 8; that it is true they were returned to him by Mrs. Willebrandt, but not for the purpose of returning them to Mrs. McArthur; that it is not true respondent on November 8 said the deeds were in the safe deposit box in Los Angeles; and that it is not true that on November 8, or at any other time, respondent went with Mrs. McArthur to the safe deposit box and there delivered the deeds to her, and that she then placed them in her private safe deposit box. These findings are on the issues presented by the pleadings. As we have shown, the finding on delivery is to the effect that for a sufficient consideration Mrs. McArthur of her own free will executed and delivered the deeds. Lieman v. Golly, 178 Cal. 544, 174 Pac. 33, was an action to set aside deeds for a lack of consideration. The court said:

"In his brief the appellant claims that the finding of the consideration is insufficient. The ninth finding states that each of said deeds 'was executed for a good consideration passing from defendant to said Annie M. Golly.' No further finding was necessary. On the contrary, since the findings also show that the deeds were executed voluntarily and with knowledge of their contents and the intent to convey, no consideration was necessary to support the deeds as valid conveyances of the land. Civ. Code, sec. 1040."

It is true the complaint alleged the transfer was made in contemplation of death, but in view of the finding that the deeds were delivered during the lifetime of Mrs. McArthur and that title was found to be in respondent, her motive—whether she delivered the deeds in contemplation of death—is immaterial, and the finding could not have been prejudicial. As to the remaining findings Mrs. Willebrandt testified she gave the deeds to respondent, that she did not understand Mrs. McArthur wanted them returned to her, and respondent testified he told Mrs. McArthur, a short while after the deeds were signed, that he had them in his desk at the ranch. The finding that respondent did not return the deeds to Mrs. McArthur is supported by the evidence, for it is not disputed she secured only the copies. The finding that Mrs. McArthur, on or about November 27, learned for the first time that the copies of the deeds which she destroyed were not the originals is immaterial, for it having been found there was a delivery on November 3, whether she later learned that copies and not originals had been given to her, becomes unimportant.

[8-10] 3. There was no error in excluding the testimony concerning Mrs. McArthur's physical condition. Her testimony to the effect that she thought she was critically ill was admitted, and the statement of the doctor to her concerning her condition, since the doctor was not called as a witness, was hearsay. The testimony of Mrs. Foster, as to whether or not Mrs. McArthur was in fear of respondent, was properly excluded, for there was no claim that the deeds were delivered by reason of respondent's coercion. The testimony of Mrs. McCandless concerning the destruction of the deeds was properly rejected because the questions had already been asked and answered.

[11] 4. Appellant's contention that the judgment must be reversed for the reason that it exceeds the relief prayed for, in that in the separate defense and in the cross-complaint the respondent had alleged himself to be the owner of a one-half interest in the property and asked to be adjudged such owner, cannot be sustained. In Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 57, 33 Pac. 786, it was contended the judgment was not authorized because it granted the defendant affirmative relief when no such relief was prayed for. The court said:

"There was no error in the action of the court complained of. The case was one in equity, and the court was authorized to grant any relief consistent with the case made and embraced within the issues, although not specifically prayed for."

In this case the relief granted was clearly embraced within the issues, for the complaint asked a cancellation of the deeds, and the court found that respondent was the owner of the property. Appellant argues further that the question presented here "is the effect in an answer of allegations the only effect of which, when the pleading is taken as a whole, is that of a disclaimer and admission against interest as to a part of the subject-matter of the action." In Billings v. Drew, 52 Cal. 565, it was declared:

"They had the right to set up negative as well as affirmative defenses to the action, and the affirmative matter, separately pleaded, did not operate as a waiver or withdrawal of the denials contained in other portions of the answer."

In Nudd v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 39, a case involving a motion on the pleadings, it was said:

"We had occasion to consider that question in Siter v. Jewett, 33 Cal. 92, and we held that, 'where there are several answers, an admission made in one is not available in proof of issues raised by the others.'"

In Meyers v. Merillon, 118 Cal. 352, 50 Pac. 662, the court declared:

"As in separate defenses a denial in one is not waived by an admission of the same matter in another (Billings v. Drew, 52 Cal. 565; Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 308), so here the denial of the answer is not waived or overcome by an averment in the cross-complaint of substantially the same facts as those which the answer denies."

It follows that respondent is not bound by the averments in the special defense and cross-complaint, and that the relief need not be limited to that prayed for.

[12] In Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Du-four, 95 Cal. 615, 30 Pac. 783, 19 L. R. A. 92, it was stated:

"At the close of defendant's case he withdrew his special defense, and this action of counsel is assigned as error. Upon an examination of the record, we find no objection or exception taken to the withdrawal of this special defense from the answer, and hence do not perceive how it can be a proper subject for review. If plaintiff, relying on the allegations of the defense to cure a defective complaint, was surprised and misled by such action of counsel, upon a proper showing he would have been entitled to a continuance in order that he might amend his complaint or procure additional evidence, but there is nothing to indicate that he applied for such relief."

The question presented here is similar to the one in that case, with the additional fact that respondent moved also to dismiss the cross-complaint. No objection was made by counsel for appellant to the granting of these motions, so the question may not be raised for the first time on appeal.

[13] It follows that respondent's withdrawal of these pleadings, which admitted title to one-half of the property to be in appellant, carried with it the corresponding prayer for relief, and left only the general prayer of the answer, which was "for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and proper in the premises."

5. It having been decided that the findings of delivery, as well as those on other material issues presented by the pleadings, were supported by the evidence, and that appellant's objections to the admission of testimony and to respondent's withdrawal of certain of his pleadings were without merit, it becomes unnecessary to consider respondent's contention that the bill of exceptions, which contains the entire record on appeal, not having been filed and served within the statutory period and that the application for relief from such failure under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure having been fatally defective, appellant is not entitled to a review of the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BISHOP. (Cr. 996.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Sept. 2, 1921.)

1. Indictment and information $\S$ 110(17)—Information for murder of the second degree held sufficient, although not in statutory language.

An information charging that at a certain time and place one S. did kill and murder decedent in defendant's presence, and that he then and there aided and abetted the commission of the crime, was sufficient, as defendant was informed in a more precise and detailed manner than he would have been had the charge been general and in the language of the statute.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 407(1)—Testimony showing silence under accusation held admissible.

Where defendant was informed against for aiding and abetting S. in a murder, and S., in a statement to officers in defendant's presence, stated defendant had participated in the crime, testimony that defendant sat silent when the statement was being made was relevant when limited to showing an implied admission.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 338(6)—Evidence of statements by S. inconsistent with what witness testified were former statements by S. held inadmissible.

Where, on prosecution for homicide, witness testified to statements by S. tending to show defendant's participation with S. in the crime, testimony in defendant's behalf as to subsequent variant statements by S. was not admissible to show that the former statements of S. were not true; he not testifying.

James Bishop was convicted of murder of the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from the judgment upon conviction of the defendant upon a charge of murder in the second degree. The appellant's first contention is that the trial court was in error in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the information.

[1] The form of the information was unusual, in that its drawer did not content himself with following the language of the statute in relation to the charge of murder, but undertook to set forth the details of the homicide which was committed by one Walter Lee Smith upon the decedent, the murder of whom by said Smith the defendant was specifically charged with having aided and abetted. We think the objection which the defendant urged to the information in this form was hypercritical and unsustained by the cases which are cited by him in its support. The information expressly charges that at a certain time and place the said Walter Lee Smith did kill and murder the decedent in the defendant's presence and that he then and there aided and abetted the commission of the crime. The defendant was thus informed in a much more precise and detailed and definite manner than he would have been had the charge been general and in the language of the statute just what the accusation was which he was expected to meet, and the information was to that extent more favorable to him than it might have been had it been drawn in the language of the statute. His demurrer to it was therefore without merit, and was properly overruled.

[2] The appellant's next contention is that the trial court improperly overruled the defendant's objection to certain testimony offered by one J. A. Cornett. This testimony related to the acts and conduct of the defendant when, shortly after the crime and the detention of said Smith and himself upon suspicion of being the perpetrators, said Smith, in a statement to the officers of the law made in the presence of the defendant, stated that he, the defendant, had participated in the commission of the crime. The defendant sat silent when this statement was being made; and his act and conduct in so doing was the subject of Cornett's testimony to the admission of which the defendant objected. In support of his said objection the defendant's counsel asked and was accorded permission to examine the witness as to the circumstances immediately preceding and attending the statement of Smith, from which it appeared that the defendant, a few minutes previous to the taking of said Smith's statement, had been separately questioned by the officers of the law as to his knowledge of and part in the homicide, and had therein denied that he had aided and abetted Smith in the perpetration of the crime. Immediately thereafter Smith was questioned in his presence and in the presence of some 12 or 15 other people, and then made the incriminating statements above referred to. After bringing out these facts by his examination of the witness Cornett the defendant objected to his testimony, and now urges error in the trial court in overruling said objection.

We think the point is not well taken. The rule is well established by a consistent line of cases in this and other jurisdictions that the acts and conduct of an accused person, when a statement of his guilty participation in the crime is made in his presence, may be presented to the jury as circumstances tending to show an implied admission of the truth of such statements. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, §§ 197, 215; Joy on Confessions, 77; Rex v. Bartlett, 7 Car. & Payne, 832; People v. McCrea, 32 Cal. 98; People v. Ah Yute, 53 Cal. 614; People v. Mallon, 103 Cal. 513, 37 Pac. 512; People v. Luie Foo, 112 Cal. 24, 44 Pac. 453; People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 Pac. 794. It is to be noted in this connection that the trial court, in its charge to the jury, expressly limited the purpose of the statements of Smith, as testified to by Cornett, and the conduct of the defendant while such statements were being made, to that above stated. Clearly the testimony of Cornett for such limited purpose was admissible in the light of the above authorities; and hence the defendant's objection to the admission of this evidence was properly overruled.

[3] The appellant's next contention is that the trial court committed error in its refusal to admit in evidence the offered testimony of Leo F. Ferris and William Rambeau, two witnesses called on behalf of the defendant to testify to the making of certain statements by Walter Lee Smith at other times and places contradictory to and inconsistent with the statements made by said Smith in the defendant's presence and to which the witness Cornett had testified. The record discloses that Walter Lee Smith did not testify upon the trial of the defendant, having refused so to do upon the statutory ground. This being so the testimony of these two witnesses was offered, not to contradict or impeach Smith as to the truth of any testimony he had given as a witness in the case, but solely for the purpose of showing that Smith's former and extrajudicial statement as testified to by Cornett was untrue; but the truth or falsity of this statement of Smith was not an issue upon the defendant's trial, and was not material, since the sole purpose of its introduction, and to which it was strictly limited by the court's instruction was to show the conduct of the defendant when this statement of Smith made in his presence implicated him in the commission of the crime. This being so, the offered evidence of these two witnesses as to the making of other and inconsistent statements by Smith was immaterial and was properly excluded by the trial court.

The appellant's final contention is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. We have carefully examined the transcript of the testimony, and are satisfied that this contention is without substantial merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

DUNBAR v. SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND TERMINAL RYS. et al. (Civ. 3856;
S. F. 8879.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Aug. 15, 1921.)

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court
Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Negligence §93(2)—Husband's negligence imputable to wife.

Contributory negligence of husband in care of wife riding in a vehicle driven by him is imputable to the wife, and bars recovery by her for personal injuries.

2. Negligence §89(2)—Husband's negligence bar to wife's recovery.

If husband's negligence contributed proximately to injury to wife, the law will not permit him to benefit by his own wrong, and no recovery will be permitted to her, as a recovery for her injuries would be community property in which he would share.

3. Husband and wife §260—Damages for personal injuries to wife community property.

Damages recovered by wife for personal injuries are community property in which husband shares and over which he has control.

4. Street railroads §117(24)—Contributory negligence in driving vehicle at crossing for jury.

In an action by a wife for injuries in a collision between a street car and a horse-drawn vehicle driven by her husband, contributory negligence of the wife or husband in crossing the track held for the jury.

5. Negligence §136(9)—Question for jury.

Negligence ordinarily is a question for the jury to determine from the facts and fair deducible inferences, and it is only when the facts are without dispute or the deductions inevitable that the question is one of law for the court.

6. Street railroads §99(10)—Driver's vigilance at intersection need not be extreme.

A driver of a horse-driven vehicle need not exercise extreme and constant vigilance, in driving across street car tracks, and he may still be free from fault if in going forward he used his eyes and ears, and either failed to see, or, having seen, miscalculated the danger.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

7. Street Railroads §114(19)—Liability under last clear chance doctrine held not shown.

In an action to recover for injuries in a collision between a horse-drawn vehicle driven by plaintiff's husband and defendant's street car, evidence and facts held not sufficient to establish defendant's liability on the doctrine of last clear chance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Matilda J. Dunbar against the San Francisco Oakland Terminal Railways and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

W. H. Smith and A. L. Whittle, both of Oakland, and Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco (Chapman & Trefethen, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellants.

Ostrander & Carey, of Oakland, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff in a collision between a street car of the corporate defendant and a horse-drawn vehicle driven by the husband of the plaintiff. The collision occurred in Oakland at the junction of Grand avenue and El Embarcadero, a thoroughfare emerging from said avenue. The first-named street runs in an easterly and westerly direction, and the other approximately north and south. The plaintiff alleges in her complaint that she was injured as the result of the negligence of the defendants in operating a street car at said junction at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed, and without giving any warning of its approach by gong or otherwise. Both the corporation and its codefendant—the motorman driving said car—deny the negligence charged, or any negligence; and as a separate defense they allege that the plaintiff's injuries were the result of her contributory negligence, consisting in the fact that she failed to ascertain whether or not a street car was approaching before attempting to cross the car track, or to warn the driver of the horse and buggy to do so, and that the plaintiff failed and neglected to display lights on said buggy, or to cause said vehicle to be driven on the right-hand side of the highway, as required by law. The cause was tried by a jury, and resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $20,000. The defendants appeal.

The only questions in the case now presented are: (1) Was the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence? and (2) If so, did the defendants have a last clear chance to avoid the collision?

The accident happened on the 2d day of August, 1916, at 9 o'clock at night. W. H. Dunbar, and his wife the plaintiff, were in an open one-horse buggy. Dunbar had driven the horse along what is called Lake boulevard and into El Embarcadero, intending to cross the car tracks on Grand avenue to reach the north side of that street and then proceed westerly. As he was approaching said car tracks an electric car of the corporate defendant was coming from the west on the right-hand track at a speed according to the testimony for plaintiff, of 30 miles an hour. Dunbar, without stopping or changing his course and going at the rate of 3 or 4 miles an hour, drove upon the track, and while in the act of crossing, his vehicle was struck by said car, resulting in serious injuries to the plaintiff. The eyesight and hearing of Dunbar and his wife were good; and while Dunbar looked up and down the track he states that he neither heard nor saw the approaching car. Mrs. Dunbar remembers nothing of the accident, not even the fact that she was driving with her husband that evening, nor the occurrences of previous days. Dunbar and his wife were very familiar with the conditions of the locality where the accident occurred. The former was called as a witness, and testified that coming into El Embarcadero he drove on the right-hand side thereof. He jogged along at the rate of 7 or 8 miles an hour to within 50 or 100 feet of the track; he then slackened up into a "roll" which is a little faster than a walk, and at least 4 miles an hour. He looked to the left and then to the right, when he was 40 or 50 feet from the track, and observed no car coming. He looked again when he was 10 or 12 feet from the track, and still saw no car. He knew nothing of the danger until he heard his wife scream, followed immediately by a crash, when he became unconscious. He did not see any street car nor the lights of any, headlight or otherwise, or hear a bell or the rumbling of the heavy car at any time. He had a clear view of Grand avenue to the left. When he looked in that direction there was nothing to obscure his view. From the time he entered El Embarcadero to the moment he heard his wife scream she did not give any expression of fear or caution, either by gesticulation or word, that he could remember. The horse was gentle and obedient and could be quickly stopped. The car struck the left front wheel of the buggy. The horse escaped injury. The buggy was equipped with a light fastened on the left-hand side with red, white, and blue lights, red on the left, blue on the right, and white in front.

Other witnesses to the accident, called on behalf of the plaintiff, were four occupants of an automobile which, like the plaintiff's vehicle, was proceeding along El Embarcadero toward Grand avenue, and which was thence to proceed easterly along the right-hand side of Grand avenue without crossing the track. The buggy had passed the automobile, heading for the track, and the occupants of the latter, fearing a collision, stopped their car about 40 feet from the track, and waited to see what might happen. They were William Glavin, Helen Glavin, W. J. Thorburn, and Helen Thorburn. They testified that they saw no lighted lamp on the buggy; that the street car was running at about 30 miles an hour from the moment they perceived it until the collision; that they heard no warning of the approach of the car; that the speed of the car was not slackened until after the impact; and that the hind wheels of the buggy were struck by the car. William J. Thorburn also testified that the horse approached the track trotting, and, as he neared it, slowed down, crossing it walking. The car was 150 feet away when he first saw it. When the automobile was stopped the horse's head was about 5 feet from the nearest rail. At that moment the car was about 150 feet away from the horse. At that time he saw the headlight of the car, which was what first called his attention to its approach. The light clearly illuminated the automobile. The light from the car from the moment he first perceived it gradually turned in towards the track as the car turned west. It might have illuminated the track for 30, 40 or 50 yards. He did not pay much attention to it. It did not shine on the track as it came around the bend. At no time did he see it playing upon the buggy. Dunbar was 4 or 5 feet from the track when he started to walk his horse across it. At this time the light was shining on the automobile. The street car continued 140 feet about, after it struck the buggy.

Mrs. Helen Thorburn testified that when the automobile stopped, the horse was just going on the track. At that time the car was a little farther than 84 feet away. The horse and buggy were on the track when the car came around the bend. The car was lighted, and had a burning headlight. The horse trotted until he got within about 10 feet of the track, and then he walked. At that time she had not seen the car. When the horse was 10 feet away from the near rail the car was 78 feet away. While the car was going that 78 feet the horse walked the 10 feet and crossed from one rail to the other before the collision. After the buggy was struck the car stopped in about two lengths.

William Glavin, driver of the automobile, testified that when he first observed the car it was 50 or 75 feet from the horse and buggy, which, in their turn, were 10 or 15 feet from the track. The front of the car was not lighted, but it was equipped with a burning headlight. Referring to that part of his testimony where he said the car was about 50 or 75 feet from the buggy when he first observed the car, he stated that he must have misunderstood the question, and testified in that behalf that the car at that time was 200 feet south of El Embarcadero. From his testimony we quote:

"It looked just about 200 feet to me, that point, but I would not know just how to mark it here. I don't know the distance from that curve there.

"Q. But the horse and buggy had 110 feet to go while the car had from a point 200 feet south of the El Embarcadero up to the point of the accident to go, didn't it? A. Yes, if that is right, but I don't know whether it is just 110 feet or how many feet it is.

"Q. Well, it is as accurate as anything you can give, isn't it? A. I am not accurate on the measurements, but I could go over there and show you spot for spot on the scene of the accident."

There only remains of the occupants of the automobile Mrs. Helen Glavin. She testified that the car stopped about three car lengths after it struck the buggy. She noticed its headlight when it came around the corner. She saw no lights that illuminated the horse and buggy.

J. M. McCarthy, a witness called by the plaintiff, was a motorman in the employ of the defendant. He testified to having made three tests at the point of the collision to ascertain within what distance a car could be stopped by applying emergency pressure; that, running 20 miles an hour, it could be stopped in 105 feet; at 22½ miles an hour, 164 feet; at 25.7 miles an hour, 225 feet.

W. J. Griesbaum testified that he had had three years' experience in operating electric cars as a motorman; and that a car running at 30 miles an hour, under the circumstances present in this case, could be stopped in 75 or 80 feet.

Defendant Way, first called as a witness for the plaintiff, testified that, according to his best recollection, the speed of his car 100 feet from the point of the accident was 20 miles an hour, and when he was 50 feet away he had slightly checked it; that at 100 feet from that point he was ringing the gong as a signal to the automobile, and that it was at this time that he checked the speed of his car as a precautionary measure; and then when he perceived that the automobile had stopped he released the brakes. As a witness for himself and codefendant he testified that when he first saw the buggy it was revealed by the headlight of his car; that it was on the track and about a car's length away, that he stopped the car in about its length, which was the shortest possible stop. On his cross-examination he testified that he saw Dunbar lean forward to urge his horse, but at that time the car was virtually upon him. When he leaned forward the horse lunged. The headlight enabled him to distinguish objects from 150 to 200 feet away. A number of photographs of the site of the accident were introduced in evidence by both sides.

It is not claimed that the evidence fails to support the verdict of the jury that the defendants were guilty of negligence, but it is earnestly contended that upon a full and fair consideration of all the evidence favorable to the plaintiff, and the logical deductions to be drawn therefrom, it appears that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that it does not appear that the defendants had a last clear chance of avoiding the collision after discovering that the plaintiff was in a position of peril. We will discuss both of these questions together.

[1-6] Under the facts of the case, if plaintiff's husband was guilty of negligence, such negligence is also imputable to the plaintiff. For a personal injury to a wife, who at the time of the injury is in the care of her husband, the latter's contributory negligence bars the right of recovery. But, regardless of whether or not she was in his care, if his negligence contributed proximately to her injury, the law will not permit him to benefit by his own wrong, and no recovery will be permitted, for under the law in this state a recovery for her injuries is community property, in which he shares and over which he has control. Basler v. Sacramento Gas & El. Co., 158 Cal. 514, 518, 111 Pac. 530, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 642. There are some inconsistencies in the evidence for the plaintiff; but we cannot say that upon the whole evidence bearing upon the subject of negligence the jury was bound to conclude that the plaintiff failed to use reasonable care in attempting to cross the track. We cannot hold as a matter of law that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Negligence ordinarily is a question for the jury to determine from the facts and fair deducible inferences. It is only when the facts are without dispute or the deductions inevitable that the court can say that no negligence was shown. We cannot say as a matter of law that Dunbar should have seen the approaching car. If in going forward he used his eyes and ears, and either failed to see, or having seen, miscalculated the danger, he may still have been free from fault. His vigilance does not have to be extreme and constant. Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 55 Pac. 908. Dunbar took observations when he was 40 or 50 feet away from the track, looking both to the right and the left. At that time he was driving 7 or 8 miles an hour. He again looked both ways when he was 10 or 12 feet from the track. At that moment he was driving 3 or 4 miles, or 7 or 8 miles, an hour; and at neither of those times did he see or hear the oncoming car. In the meantime the car was coming around a curve in the track at the rate of 30 miles an hour, giving no notice of its presence by the ringing of a gong or otherwise. While the interior of the car was lighted its front was dark, except for the headlight, but it is probable that on account of the curve in the track this was not visible to Dunbar soon enough to enable him to perceive the danger of continuing on his course. The nearer his position to the track, the shorter was his range of observation to the left. If we bear in mind that the headlight of the electric car threw its reflection on the automobile, 40 feet from the track, before it illuminated the buggy; that it was this headlight becoming visible as the car came around the curve which first attracted the attention of some of those in the automobile; that its rays played on them first and only later warned Dunbar of his danger; that when William J. Thorburn first saw the lighted car it was 150 or 200 feet away from the point of collision; and that a car going 30 miles an hour would cover 44 feet in a second, so that a vehicle proceeding at a walk in the path of such car could cover but a short distance between the moment when the approach of the car became known and that in which they must inevitably meet if each should continue on its course unchecked—it becomes sufficiently clear that the question whether or not Dunbar failed to exercise ordinary care in undertaking to cross the car track as he did was one for the determination of the jury. Moreover, the jury might well have inferred that the buggy having been equipped with a lighted lamp on its left side, the motorman ought to have seen it in time to have averted the collision; or, independent of the lamp on the buggy, if the headlight on the car threw its illuminating rays far enough to enable the plaintiff to know of its approach in time to remain in a position of safety, as claimed by the defendants, the jury might well conclude that those rays from the headlight were sufficient to enable the motorman to see the buggy and its predicament in time to avert the collision by stopping the car or checking its speed. If the headlight cast its rays upon the track and upon plaintiff's vehicle when the car was 150 feet away from the crossing, and as appears from some of the testimony, the car could have been stopped within 75 or 80 feet, it would indicate a clear chance on the part of the defendants to avert the collision. The motorman himself testified that he had felt out his car and checked its speed when he noticed the automobile approaching the crossing, and that he released the pressure when the automobile stopped. The jury might well have inferred from this testimony that the motorman should have seen the plaintiff's vehicle in its position of danger in time to slacken the speed or stop the car. From evidence introduced by the plaintiff it is a fair inference that the operator of the car could have slackened its speed sufficiently to have enabled the plaintiff to cross the track in safety.

Entertaining these views, it follows that, in our opinion, the evidence does not establish that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; and, the jury having resolved the question in the plaintiff's favor, this court cannot interfere with its conclusion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. A majority of the justices failing to assent to the granting of the petition for a hearing in this court, the same stands denied.

[7] This court, however, is unanimously of the opinion that what is said in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal with relation to the last clear chance doctrine should not be affirmed. This was not necessary to the decision of that court. The jury were not instructed on that subject, and the facts stated in the opinion and shown by the evidence were not sufficient to establish defendants' liability on that doctrine. *Thompson v. CLARK v. WADE. (Civ. 3838.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 7, 1921. Hearing by Supreme Court Nov. 3, 1921.)

1. Landlord and tenant — 233(1)—Omission in finding in rent action held cured.

In action involving liability for rent, in which the court found that premises were so damaged by fire as to become uninhabitable, and that lessor did not put premises in habitable condition within 60 days after fire as required by the lease, failure to find that it would have been possible for lessor to so do held cured by express finding that lessee was released from liability under the lease by the lessor's failure to repair premises within such period.

2. Landlord and tenant — 188(1)—Lessee held not to have retained possession as tenant after fire and failure to repair.

Lessee did not remain in possession of premises as a tenant so as to be precluded from denying liability under a lease because of the lessor's failure to repair premises within certain period after fire, as required by lease, where he merely kept an employee upon the premises for purpose of preserving the property under lessor's agreement to compensate him for so doing, and where such employee did not refuse lessor access thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Meyer Clark against J. Holmes Wade. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hutchinson, Van Fleet & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Francis Neylan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action brought by him to recover the sum of $613.35, which he alleges to be due for services rendered by him to the defendant in connection with the preservation, protection, and improvement of certain personal property of the defendant situate in the basement of certain premises known as 924 Market street, in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendant filed an answer denying the existence of any such agreement or indebtedness, and also filed a cross-complaint alleging that the plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of $1,750 as rent for the premises above referred to, and which he avers the plaintiff entered into the possession of as the assignee of a certain lease carrying a monthly rental of $250, and remained in possession thereof as such assignee of the lessee from the 23d day of September, 1917, to the 23d day of July, 1918, during which time he failed to pay such stipulated rental.

Upon the trial and submission of the cause the trial court found that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $393.55 for the performance of the above-mentioned services, and for certain expenditures made by him under an agreement with the defendant that he should be paid for such services the reasonable value thereof, and also for his said expenditures in connection therewith. The court also found that the plaintiff had been a tenant under the defendant of the said premises prior to and on the 22d day of December, 1917, but that on said day the premises became uninhabitable by reason of a fire; that the defendant, under the terms of the lease between the parties, was bound to put said premises in a habitable condition if it were possible so to do within a period of 60 days after such fire, and that by reason of his failure so to do the plaintiff had been released of any further obligation to pay rent therefor under the terms of said lease.

The court thus found against the defendant upon his cross-complaint, and so finding ordered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $393.55, together with his costs.

The defendant has appealed from such judgment, urging several errors of the trial court as grounds for the reversal thereof. The first of these is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of the trial court as to the existence of an agreement to pay plaintiff for the work, labor, and services which he was found to have rendered. In making this contention the appellant urges that the trial court held that the contract between the parties was in writing in which the work to be done by the plaintiff was limited to certain specified services. It is true that there was at the beginning some sort of writing between the parties which contained this clause:

"You are hereby authorized to have all sawdust and other refuse in basement at No. 924 Market street removed at our expense. Labor bills incurred in removing water in alleys will be paid by us."

It is also true that during the trial of the cause the court limited the evidence as to the services performed by the plaintiff, and also the expenditures made by him, within the range of this writing; but conceding this, it is apparent that this writing is elastic enough to cover all of the kinds of services which the plaintiff did render, and for which he presented an itemized account, and also to cover the expenditures made by him. In addition to this the evidence shows that the defendant frequently saw the plaintiff at work upon the premises, and the sort of work that he was doing, and that he was making the expenditures in question through the hiring of others to assist him in his work; and that the defendant urged him to keep working and keep his men working, and that he would see that he was paid a fair daily wage. We think these proven facts were such as to amply justify the findings of the court as to what the agreement was between the parties, and what sum was due the plaintiff thereunder.

[1] Upon the other phase of the case presented by the defendant's cross-complaint, we think the evidence also upholds the findings and conclusions of the trial court to the effect that there was a lease between the parties; that the premises covered by the lease were so badly damaged by fire on December 22, 1917, as to become uninhabitable; that the defendant did not put said premises in a habitable condition within 60 days after said fire as under the terms of the lease he was bound to do in order to hold the lessee. It is true that the court does not expressly find that it was possible so to do; but this omission from the finding we think would be cured by the court's express finding that the plaintiff was released from liability under the lease by the defendant's failure within 60 days to repair the premises. There is sufficient evidence in the case to have justified a more express finding by the court in that regard.

[2] The appellant's contention that the proof showed that the plaintiff had remained in possession of the premises in the capacity of a tenant after the fire, and until notice to quit served upon him in July, 1918, and that during said time he had refused defendant access to the premises for the purpose of making necessary repairs, is not borne out by the evidence in the case, since it sufficiently appears that the plaintiff's presence upon the premises after the fire was in the capacity of a workman engaged in preserving the property, and not as a tenant; and that, while he kept the premises locked for the purposes of protection during such times as he was away, he did not refuse the defendant access thereto for any and all purposes when he was there.

Finding, therefore, no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WASHBURN. (Cr. 564.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 2, 1921.)

1. Criminal law §1172(7), 1175—Instruction and conviction on lesser offense than that charged and proved held not prejudicial.

Where accused was charged with the offense of assault with a deadly weapon, which charge was amply supported by the evidence, he could not complain of an instruction on simple assault, nor of his conviction of the lesser offense.

2. Criminal law §822(15)—Refusal to instruct as to accused's testimony held not prejudicial in view of charge given.

In trial for assault with a deadly weapon, refusal of instruction that accused had a right to take the witness stand in his own behalf, and that his testimony should be weighed the same as the testimony of any other witness, held not prejudicial in view of other instructions.

3. Assault and battery §96(3)—Instructions on self-defense need only be clear.

In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, it was no objection to the instructions given on the law of self-defense that they "are not near as clear, near as convincing, do not set forth the facts as vividly as the instructions given by the defendant"; it being sufficient that the legal principles of self-defense were presented in clear and simple terms.

4. Assault and battery §96(3)—Instruction on apparent danger approved.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, an instruction that "if from the evidence you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that without any overt act or physical demonstration upon the part of the complaining witness, P., sufficient to warrant the defendant as a reasonable man in believing that he was in great bodily danger," accused assaulted P. with a deadly weapon, such assault would be unjustified, held proper against the objection that the complaining witness' conduct and language and appearance might justify accused in acting without any overt act or physical demonstration.

5. Criminal law §1172(1)—Instruction requiring overt act or physical demonstration to justify self-defense held not prejudicial.

In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon where the defense was based on the claim that prosecuting witness put his hand in his pocket and advanced toward defendant, an instruction, requiring an overt act or physical demonstration to justify self-defense, if erroneous, held not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

A. J. Washburn was convicted of assault and appeals. Affirmed.

Driver & Driver and Sheridan Downey, all of Sacramento, and G. W. Bedeau, of Marysville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Appellant was charged with the offense of assault with a deadly weapon and convicted of assault. There can be no doubt that the evidence would have amply supported a verdict for the greater offense. Indeed, it is contended by appellant that—

The evidence "shows clearly that if the defendant was guilty of anything at all he was guilty of assault with a deadly weapon and nothing less. There is no evidence in the records of this case to show that the defendant was guilty of simple assault. * * * The prosecuting witness was hit with an irrigating shovel, $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ feet in length, weighing 8 to 10 pounds, with a steel blade. * * * The defendant admits this—admits he hit the prosecuting witness with an irrigating shovel—admits he broke his arm in 13 pieces, and his only defense for the doing of that act was that it was done in self-defense.”

For the foregoing reason appellant contends that the court committed grievous error by instructing the jury as follows:

“The court has given you instructions covering the crime of assault with a deadly weapon; and also covering the crime of assault, which is included in the charge set forth in the amended information. * * * If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did, as charged in said amended information, make an assault upon Pierce, but entertain a reasonable doubt as to whether the same was made with a deadly instrument, then you can return a verdict of guilty only for the crime of assault, or as it is sometimes called, simple assault.”

[1] In support of his position various decisions are cited to the effect that under such a state of the record, there being no evidence tending to prove a lesser offense than the one charged, it is error for the court to instruct as to said lesser offense, or for the jury to find such a verdict. This is the rule not only in other jurisdictions but in this state as well. However, in California the law is held to be that such error is not prejudicial and does not justify the lower court in granting a motion for a new trial or the appellate court in reversing the judgment. The subject received very careful consideration by the Second Appellate district in the case of People v. Tugwell, 32 Cal. App. 520, 163 Pac. 508. In that case the evidence showed beyond question that the defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree, if guilty of any offense at all. Nevertheless, the court instructed the jury that the defendant might be convicted of manslaughter, and they followed this instruction and so found. In commenting upon this phase of the case, after declaring that the lower court erred in giving such instruction, the appellate court declared that—

“The error in giving the instruction, however, does not entitle defendant to a reversal of the order appealed from, for the reason that section 1404 of the Penal Code provides that a verdict shall not be set aside and a new trial granted on the motion of a defendant, except for some omission or error prejudicial to his substantial rights.”

The court further said:

“The greater offense, that of murder, includes all of the elements of the lesser, that of manslaughter. The sufficiency of the evidence to prove that defendant unlawfully killed deceased is not and cannot be questioned. This being true, and conceding, as claimed by appellant, that if defendant was guilty of the unlawful killing, such act was by the evidence conclusively shown to have been accompanied by malice aforethought, thus making it murder in the first degree, how can it be said that he was prejudiced because the jury, due to the erroneous instruction, did not, as it should have done, find him guilty of the greater offense?”

A hearing of said cause was denied by the Supreme Court and the decision is controlling upon this point. Of course, the crime of assault is included in the offense charged in the information herein, and since there was evidence of the greater offense, necessarily there was of the lesser. If the jury had found the defendant guilty of assault with a deadly weapon it could not be said that it was not supported, and he would not complain on this ground. His position really amounts to a criticism of the action of the jury in rejecting one of the serious elements of the crime charged and rendering a more favorable verdict than the record warranted. For we must assume that the jury believed that he was not justified in making the assault, and that if said instruction had not been given they would have found him guilty as charged. People v. Tugwell, supra. There can be no presumption that any of the jurors had any reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, or that if said instruction had not been given, a verdict of not guilty or a disagreement would have resulted. We cannot impute any misconduct or want of integrity to any of the jurors, and we must hold that, while believing the defendant guilty of the greater offense, they found some circumstance of mitigation that inclined them to exercise this clemency. At any rate, it cannot be said that the error was prejudicial or resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[2] Appellant complains because the court refused this instruction:

“This defendant, under the laws of California, has a right to take the witness stand in his own behalf. It is your duty to carefully weigh and consider his testimony as you would the testimony of any other witness. You should not reject and disregard his testimony merely because he is the defendant in this case, but you should apply to his testimony the same rules in determining the credence to which the same is entitled that you would apply to any other witness in the case.” This instruction might well have been given, but its refusal was not prejudicial. It was not necessary to tell the jury that the defendant had the right to take the witness stand in his own behalf. The fact that he was permitted to testify would convince them of that right. Besides, no intelligent jury would need such instruction. Nor was the court required to call special attention to the defendant as a witness since from the general instructions given, the jury must have understood that all the evidence in the case was to be carefully considered, and the same rules applied to all the witnesses for determining their credibility. Indeed the court directed the jury that the defendant "is to be accorded the benefit of the presumption of innocence," and that the evidence must be examined "in the light of this presumption." Moreover the jurors were expressly admonished that—

"The fact that the defendant has been arrested and has been charged with an offense and information has been filed against him creates no presumption whatever of his guilt."

In view of these special directions and the general instructions that they were the exclusive judges of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses, that they were to consider all the evidence in the case and should not act arbitrarily in determining its weight and effect, he would have been a stupid juror that could fail to apply the same measure to the testimony of all the witnesses.

[3] Appellant criticizes the action of the court in refusing certain proposed instructions upon the law of self-defense. However, it is quite apparent that the law upon the subject was fully and correctly given, and this is all that can be required. Indeed, the point of the objection is that—

"The instructions given by the court upon the law of self-defense are not near as clear, near as convincing, do not set forth the facts as vividly as the instructions given by the defendant."

We are not concerned with the question of rhetoric, but it is sufficient for us to perceive that the legal principles applicable to self-defense were presented in clear and simple terms so as to be readily understood.

[4] The only other complaint worthy of notice is that the court erred in giving the following instruction:

"If from the evidence you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that without any overt act or physical demonstration upon the part of the complaining witness, E. A. Pierce, sufficient to warrant the defendant, as a reasonable man, in believing that he was in great bodily danger, he, the said defendant, assaulted the said Pierce with a deadly weapon, as charged in the amended information, then the court instructs you that such assault under such circumstances would not be justified."

The contention is that—

"It is not necessary for the prosecuting witness to make an overt act or physical demonstration before the defendant is justified in striking him. His conduct, his language and his appearance may be such that the defendant would be justified in striking him without any overt act or physical demonstration on behalf of the prosecuting witness."

It is difficult to perceive how there could be any reasonable ground for apprehending great bodily injury in the absence of any overt act or physical demonstration.

[5] Moreover, such an instruction was approved by the Supreme Court in People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 115. Therein the instruction was:

"If from the evidence you believe that, without any overt act, or physical demonstration upon the part of the deceased, sufficient to warrant the defendant as a reasonable man in believing that he was in great bodily danger, he, the defendant, fired the fatal shot at the deceased, and killed him, such killing under such circumstances was not justifiable."

Again, the theory of self-defense was based entirely upon the claim that the prosecuting witness put his hand in his pocket and advanced toward the defendant as though intending to assault the latter. This would constitute, of course, an overt act and a physical demonstration. If it did not occur there was no self-defense in the case. Hence, if the instruction, abstractly considered, had been erroneous, as applied to the evidence at the trial, it could not be prejudicial.

We find nothing in the record to justify a reversal of the cause, and the judgment is affirmed.

HILTON v. HILTON. (Civ. 2339.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 6, 1921.)

1. Divorce §115—Husband may prove adultery by evidence wife bore child during time they had not cohabited.

The presumption of legitimacy of the issue of spouses living together, stated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 5, does not preclude a husband, where he and his wife have lived apart for four or five years, from proving in his divorce action, by his own testimony or that of others, that his wife, though he had no sexual relations with her, gave birth to a child within such period; the purpose of such testimony being, not to establish the child's illegitimacy, but to support the charge of adultery.

2. Divorce §184(12)—Rejection of testimony, on issue of adultery, that defendant wife stated shortly after birth of child that she had not lived with plaintiff for four or five years, prejudicial error.

While, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4, testimony of extrajudicial declarations or verbal admissions of a party is not regarded as very strong or reliable evidence, the rejection, in a husband's divorce action for adultery, of testimony as to statements of defendant a few months after the birth of a child to her, that she and plaintiff had not lived together for four or five years, was prejudicial error, where plaintiff testified he had not during such time had sexual relations with her, while she asserted plaintiff had frequently visited her and maintained such relations.

3. Husband and wife ⚭34—Evidence held to sustain finding that property settlement and deed from wife to husband were procured by undue influence.

In a husband's action for divorce, wherein he set up a prior property settlement with defendant, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that such agreement and a deed pursuant thereto from defendant to plaintiff were procured by undue influence.

4. Husband and wife ⚭48(1)—In transfer of property by one to the other, husband must act in highest good faith.

The relation between husband and wife being of a confidential nature, Civ. Code, §§ 158, 228, require that in a transaction involving the transfer by the one to the other of property of value the husband shall act in the highest good faith toward his wife, to the end that he may not obtain any unfair or unconscientious advantage over her.

5. Husband and wife ⚭48(1)—Before transfer of property to husband, wife should have benefit of preliminary conference with adviser.

In transactions involving the transfer of property between husband and wife, the latter should have the benefit of a full, free, and private preliminary conference with a competent lawyer or business man employed and paid by her, in whom she has confidence, and who would be devoted to her interest only.

6. Deeds ⚭70(5) — Inadequacy of consideration may be considered as tending to show fraud or undue influence inducing transfer of property by wife to husband.

While the want of a valuable consideration for a contract or agreement between husband and wife involving a transfer of property by one to the other is not sufficient to raise the presumption of fraud or undue influence, where the consideration, in view of the confidential relation existing between them, is so small as to shock the conscience, its inadequacy may be considered as tending to establish fraud or undue influence.

7. Husband and wife ⚭279(2)—Wife held not estopped to rescind contract with husband by laches or failure to repay amounts received thereunder.

Where a wife, by reason of undue influence exerted by her husband and family physician, agreed to a property settlement with her husband prior to the institution of a suit for divorce by him, and to deed their home place to him, to be paid for in installments, she did not lose the right to rescind by delay or by her failure to return or tender the payments received by her, where she did not know of her right to rescind until advised by her attorney in the divorce action, and the money received under the contract was used in defraying the living expenses of herself and children.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Albert Hilton against Celia E. Hilton. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

J. E. Greene, of Dinuba, for appellant.

Middlecoff, Scott & Ham, of Visalia, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to secure a divorce from the defendant, and as grounds therefor charged as a first cause of action that the defendant had on divers occasions committed acts of cruelty upon and toward him, and as a second cause of action that she had been guilty of adultery. As to the last charge, the amended complaint alleges:

That three children have been born since said marriage, to wit, Laura Hilton, a daughter, aged 13 years; Edwin Hilton, a son, aged 7 years, and Clarence Hilton, aged about 5 months; "that [paragraph IV of second cause of action] plaintiff and defendant separated in the county of Tulare, state of California, in the month of September, 1914, and ever since said time have continued to live separate and apart; * * * that plaintiff is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges the fact to be true, that defendant did, during the months of June, July, and August, 1918, on the ranch of the plaintiff, in the county of Tulare, * * * and on divers days and times between said month of August, 1918, and the time of the commencement of this action, commit adultery; that the name of the man with whom said act was accomplished is unknown to plaintiff; that the said child Clarence Hilton is not the issue of the marriage of said plaintiff and defendant, but is an illegitimate child of defendant and the man with whom said acts of adultery were hereinbefore alleged to have occurred."

It is further alleged that on the 15th day of December, 1917, and prior to the commencement of this action, the plaintiff and the defendant "entered into an agreement settling their property status, a copy of which agreement is hereunto attached and made a part of this complaint," etc.

By the terms of the agreement referred to, the defendant agreed to execute and deliver to the plaintiff a deed to about 100 acres of land, on which there were improvements—in fact, the home place of the parties, and where they were residing at the time of the making of the agreement—and all the appurtenances of said land, for and in consideration of the sum of $3,500, payable $500 at the time of the execution of the agreement and $500 yearly thereafter until the full sum of $3,500 was paid, no interest chargeable or payable on deferred payments. The agreement provided:

"Until said sum of $3,500.00 is paid in full, said second party [defendant] shall have the right to live in the dwelling house, where she now resides, on the land above described, without the payment of rent therefor, but upon the full payment of said sum of $3,500.00 she agrees that she will give possession and remove from said real property within thirty days after receiving notice so to do from said party of the first part, or his assigns."

It was further covenanted that all the household furniture and the wearing apparel in said dwelling house were to be the sole property of the wife and "all said real property, including farming implements and live stock, is the sole and separate property of said party of the first part [plaintiff]."

The following further provisions were contained in said agreement:

"Said party of the second part is to have the exclusive custody and control of the two minor children of the parties hereto, Laura Hilton, now aged 12 years, and Edwin Hilton, now aged 6 years, but said party of the first part is to have the right to visit said children at any and all reasonable times.

"The payment by said party of the first part to said party of the second part of the sum of thirty-five hundred ($3,500.00) dollars as herein above provided shall be in full payment of every claim and demand of whatsoever kind or nature which said party of the second part now has or may hereafter claim against said party of the first part, including maintenance of herself, of the minor children above mentioned, and so long as said party of the first part shall make such payments as above specified, said party of the second part shall pay all of her own bills and expenses of every kind and nature and shall not incur or cause to be incurred any liability against the said party of the second part."

The defendant's answer specifically denied each and every act of cruelty alleged against her in the complaint, and denied the charge of adultery and that the said Clarence Hilton is her illegitimate son; denied that plaintiff "has not lived with the defendant or cohabited since the times alleged in paragraph IV" of the second cause of action.

Defendant also filed a cross-complaint in which she charged and specifically set forth a series of acts of cruelty, occurring on divers occasions, on the part of the plaintiff towards and upon her. She further alleged in said affirmative pleading that she is, "and at all times mentioned herein," the owner of the land described in the agreement between her and plaintiff whereby she agreed to quitclaim, by a deed of conveyance to the latter, her interest therein. In this connection she charged that the plaintiff and cross-defendant, with the intent to defraud and deprive her of her right to be supported by said cross-defendant, persuaded her to execute the agreement mentioned, that said agreement was entered into by cross-plaintiff without consideration "and was obtained from this cross-plaintiff by said cross-defendant by undue influence, and the same is fraudulent and void as to this cross-plaintiff and the three children of plaintiff and defendant above named, and that said contract should be annulled; and this cross-plaintiff alleges that, on or about said 15th day of December, 1917, said cross-defendant, by the same means by which he obtained said agreement from said cross-plaintiff, and without any consideration received by this cross-plaintiff or parted with by said cross-defendant, obtained from this cross-plaintiff a quitclaim deed to said 100 acres of land, which said quitclaim deed this cross-plaintiff alleges was and is fraudulent and void as against this defendant and said minor children." It is further alleged by cross-complainant that at the time she signed and so executed said agreement and said deed she had no property of her own, nor any way of supporting herself other than by being supported by her said husband, "and these facts were known to plaintiff"; that at said time she had been married to plaintiff for more than 11 years, and that at that time the sum of $500 was not sufficient to support said two children, then born and living, and cross-complainant; that when she executed said agreement and said deed she had no independent advice; that the negotiations leading to the execution by her of said instruments were conducted by the family physician of the parties, and that she did not know at that time, or while said negotiations were pending and being so carried on, that she was entitled to independent advice, and was not informed of her right to such advice or of any of her rights; that since the execution of said instruments she has been compelled to borrow the sum of $150 "in order to supplement said $500 per year as aforesaid"; that "said family physician at said time was interested in said settlement provided by Exhibit A [the agreement], in that he had been told by said plaintiff that, if said physician would procure this cross-complainant to sign said paper, then said plaintiff would pay to said family physician an indebtedness due from said plaintiff to said family physician, consisting of several hundred dollars, but neither said physician nor plaintiff informed cross-complainant of such fact."

The prayer of the cross-complaint is that the cross-plaintiff be granted a divorce; that the agreement and the quitclaim deed mentioned in the pleadings be annulled and set aside; that the custody of the minor children be awarded to cross-complainant; and that there be an award of such alimony for the support of herself and children as the equities of the case might warrant.

The cross-complaint was met by specific denials in an answer thereto by plaintiff, both as to the allegations of cruelty and the charge in the cross-complaint, that the agreement and the deed in question were obtained from cross-complainant by means of undue influence and fraud.

The court found that the allegations of cruelty in both the complaint and the cross-complaint were untrue, and that the charge in the complaint that defendant had been guilty of adultery was not sustained by the evidence, and that said charge was baseless. It was also found, in connection with the finding upon the charge of adultery against the defendant, that the plaintiff and defendant did not separate in the month of September, 1914, or any other time prior to April, 1919; "although said parties occupied two different and separate cottages located on the lands of the plaintiff described in the complaint, said cottages were only a few rods apart, and said parties continued marital relations until after the conception of said Clarence Hilton."

It was further found that the land described in the complaint and in the agreement referred to was, at the time of the execution of the latter instrument and the deed from defendant quitclaiming said property to plaintiff, of the value of $23,000, and contained a house which was the home of and was a suitable home for said plaintiff and defendant and their children, "and was then improved with productive vineyards and orchards; that on said 15th day of December, 1917, said real property was incumbered with a mortgage for the sum of $11,000," the same still subsisting on said property at the time of the commencement of this action; "that at said time defendant was without means and was absolutely dependent upon said plaintiff for support and maintenance for herself and her said minor children; that since said time said real property has increased until at the time of this action it was of the value of $50,000, and the annual income therefrom was $4,800."

The court found that the agreement and the deed in question were procured from defendant by means of undue influence and were unsupported by a consideration, and that they were hence fraudulent and void as to the defendant and the minor children of the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the same should be annulled; that at the time of the execution of said instruments the defendant had no property of her own, and no way of supporting herself, but was solely dependant upon her husband (plaintiff) for support, all of which was then known to plaintiff; that, in the transaction resulting in the execution by her of the two instruments mentioned she was without independent advice, and was ignorant during the pendency of said transaction of her right to such advice therein, and was not informed of her rights in that particular. The court found, precisely as the cross-complaint alleges, that the negotiations culminating in the execution by her of the agreement and the deed in question were conducted by the family physician of the parties hereto, and that said physician was personally interested in the success of said negotiations for the reasons set forth in the cross-complaint as hereinabove stated.

A decree was framed in accord with the findings upon all the vital issues of fact, awarded plaintiff the custody of the minor child Laura Hilton, and the defendant the custody of the minor children Edwin Hilton and Clarence Hilton, and also a monthly allowance of $75 for the support of defendant and the minor children of the parties whose custody was awarded to her, and $175 to be paid by plaintiff to defendant for the purpose of liquidating a loan made by the latter at a certain bank for the support of herself and children after the instruments in question were executed. The appeal is from said decree.

The assignments of error are: (1) That error was committed in the rejection of certain testimony offered by the plaintiff in the support of the charge of adultery; (2) that the finding as to the date of the separation of the parties and the finding that the agreement in question and the deed, which was the culmination thereof, and whereby the defendant quitclaimed to plaintiff whatever interest she had in the land described in said instruments, were procured by means of undue influence, are without sufficient support in the evidence.

1. The assignment first above stated is important because the court found, as we have seen, that neither the allegations of cruelty as set forth in the complaint nor those of cruelty as pleaded in the cross-complaint were sustained by the proofs, thus leaving as a live issue (since there then remained in the case no defense by way of recrimination [Civ. Code, § 122]), the charge made by the plaintiff that the defendant had been guilty of acts of adultery. The said assignment arose from an effort by the plaintiff to prove by the witness Freeman that, in the presence of his wife and himself, on several different occasions within a few months subsequently to the date of the birth of the last child born to the defendant, the latter stated that she and the plaintiff had not lived together or had anything to do with each other "in four or five years." Objection was interposed to the proffered testimony on the ground that it was incompetent as in proof of the charge of adultery. After considerable argument of the point, and counsel for plaintiff had named several other witnesses by whom (so he asserted) he could prove the same declaration by defendant, made within the same period of time, the objection was sustained. The theory upon which the objection was made by counsel for defendant and sustained by the court was that the testimony proposed would necessarily tend to prove the illegitimacy of the child Clarence, the last born to defendant, thus contravening the established policy of the law against the bastardizing of issue born in wedlock upon the statements or declarations or testimony of the parents, or a man and woman living together or cohabiting ostensibly as husband and wife. The objection was based and sustained upon the provisions of subdivision 5 of section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure, viz.:

"That the issue of a wife cohabiting with her husband, who is not impotent, is indisputably presumed to be legitimate."

The theory of said rule is stated as follows by Jones on Evidence, vol. 1, § 96:

"It is well settled on grounds of public policy affecting the children born during the marriage, as well as the parties themselves, that the presumption of legitimacy as to children born in wedlock cannot be rebutted by the testimony of the husband or the wife to the effect that sexual intercourse has or has not taken place between them, nor are the declarations of the husband or wife competent as bearing on the question."

See, also, 2 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 1; Estate of Mills, 137 Cal. 298, 302, 70 Pac. 91, 92 Am. St. Rep. 195; Estate of Walker, 180 Cal. 478, 181 Pac. 792; Estate of McNamara, 181 Cal. 82, 183 Pac. 552, 7 A. L. R. 313.

In the two cases last named the whole subject of the presumptions, both conclusive and disputable, applicable to the question of the legitimacy of issue born in wedlock, is learnedly and exhaustively considered by Mr. Justice Olney; and it seems to have been the view of counsel for defendant in objecting to, and that of the court in excluding, the testimony referred to, that it is by those cases held that the presumption of the legitimacy of issue born in wedlock or during coverture is conclusive even where the husband and wife, although living separate and apart, have, within the period of probable conception and gestation, had opportunity only for coition between each other; that therefore evidence tending to establish the illegitimacy of such issue is wholly incompetent and inadmissible. The cases mentioned do not so hold. Those cases declare, as it was held in the Mills Case, supra, that the word "cohabiting," as used in subdivision 5 of section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "means the living together of a man and woman ostensibly as husband and wife (1 Bishop on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation, § 1669, note 1)," and that where the parties are so living together the issue of the wife is indisputably presumed to be legitimate, but that, on the other hand, "it is always permitted to show that it was not possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father, as by showing impotency on his part, want of intercourse during the possible period of conception, or that the child is of a race or color such that it could not have been conceived by the husband." Estate of Walker, supra, 180 Cal. 491, 181 Pac. 797. In the Estate of Mills, supra, however, the following language is used and it is probable that upon that language the counsel for defendant principally relies to support his position:

"Illegitimacy may be proved; but it cannot be proved by the evidence of a husband or wife that while living together they did not have sexual intercourse."

But this language, or the rule as thus stated, while perfectly consistent with the provision of subdivision 5 of section 1962, Code of Civil Procedure, as the word "cohabiting" as therein used is interpreted by the decisions, does not preclude or declare as incompetent the testimony of either the husband or wife, upon the issue of the legitimacy of a child born in wedlock, of nonintercourse, where they have not "cohabited" or not lived together at the time and during the period of conception and gestation.

The evidence very plainly discloses that the present case does not fall within the result reached in the Mills Case. The testimony of both the plaintiff and the defendant was as one upon the proposition that they had not, for a number of years prior to the birth of the last child, Clarence, born to Mrs. Hilton, lived together in the same house or dwelling. The plaintiff stated that the period of time during which the separation between them had existed down to the date of the trial was between five and six years. The defendant, while candidly admitting that they had not lived together for a number of years, was not able to give the exact period during which they lived separate and apart, giving it as her opinion, however, that it was three or four years. The evidence without conflict shows that at some date several years before the birth of said child the plaintiff left the dwelling in which he and defendant had been living together and took up his abode in a cabin on the same land on which the dwelling was situated and about 100 yards distant from said dwelling, and there slept and had his meals, preparing them himself, for a period of several years prior to the date of the birth of the child; that during that period of time he never on any occasion slept or had a meal in said dwelling; that defendant during said period never had a meal or slept in the cabin so occupied by the plaintiff; that they often met, but seldom, if ever, spoke to or exchanged greetings with each other. Besides this evidence, there is the agreement dated and presumably executed on the 15th day of December, 1917, whereby the defendant agreed for the consideration therein specified to relinquish to plaintiff all her right and title in and to the land described in said instrument, and which contained, among other things, this recital:

"* * * That the parties hereto are now and for several years last past have been living separate and apart, and it appearing that there is no reasonable prospect of their effecting a reconciliation and resuming the marital relation: * * * Now, therefore, it is mutually agreed," etc.

[1] But the case at bar is wholly different from the cases above referred to. The issue submitted for decision was entirely different. In those cases the question of the legitimacy of the child was directly in issue; it was, indeed, the principal issue, and directly affected the status of the child with respect to an inheritance. Here the question or issue tendered by the pleadings is not whether the child last born to defendant was legitimate, but whether the defendant had been, as charged in the complaint, guilty of having sexual relations with some person other than the plaintiff, her husband. In other words, as has been shown, the plaintiff sought a decree of divorce from the defendant on the ground, among others, that the latter had committed the marital offense of adultery, and he was entitled to prove his case precisely as any other issue of fact may be proved—that is to say, that he may prove it by any relevant fact or circumstance which he may in a competent manner be able to present—and if, as is the theory of the plaintiff in this action, the evidence offered to prove the fact of the adultery of the wife must, in the very nature of the situation, disclose that a child born to the wife is not the child of the husband, or is, in other words, an illegitimate child, that fact is only, so far as the child is concerned, an unfortunate incident of competent proof essential to the establishment of the ultimate fact. At any rate, as before stated, where, as appears to be the uncontroverted fact here, the husband and wife have lived separate and apart for a period of four or five years, it is undoubtedly competent, in an action for divorce on the ground of the adultery of the wife, for the husband, either by his own testimony or that of other witnesses, to prove that, although he has had no sexual relations with his wife during such period of time, she has nevertheless conceived and given birth to a child within said period; the dominant purpose of such testimony not being to establish the fact of the illegitimacy of the child, but solely for the purpose of supporting the charge of adultery against the mother of the child, as alleged in the complaint. Obviously no more forceful or persuasive testimony of the fact of the wife's adultery in a case like the present as to the facts than that disclosing that she had conceived and borne a child within a period of time during which the husband had never had sexual relations with or access to her can be imagined.

The conclusion necessarily following from the foregoing views is that the court below committed error in its action disallowing the proposed testimony, and that the ruling rejecting said testimony was prejudicial, for reasons now to be considered, there can be no doubt.

[2] While testimony of the extrajudicial declarations or verbal admissions of a party is not regarded as very strong or very reliable evidence (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4), still, under the circumstances of this case, the rejected testimony proposed by the plaintiff that the defendant had made statements from which it could justly be inferred that there had been no sexual relations maintained between herself and the plaintiff for a period of four or five years prior to and down to the date of the birth of the child last born to her would be of singular or unusual importance and significance upon the issue of adultery, since it appears that the plaintiff with apparent positiveness testified that he had not at any time from the date of their separation, some four or five years prior to the date of the birth of said child, down to the happening of said event, had sexual relations with the defendant, while, on the other hand, the defendant asseverated that, notwithstanding that they had lived separate and apart for a number of years, the plaintiff had frequently during said period of separation visited her house in the daytime and maintained such relations with her. There was no other testimony from either side addressed to that question, and hence it is manifest that thereon a direct and pronounced conflict was presented, and thus the importance of the testimony which plaintiff unavailingly attempted to place before the court and into the record becomes plainly apparent. If said testimony is to be believed (a matter for the trial court to determine), and the statements thus attributed to the defendant are to be interpreted to mean, as with much reason they might be so interpreted, that she, during the period of time alleged to have been mentioned by her, had not sustained sexual relations with the plaintiff, then it would obviously be sufficient to turn the scale upon the issue of adultery in favor of the plaintiff.

[3] 2. The finding that the agreement and the deed in question were procured by means of undue influence is sustained by the evidence.

It was shown that the property described in the instruments in question was at the time of the execution of said instruments of the value of $23,000; that part of the land was devoted to the growing of grapes and other fruits, and that the annual proceeds from the sale thereof were amply sufficient to maintain the family; that the defendant at the times mentioned was not aware of the value of the property or the income derived therefrom; that, having had a disagreement with the plaintiff and been mistreated by the plaintiff's children by a former wife, and having also a large part of the time been ill, her mind was so unsettled that she actually was incapable of exercising such judgment in the transaction as would enable her to protect her rights. It was also shown, as the court found, that the negotiations resulting in the execution of the agreement and the deed were conducted by the family physician, who admitted upon the witness stand that the plaintiff promised him that he (plaintiff) would pay said physician a debt of several hundred dollars due from plaintiff to said physician in the event that he (the physician) succeeded in inducing the defendant to make the agreement and execute the deed. It is made to appear that the wife was without independent advice or advice from some disinterested party or some one employed by her for that purpose, who could have explained to her the importance of the transaction and the consequences thereof.

[4, 5] The relation between a husband and wife is of a confidential nature, and the law requires that, in a transaction involving the transfer by the one to the other of property of value the husband shall act in the highest good faith toward his wife, to the end that he may not obtain any unfair or unconscientious advantage over her in such transaction. Civ. Code, §§ 158, 2228. In other words, as is said by Mr. Greenleaf in his work on Evidence (section 688), there must be in such case no such constraint imposed upon the wife by the husband as to prevent her from exercising her free will with relation to the transaction. Moreover, the rule is that in transactions involving the transfer of property between the husband and wife the latter should have "the benefit of a full, free, and private preliminary conference with a competent lawyer or business man, who was employed and paid by her, and in whom she had confidence, and who would be devoted to her interest and hers only." Pironi v. Corrigan, 47 N. J. Eq. 157, 20 Atl. 227; Yordi v. Yordi, 6 Cal. App. 20, 91 Pac. 348, and cases therein cited.

[6] While it is true that the want of a valuable consideration for a contract or agreement between husband and wife involving a transfer of property by one to the other is not of itself sufficient to raise the presumption of fraud or undue influence in the procurement of such agreement, yet where, as here, there is a valuable consideration for the agreement which, when viewed by the light of the confidential relation existing between the parties, is so small as to "shock the conscience," the fact of the inadequacy of the consideration may be considered as a circumstance tending to support the claim that the consummation of the transaction has not been free from fraud or undue influence. In this case it is obvious that the consideration is wholly inadequate. The fact is that the amount which the wife appears to have agreed to take in consideration of her relinquishment of all her rights in the property, and indeed her right to support by the plaintiff, is ridiculously small—in fact, hardly sufficient to support herself and children in a proper manner for a period of two years—and when this is considered together with the other circumstances to which we have above adverted, it is clear that the finding of the court that the agreement and the deed were procured by means of undue influence is sufficiently supported. Indeed, it may justly be said that upon its face the agreement is as to defendant so improvident as to give it little, if any, standing in a court of conscience.

[7] It is contended, however, that the defendant is not entitled to a rescission of the agreement for the reason that she postponed rescinding the same for a long period of time after its execution, and that she had borrowed the sum of $150, hypothecating the agreement as security for the loan, and that she had received the payments due under the agreement up to the time of the commencement of this action and had not returned or offered to return the same or any amount which she had received under the agreement. The evidence shows that she was not informed or knew of her right to rescind until after she had been so advised by her attorney at the time she employed him to defend the present action. But manifestly this is not a case requiring the defendant to restore or offer to restore any money she received from the plaintiff under the terms of the agreement to entitle her to a decree rescinding the same. The money she received under the agreement she used in defraying the living expenses of herself and two children, and she thus received from the plaintiff nothing more than she would have been entitled to receive from him before the agreement was executed. The plaintiff, therefore, could not have been injuriously affected by a failure on the part of the defendant to restore the money he paid to her under the contract. Besides, the plaintiff knew, or at least he must have known, that the money he paid to her under the agreement would be used by her for her support, and therefore was fully aware of the fact that, in case she did rescind or attempt to rescind the agreement, she would be unable to repay the money paid thereunder; she having no other property or money with which she could repay the amounts received by her. See More v. More, 133 Cal. 489, 65 Pac. 1044, 66 Pac. 76; Gatje v. Armstrong, 145 Cal. 370, 78 Pac. 872; Cal. Farm & Fruit Co. et al. v. Schiappa-Pietra, 151 Cal. 732, 91 Pac. 593; Richards v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 7 Cal. App. 387, 94 Pac. 393.

The judgment must be reversed because of the ruling of the court above considered, excluding testimony offered by the plaintiff of alleged admissions by the defendant that she and her husband had not lived together and had had nothing to do with each other for a number of years prior to the date of the birth of the child last born to her. Accordingly the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to try de novo and so determine the single issue of adultery.

PELOIAN et al. v. WALDMAN. (Civ. 3916.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨334(4)—Demand that purchaser should sign contract not in accord with memorandum of sale a withdrawal of vendor's acceptance of offer.

Where a vendor demanded that purchasers should sign a contract for a deed containing conditions not in accord with the provisions of a memorandum of sale, which constituted the original contract, his action amounted to a withdrawal of his acceptance of the offer of the purchasers, and entitled them to a return of a deposit of part payment on the purchase price.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨102—"Rescission of contract" accomplished by acts indicating intention.

A vendor rescinding a contract need not use the word "rescind," since any appropriate words or any definite acts by which he indicates that he will not further proceed with fulfillment of the contract, and that he will not permit the vendees to proceed further with the performance of their obligation, will amount to a "rescission" or abandonment of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Rescission.]

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨334(4)—Money paid as a deposit or as a forfeit on a contract may be recovered by vendees on rescission by vendor.

A vendee's deposit on a contract of sale even if it is referred to as a forfeit, upon rescission of the contract by the vendor, remains as money had and received to the use of the vendees, subject to be recovered in appropriate action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by John Peloian and another against P. H. Waldman. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Williams & Fenstermacher, of Fresno, for appellant.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiffs brought this action in assumpsit to recover $1,000 alleged to have been received by the defendant for their use. The defendant answered, denying the indebtedness, and by way of a further defense, set up a contract for the purchase and sale of real estate, entered into by the plaintiffs, the payment of $1,000 as a deposit and part of the purchase price, the violation of the terms of the agreement on the part of the plaintiffs, and the retention by defendant of the $1,000 as liquidated damages because of the breach of the contract. The lower court found the facts to be as alleged in the answer, except that it determined that it was the defendant who breached the agreement for the purchase of the real property, and that it was he who had not performed the conditions of the contract. It held that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the money paid, and entered judgment accordingly. Defendant has appealed.

[1] The facts upon which the court based its decision are few and without apparent conflict. On December 20, 1919, through the medium of a real estate agent, the plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the defendant for the purchase by them from him of 20 acres of land in Fresno county, together with sundry personal property, for the sum of $21,000, $1,000 of which was paid in cash, the receipt of which was acknowledged by the defendant, the balance to be paid in accordance with the terms of the memorandum of agreement prepared by the real estate agent which was in writing, approved and accepted by both plaintiffs and defendant. The memorandum called for a further payment of $3,500 and a note for $1,000, on delivery of a contract setting forth certain covenants and conditions upon which the sale was to be made, and provided that a contract for a deed in the usual form, and containing the usual clauses, warranties and covenants between the vendor and vendees, should be executed. The contract was also to provide that the payments for the land should be made by the retention by the vendor of 60 per cent. of all crops produced on the land until such time as the balance of the purchase price, $15,500 and interest, should be paid,

Several proposed contracts were drawn by the defendant and submitted to the plaintiffs, all of which contained provisions objectionable to them and not in keeping with the terms of the memorandum. Plaintiffs refused to sign. On January 20, 1920, the defendant presented another contract, signed by himself and wife, to the plaintiffs and at the same time delivered to them a written notice which required them to sign the proposed agreement by 6 o'clock of that day. Failure to comply with the demand, the notice stated, was to be construed as a breach of plaintiff's offer to purchase, and the $1,000 deposit would thereupon be forfeited as liquidated damages. This contract, like the others tendered by the defendant, contained additional covenants not provided for by the preliminary agreement, and not in accordance with its terms. One of these conditions required that the 1920 crop of raisins grown on the premises should be delivered to the California Associated Raisin Company, instead of being applied in payment of the purchase price. Another provision of the tendered contract was that the land was sold subject to a crop mortgage for $300, also subject to an agreement between the seller and one Peter Musto, the exact nature of which does not clearly appear in the proposed agreement, but which is foreign to the terms of the memorandum. The provision for the payment of taxes was not in accord with the original understanding. The plaintiffs refused to sign the agreement upon the ground that the objectionable features not contemplated by the original agreement were included, and demanded a return of their deposit. Defendant took the stand that the contract was at an end, and retained the money. The lower court found that the acts of the appellant amounted to such a withdrawal of his acceptance of the offer of the respondents as to entitle them to the return of the money paid as a deposit and part payment on the purchase price. It held, in effect, that the contract was rescinded by the appellant. Its conclusion, we think, was correct.

[2] It was not necessary for the appellant to use the word "rescind" in order to accomplish what is meant by that term. Any appropriate words, or any definite acts by which a vendor indicates that he will not further proceed with the fulfillment of the contract, and that he will not permit the vendees to proceed further with the performance of their obligation on their part to be performed, will be taken to amount to a rescission, or an abandonment of the contract, so far as the vendor is concerned, and will be held to entitle the vendees not in default to their choice of remedies for the breach, one of which is to sue for the return of the money already paid on the contract. Pearson v. Brown, 27 Cal. App. 125, 131, 148 Pac. 956.

[3] The money paid as a deposit, or even "as a forfeit" remains in the hands of the vendor as money had and received to the use of the vendees, subject to be recovered by them in an appropriate action for that purpose. Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 321, 24 Pac. 280, 18 Am. St. Rep. 187; Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 452, 25 Pac. 749, 22 Am. The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ZARI. (Cr. 945.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Sept. 3, 1921.)

1. Homicide ⚡237—Accused must prove insanity by preponderance of evidence.

Accused, charged with murder and pleading insanity, must establish insanity by a preponderance of the evidence.

2. Homicide ⚡253(4)—Evidence held to show murder in first degree.

In prosecution for wife murder, evidence held to show the killing was without considerable or any provocation, and under circumstances showing an abandoned and malignant heart, so that a verdict of murder in the first degree, rather than manslaughter, was justified.

3. Criminal law ⚡48—Irrationality not test of insanity.

Although one may be irrational, yet if he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, and to know that it is wrong and criminal, and will subject him to punishment, he must be held responsible for his conduct.

4. Homicide ⚡286(1)—Instruction as to presumption of intent from act held proper.

In a murder trial, an instruction that the law conclusively presumes a malicious and guilty intent from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another was proper, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 2.

5. Criminal law ⚡858(4)—Statute permitting written instructions to be taken to jury room construed.

In a murder trial, where, during its deliberations, the jury returned to the courtroom and asked further explanation of the term "malice," and the court read to the jurors Pen. Code, § 188, it was proper, at the request of one of the jurors, to have the Code section copied to be taken into the jury room, as against the objection that, under section 1137, if this were done, all of the instructions should be reduced to writing and handed to the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Angelo Zari was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals from the order Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of San Francisco, and V. L. Hatfield, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WASTE, P. J. The appellant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to a term of life imprisonment. He appeals from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and from the judgment.

The facts are few and simple. On May 17, 1920, in a dispute over the possession of certain bank books, the defendant cut his wife's throat with a pocketknife, inflicting injuries from which she died instantly. There were no eyewitnesses to the homicide. Neighbors who heard sounds of the disturbance in the Zari home summoned the police officers. When they arrived the wife lay dead upon the floor, and the defendant was lying near, face downward, with a long cut, described by the surgeons as "more of a superficial wound," across his neck. He had the knife in his hand. When removed to the emergency hospital for treatment the defendant told a representative of the district attorney's office that he "had some trouble with her [his wife], and he killed her with a knife." Later, on the same day, a police officer asked him, "Why did you kill your wife?" and he replied, "I killed her because she had the bank books and wouldn't give them back to me."

[1, 2] The defendant interposed and sought to sustain the defense of insanity. It was incumbent upon him to establish such insanity by a preponderance of the evidence. In the estimation of the jury he did not do so, and it therefore properly disregarded the plea. People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 552, 89 Pac. 124. He now contends that he was improperly convicted of murder, upon facts which show nothing more than manslaughter. We have carefully scrutinized the record, and are fully satisfied that this contention cannot be upheld. It is very evident that the jury was not impressed with the story told by the defendant in the light of other compelling features of the case. The circumstances surrounding the brutal killing of the defendant's wife, and the events leading up to it, confirm his own admissions made immediately following the commission of the crime. The record amply supports the theory of the prosecution, which was manifestly accepted by the jury, that the killing was without considerable, or any, provocation, and under such circumstances as to show an abandoned and malignant heart on the part of the defendant.

[3] The appellant complains of the refusal of the trial court to give certain instructions, but we find no error was thus committed.

The requested instruction that absence of proof of motive is a circumstance tending to show innocence, and might in itself create a reasonable doubt of guilt, was properly covered by an instruction given by the court. The requested instruction that, if the jury believed from the evidence that the defendant's mind was irrational at the time of the homicide, even though caused by the continual or excessive use of alcoholic or intoxicating beverages, it was its duty to find the defendant not guilty by reason of insanity, was properly refused. It is not a correct statement of the law on the matter. Although one may be irrational, yet if he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, and to know that it is wrong and criminal, and will subject him to punishment, he must be held responsible for his conduct. People v. Willard, supra, 150 Cal. 554, 89 Pac. 124. The question of insanity and its relation to this case was amply covered by the court's charge. The defendant submitted two instructions relating to manslaughter which the court might properly have given. The omission however, was cured by another instruction, and the submission to the jury of a form of verdict by which it might have returned a verdict of manslaughter, had it been so disposed.

[4] Appellant also complains of the giving of certain instructions. The precise instruction, given in the case—to the effect that the jury should not be governed by sympathy—was approved in People v. Borjorquez, 35 Cal. App. 350, 353, 169 Pac. 922. The instruction that the jury was not to consider whether or not the defendant was insane at the time of the trial, but was to consider him then sane, was proper. The instruction that if the jury believed that the evidence proved to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the acts of the defendant were inspired by hatred and revenge, and were not those of an insane person, it was its duty to find the defendant guilty, when read with the other instructions, was not error. The instruction that the law conclusively presumes a malicious and guilty intent from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another, was also proper. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 2; People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 165, 22 Pac. 127, 549; People v. Boling, 83 Cal. 380, 382, 23 Pac. 421.

[5] The giving of written instructions was waived by both sides, and the court delivered its charge orally. During its deliberations the jury returned to the courtroom and requested a further explanation of the meaning of the word "malice." The court thereupon read to the jurors section 188 of the Penal Code. One of them requested that the Code section be copied, and delivered to the foreman, to be taken into the jury room. The defendant objected unless all of the instructions were reduced to writing and handed to the jury. The objection was overruled. The section was copied and delivered to the jury as requested. The appellant now assigns this conduct as prejudicial error. He bases his contention upon his construction of section 1137 of the Penal Code, which provides that upon retiring, the jury may take with it, "the written instructions given." We do not think it was ever contemplated by the Legislature that the court might not, if requested by the jury, reduce to writing a portion of the oral instructions, and submit it to them for consideration, just as it might if the instructions had, in fact, been part of a written charge. To hold that under such circumstances as those here reviewed it was incumbent upon the trial judge to reduce a lengthy charge to writing, in order to allow one short Code section to be copied and taken into the jury room for the instruction of the jurors, who asked for nothing more, would result in working an absurdity. The point is absolutely devoid of merit.

The order denying a new trial and the judgment are, and each is, affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Sept. 7, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 3, 1921.)

Vendor and purchaser ⚡228(5, 6)—Principal defrauded by agent of half interest in property entitled to entire interest as against purchaser with notice.

Where purchaser's agent and third person misrepresented to purchaser that vendor required a cash payment of $13,000, instead of $5,000, induced purchaser to permit third person to contribute $6,500 and receive an undivided half interest in the property, and retained the $1,500 excess paid by purchaser, the transaction was fraudulent, and entitled purchaser to entire interest in the property as against one who purchased third person's interest, without consideration and with knowledge of fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Meister, also called Charles Meister against Joe Lawrence, in which the defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Meredith, Landis & Chester, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Aram & Carraghar and Clifford A. Russell, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff commenced this action in ejectment involving the ownership of an undivided one-half interest in certain property situated in Contra Costa county. Defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint, attacking plaintiff's title as having been founded on fraud. Judgment went for defendant on this cross-complaint, quieting his title to the entire interest in the property, and from this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The facts of the case material to the opinion are that prior to the 8th day of February, 1918, defendant employed one Curtis as his agent to negotiate the purchase for him of the property in suit from one Kirk. The agent arranged with the owner for the purchase of the property for the full price of $43,768.40, of which amount the sum of $5,000 was to be paid down, and the balance was to be secured by a deed of trust upon the property. He then, in conjunction with one Goggins, fraudulently represented to defendant that the full purchase price of the property was $52,800, of which amount $13,000 must be paid down. Through the connivance of Curtis and Goggins the defendant was then induced to agree to permit Goggins to join in the purchase of the property upon the fraudulent terms which were thus presented to him, and for this purpose defendant, on February 8, 1918, entered into a written agreement with Goggins, reciting that, whereas each of them had deposited the sum of $6,500 on account of the purchase price of $52,800 for the property, and that the deed therefor was to be delivered in defendant's name, and Goggins had agreed to sign and execute a joint note and deed of trust for the balance of the purchase price of the property, he (Goggins) was declared to be the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the property. When defendant discovered that the purchase price of the property was but $43,768.40, that but $5,000 was paid to the owner, that Goggins paid in nothing, and that he and Curtis retained $1,500 of the $6,500 which defendant had paid as his half of the first payment, he immediately complained of the fraud, procured a warrant for the arrest of Goggins, and employed counsel to adjust the difficulties and protect his rights. About this time Curtis died, and Goggins transferred his interest, evidenced by the paper of February 8, 1918, to one Wright. Plaintiff, who was a creditor of a partnership composed of Goggins, Curtis, and one other, on the 14th day of October, 1918, took a deed from Wright, conveying all the right, title, and interest in this property which he had received through the transfer from Goggins. No consideration was paid by plaintiff for this conveyance, but either a partial or complete adjustment of plaintiff's claim against the Goggins partnership was made through the transaction. It is upon this chain of title that plaintiff relies as evidence of his ownership of the property in suit.

The court found that Curtis and Goggins, who were business associates, made the false representations to the defendant hereinafter recited, and that these acts were a fraud upon defendant; that on the 16th day of August, 1918, plaintiff for the first time discovered the fraud; that he immediately sought both Curtis and Goggins, but he was unable to see Curtis because he was at that time sick in the hospital and died on the 18th day of August; that after diligent search he located Goggins, and confronted him with the information which he had, but that he ran from him and has not since been found; that in the early part of September, 1918, plaintiff sought out defendant and inquired of him as to the interest of said Goggins in said property; that defendant thereupon informed plaintiff that Goggins had no interest therein, and explained to him all the details of the fraud which had been practiced upon him; that thereafter and on the 24th of September, 1918, Goggins purported to assign all his interest in the property to one O. H. Wright, but that said transfer was without consideration and that on the 14th of October, 1918, said Wright purported to transfer his interest in the property to plaintiff, but that said transfer was also without consideration. Finally, the court found that when plaintiff took the transfer from Wright he was fully informed of all the fraudulent acts which have been detailed, and that neither plaintiff nor Wright were bona fide purchasers of said property.

The evidence amply sustains every material portion of the findings of the trial court. As to the good faith of plaintiff, it is made plain by the testimony of numerous witnesses that before he took the transfer from Wright he was fully informed regarding the fraud, that he was told that a warrant had been issued upon a complaint charging Goggins with embezzlement in the transaction, and that Goggins had no enforceable claim against defendant or any interest in the property. It also appeared that Wright was merely a tool in the hands of Goggins, used for the purpose of covering his fraud. From all the circumstances surrounding these latter transfers, the inference could fairly be drawn that no consideration passed to Wright. The circumstances were sufficient to put any reasonable person on notice. There is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FRITZ. (Cr. 1001.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 6, 1921. Rehearing Denied Oct. 6, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 3, 1921.)

1. Indictment and information $\hookrightarrow$ 143—Defect waived by defendant's failure to move to have information set aside.

Defendant, by failure to move to set aside information not subscribed by district attorney under Pen. Code, §§ 809, 995, waived the defect under section 996, and was thereafter precluded from taking advantage thereof.

2. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1035(2), 1166(1)—Failure to furnish testimony in lower court before trial in superior court held not ground for reversal.

In prosecution for violation of state Medical Practice Act, § 17, that defendant when case was called for trial in the superior court had not received a copy of the transcript of testimony taken in the lower court, demanded when defendant was arraigned, held not ground for reversal, where no continuance was asked and no objection made to proceeding with the trial, and no showing or claim made that defendant was prejudiced, and where the transcript was furnished during the trial and was used by defendant's counsel with apparent familiarity.

3. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1166½(6) — That court proceeded to impanel jury though some of regular jurors did not respond to roll call held not ground for reversal.

That court proceeded to impanel jury though some of the jurors upon the regular panel failed to respond upon roll call held not ground for reversal, in absence of showing that any objectionable juror was forced upon defendant after she had exhausted her peremptory challenges.

4. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 811(5)—Instruction as to weight to be given testimony of hired detectives or state agents held improper.

In prosecution for violation of State Medical Practice Act, § 17, instruction as to the weight to be given testimony of hired detectives or state agents held improper in that it singled out the testimony of a particular class of witnesses for comment.

5. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1172(2)—Improper instruction not ground for reversal where evidence clearly established defendant's guilt.

In prosecution for violation of State Medical Practice Act, § 17, instruction on the weight to be given testimony of hired detectives or state agents held not ground for reversal, where the evidence clearly established defendant's guilt.

6. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 811(1)—Instructions singling out testimony of particular witness for comment improper.

Instructions should not single out the testimony of a particular witness for comment, or comment on the weight to be attached to a particular piece of evidence.

7. Criminal law ⚡811(6)—Instructions singling out defendant's testimony for comment improper.

In prosecution for violation of State Medical Practice Act, § 17, instruction that no greater presumption attaches in favor of defendant's testimony than attaches in favor of that of any other witness held improper, in that it singled out the testimony of a particular witness for comment.

8. Criminal law ⚡1172(2)—Improper instruction not ground for reversal where evidence clearly established defendant's guilt.

In prosecution for violation of State Medical Practice Act, § 17, instruction that no greater presumption attaches in favor of defendant's testimony than attaches in favor of that of any other witness, though improper, was not ground for reversal, where the evidence clearly established defendant's guilt.

9. Criminal law ⚡655(5)—Court's discussion before jury with defendant's counsel, as to the effect of his argument to jury, improper.

Court's discussion with defendant's counsel, in jurors' presence, as to the import and effect of his argument to the jury, held improper.

10. Criminal law ⚡1166½(13)—Impropriety of court's discussion with defendant's counsel, in jurors' presence, as to effect of counsel's remarks to jury, held cured by instructions.

Impropriety of court's discussion with defendant's counsel, in presence of jury, as to effect of counsel's remarks to jury, held cured by instructions charging jurors not to consider the conversation between defendant's counsel and the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Harold Loudersback, Judge.

Rose Fritz was convicted of violating the State Medical Practice Act, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin V. McKenzie, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen. (Harry A. Encell, of San Francisco, and Frank M. Smith, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for the People.

WASTE, P. J. The appellant was convicted in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco of the crime of misdemeanor, to wit, a violation of section 17 of the State Medical Practice Act (St. 1917, p. 93), and was sentenced to pay a fine of $300, or, in default thereof, to be confined in the county jail for a term of 60 days. She appeals from the judgment of conviction and sentence.

[1] The information in the case is not subscribed by the district attorney or any one acting in his behalf, for which reason the appellant contends that there is no valid information on file. It is undoubtedly the law that an information in this state must be subscribed by the district attorney (Pen. Code, § 809), and that the information must be set aside by the court in which the defendant is arraigned upon his motion, if it be not so subscribed (Pen. Code, § 995). But if the motion to set aside the information is not thus timely made, and none was made in this case, the defendant will be held to have waived the objection, and is precluded from afterwards taking advantage of the defect. Pen. Code, § 996; People v. Johnston, 48 Cal. 549, 550; People v. Villarino, 66 Cal. 228, 230, 5 Pac. 154.

[2] When the case was called for trial the defendant's counsel stated to the court that he had never received a copy of the transcript of testimony taken in the lower court which, he asserted, he had demanded when the defendant was arraigned, and asked that the record show the fact. He asked for no continuance of the matter, and made no objection to proceeding with the trial. There is nothing in the record to show, and appellant does not now assert, that she suffered any prejudice by reason of the alleged failure to receive the transcript. During the trial such a transcript was present, and was used by counsel for the appellant with apparent familiarity.

[3] At the inception of the trial upon the call of the roll of the regular jury panel, some of the jurors did not answer to their names. The appellant objected to proceeding unless the court should compel the missing talesmen to be brought into court. The court overruled the objection and directed the clerk to proceed with impaneling the jury, in the process of which the defendant exhausted all of her peremptory challenges. She now contends that she was deprived of the right to have all of the jurors upon the panel present in court. We do not think there is any merit in this contention, for the defendant is only entitled to a fair and impartial jury, not a jury composed of any particular individuals. People v. Durant, 116 Cal. 179, 199, 48 Pac. 75; People v. Schafer, 161 Cal. 573, 577, 119 Pac. 920; People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 520, 157 Pac. 599. It is not shown in the record, nor suggested by appellant in her briefs, that any objectionable juror was forced upon her after she had exhausted her peremptory challenges.

There is nothing in the contention of the appellant that the verdict rendered is at variance with the allegations of the information, which charges the defendant with violating the provisions of section 17 of the Medical Practice Act of the State of California, setting out the facts. The verdict follows the charging part of the information, which is sufficient. The proof that the defendant held herself out as a practitioner, that she examined patients, and prescribed for their ailments, is in accord with the allegations of the facts alleged in the information on which the charge of violation of the section of the Medical Practice Act is predicated.

[4-6] The court instructed the jury that it should not disregard the testimony of hired detectives, or state agents, who testified in the case, solely and only for the reason that they had been thus employed, but should give their testimony the same consideration as any other testimony in the case, giving it such weight as, considering its nature, the opportunity for knowing the facts to which the witnesses testified, their appearance and demeanor upon the witness stand, and all other elements which might go to their credibility, including their interest and bias, and should give to their testimony such weight as, under the circumstances, the same in their judgment was entitled to receive. The giving of this instruction was not reversible error, although it rarely happens that a trial judge is warranted in charging the jury respecting the credibility of any witness, or particular class of witnesses, or the manner in which their testimony should be received. It were far better to charge the jurors generally concerning such matters, and let the subject rest there. Instructions which single out the testimony of a particular witness for comment, and instructions bearing on the weight to be attached to a particular piece of evidence, should not be given. People v. Converse, 28 Cal. App. 687, 689, 153 Pac. 734.

[7, 8] The defendant took the stand in her own behalf. The court instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that while the defendant in a criminal action is not required to take the stand and testify, yet if she does so, her credibility and the value and effect of her evidence are to be weighed and determined by the same rules as the credibility and effect and value of the evidence of any other witness is determined. If a defendant elects to take the stand and testify in her own behalf, her testimony is to be weighed in the same manner, and measured according to the same standard, as the testimony of any other witness, and the tests for determining credibility of witnesses as given you in another part of the instructions are to be applied to her testimony alike with that of all other witnesses. No greater presumption attaches in favor of her testimony than attaches in favor of that of any other witness."

Appellant complains of the instruction, particularly that portion which is underscored. It has been repeatedly pointed out that it is bad practice for the trial judge to single out the testimony of any witness, especially if the witness be the defendant, and instruct with particular reference to his testimony. While an instruction as to the defendant's testimony, which is not a departure from instructions that have been allowed to pass by the Supreme Court, does not furnish sufficient ground for reversal, attention has been repeatedly called to the criticism of similar instructions in the more recently decided cases (People v. Anderson, 105 Cal. 32, 35, 38 Pac. 513), and it has been emphatically held that justice would be more surely accomplished if no such instructions were given, and the credibility of the defendant were left entirely to the jury (People v. Boren, 139 Cal. 210, 215, 72 Pac. 899; People v. Van Ewan, 111 Cal. 144, 153, 43 Pac. 520). As was said in both of those cases, it is difficult to logically attribute the giving of any instruction whatever on the subject of a defendant's testimony to anything else than a purpose to expressly disparage the witness before the jury.

[9, 10] At the conclusion of the argument of counsel for the defendant, the court asked what he meant by certain remarks addressed to the jury. Thereupon there ensued a colloquy between the court and counsel, which ended by the counsel being adjudged in contempt of court and fined $50, with an alternative of spending two days in jail. Appellant took an exception to the action of the court, and now assigns the episode as prejudicial misconduct of the trial judge, entitling her to a reversal of the judgment. We are very candidly of the opinion that the trial court was guilty of a most serious invasion of the rights of the defendant, when it entered into the discussion with counsel before the jurors, as to the import and effect of the latter's argument. But, with apparent realization of its own error, the court instructed the jurors that the conversation which occurred between the attorney for the defendant and the court was not to be considered by them as bearing in any way upon the case, and that they were to entirely disabuse their minds of everything that occurred relative to the issue that had arisen between the court and counsel, and decide the matter as indicated in the instructions, on the evidence presented to them. While the episode is regrettable, and should not have occurred, we must deem its effect to have been cured by the action of the trial court in admonishing the jurors to clear their minds of any impression it might have left. People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 576, 600, 114 Pac. 48, 54; People v. Overacker, 15 Cal. App. 620, 628, 115 Pac. 756.

From our examination of the entire cause, including the evidence which so clearly establishes the guilt of the appellant of the offense with which she was charged, we are of the opinion that none of the errors complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice in the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by F. A. Cooper against S. Vucinich. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rose, Silverstein & Collier, of Oakland, for appellant.

Dixon L. Phillips, of Oakland, and Esther P. Phillips, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an action for damages for injuries to person and property resulting from a collision between an automobile truck owned and operated by plaintiff and a seven-passenger touring car belonging to defendant and operated by him, through his agent, as a jitney bus. The collision occurred September 14, 1919, at the southwest corner of the intersection of Castro and Seventh streets in the city of Oakland. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $500. Defendant appeals, attacking certain findings, as not supported by the evidence, to the effect that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, but was driving carefully on the right-hand side of Castro street, and that defendant was negligent, which negligence was the cause of the damage.

Defendant states:

"Our sole contention of plaintiff's contributory negligence is based upon the fact testified to by him that when he reached the intersection of Seventh and Castro streets he came almost to a stop, and then proceeded to cross Seventh street at a rate of approximately seven miles per hour directly in the path of the jitney automobile."

He argues from this that when he (plaintiff) came almost to a stop the driver of the jitney was entitled to assume that the truck was stopping to allow him to pass and to continue on his course along Seventh street; that when, instead of stopping, the truck proceeded to slowly cross Seventh street, the emergency then arising, necessitated the driver of the jitney to turn to the south (his left) side of the street in an effort to pass in front of the truck and avoid a collision, because the north side was blocked by the truck (which was 15 feet long) and to continue on his course between the tracks would place him in the direct path of the truck; that when the jitney swerved to the south side to pass in front of the truck the driver of the truck had ample opportunity to stop it and avoid the collision, and his failure to do so amounted to negligence.

[1, 2] The findings referred to will not, of course, be disturbed on appeal for a mere conflict in the evidence. The question raised by defendant is whether the evidence relied on constitutes negligence on the part of plaintiff as a matter of law.

Castro street extends in a general northerly and southerly direction, and Seventh street extends in a general easterly and westerly direction. Seventh street is 60 feet wide. Two sets of railroad tracks of the Southern Pacific Company run along the middle parallel with the curb. The distance between each curb and the outer rail of the track is 20 feet, the track is 5 feet wide and the space between the two tracks 10 feet. The truck was traveling slowly in a southerly direction on the west or right-hand side of Castro street. Plaintiff's version of the circumstances leading up to the accident was that just as he went on Seventh street he came almost to a stop, slowing down to between 6 or 8 or 8 or 10 miles an hour, and proceeded at that rate to cross Seventh street; that he looked to see that the way was clear, and when he was just going on the first rail of the northerly track he saw the jitney about 150 feet away in the space between the two sets of tracks, coming toward him; that when he was just crossing the second or southerly track he looked up and saw it about 50 or 60 feet away, traveling at least 45 or 50 miles an hour, and just as the truck left this track the bus swung towards the south or left side to pass in front of the truck, striking it a glancing blow on the left side near the front, swinging the truck around and hurling its occupants to the pavement, causing the injuries complained of. The jitney continued to the next corner on the left-hand side of Seventh street before stopping. There was no obstruction on the north side of Seventh street, and it was in good repair.

[3, 4] The rule as to the care which the driver of a vehicle must use before crossing a railroad is well established. An omission to slow down upon entering this street might well have been a breach of duty amounting to negligence. The truck being on defendant's right as the vehicles approached the intersection, plaintiff, prima facie, had the right of way under section 20 (e) of the Motor Vehicle Act. Deering, General Laws, p. 931. That plaintiff did not act negligently in this matter, but acted with care and caution, seems to be a reasonable interpretation of the evidence. On the other hand, the evidence shows that defendant was violating the law as to speed, and that he himself produced the emergency complained of; that he then turned to his left side of Seventh street at its intersection with Castro street, although the road to the right was clear, passed in front of the truck, striking it in passing, and traveled to the corner beyond on that side of the street before stopping. This is in accordance with the finding that he was traveling "along the south side of Seventh street at its intersection with said Castro street."

The findings are amply supported by the evidence, and the judgment is affirmed.

In re GRAHAM'S ESTATE.TAPPAN v. FORTMAN.

(S. F. 9779.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 13, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 10, 1921.)1. Executors and administrators §111(1) — Lawyer executor, though practicing lawyer, may employ attorney.

An executor or administrator who is himself a practicing lawyer is entitled to employ and pay from the estate an attorney for the performance of the usual and ordinary legal services that are incident to a probate proceeding, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1616, 1618, 1619.

2. Executors and administrators §111(1) —
No denial of allowance of attorney fees merely because executor is attorney.

Conceding that it is still within the discretion of the probate court to pass upon the necessity for the employment of an attorney in the administration of an estate the same as upon other matters of necessary expenditure, denial of such necessity cannot be made to rest upon the mere fact that the required services are in the line of the administrator's profession or business.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Margaret Graham, deceased. From an order denying an allowance in his final account, on objection of Anna Fortman, of fees to an attorney, R. B. Tappan, executor, appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 183 Pac. 952.

Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for appellant.

Allen G. Wright, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

L. R. Weinmann, of Alameda, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This is an appeal by R. B. Tappan, executor of the last will of Margaret Graham, deceased, from an order of court denying an allowance in the final account of the executor of fees to a attorney employed by said executor in the administration of the estate of said decedent.

[1] The executor, Tappan, is himself a practicing lawyer, and it was the ruling of the probate court that his employment of an attorney for the usual and ordinary legal proceedings of the administration was not a necessary expense of the administration. An allowance of attorney's fees was made for certain extraordinary services rendered by the attorney employed in the course of the administration. So the only question presented is whether an executor or administrator, who is himself a practicing lawyer, is entitled to employ and pay from the estate an attorney for the performance of the usual and ordinary legal services that are incident to a probate proceeding.

The Code of Civil Procedure, as in force at the time this estate was in process of administration, contained the following provisions:

"Sec. 1616. Compensation of the executor and administrator. He shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate, and for his services such fees as provided in this chapter."

"Sec. 1618. When no compensation is provided by the will, or the executor renounces all claim thereto, he must be allowed commissions upon the amount of estate accounted for by him."

Then follows a graded scale of commissions varying with the valuation of the estate. Section 1619 provides that attorneys for executors and administrators shall be allowed out of the estate as fees "for conducting the ordinary probate proceedings the same amounts as are allowed by the last section as compensation for executors and administrators for their own services."

The reasonable necessity for the employment of an attorney to prepare legal papers and conduct the ordinary court proceedings by the average layman administrator is not disputed. Such employment is a matter of universal practice, the compensation is provided for by statute and made equal to that of the executor or administrator, and such allowance is not made an issue in this case further than to claim an exception where such executor or administrator is himself a lawyer and competent to perform the legal services required.

We may therefore confine ourselves to a consideration of the question whether a duty rests upon the executor who is a lawyer to render this professional legal service to the estate without additional compensation rather than to employ another attorney for such service.

Counsel in this case are disposed to agree that, if the executor does perform these legal services, he may not receive extra compensation therefor.

The issue presented here is whether the performance of such professional legal duties is part of the service designated by the Code when it provides that the executor or administrator shall receive "for his services such fees as are provided in this chapter." It is clear that the services incumbent upon the executor in the exercise of his duty to the estate are the same, irrespective of his general vocation in life. The "care, management and settlement of the estate" referred to in section 1616, supra, may call for the services of a plumber, a carpenter, an auctioneer, a real estate agent, or an expert accountant. Must the administrator render these services if they happen to be in the line of his general occupation? Clearly not. He would be entitled to hire such work done and pay for it as part of the "necessary expense of the care, management, and settlement of the estate." If he did perform such services which were not in the line of his duty as administrator, he might not be permitted to receive compensation, but the reason would be one of public policy forbidding him to be his own employer.

In many of the states, and in California prior to 1873, attorney's fees have been approved under the general provision that the administrator "shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate," and, as already pointed out, under such general provision an attorney administrator would be no more called upon to give his professional services to the estate than would the plumber, carpenter, or accountant administrator to render services that might be required in his special line of business, when the care and management of the estate should call for such employment.

It is true that such services as just referred to are of a more exceptional and casual nature than that of handling the legal business of an administration, but that is an additional reason why the latter should not be gratuitously added to the responsibilities of the lawyer administrator, while all others are allowed to avail themselves of outside legal assistance.

The legal end of the probate of an estate has come to be recognized as a distinct branch of employment. Hence we have had various amendments to the Code recognizing and providing for such legal services. In 1873 there was added to the general provision hereinbefore quoted, providing for an allowance to the administrator of all necessary expenses," etc., the words "including reasonable fees paid to attorneys for conducting the necessary proceedings or suits in the probate or other courts." In 1905 the Legislature advanced the position of an attorney in probate matters, so far as relates to compensation, to an equality with the administrator, upon a commission basis graduated according to the value of the estate, and in 1909 the law as it now stands was enacted, which gives the same compensation to the attorney for the ordinary legal services of a probate proceeding as are allowed to the administrator for the ordinary business administration of the estate.

We are bound to assume that the Legislature in its deliberations has determined that the services rendered by the administrator and by the attorney in such probate proceedings are of equal value, and that the compensation to each is a reasonable compensation for the service rendered. It certainly would be an unjust interpretation of the law which would require of the lawyer administrator twice the service for the same pay that is required of the merchant or mechanic or physician in the same position.

Although the employment of an attorney for the probate of an estate is not required by law, such employment is recognized by our legislation as the usual and customary practice, and it is doubtless conducive to system and accuracy in the administration of the probate law. The probate procedure in California may be considered by many as unduly intricate and expensive, but it cannot be disputed that it is effective in the settlement of estates and the transmission of property and titles in a way to protect the rights of creditors and of heirs and devisees.

The whole matter of the disposition of the estates of deceased persons is within the legislative control. Our Legislature has seen fit to recognize the services and compensation of the administrator, and the services and compensation of an attorney, as relating to distinct employments in probate administration.

There are, and have been to the knowledge of all legislators, hundreds of practicing lawyers serving as executors and administrators, but there has been no intimation in any law upon the subject that a different rule should apply to a lawyer in such position in the matter of employing legal assistance than to an administrator of any other business calling.

And in all of the innumerable instances in this and in other states where lawyer administrators have employed and paid attorneys there seems to be but one case in the courts where the right of such employment has been called in question.

There are decisions cited where, on grounds of public policy, it has been held that an administrator rendering legal services cannot receive additional compensation therefor. Taylor v. Wright, 93 Ind. 121; Hough v. Harvey, 71 Ill. 72; Collier v. Munn, 41 N. Y. 143; Bushby v. Berkeley, 153 App. Div. 742, 138 N. Y. Supp. 831; Doss v. Stevens, 13 Colo. App. 535, 59 Pac. 67.

Other courts have upheld allowances to the administrator for legal services rendered by him as an attorney in the interests of the estate. Harris v. Martin, 9 Ala. 895; Morgan v. Nelson, 43 Ala. 586; In re Mabley's Estate, 74 Mich. 143, 41 N. W. 835; Chatfield v. Swing, 6 Ohio Dec. 666; Fulton v. Davidson, 50 Tenn. 614.

The only decision which the diligence of the counsel in this action and of amicus curiæ filing briefs in behalf of this matter has been able to find bearing upon the right of such administrator to employ an attorney is that of Noble v. Whitten, 38 Wash. 262, 80 Pac. 451. This decision was under a statute similar to the provisions of the California law prior to 1873, which merely allowed to the administrator "all necessary expenses in the care, management and settlement of the estate." It was there held that the administrator, who was a practicing lawyer was not under the necessity of employing additional legal assistance and was not entitled to an allowance therefor. It is said in the course of the opinion:

"In this case the record shows that the administrator was a lawyer. He had control of the estate as agent and attorney for the deceased during her lifetime. He was allowed a claim of $200 for services and advice to Mrs. Whitten prior to her death. Mr. Whitten, the principal heir, desired to retain him as attorney to represent 'my interest and that of my children, if any, and continue to manage the property, so far at least as our interests are concerned;' and, upon this request, Mr. Noble voluntarily offered to serve as administrator. Because of these facts, no doubt, Mr. Whitten consented to his appointment as administrator, and because of his ability and fitness to conduct the administration of the estate the court appointed him."

To what extent the court was influenced in the decision cited by the circumstances referred to as to the choice of this administrator with a view to his legal services does not appear. In the application of the limitation as a general rule, especially in view of the more specific recognition of the functions of an employed attorney under our Code, its authority is not controlling and its reasoning is not convincing.

[2] Conceding that it is still within the discretion of the probate court in this state to pass upon the necessity for the employment of an attorney in the administration of an estate, the same as upon other matters of necessary expenditure, we are satisfied that denial of such necessity cannot be made to rest upon the mere fact that the required services are in the line of the administrator's profession or business.

The order appealed from is reversed.

PEOPLE v. LAUMAN. (Cr. 2349.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 11, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 10, 1921.)

1. Criminal law — 970(7)—Defects in indictment charging defendant with presenting false proofs held not ground for arrest of judgment.

Failure of indictment charging defendant with presenting false proofs in support of a claim upon an insurance policy, under Pen. Code, § 549, to allege that a claim was presented, and that the company whose existence was alleged issued the policy, held not ground for arrest of judgment after conviction under section 1185, as against contention that facts stated did not constitute a public offense in view of sections 959, 960, 1404, and Civ. Code, § 2586, where instructions supplied lacking elements and policies were received in evidence without objection, and such defects were apparently not discovered until after trial.

2. Criminal law — 1144(15)—Jury presumed to have followed instructions.

The jury will be presumed to have followed instructions.

3. False pretenses — 37—Indictment charging presenting false proofs need not allege that policy was in force at time proof of loss was presented.

Indictment charging defendant with presenting false proofs in support of a claim upon it in an insurance policy under Pen. Code, § 549, need not allege that the contract of insurance was in force at the time the proof of loss was presented.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Roy R. Lauman was found guilty of presenting false proofs in support of a claim upon a policy of insurance, and from an order granting a motion in arrest of judgment, the People appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Chandler P. Ward, Samuel R. Blake, and Davis, Rush & MacDonald, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the people from an order granting a motion in arrest of judgment. Respondent was charged in each of three counts of an indictment with the crime of presenting false proofs in support of a claim upon a policy of insurance, as defined by section 549 of the Penal Code. He had taken out three policies of fire insurance, one each in the Springfield Fire & Marine Insurance Company, the Providence-Washington Insurance Company, and the Concordia Fire Insurance Company. The respondent was engaged in the cleaning and dyeing business in the city of Los Angeles, operating under the name of the Imperial Dye Works. The policies covered the building, stock in trade, and other goods connected with the business, and also articles left with respondent by his customers. Two fires occurred on the premises, the first on June 5, 1917, and the second on July 14, 1917. Respondent filed claims and proofs of loss with each of the three companies, and these are the proofs alleged to have been falsely made.

The indictment alleged the existence of the three insurance companies, the procuring of policies of insurance, not alleging they were procured in the above companies, the occurring of the fires, the presentation of the proofs of loss to the said companies, the falsity of the proofs, and respondent's knowledge thereof and intent to cheat and defraud the said companies. Each count charged the presentation of false proofs to one of the companies. A general demurrer was interposed to each count, and was disallowed. A trial of the three counts was had, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty on each count. Respondent interposed a motion for a new trial and a motion in arrest of judgment. The motion for a new trial was denied, no appeal being taken from the order. The motion in arrest of judgment was granted, and from the said order appellant takes this appeal.

A motion in arrest of judgment is defined in section 1185 of the Penal Code as:

An "application on the part of the defendant that no judgment be rendered on a plea or verdict of guilty, or on a verdict against the defendant. * * * It may be founded on any of the defects in the indictment or information mentioned in section ten hundred and four, unless the objection has been waived by a failure to demur, and must be made and determined before the judgment is pronounced."

Section 1004 of the Penal Code, as far as it is pertinent here, provides that—

"The defendant may demur to the indictment * * * when it appears upon the face thereof either: * * * 2. That it does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections nine hundred and fifty, nine hundred and fifty-one, and nine hundred and fifty-two. * * * 4. That the facts stated do not constitute a public offense."

By section 950 of the Penal Code the indictment must contain:

"2. A statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended."

Section 951 prescribes the form of the indictment, and section 952 requires that—

"It must be direct and certain, as it regards:
* * * 2. The offense charged. 3. The particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense."

Section 1012 provides in part:

"When the objections mentioned in section one thousand and four appear on the face of the indictment * * * they can only be taken by demurrer, except that the objection * * * that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense, may be taken * * * after the trial, in arrest of judgment."

The demurrer specifies two grounds—that neither the indictment nor any count thereof states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, and that neither the indictment nor any count thereof substantially conforms to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code. The motion in arrest of judgment specifies all the grounds mentioned in said section 1004, but on appeal respondent only urges that no count of the indictment alleges facts sufficient to constitute a public offense.

We quote from respondent's opening brief:

"The indictment in this case, and each of the counts contained therein, is fatally defective in alleging merely that the defendant presented 'a false and fraudulent claim of loss by fire.' There is no allegation that a claim was presented upon a contract of insurance for the payment of a loss."

In his supplemental brief it is contended:

"That 'each count of the indictment wholly fails to allege that the contract of insurance which it is alleged Lauman obtained on a certain date was issued either by the company whose corporate existence is alleged or by the company to which it is alleged Lauman presented a proof of loss,' and that 'It is absolutely essential to the stating of a public offense under such section that the indictment charge not only that, at the time of the fire, but at the time of the making and presenting of the proof of loss, there was a valid contract of insurance, then in full force and effect. As stated before, there is no allegation that any contract of insurance or otherwise was existing * * * at the time of its execution or presentation.'"

The different counts of the indictment are all worded alike, except for the difference in the identity of the insurance companies, the items covered, and the terms of the policies. For brevity, we shall discuss the first count only. Considering the contention that there is no allegation that the proofs of loss were presented on contracts of insurance for the payment of a loss, and that there is no allegation that the companies whose existence was alleged issued the policies, it is true the indictment does not, in terms, allege these facts. Section 959 of the Penal Code provides that the indictment is sufficient if—

"the act or omission charged as the offense is clearly and distinctly set forth in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended."

The indictment in this case did allege that the Springfield company was organized and doing an insurance business on July 3, 1917; that respondent procured a policy of insurance, and that, intending to cheat the said company, he presented false claims of proof of loss to it. This proof of loss, which is set out in the indictment, is as follows:

"Policy No. 424612, Agency at Los Angeles, Cal. Amount of policy, $2,500.00. Expiration July 3, 1918. Sworn statement in proof of loss to the Springfield * * * Co. * * * By your policy as above, you insured Roy Lauman, trading as Imperial Dye Works, according to the terms and conditions printed therein."

And at the end of the proof:

"Total amount claimed of this company under above named policy, $2,011.97."

[1] There are allegations, then, that the company was engaged in the insurance business at the time in question, and that a proof of loss was presented to it on a policy bearing a given number and issued to respondent, which proof of loss described the same character of property as that referred to in other portions of the indictment. It is incomprehensible to us how a person of common understanding could fail to be informed by the indictment that respondent was charged with anything different than presenting to the Springfield company a false claim of loss suffered by fire, upon a policy issued by it to him to cover property so falsely claimed to have been destroyed. The conclusion is irresistible that to a common understanding it would appear that the indictment was intended to charge that the Springfield company had issued a policy to respondent, and that the claim of loss based thereon was upon a contract of insurance for the payment of a loss, inasmuch as a "policy" is but the written evidence of such a contract. Section 2586, Civ. Code. Except for the failure to allege these facts specifically, the indictment was unobjectionable.

[2] The question is then presented whether these omissions resulted in prejudice to the respondent. Section 960 of the Penal Code provides:

"No indictment * * * is insufficient, nor can the trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form which does not tend to the prejudice of a substantial right of the defendant upon its merits."

Section 1404 of the same Code declares:

"Neither a departure from the form or mode prescribed by this Code in respect to any pleading or proceeding, nor an error or mistake therein, renders it invalid, unless it has actually prejudiced the defendant, or tended to his prejudice, in respect to a substantial right."

Many facts and circumstances shown by the record preclude the idea that the defects of the pleading prejudiced or tended to prejudice respondent's right to be sufficiently informed of the charge against him. In the first place the court instructed the jury as follows:

"An intent to defraud is a material ingredient of the offense set forth in each of the three counts of the indictment, and you must not convict the defendant upon any of the said counts unless you believe beyond all reasonable doubt (1) that a contract of insurance existed between the defendant and the insurance company named in such count of the indictment; (2) that while such contract was in full force and effect that the defendant, in the county of Los Angeles, and within three years next preceding the filing of the indictment, presented or caused to be presented a false proof of claim to such company; (3) that the proof of loss so presented was willfully and intentionally false, and was presented with the intent on the part of the defendant to deceive and defraud said insurance company."

It is plain that the instruction itself supplied the elements which are claimed to be lacking in the indictment, and it will be presumed that the jury followed this instruction when it found respondent guilty on each of the three counts.

Moreover, the policies were received in evidence without objection, and it was stipulated that they were issued to respondent by the respective companies. It was shown that respondent had previously sued two of the companies on their policies, and in the complaints in those actions he alleged the policies were issued to him. These complaints were received in evidence. In addition to these facts the proofs of loss, as we have shown, were set out verbatim in the complaint. These proofs, verified by respondent, stated that the policies were issued by the respective companies to respondent, and that a certain amount was claimed under each of them.

Apparently the attorneys for respondent did not discover the defects in the indictment until after the trial, for before the trial one of the attorneys presented an affidavit for a subpoena duces tecum in which he averred:

"That he is one of the attorneys of record for the defendant herein, Roy R. Lauman. That the indictment charges the making of false proofs of loss as to two insurance policies, in Springfield Fire & Marine Insurance Company and the Concordia Fire Insurance Company, respectively. * * * That R. C. Heinsch is the agent of the Springfield Fire & Marine Insurance Company, and issued their policy No. 424612. That N. T. Horton was the agent of the Concordia Fire Insurance Company, and issued their policy No. 30804. * * *

In People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 Pac. 521, the defendant was charged with the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses. The appeal was taken from the judgment of conviction and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. He was charged with falsely representing himself to be an agent of the Fatherland Magazine, authorized to receive loans and subscriptions in its behalf, and with exhibiting a fictitious list of subscribers to induce persons to subscribe. In that capacity he was collecting money, and collected the sum of $300 from the prosecuting witness. The court, in holding the information to be sufficient, said:

"The particular defect in this information, as urged by appellant, is that it does not show the causal connection between the false pretense and the parting with the property by the prosecuting witness, and therefore fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. We are of the opinion that, as against the defendant's general demurrer, the information should be held sufficient on appeal. While there is no direct allegation that the money was paid to the defendant as a subscription or loan to the Fatherland Magazine, a reader of the information could hardly draw from it any other inference than that the payment was made for such purpose. It may be conceded that a direct allegation to this effect would have been more in accord with technical requirements. But what was intended to be charged in this connection is perfectly plain from the language in fact used, and no person of common understanding could fail to understand that it was substantially charged, by necessary inference at least, that the money was paid because of the alleged false representations, and for the purpose suggested thereby."

The Attorney General cites section 4½, art. 6, of the Constitution in support of his argument that the defects in the indictment are not prejudicially erroneous. Respondent contends, on the other hand, that the provision does not apply to an appeal by the state from an order granting a motion in arrest of judgment. But, as we have reached the conclusion that the defects are fully covered by the statutes referred to, whose terms are in line with the constitutional provision, the question need not be considered.

[3] Respondent cites no authority, and we are aware of none, which supports his third contention, that the indictment is defective in not alleging that the contract of insurance was in force at the time the proof of loss was presented. This position is untenable. The act denounced by section 549 of the Penal Code is the presentation of false proofs in support of a claim on a contract of insurance for the payment of a loss. The statute does not provide that the contract must be operative at the time the claim of loss is made. The indictment does allege that the policies were in full force and effect at the time the fires occurred, and the court instructed the jury that it was necessary to a conviction that a false proof of loss be presented while the contract was in effect, and within three years next preceding the filing of the indictment. It follows that the indictment is not defective in failing to allege that the contract was in full force and effect at the time the proof of loss was presented. To hold otherwise would be to lay down a rule that, where the loss occurs while the contract is in full force and effect, and the false proof of loss is not presented until after the period of coverage has expired, a case could not be made out under section 549 of the Penal Code. Such is not the law. Each count alleges that the policy was in full force and effect on a certain date, and gave the same date as the date of the fire. It was therefore unnecessary to allege that the policy was in full force and effect when the proof of loss was made, for as matter of law it remained operative for the presentation of proof of loss. It appears from the indictment that the proof of loss was filed in each case within two months from the date of the two fires.

It must be held that the indictment substantially alleged facts sufficient to constitute a public offense under section 549 of the Penal Code, and that respondent was not prejudiced by the defects of pleading complained of.

Order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in contemplation of sections 1191 and 1202 of the Penal Code.

GOLDSTEIN v. HEALY. (S. F. 9414.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 10, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 7, 1921.)

1. Pleading ⚡214(1)—Demurrer admits only facts well pleaded.

A demurrer admits the truth of all facts well pleaded, but it does not confess any omitted circumstances, indispensable to the cause of action upon which the complaint is based, or essential to remedy an allegation specially challenged for uncertainty or ambiguity.

2. Pleading ⚡193(1)—Essentials of complaint stated.

A plaintiff is required, even as against a special demurrer, merely to allege the essential facts of his case with reasonable precision and with particularity sufficiently specific to acquaint the defendant with the nature, source, and extent of his cause of action.

3. Innkeepers ⚡8—"Guest" defined.

A "guest" of an inn or hotel is one who receives accommodations or entertainment therein usually for compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Guest.]

4. Innkeepers ⚡10—Required to exercise reasonable care toward invitees of guests.

A guest may, under such reasonable restrictions and regulations as the management of the hotel may impose, invite unobjectionable persons to visit him for lawful purposes and at proper times, and the hotel keeper is required to exercise reasonable care that such persons be not injured through defective condition of the premises.

5. Innkeepers ⚡10—Not liable for injuries caused by patent defects or structural insecurity.

Hotel keeper is not liable for injuries to persons invited to hotel by guests due to a patent defect or structural insecurity in the hotel premises or its equipment.

6. Innkeepers ⚡10—Complaint held to show that defect in premises was not patent.

In action against hotel keeper for injuries caused by defective railing to plaintiff while on premises at invitation of hotel keeper's guest, complaint alleging that the decayed condition of the railing was unknown to the plaintiff, held sufficient to show that the defect was not patent.

7. Innkeepers ⚡10—Plaintiff's failure to discover defective condition of premises a matter of defense.

In an action against a hotel keeper for injuries caused by defective railing to plaintiff while on premises at invitation of hotel keeper's guest, complaint was not required to allege that defective condition of railing could not have been discovered by plaintiff in the exercise of ordinary care; the failure to exercise such care being a matter of defense.

8. Innkeepers ⚡10—One on premises at invitation of guest not required to allege that he was rightfully there.

In action against hotel keeper for injuries caused by defective railing to plaintiff while on premises at invitation of hotel keeper's guest, plaintiff was not required to allege that he was lawfully and properly upon the premises; the fact that he was not properly upon the premises being a matter of defense.

9. Innkeepers ⚡10—Complaint, not naming guest at whose invitation plaintiff was on premises, held not uncertain.

In an action against a hotel keeper for injuries caused by defective railing around tent in possession of hotel keeper's guest, who had invited plaintiff thereon, plaintiff's failure to allege name of guest did not render complaint uncertain, where the particular tent was identified, and the hotel keeper's tents were occupied by but one guest, since the hotel keeper could have ascertained the name of the guest without such allegation.

10. Pleading ⚡12—Less particularity required of complaint where defendant has full information concerning facts.

Less particularity is required in allegations of a complaint where the facts stated are such that defendant from their nature and his relation to them has full information concerning them.

11. Innkeepers — 10—Complaint for injuries from defective premises held to show causal connection between negligence and injury.

In an action against hotel keeper for injuries caused by defective railing to plaintiff while on premises at invitation of hotel keeper's guest, complaint held sufficient as against contention that it did not show the causal connection between the negligence and the injury.

Appeal of Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Action by Mervyn Goldstein, by his guardian, Ben Goldstein, against W. Healy. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Hiram E. Casey and Casey & Lambert, all of Santa Rosa, and T. L. Breslauer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. R. Leppo, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

SHURTLEFF, J. Plaintiff in his second amended complaint alleged:

That at the time of the commencement of the action he was a minor under the age of 21 years, and that Ben Goldstein was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting guardian of his person and estate; "that on or about the 5th day of July, 1919, the defendants (there being one fictitious defendant) * * * were conducting and maintaining at Monte Rio, in the county of Sonoma, state of California, a summer resort and hotel for the accommodation of the public. * * * That as a part of the said summer resort and hotel and as living quarters for its guests and their invitees the defendants maintained a tent set upon a wooden platform." That to prevent persons occupying, visiting, or being upon said platform from falling therefrom, and to protect persons who were thereon, the defendants erected, placed, and maintained on the outer edge thereof "a railing made of wood about three inches to four inches in diameter," which railing was "fastened upon the said platform about three or four feet above the floor of the said platform by means of timbers and braces." That said railing at all the times in the amended complaint mentioned "consisted of decomposed and rotten wood * * * negligently and carelessly maintained in said condition by the said defendants, all of which was unknown to the said plaintiff. * * * That on or about the 5th day of July, 1919, the plaintiff herein was present upon the said platform at the invitation and request of a guest of the said hotel and summer resort, to whom the tent on the said platform had been assigned by the said defendants as living quarters; and that while on said platform as aforesaid and while standing on said platform talking to the said guest of defendants and with his back to said railing around the said platform as hereinbefore described, and relying upon said railing as aforesaid as protection against falling over and off from the said platform, the said plaintiff rested his hands lightly upon the said railing as aforesaid, and thereupon and by reason of the said rottenness and decomposition of the said wood of which the said railing consisted as aforesaid, and by reason of the carelessness and negligence of the defendants in so maintaining said railing, and not otherwise, the said railing gave way and broke, thereby precipitating and causing the plaintiff to fall off the said platform and to the ground below, a distance of about 20 feet and causing the plaintiff to strike upon his head and body."

It is further alleged that plaintiff, by reason of his alleged fall, sustained certain enumerated physical injuries, incurred numerous specified expenses, and lost one month's salary. The prayer of the complaint is for $5,000 damages.

As we have said, there was one fictitious defendant who was never served, and for that reason, following the briefs, we will hereafter use the singular number.

The foregoing is a comprehensive statement of the allegations of the amended complaint which are material to this inquiry. To this complaint, defendant, Healy, demurred generally upon the ground that it failed to state a cause of action, and specially that it was ambiguous and uncertain, in that it was not alleged therein, and could not be ascertained therefrom, whether the decomposed and rotten condition of the railing "was apparent and patent, or concealed and latent"; "what caused said railing to give way and break"; "for what purpose was plaintiff present on said platform," or at whose invitation; what caused plaintiff to fall from the platform, or to fall upon or against the railing, or how "the giving way and breaking of the railing caused plaintiff to fall." The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment entered in favor of defendant for costs. It is from this judgment that this appeal is prosecuted.

[1, 2] While it is well settled that a demurrer admits the truth of all facts that are well pleaded in the complaint, it does not, however, confess any omitted circumstance which is indispensable to the cause of action upon which it is based, or essential to remedy an allegation specially challenged for uncertainty or ambiguity. All that is required of a plaintiff, even as against a special demurrer, is that he set forth in his complaint the essential facts of his case with reasonable precision and with particularity sufficiently specific to acquaint the defendant of the nature, source, and extent of his cause of action.

A few general observations touching the relations of the parties and their corresponding duties and liabilities, as disclosed by the amended complaint, will conduce to a clearer understanding of the questions to be determined.

[3-5] A guest of an inn or hotel may be defined as one who receives accommodations or entertainment therein, usually for compensation. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe, 28 Neb. 239, 44 N. W. 226, 6 L. R. A. 809, 26 Am. St. Rep. 325; Manning v. Wells, 28 Tenn. 746, 51 Am. Dec. 688; Schouler's Bailments and Carriers (3d Ed.) 282. While this definition seems simple of application, it is nevertheless not always easy to determine whether the person claiming such relation is in fact a guest within its meaning, but no such difficulty arises here, for it is clear from the complaint that plaintiff was not upon the hotel property of defendant in that capacity. The allegation of the complaint is that plaintiff was upon the platform, from which he fell, "at the invitation and request of a guest of the said hotel." Plaintiff makes no claim whatever in his pleading that he in any manner, as a guest, availed himself of the accommodations which the hotel afforded. He states he was at the defendant's inn in response to an invitation of a guest, who, we hold, in extending such invitation, was clearly acting within his rights, for, in the absence of a regulation or agreement to the contrary, a guest of a hotel may, as a matter of right, under such reasonable restrictions and regulations as the management may impose, invite unobjectionable persons to visit him at the inn for lawful purposes and at proper times. It is common knowledge that this right is universally accorded guests of hotels, and that it is a necessary public convenience. It is more than a privilege; it is, as we have said, a right which cannot be withheld except for good cause, as long as the relation of innkeeper and guest continues; it is one of the accommodations of the service which a hotel gives its patrons. To all such invitees, and such was the status of plaintiff, the innkeeper owes the duty of at all times maintaining his hotel premises in a reasonably safe condition, and of exercising reasonable care to protect them while in the hotel and in the part thereof open to the public, from personal injury through his negligence. But this duty does not obtain in cases where the injury to the invitee was due to a patent defect, or structural insecurity in the hotel premises or its equipment, so that, in the instant case, if the alleged "rotten and decomposed" condition of the railing was patent, the plaintiff cannot recover. As said by Hawley, District Judge, in Ten Broeck v. Wells Fargo & Co. et al. (C. C.) 47 Fed. 690, which was an action for damages for injuries received by a fall from steps leading to a platform connected with a hotel and not protected by a railing:

"In this case no presumption need be indulged in. The pleader has not only shown by his allegation that the injury was not received because 'anything gave way through the latent insecurity of the structure,' which was the ground upon which plaintiff might be entitled to recover, but has gone further, and affirmatively shown 'that the accident arose from a patent defect,' for which, under the well-settled principles of the law, plaintiff is not entitled to recover."

[6-10] It is to the last-stated principle of law that defendant appeals in support of his contention that the complaint under review is uncertain and ambiguous, in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether the decomposed condition of the railing was "latent or patent." But we do not think the pleading is open to this criticism. Upon the contrary, in our opinion, the allegation that the decayed condition of the railing was "unknown" to plaintiff, which could not have been true had it been patent, is in effect a sufficient declaration that it was latent. If the defective condition of the railing was such that it would have been discovered by plaintiff in the exercise of ordinary care, the failure to exercise such care would be a defense which the plaintiff is not required to anticipate. It also sufficiently appears from the complaint that the plaintiff was upon the platform, from which he fell, at the invitation of the guest occupying the same, from which it follows prima facie that he was lawfully and properly there. If the reverse is true, it is likewise a matter of defense. Nor was it necessary for the plaintiff to state the name of the guest whom he was visiting; his omission to do so, under the peculiar facts of this case, does not render the complaint ambiguous or uncertain. It refers to but one tent as being upon the hotel premises, and describes it with sufficient particularity to render it easy of identification. Moreover, so far as the pleading discloses, but one person occupied such tent, and such occupant was the guest at whose request the plaintiff was upon the platform. This being the state of the pleadings, it was an easy matter for the defendant to ascertain the name of such guest who presumably registered and was assigned to the tent in question. Less particularity is required in the allegations of a complaint where, as here, the facts in it stated are such that the defendant, from their nature and his relation to them, has full information concerning them.

[11] Respondent makes the further claim that the complaint is insufficient in that it does not show the "causal connection between the negligence and the injury." With this contention we find ourselves unable to agree. In our opinion the following allegations amply comply with this elementary rule of pleading:

"That while on said platform * * * and while standing on said platform talking to the said guest of defendants and with his back to said railing * * * and relying upon said railing as aforesaid as protection against falling over and off from the said platform, the said plaintiff rested his hands lightly upon the said railing as aforesaid, and thereupon and by reason of the said rottenness and decomposition of the said wood of which the said railing consisted as aforesaid, and by reason of the carelessness and negligence of the defendants in so maintaining said railing, and not otherwise, the said railing gave way and broke, thereby precipitating and causing the plaintiff to fall off the said platform and to the ground below."

The quoted allegations are sufficiently comprehensive, and adequately disclose the "causal connection between the injury and the negligence," which the law demands must be present to justify a recovery in cases similar to the one under consideration, and are hence good as against both the general and special demurrer.

None of the cases, to which counsel for respondent directs our attention as bearing upon this branch of the case, in any manner conflict with the views herein expressed. Each of them was in the main disposed of upon the facts which it presented, which facts were not in all respects analogous to the facts of the present one. Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 99, 27 Pac. 29, contains language which, when read apart from the facts, seems to support defendant's contention. The complaint in that case declared that the plaintiffs were tenants in possession of, and occupying, a dwelling house, while it was being raised, and that the defendants, who were the lessors, had failed to provide any safe and proper means of entrance to, or egress from, the same, which, if true, would be patent to any one. The court there said:

"As we have seen, it is entirely consistent with the allegations of this complaint to suppose the injury occurred because defendant neglected to provide any mode of egress whatever. We are not at liberty to suppose anything gave way through the latent insecurity of the structure; for it is not so alleged."

It will be seen at a glance that this case is distinguishable from the one we are considering, for here it appears that the defendant had in fact constructed a railing around the platform, which railing, when plaintiff placed his hands upon it, gave way by reason of a defect which, as we have pointed out, the complaint alleges in effect was latent.

For the foregoing reasons we think the learned judge of the trial court erred in sustaining the defendant's demurrer.

The judgment is reversed, and the lower court directed to overrule the demurrer and permit the defendant to answer the complaint within such time as it may deem reasonable.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. On August 13, 1920, an information containing two counts was filed against defendant. By the first count he was charged with the crime specified in section 270 of the Penal Code, and by the second he was charged with the crime of non-support of his wife, as defined in section 270a, Penal Code.

At the close of plaintiff's evidence, defendant's motion for a dismissal of the accusation contained in the second count of the information was granted, and thereupon the trial of the case proceeded upon the charge contained in the first count of the information, the result of which was the conviction of defendant; and from the judgment pronounced thereon he prosecutes this appeal.

Section 270 provides that—

"A parent of either a legitimate or illegitimate minor child who willfully omits, without lawful excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter, or medical attendance for his child, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, or in the county jail, not exceeding two years, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by both."

Of the several grounds for reversal urged by counsel for defendant, we deem it unnecessary to consider other than that of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict rendered by the jury.

On June 1, 1919, the defendant, then a young man of 21, was married to Ella Winn, who was of the age of 18. He was just out of the army, and his worldly goods consisted of about $150. In the latter part of August, 1919, prior to which time he had been engaged in odd jobs of work in San Diego, where they were married, he went to Oakland, where a few weeks thereafter his wife, at his request and with money sent by him, followed, and the two took up their abode with the husband's mother. The wife was then pregnant and expected the birth of a child the latter part of March. She appears to have been unhappy and dissatisfied with her environment, and so notified her parents in San Diego, who on October 20, 1919, went to Oakland, where, as a result of their persuasion and insistence defendant consented that his wife should return to the home of her parents in San Diego pending confinement, and at the same time they extended an invitation to him to accompany her, which defendant declined. It appears that about March 6th defendant received a letter from the district attorney of San Diego county, the contents of which, however, are not in evidence, but in response to which he sent his wife $65. This money it appears, instead of being expended for clothing for the baby, born on February 27th, was applied in payment of a nurse who attended the wife during confinement. The mother, as contemplated when she left her husband in Oakland, and, after its birth, the child, made their home with her parents, who were well to do and able to and did provide her, as they insisted upon doing, with a home, food, and shelter; and although defendant, other than contributing the $65 applied to the payment of her nurse and some small articles of clothing, supplied no money, the baby, as stated by the wife, had never been in want of necessities, but at all times had food, clothing, and medical attention when necessary, which were voluntarily provided by her father. The court properly instructed the jury that defendant's failure to make provision for the support of the child before its birth and before he knew of the birth of the child did not constitute a crime; hence the offense, if established, must be based upon defendant's neglect to supply the child with necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance during the first five months of its existence. The evidence touching this question is exceedingly meager. It cannot be said that, because defendant yielded to the persuasion of his wife's parents that she abide with them, such fact constituted neglect to furnish shelter; and, as to medical attendance, there is no evidence whatever that the child ever at any time required such attendance after its birth. As to food, the evidence is consistent with the fact that it was obtained from its mother, in accordance with nature. Prior to its birth, the child's maternal grandmother, at an expense of some $25 or $30, procured clothing upon her own account, charging defendant therewith, in addition to which clothing, necessary articles of wearing apparel were given to the mother by her friends and relatives. Indeed, it cannot be said that, had the $65 sent by defendant to his wife been applied to the uses of the child, it would not have been ample for its needs.

Conceding, however, that defendant neglected and failed to contribute any sum to meet the necessary requirements of the child, nevertheless it conclusively appears that it had everything in the way of shelter, clothing, food, and medical attention which it needed; and, conceding that these necessities were, as stated by the mother, furnished by her parents, and, in the absence of lawful excuse, not by the father, we are of the opinion that, whatever breach of legal or moral obligation arose from such omission, such neglect and failure does not constitute a criminal offense within the meaning of section 270, Penal Code.

The provisions of section 270, under which defendant was prosecuted, are substantially the same as those contained in section 270a, which make it a crime for a husband having sufficient ability so to do, to neglect to provide his wife with necessary food, clothing, and shelter. While section 270 makes the offense dependent upon want of lawful excuse, it has been held that want of financial ability to provide for a child is such lawful excuse. People v. Forester, 29 Cal. App. 460, 155 Pac. 1022. In People v. Selby, 26 Cal. App. 796, 148 Pac. 807, the defendant was charged with the offense designated in section 270a, and on an appeal the judgment pronounced upon his conviction was reversed for the reason, among others, that it was made to appear that his wife was received into the family of a relative and there cared for, and, moreover, had credit at a general merchandising store from which she was privileged to obtain goods on her own account. Quoting from the opinion, the court said:

"She did not, nor did any other witness, testify that, after the separation, she was at any time deprived of the necessities of life. The only proof upon that matter was that the defendant did not provide those necessities. While it was, of course, his duty to furnish her with such necessities, it was no crime for him not to do so if she was not actually in want of them, even though he might have abandoned her within the meaning of the statute."

In State of Missouri v. Thornton, reported in 232 Mo. 298, 134 S. W. 519, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 841, where the court had under consideration a charge preferred against a defendant under a statute similar to ours, it was held that one is not within the operation of a statute providing for the punishment of a father who neglects to furnish necessary food, clothing, and lodging to his infant child if the child is being supplied therewith as far as is necessary, by the wife's parents, to whose house she had taken the child upon separating from her husband, the child's father.

It is the omission of the parent to furnish necessary food, clothing, etc., which is penalized, and such articles cannot be necessary to one fully supplied therewith by one other than the father who acts voluntarily and of his own accord in contributing the same. A necessary article is one which the party actually needs. The mere fact that the articles are necessary, however, is not enough. They must be such as the party without them actually needs. In the case at bar the child had food, shelter and clothing, and, while not provided by defendant, it was nevertheless not in need of that which it had.

While it is true that defendant was under obligation, both morally and legally, to furnish such necessities, rather than have the child dependent upon the grandparents therefor, nevertheless his omission so to do imposed no burden upon the state; nor was the welfare of the child, in which the state is interested, jeopardized or affected by such omission. In our opinion, the statute should not be construed as a law punishing a father for failure to perform his duty as such, but to secure to minor children, who in the future are to become citizens, the necessary food, clothing, and shelter, without which destitution would follow, and their lives and health be endangered, and thus protect the state from a burden which would otherwise devolve upon it. So long as they are properly cared for without intervention on the part of the state, it is not interested as to the source from whence the supplies come.

Under a similar statute, the Supreme Court of Georgia, in Dalton v. State, 118 Ga. 196, 44 S. E. 977, in reversing the judgment, said:

"The evidence adduced on the trial showed that the father was willing for the wife to leave him and return to her relatives. The child which she took with her was between four and five years of age, and was, of course, dependent. The evidence, however, does not disclose that the child was destitute at the time of the abandonment, or had even become destitute up to the time of the trial. So the case turns upon the question whether the father is guilty if he fails to provide for his child after the separation, even though the child may be abundantly supplied with all the necessities of life. While it is true that a father is under a moral and legal obligation to support his minor child, it is not also true that, if he fails to do his duty, he may be convicted under the above section of the Code, although the child is fully provided for by others. The father cannot be convicted unless it be shown that the child was not only dependent, but in a destitute condition. If it is not destitute, but is amply supplied with all necessities, the father cannot be convicted.

It is true he may have violated his moral and legal obligations in abandoning the child at all; but, as criminal statutes must be construed strictly, we are constrained to give this statute this interpretation."

A like question arose under an Ohio statute in State v. Stouffer, 65 Ohio St. 47, 60 N. E. 985, wherein, it appearing that the child was in the custody of its mother, who lived with her parents, and had a comfortable home, and necessary food and clothing, the court held that, while it was plainly the duty of the defendant to support the child, from which obligation he was not absolved by reason of the act of the grandparents in furnishing it with food and shelter, such obligation should be enforced in a civil action rather than by a criminal proceeding. As opposed to these and other like authorities, respondent cites In re McMullen, 19 Cal. App. 484, 126 Pac. 368, People v. Schlott, 162 Cal. 347, 122 Pac. 846, and Hunter v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. 119, 134 Pac. 1134, L. R. A. 1915A, 564, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 612, the latter case arising under an Oklahoma statute wherein, under the peculiar laws of that state, a father was held criminally liable, although his child was not in want, for the reason that its needs were met by another than himself. The reasoning upon which the decision in that case was reached is not convincing to us, and, since contrary to the weight of authority, should be disregarded. The question here involved was not considered in the other cases cited by respondent, and hence they do not apply to the facts in the instant case.

The judgment is reversed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division 1, is denied.

The case shown by the opinion is apparently simply one in which the mother and child, during the first five months of the child's life, upon the invitation and insistence of the parents of the wife, resided with them as their guests and were fully supported and cared for by such parents without any request or demand on the father for financial aid from him in the matter of the support of the child. Certain general statements in the opinion as to the proper construction of section 270, Penal Code, which may not be exactly correct as mere abstract statements of law, must be considered in the light of the facts of this case, and, so considered, do not require revision by this court.

All concur.

PEOPLE v. FLOWERS. (Cr. 764.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Sept. 14, 1921.)

1. False pretenses —31—Information held to show connection between false pretenses and effect.

An information alleging that defendant falsely and fraudulently represented that he owned a half interest in a printing plant and was lawfully entitled to sell and convey such interest, and prosecuting witness, believing the representations and pretenses as alleged, was deceived thereby and paid defendant a certain sum of money, etc., held not subject to the objection that it did not show "causal connection" between the alleged false pretenses and the effect attributed to them.

2. False pretenses —51—Fraudulent intent held for jury.

In a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses by selling an interest in a printing plant which defendant did not own, whether defendant sold the property fraudulently with intent to unlawfully deprive complainant of his property, held for the jury.

JAMES, J. The defendant was convicted under the charge of having obtained personal property of one Rinker by means of false representations and pretenses. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

[1] It is first contended that the court was in error in overruling an objection to the introduction of evidence and in denying a motion in arrest of judgment. The point made in that behalf is that the information did not contain a statement of facts sufficient to constitute the public offense attempted to be charged. It is argued by counsel that no "causal connection" is shown between the alleged false pretenses and the effect attributed to them. In the information it was alleged that appellant represented and pretended that he was the owner of and possessed of the title to a certain printing plant; that he was lawfully entitled to sell and convey an interest therein; that Rinker, believing the representations and pretenses, as alleged, to be true, and relying upon the same, was deceived thereby, and paid to appellant the sum of $130 in money, and delivered to him liberty bonds of the value of $95 and an automobile of the value of $400. It was then alleged as follows:

"That in truth and in fact each and all of the said representations and pretenses, so made as aforesaid, by the said J. M. Flowers to the said Richard Rinker were then and there false, fraudulent, and untrue, as he, the said J. M. Flowers, then and there well knew. That in truth and in fact the said J. M. Flowers was not then and there, or at any time, or at all, the owner of, or possessed of the legal title to, or the owner of, or entitled to any interest whatsoever in and to that certain printing plant with the accessories thereof as hereinafter described, as he, the said J. M. Flowers, then and there well knew."

The information also contained allegations that the representations and pretenses were willfully, fraudulently, and feloniously made with intent to defraud the said Rinker. It also contained an allegation that appellant executed a written bill of sale whereby he pretended to convey to said Rinker an undivided one-half interest in the said printing plant. It appears then that the information clearly charged representations to have been made by appellant that he was the owner of the printing plant; that by reason of said representations Rinker was induced to deliver to appellant the money and property in exchange for a one-half interest in the plant; and that the representations as to ownership made by appellant were false, and that he had no interest whatsoever in the printing plant. Where representations detailed in the words of an information do not in themselves furnish a logical cause or inducement for a complainant's act in parting with his money or property; where their force in that direction depends upon some extrinsic meaning or understanding which is not alleged—it may then be said that the "causal connection" between the pretenses employed and the resulting loss is not made to appear. The information presented in this case is not deficient in the respect suggested. It is plain enough in its charging part to enable a person of ordinary understanding to comprehend that the defendant, by pretending to be the owner of property, procured another to deliver to him money and merchandise in exchange for an interest therein. It is clearer in its statement of the facts constituting the alleged offense than was the information considered in the case of People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 Pac. 521, which the Supreme Court sustained as against the precise contention that is now advanced.

[2] Insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict is urged as a second ground for error. We have examined carefully the statement of the evidence and are satisfied that it must be held sufficient. It is clearly shown that appellant was not the owner of the printing plant when he attempted to sell a one-half interest to the complainant; he had no title at all. He attempted to show that negotiations had been in progress looking toward the purchase by him of the property and attempted to show that he had in fact completed such a deal. The evidence fell short of establishing that fact and the most that can be said for appellant's side of the case is that the jury might have concluded, had it believed the testimony offered by the defendant, that, while he had not in fact obtained title to the printing plant, his assumption that he had completed the purchase of it furnished an excuse as relieving his acts and conduct from the charge that they were fraudulent and done with intent to unlawfully deprive complainant of his property. That question, however, was for the jury and was decided against the appellant, and with that decision upon the facts he must rest content.

In the concluding paragraph of appellant's brief it is asserted that there was error in the instructions, but there is no specification or argument to show wherein the charge as given by the court to the jury did not correctly declare the law. We find no error justifying the claim of appellant that a reversal should be ordered.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. FOLTZ v. GIFFORD et al.
(Civ. 2334.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 8, 1921.)

1. Nuisance —82—Dismissal of action under Redlight Abatement Act against occupant held not to affect proceeding against owner.

Under Redlight Abatement Act, occupant and owner of building alleged to be used for prostitution are not such joint tort-feasors as prevent court from dismissing action against occupant and proceeding against owner.

2. Judgment —559—Dismissal of action for misdemeanor not applicable to abatement of nuisance.

Pen. Code, § 1387, providing that dismissal of action for a misdemeanor is a bar to any other proceeding for the same offense, is not applicable to equitable action to abate a nuisance under Redlight Abatement Act.

3. Nuisance —84—Amendment of description permissible.

In action under Redlight Abatement Act to abate as a nuisance buildings used for prostitution, an amendment of the complaint by correcting erroneous description of property is permissible, as Code Civ. Proc. § 473, relating to amendments, is applicable.

4. Appeal and error —236(2)—No complaint of amendment where additional time to plead was not requested.

Defendants in action under Redlight Abatement Act to abate as a nuisance buildings used for prostitution cannot complain of amendment correcting description of property where they did not request additional time to plead or secure evidence.

5. Appeal and error —740(2) — Assignment that court failed to find material allegations of answer too general.

An assignment of error that court failed to find all material allegations of the answer is too general for consideration.

6. Appeal and error —931(1)—Failure to find on allegations of answer presumed correct.

On appeal on judgment roll alone it will be presumed that court's failure to find on allegations of answer was on ground that they were not supported by the evidence.

7. Constitutional law —42—Party not injured cannot claim denial of due process.

In action under Redlight Abatement Act to abate as a nuisance buildings used for prostitution, occupant cannot complain that she was denied due process of law because suit as to her was dismissed and court then proceeded to judgment against the owner and decreed that she was the owner of the furniture therein, and that it should be removed, as she had her day in court and could have defended and was not prejudiced thereby, but escaping costs.

8. Constitutional law —251 — Federal Const. U. S. Amend. 5, does not apply to states.

Const. U. S. Amend. 5, relating to due process of law, has no application to the several states.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by the People, on the relation of E. P. Foltz, against Olive E. Gifford and another. From judgment for relator, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. M. Armstrong, of Portola, for appellants.
Charles Light and H. C. Stanley, both of Stockton, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was under the Redlight Abatement Act (Stats. 1913, p. 20), and resulted in a judgment of abatement as a nuisance of certain buildings used for prostitution in the city of Tracy in the county of San Joaquin. The appeal is here upon the judgment roll alone, and we can see no merit whatever in the position of appellants.

[1] It appears that after the evidence was heard the action was dismissed as to the occupant of the building, and it seems to be the claim of appellants that thereby the plaintiff lost the right to prosecute the cause any further; in other words, that the action must be prosecuted to judgment against both the owner and occupant, if prosecuted at all.

There are certain cases of joint tort-feasors where this principle would probably apply, but such is not the situation herein. In considering the question, it is well to remember that the principal purpose of the action is to abate and prevent a nuisance; it being a proceeding in rem, primarily against the property because it is maintained and used in violation of the law. The statute contemplates that the owner and occupant shall be made parties to the action to afford them an opportunity to meet the accusation and protect their property interests, but, when it has been shown that the building is used for such immoral purposes, the owner cannot resist the abatement of the nuisance simply because the court has seen fit to dismiss the action as to the occupant. It is manifest that he is not prejudiced in any manner by such dismissal, however erroneous it may be. The case is entirely different from those instances of joint personal liability where there may be the right of contribution. Besides, the record does not show upon what ground the action was dismissed nor upon whose motion. We may assume that it was done at the instance and according to the request of appellants. If so, they would not be heard to question a righteous judgment upon the ground that it was irregularly rendered by reason of an error committed at their own solicitation. For be it said that, according to the findings, the court committed error in dismissing the action against Jessie Green. As to her it may be said, in addition, that she has no ground for complaint, since her property was not sold, as might have been done under the evidence. It was ordered removed from the building, but this is a necessary incident to the judgment closing the building for a year, and the result was really more favorable to her than she had the right to expect.

[2] There is no room for the application of section 1387 of the Penal Code, providing that the dismissal of an action for a misdemeanor "is a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense," etc. That refers to criminal proceedings, while here we are dealing with an equitable action for the abatement of a nuisance. McCarthy v. Gaston Ridge Mill, etc., Co., 144 Cal. 542, 78 Pac. 7. The civil action is entirely distinct from the criminal, and the prosecution of one does not prohibit the prosecution of the other. We may add that there is no evidence in the record that any criminal proceeding has been instituted against either of the defendants.

[3, 4] Equally without merit is the claim that the amendment to the complaint, allowed by the court after the cause was set for trial "set up an entirely new cause of action, leaving the court with no jurisdiction to proceed further in the summary proceeding." It seems that a mistake was made in the description of the property, it being design-nated in the original complaint as lots 9 and 10, whereas it was really lots 7, 8, and 9; and the court permitted the correction to be made. We can conceive of no reason why the court should not allow such amendment. In that respect this class of actions stands upon the same footing as other proceedings. The amendment was in furtherance of justice and was authorized by the Code and the decisions of the courts. Code Civ. Proc. § 473; Carter v. Lothian, 133 Cal. 451, 65 Pac. 962. Of course, the court did not lose jurisdiction of the cause by reason of said amendment, nor is there anything to show that appellants were at all prejudiced thereby. If they had desired additional time in which to plead or to secure further evidence in consequence of said amendment, they should have requested it. Manifestly, though, the amendment was of such nature as to require no continuance of the trial.

[5, 6] It is claimed that the court failed to find upon "material allegations of the answer." The specification is too indefinite to demand particular notice. However, we find no material allegation that did not receive attention in the findings. Moreover, if there be any such allegation, "it must be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing in the record, that there was no evidence which would have sustained a finding" in their favor on such issue. Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 118 Pac. 441, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844.

[7, 8] The only other objection worthy of notice is that the court—

"after having already acquitted the occupant of the building, Jessie Green, of the charge of maintaining a nuisance then proceeded in the same action to find her guilty of the same charge and inflicted upon her the penalty of such unwarranted conviction, to wit, eviction from the accused building, confiscation of her lease, and removal of all her personal property therefrom, * * * contrary to the express mandates of amendments 5 and 6 of the Constitution of the United States of America."

This objection erroneously assumes that the court acquitted said Green of the charge of maintaining a nuisance. The fact is that the court found:

"That said Jessie Green is the owner of the furniture, fixtures, and musical instruments and other movable property situated in said building, and that the same are used in conducting, maintaining, aiding, and abetting said nuisance."

It is true, as already seen, that for some undisclosed reason the action as to her was dismissed, but this was after she had her day in court and the opportunity to defend the action. The dismissal was apparently an unwarranted favor granted to her and saved her the payment of costs of suit.

That said amendments have no application to the case is quite apparent. The only provision therein that could possibly be regarded as bearing upon the controversy is the one prohibiting the taking of one's property "without due process of law."

But she was afforded the benefit of every privilege that the law contemplates, and it was only after full hearing that the court concluded that said nuisance existed and was being maintained by the defendants.

Of course, there can be no question that the state has authority to provide for the abatement of nuisances, whether they exist by the fault of individuals or not. Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) p. 849.

It may be added that our Supreme Court has held that the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States has no application to proceedings in our state courts. People v. Nolan, 144 Cal. 75, 77 Pac. 774.

We can see no merit in the claim of appellants, and the judgment is affirmed.

MEYERS v. BRADFORD et al. (Civ. 2292.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 6, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 3, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations ☞705(1) — Trial ☞194(15)—Instruction that driver should always have automobile under control and not assume that road was clear held proper.

In an action for damages to an automobile from collision on a city street, an instruction that it is the operator's duty to keep his motor vehicle always under control, so as to avoid the collision with others using the highway, and that he has no right to assume that the road is clear, but under all circumstances and at all times must be vigilant, and must anticipate and expect the presence of others, and that the fact that he did not know that any one was on the highway did not excuse conduct amounting to recklessness, had he so known, held proper and not to invade the jury's province.

2. Damages ☞39—For loss of use of automobile recoverable.

Where defendant's negligence caused an automobile wreck, plaintiff could recover damages for the use of his machine while it was being repaired.

3. Damages ☞106—For loss of use of automobile wrecked by defendant's negligence would be the cost of use of other machine whether one hired or not.

Under Civ. Code, § 3333, the measure of plaintiff's damages for loss of the use of his automobile while being repaired, after injury from collision through defendant's negligence, would be the cost of hiring another machine for his use, whether he hired one or not.

4. Appeal and error ☞1068(4) — Defendant may not object to measure of damages in matter for which damages were not allowed.

In an action for damages to an automobile caused by defendant's negligence resulting in a collision, defendant may not complain as to measure of damages for plaintiff's loss of use of his machine, where the jury undoubtedly allowed nothing therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by J. S. Meyers against Mrs. George B. Bradford and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Downey & Downey, of Sacramento, for appellants.

P. H. Johnson, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment on a verdict in his favor for $400 for damages to his automobile received through a collision with the car of appellants at the intersection of Twenty-Fourth and U streets in the city of Sacramento, and the appeal is from said judgment. It is not disputed that the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict and judgment in respect to the negligence of defendants, the want of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff and the amount of damages awarded. Indeed, there seems to be no substantial conflict as to any of these elements involved in the case, and even the testimony of defendants showed them to be chargeable with actionable negligence.

[1] Two points, however, are made by appellants: First, that the court erred in instructing the jury that "it is part of the duty of the operator of a motor vehicle to keep his machine always under control so as to avoid collisions with pedestrians and other persons using the highway. He has no right to assume that the road is clear, but under all circumstances and at all times he must be vigilant and must anticipate and expect the presence of others. Accordingly, the fact that he did not know that any one was on the highway is no excuse for conduct which would have amounted to recklessness if he had known that another vehicle or person was on the highway." And, second, that the court was not warranted in authorizing a recovery for the value of the use of the machine while it was being repaired.

That said instruction demands the proper attitude of an operator in the situation referred to can hardly admit of doubt. It suggests a fundamental principle that must be observed in order to avoid illegal injury to another. The basis of the instruction is that in the enjoyment of a common right the participant must exercise constant care that the correlative right of others may not be unnecessarily impaired or destroyed. The highways are, of course, established and maintained at public expense for the use and benefit, for lawful purposes, of all the citizens, and it cannot be claimed that the drivers of automobiles have any special right or privilege in the use or enjoyment thereof. The law indeed imposes upon them a degree of care commensurate with the peculiar hazard attending the operation of these modern vehicles.

If said instruction does not contain sound doctrine, then the converse of the propositions therein contained may be adopted as the right rule for the guidance of automobile drivers. The court would then declare the law to be that—"It is not a part of the duty of an operator of a motor vehicle to keep his machine always under control, or that it is his duty to keep it under control only a part of the time; that he has the right to assume that the road is clear, and under no circumstances and at no time must he be vigilant or anticipate or expect the presence of others; and if he does not know that any one else is on the highway he is excusable for conduct that would amount to recklessness if he did know that another was using it."

The absurdity of such a rule is, of course, apparent. Even the undertakers, whose business would be greatly promoted thereby, would hesitate to indorse it. But it is due the learned counsel for appellants to say that their stricture is really confined to the last part of the instruction. It must be plain, however, that the driver is not excusable for reckless conduct because he does not know that another may be using the highway. From the very nature of the situation he is chargeable with knowledge and he must anticipate such contingency as arose in this case. It may be true, as suggested by appellants, that in out of the way places, or at late hours of the night, or in extremely stormy weather, the rule is not so strict, and it would not be so unreasonable for him to assume that the highway is more or less deserted. But the collision herein occurred before dark, in the heart of the residence district of the city, at the intersection of two highways in constant use, and the fact that it was raining emphasized the duty of the driver to be careful and vigilant. Citation of authorities is hardly needed for a proposition so obvious, but we may refer to these cases noted in respondent's brief: Graham v. Hagmann, 270 Ill. 252, 110 N. E. 337; Thies v. Thomas (Sup.) 77 N. Y. Supp. 276; Birkett v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 110 N. Y. 504, 18 N. E. 108; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

In giving the instruction the court did not invade the province of the jury. It stated merely a recognized principle of law that was involved in the case, and it left to the jury the determination of the question of fact whether the conduct of appellants fell within the contemplation of such principle. Indeed, the instructions were full and accurate as to the doctrine of negligence, and they have escaped the criticism of appellants, save in the instance to which we have referred.

[2, 3] As to the other question, it is apparent that, by reason of the negligence of defendants, plaintiff was deprived of the use of his machine while it was being repaired. This is a thing of value, and it is difficult to understand why it should not be considered a part of the detriment suffered by plaintiff in consequence of the accident. The general rule applicable to the situation is found in section 3333 of the Civil Code as follows:

"For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not."

The only difficulty is in determining the financial measure of the use of the machine; in other words, how much money would compensate for the loss of its use during the time it was being repaired. If the plaintiff had hired another machine, what he paid for it, if the rental value, would furnish a practicable and reasonable measure of his loss. But he suffers an equal detriment if he chooses to do without a machine while his is being repaired, and there seems to be no sound reason why the rental value of such machines should not be taken in either case as a fair measure of his loss. Upon this subject the authorities are not altogether uniform, but we think the better view is with respondent.

In Detmar v. Burns Bros., 111 Misc. Rep. 189, 181 N. Y. Supp. 146, it was held:

"1. Damages for loss of use of an automobile may be allowed against one who negligently injures it, although the owner intended to use it only for pleasure, and not for rent or profit.

"2. Evidence of the rental value of an automobile is admissible upon the question of the compensation to be awarded the owner for being deprived of its use through another's negligence, although he did not intend to rent it or use it for profit.

"3. Evidence of rental value is admissible not as furnishing the exact measure of damages, but as one of the facts to be considered in ascertaining the extent of the injury."

Stamford Motor Co., 89 Conn. 51, 92 Atl. 665; Universal Taxi Co. v. Blumenthal (Sup.) 143 N. Y. Supp. 1056. See, also, Sedgwick on Damages (9th Ed.) § 243b.

It is clear that this element is a part of the general damages suffered by plaintiff, and it is not subject to any special provision of the statute, as was the case in Lynch v. McGhan, 7 Cal. App. 132, 93 Pac. 1044. It is rather analogous to Linforth v. S. F. G. & E. Co., 156 Cal. 58, 103 Pac. 320, 19 Ann. Cas. 1230, wherein a building was injured, and in discussing the elements of damage, the court said that the plaintiff was entitled to the cost of the repairs and that "compensation for the loss of the use of the property is in precise accord with section 3333 of the Civil Code."

[4] But if we were to concede that the trial court took an erroneous view of this feature of the case, it should be held that it was without prejudice, for the jury undoubtedly allowed plaintiff nothing for the loss of the use, since the evidence shows without conflict that the damage to the machine exceeded the sum of $400. Under such circumstances we would presume that the general verdict was based upon those elements of damage that were unquestionably involved, rather than upon one of doubtful propriety.

We see no merit in the appeal and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

54 Cal. App. 177

Ex parte THOMPSON. (Cr. 1013.)

Habeas corpus ⚡54—Prisons ⚡15—Petition for habeas corpus insufficient; credits for good behavior available only if accorded by board.

Under the Indeterminate Sentence Law, credits for good conduct are available to reduce a prisoner's time of confinement only if accorded by the state board of prison directors and not forfeited by them; hence a petition for habeas corpus by a prisoner, claiming to be held in custody after expiration of the time when, after allowance of credits earned, his term of imprisonment expired, was insufficient, where it did not appear therefrom that the board had accorded petitioner any credits or that they had not forfeited any which had been given.

Application by Fleet E. Thompson for writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

Fleet E. Thompson, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. In the verified petition for a writ of habeas corpus, filed in this matter, it is alleged that the petitioner is unlawfully held in custody by the warden of the state prison at San Quentin, after the expiration of the time when, with the allowance of credits earned, his term of imprisonment expired. His allegation is that he has "earned" all the credits provided for by the rules regulating the government of prisoners at the prison, and that none have been forfeited.

The petitioner's contention is based upon an erroneous theory of the present law governing such matters. Formerly a prisoner in one of the state's penal institutions was entitled, as of right, to certain fixed credits earned by good behavior while under restraint. By the enactment of the indeterminate sentence law, which went into effect July 27, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 665), the Legislature did away with the plan theretofore in force by which these credits for good behavior were given. In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 695, 171 Pac. 958. Following the decision of the Supreme Court in the Lee Case, the state board of prison directors adopted a comprehensive system under which, as we understand it, the matter of the good behavior of a prisoner, and the recognition to be given to such conduct, becomes a matter of consideration and affirmative action by the board in each particular case.

The petitioner was received at the prison February 15, 1919. Thereafter, according to his petition, the board of prison directors fixed his term at three years from and after the date on which he was received by the warden, and provided there should be deducted from the time of his confinement the aggregate of all credits provided by the board, which the prisoner should have earned and not forfeited. He alleges he has earned certain credits which have not been forfeited. But under the decision in the Lee Case, and according to the rules and usage in vogue at the prison, as we understand them, the allegations are not sufficient. It is not made to appear that the board of prison directors, by any act on its part, has accorded the petitioner any credits for good conduct, or, if any have been given, but that they may have been declared forfeited by the board. In view of the fact that petitioner was released on parole, which was later revoked by the board, and the prisoner only recently returned to the prison, we may safely infer that he is a "parole violator," who has lost the good standing, if any, he may have previously attained.

The application for the writ is denied.

CLARKSON v. MOIR (two cases).
(Civ. 3685.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 8, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨694(1)—Sufficiency of evidence not reviewable, where bill of exceptions does not specify insufficiencies.

Where the bill of exceptions contains no specifications of particulars wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient to sustain the findings, its sufficiency cannot be considered on appeal from the judgment, and the rule extends to review of proceedings on motion for new trial, where the record is brought up by bill of exceptions.

2. Parties ⇨95(3)—Error as to initial of party named is subject of amendment.

Where action was brought against Lydia F. Moir, when Lydia M. Moir was intended, the error is subject to correction by amendment.

3. Limitation of actions ⇨121(2)—Amendment as to name of party relates back.

Where an amendment is filed correcting the name of defendant by changing an initial, the action should be regarded as having commenced against such party at the time the original complaint was filed.

4. Judgment ⇨818(2)—Of foreign country as to liability of stockholders here binding without notice served in such country.

Proceedings in the Supreme Court of Ontario, Canada, finding a corporation insolvent and listing the amount for which stockholders residing here are liable, is binding and enforceable here, though notice of the proceedings was not served on them within the jurisdiction of that court; the only notice had being served here.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Geoffrey Teignmouth Clarkson, as Liquidator of the Sovereign Bank of Canada, against Georgianna Esther Moir, and action by same plaintiff against Lydia M. Moir. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Presented on one bill of exceptions and record. Affirmed.

Williams & Williams, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Donald Barker, of Los Angeles (Wm. H. Nebbett, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Separate actions were brought against appellants, and judgments rendered against each of them, from which judgments they have appealed. In accordance with stipulations of the parties, the appeals are presented on one bill of exceptions and record. Each of the defendants was held liable to pay to the plaintiff, as liquidator of the Sovereign Bank of Canada, an amount equal to the par value of the shares held by her in that bank, a corporation which became insolvent. The recovery was based upon the insolvency of the corporation and resulting proceedings and judgment of the Supreme Court of Ontario, in the Dominion of Canada, as set forth in the amended complaint. The proceedings in the Supreme Court of Ontario were conducted under the "Winding-Up Act," and amendment thereto, of the Dominion of Canada. In the judgment rendered in those proceedings, each of the defendants were designated as contributory, and settled upon the list of contributories for a stated amount, and a call was thereby made for the full amount for which the contributory named was settled upon the list of contributories.

The present actions were commenced on the 26th day of January, 1916. The answers of the defendants, in addition to denials of some of the allegations in the complaints alleged that the bank became insolvent on or about the 18th day of January, 1908, and that the actions were barred by the provisions of section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the provisions of that section, an action brought against a stockholder of a corporation to enforce a liability created by law must be brought within three years after the liability was created. In Royal Trust Co. v. MacBean, 168 Cal. 642, 144 Pac. 139, which was an action similar to those now under consideration, it was held that—

"The liability was created, at the latest, upon the beginning of the status of insolvency, and the three-year period of limitation began to run then."

[1] In the present actions, the court found that all of the allegations of the amended complaint are true; and that the bank did not become insolvent until 90 days after the 30th day of June, 1913. Appellants contend that the corporation, in fact, became insolvent at the time stated in their answers. We must decline to examine the evidence for the purpose of questioning the findings of fact. The bill of exceptions contains no specifications of particulars wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient to justify any of the findings. In the absence of such specifications, the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings cannot be considered on appeal from the judgment. This rule extends to the review of proceedings on motion for a new trial where the record is brought up by a bill of exceptions. Mills v. Brady, 196 Pac. 776; Beeson v. Schloss (Sup.) 192 Pac. 292; Millar v. Millar (Sup.) 175 Cal. 799, 167 Pac. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184.

[2, 3] On behalf of appellant, Lydia M. Moir, it is claimed that the action against her is barred for the additional reason that the action was originally commenced against another party, and that this appellant was not made a party defendant until May, 1917; also that the court erred in permitting substitution of appellant in place of the original sole defendant in the action. For the reasons hereinabove stated, we can consider this point only to the extent that the facts appear in the judgment roll. As shown by the original complaint, the action was commenced against Lydia F. Moir. In the amended complaint, the defendant is named as Lydia M. Moir (sued herein as Lydia F. Moir). The second amended complaint begins thus:

"Comes now the plaintiff and by leave of court amends his complaint herein and for cause of action against the defendant, Lydia M. Moir (who was originally sued herein as Lydia F. Moir), alleges."

In her answer, appellant alleged that she has never been known as Lydia F. Moir, and that the person originally sued herein under that name is her mother. But the court found that the person sued and intended to be sued herein was and is the defendant, Lydia M. Moir; that there was no substitution of one defendant for another, but that by mistake and inadvertence the middle initial of the defendant was erroneously inserted in the original complaint and summons as "F" instead of "M," and that the complaint was amended accordingly when said mistake was discovered. We have no doubt that an error of this kind may be corrected, and that the action should be regarded as having been commenced against appellant at the time when the original complaint was filed. Allison v. Thomas, 72 Cal. 562, 14 Pac. 309, 1 Am. St. Rep. 89. In 15 Ann. Cas. 117, numerous cases are cited in support of the proposition that—

"The weight of authority seems to be that, in civil proceedings, a mistake made in the middle initial of a name by the insertion of an erroneous initial for the correct one is immaterial, and should be disregarded."

Appellants next suggest that the insolvency of the bank as early as 1911 is established by the finding of the court that certain circular letters to shareholders were sent out by the general manager of the bank as alleged in the answer of appellants. But the findings of the court that certain specified allegations of the answers are untrue included the alleged facts concerning the laws of Canada, upon which appellants relied. Since these findings must be accepted as establishing the facts of the case, the only law by which the question of insolvency of the bank may be tested consists of the statutory provisions contained in the complaint. It must therefore be accepted to be true, as found by the court, that the bank did not become insolvent until 90 days after the 30th day of June, 1913.

[4] Finally, it is claimed that the proceedings, orders, and judgment in the insolvency matter in the Supreme Court of Ontario were without jurisdiction as against appellants because appellants were not served with notice of those proceedings at any place within the jurisdiction of that court. Appellants claim the benefit of the rule that jurisdiction to render a judgment personally enforceable against the defendant must be founded upon personal service of process within the state or country to which the jurisdiction of such court is confined. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565, Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635, and numerous other decisions. In the cases at bar the court found that it is true that, as to whatever notices, summons, processes or pleadings mentioned in the complaints as having been served upon the defendants, such services were made upon them while they were residents of and within the state of California, and not while they were residents of and actually within the Dominion of Canada.

The rule relied upon by appellants is not applicable to proceedings of the nature of those here in question. Such seems to be the effect of the decisions in which the subject has been considered. So far as we are advised, the question has not been determined by the courts of California. A leading case is Howarth v. Lombard, 175 Mass. 570, 56 N. E. 888, 49 L. R. A. 301. That was an action brought in a court of Massachusetts by the plaintiff as receiver of a bank in the state of Washington, to recover the amount of an assessment levied by the superior court of the state of Washington upon the defendant as a stockholder. Defendant had not been personally served with process in the state of Washington in the proceedings there in which the assessment was made. The principles governing the matter of jurisdiction in such cases were extensively discussed in the Massachusetts decision, and were applied to the particular case as follows:

"In the case at bar a receiver of the Traders' Bank has been appointed, the amount of its assets and liabilities has been judicially determined, the necessity for an assessment upon stockholders and the amount of the required assessment have been ascertained, an assessment upon all stockholders has been made, and the receiver who is to hold this fund in trust for creditors has been directed to collect it. We see no injustice to the defendant in holding him here to the performance of the obligation which he voluntarily assumed in another state.

"The question arises how far these proceedings in the court of Washington are binding on the defendant. The stockholders must be assumed to have understood the statute from the first as it has been construed by the court. They must be presumed to have agreed that on the insolvency of the corporation a receiver might be appointed by the court, and the affairs of the corporation administered, and the amount of its assets and liabilities determined, and the deficiency ascertained under the order of the court, and an assessment to meet this deficiency made ratably upon all who were then stockholders. This is the only proper way of accomplishing the object of the statute, and the statute, as construed by the local courts, means this as plainly as if every part were expressed. Under the statute the stockholders impliedly agreed that, if their subscriptions were in part unpaid when they were needed for creditors, they would pay the balance to the corporation or its legal representative, and that if more was needed they would also pay their proper share, up to the amount of their subscriptions, to the trustee of this additional fund, for the benefit of creditors. The determination of the questions involved is a part of the proceedings of the court in the administration of the affairs of a local insolvent corporation. The court of Washington, acting under its general authority in such administration, is the only tribunal which has jurisdiction to determine the amounts due creditors, and to collect and apply the assets of the corporation. The undertaking of the stockholders relates directly to the payment of amounts so to be ascertained. The ascertainment is like a common case of a judgment against a corporation, which is binding on stockholders. The members of such corporations, as well as the corporations themselves, are within the jurisdiction of the local court so far as is necessary for the determination of the rights and liabilities of the corporation and its members among themselves. In reference to this kind of liability, such decisions and orders are binding on stockholders who are not before the court otherwise than by virtue of their membership in the corporation. [Citing cases.] That such adjudications are binding upon absent stockholders in reference to assessments for unpaid subscriptions has often been expressly decided."

The same subject was considered in Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 27 Sup. Ct. 755, 51 L. Ed. 1163. That was an action originating in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York, wherein the receiver of a corporation of the state of Minnesota sought to recover upon the alleged stockholder's liability under the Constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The action was based upon an order made at the instance of the receiver in the Minnesota court having jurisdiction of the receivership. This order fixed the amount of assessment declared to be necessary against each and every share of the capital stock, and authorized the receiver to prosecute actions or proceedings against the persons liable in any court having jurisdiction in the state of Minnesota or elsewhere. Notices of hearing of the receiver's petition had been published, mailed, and served, as required by order of the court, but had not been personally served upon the stockholders, who were defendants in the action brought by the receiver in the federal court. The matter having been brought before the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error, that court sustained the judgment of the circuit court, and upheld the validity of the proceedings declaring the assessment. Referring to the proceeding in the action wherein the assessment was made, the court said:

"The proceeding has for its purpose the liquidation of the affairs of the corporation, the collection and application of its assets and other liabilities which may be administered for the benefit of creditors. In such case it has been frequently held that the representation which a stockholder has by virtue of his membership in the corporation is all that he is entitled to. It was so held in a well-considered case in Massachusetts. Howarth v. Lombard, 175 Mass. 570, 49 L. R. A. 301, 56 N. E. 888. And it has been held in cases in this court that when an assessment is necessary to be made upon unpaid stock subscriptions for the benefit of creditors, the court may make the assessment without the presence or personal service of stockholders. Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. Ed. 184, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 336, 40 L. Ed. 986, 990, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810."

In Converse v. Hamilton, 224 U. S. 243, 32 Sup. Ct. 415, 56 L. Ed. 749, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1292, referring to proceedings under the laws of the state of Minnesota wherein a court there, at the instance of the receiver, had levied an assessment against stockholders who were not made parties to the sequestration suit, and were not notified otherwise than by publication or by mail of the applications for the orders levying the assessments, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"The constitutional validity of chapter 272 has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the state, as also by this court; and this because: (1) The statute is but a reasonable regulation of the mode and means of enforcing the double liability assumed by those who become stockholders in a Minnesota corporation; (2) while the order levying the assessment is made conclusive, as against all stockholders, of all matters relating to the amount and propriety of the assessment and the necessity therefor, one against whom it is sought to be enforced is not precluded from showing that he is not a stockholder, or is not the holder of as many shares as is alleged, or has a claim against the corporation which in law or equity he is entitled to set off against the assessment, or has any other defense personal to himself; and (3) while the order is made conclusive as against a stockholder, even although he may not have been a party to the suit in which it was made and may not have been notified that an assessment was contemplated, this is not a tenable objection, for the order is not in the nature of a personal judgment against the stockholder, and as to him is amply sustained by the presence in that suit of the corporation, considering his relation to it and his contractual obligation in respect of its debts."

In Johnson v. Libby, 111 Me. 204, 88 Atl. 647, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 681, it was likewise held that—

"When, in proceedings for the liquidation of the affairs of a corporation, and for the payment of its debts and engagements, an assessment is necessary to be made upon unpaid stock subscriptions and upon the additional liability which its shareholders have assumed by becoming members of the corporation as shareholders, the court may make such assessment in proceedings therefor against the corporation without the presence of, or personal service upon, the individual shareholders. In such proceedings the representation which a shareholder has by virtue of his membership in the corporation is all that he is entitled to."

In the cases at bar, no attempt was made by either of the defendants to show that she was not a stockholder, or that she was not the holder of the alleged number of shares, or that she had any claim against the corporation which in law or equity she was entitled to set off against the assessment, or that there was any other defense personal to herself. Appellants therefore are not in a position to claim that they were denied any of the rights to which they might have been entitled under the most favorable construction of the law as stated in the foregoing decisions.

The judgments are affirmed.

BACON v. TRADERS' OIL CORPORATION.
(Civ. 3673; L. A. 6417.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 4, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 3, 1921.)

1. Corporations §123(12)—Holder of note waived rights under pledge of corporate stock by bringing action in attachment.

Holder of note secured by a pledge of corporate stock waived and abandoned his rights under the pledge by bringing action against the pledgor and others on the note and procuring an attachment to be levied on the shares of stock pledged to him, under Civ. Code, § 324.

2. Corporations §114 — Stock transferable without delivery of certificate; "personal property."

While shares of corporate stock are "personal property" under Civ. Code, § 324, a certificate of stock is merely written evidence of the ownership thereof, and hence, where stock was pledged as security for a note, the certificate being indorsed, a transfer by the debtor of the stock to a third person by a separate instrument was effectual to convey title in the shares of stock to the third person, no transfer of the stock having been made on the books of the corporation to the pledgee, notwithstanding section 3440.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Personal Property.]

3. Corporations §122—Purchaser of stock at execution sale held not to acquire title.

Where certificate of shares of corporate stock was indorsed as security for a note, but no transfer was made on the books of the corporation, and thereafter debtor transferred the stock by a separate instrument to a third person, and such transfer was noted on the books of the corporation, and the pledgee of the stock brought action on the note and attached the shares of stock as belonging to the debtor, and purchased the same at an execution sale with knowledge of the conveyance of the stock to the third person, he acquired no title to the stock, under Civ. Code, §§ 324, 3440.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Frank P. Bacon against the Traders' Oil Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

A. L. Abrahams and P. B. D'Orr, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Adams, Adams & Binford, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of 300 shares of preferred capital stock of the Traders' Oil Corporation, defendant in this action, made demand for a transfer of the shares to himself on the books of the company, and that the corporation issue to him a new certificate therefor. The demand was refused, whereupon the plaintiff brought this action for the recovery of damages, alleging the wrongful conversion of the stock by the defendant to its own use. Judgment was entered for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

The facts are few and are practically agreed upon. Harry Jackins, together with other parties, whose connection with the matter is not material here, indorsed the promissory note of the Leasehold Company, a corporation, which note was delivered to the appellant. Subsequently Jackins became the owner of 300 shares of the preferred capital stock of the Traders' Oil Corporation, his ownership being represented by certificate No. 249. Thereafter Jackins and M. V. McQuigg, for value, executed and delivered to appellant their promissory note for $18,500. As collateral security for its payment Jackins indorsed and delivered to appellant the certificate for the 300 shares of the stock of the defendant so owned by him. Appellant did not have this transaction noted on the books of the corporation. A few days later, by a separate instrument in writing, and consideration of McQuigg assuming Jackins' liability on the promissory note for $18,500, and other consideration, Jackins transferred to McQuigg all his right, title and interest in and to said stock certificate No. 249, and directed the corporation to transfer the stock to McQuigg, waiving and relinquishing all interest that he had in the stock, and all dividends arising thereunder. Immediately after the execution and delivery of this agreement to McQuigg, Jackins and McQuigg together went to the office of the Traders' Oil Corporation, and orally informed the assistant secretary of the corporation that the ownership of the shares of stock had been transferred to McQuigg. The latter thereupon requested that the proper entries be made on the stock ledger of the corporation, showing the change of ownership of the stock. This request was complied with. An indorsement was entered on the page of the stock ledger containing Jackins' account, which clearly indicated that the shares of stock in question had become the property of McQuigg, and that the dividends thereon were thereafter to be paid to him.

A short time after this transfer, the note of the Leasehold Company not being paid, appellant brought suit thereon, making Jackins and his coindorsers on the note parties defendant with the corporation. He procured an attachment to be issued, which was served upon the respondent, and under which the sheriff attached all stock, or shares, or interest in any stock or shares in the Traders' Oil Corporation belonging to Jackins. Appellant obtained a judgment against the Leasehold Company, Jackins, and others. Execution was duly issued and levied upon the stock of the Traders' Oil Corporation claimed to belong to Jackins. At the execution sale which followed the appellant bid the sum of $1,500 for this stock, and received a sheriff's certificate of sale therefor. This he presented to the Traders' Oil Corporation, with a demand that it issue to him a new certificate representing the shares of stock so purchased, and make the proper entry upon its books, showing the transfer. He did not surrender, nor offer to surrender for cancellation, certificate No. 249, which had theretofore been delivered to him. Upon refusal by respondent to comply with the demand appellant brought this action.

It was admitted in the court below that the value of the stock was $16,500; that presentation of the original certificate, No. 249, with the sheriff's certificate, was unnecessary, and would have been futile in so far as influencing respondent to issue the stock to appellant. It was also stipulated that at the time of the execution sale the appellant had notice of McQuigg's claim that the stock had been sold and transferred to him.

[1] Appellant is not here claiming any rights under the provisions of section 324 of the Civil Code, relating to the transfer of shares of stock in corporations. He admits that when he brought his action against Jackins and the others on the promissory note of the Leasehold Company, and procured the attachment to be levied on the shares of stock which Jackins had pledged to him, he waived and abandoned his rights under the pledge. This was undoubtedly true. Latta v. Tutton, 122 Cal. 279, 283, 54 Pac. 844, 68 Am. St. Rep. 30; Clafin Co. v. Bretzfelder, 69 Ark. 271, 279, 62 S. W. 905. He bases his attack on the judgment upon other grounds. At the time of the sale and transfer of the stock by Jackins to McQuigg, the certificate for the stock was, and remained, in the possession of appellant. Consequently it was not delivered by Jackins to McQuigg, or surrendered by the latter to the Traders' Oil Corporation for cancellation and reissue. Placing his reliance therefor upon the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code, relating to the transfer of personal property other than a thing in action, appellant contends that the sale from Jackins to McQuigg was void as to him, a creditor of Jackins, for the reason that it was not, he claims, accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by the actual and continued change of possession of the stock transferred.

[2] We do not believe there is merit in this contention. While the shares of stock in the Traders' Oil Corporation, acquired and owned by Jackins, were personal property under section 324 of the Civil Code, the certificate of stock was merely written evidence of the ownership thereof. 14 Corp. Jur. p. 478, par. 698; Craig v. Hesperia Land & Water Co., 113 Cal. 7, 12, 45 Pac. 10, 35 L. R. A. 306, 54 Am. St. Rep. 316; Williams v. Ashurst, etc., Co., 144 Cal. 619, 625, 78 Pac. 28. Consequently, while the section of the Code, supra, provides that shares of stock of a corporation may be transferred by indorsement and the delivery of the certificate, but that such transfer is not valid except as to the parties thereto until entered upon the books of the corporation, we find nothing in the section declaring that a transfer without such indorsement and delivery of the certificate, may not be made. In fact, the accepted doctrine appears to be otherwise. Thompson in his work on Corporations (2d Ed.) vol. 4, par. 4326, lays down the rule that the correct method of transferring the full legal title of corporation stock is by an assignment, either by a separate instrument (italics ours), or by an indorsement on the certificate to the purchaser, duly signed by the holder of such certificate and by the actual registration of the transfer on the books of the corporation, when this is required either by statute or charter or by a valid by-law.

"It may be said in a general way," says this author, "that any assignment, by delivery or otherwise, which is finally entered and transferred on the books of the corporation, according to its rules, is a transfer of the legal title. The very purpose of the transfer on the books is to pass the legal title to the transferee."

We think the rule thus laid down is in entire accord with the provision of section 324 of the Civil Code. The execution and delivery of the separate instrument by Jackins to McQuigg in the instant case was as effectual as an assignment of the certificate as if that document itself had been actually indorsed and delivered.

[3] Plaintiff was but a purchaser at an execution sale. While one who purchases at execution sale shares of stock of a corporation, standing on the books in the name of the judgment debtor, is entitled to have the certificate of such shares reissued to him as such purchaser, if at the time of the purchase he acts in good faith, and without notice that the outstanding certificate has been assigned, and that the ownership of the stock has passed to some other person (Security Com. & Savings Bank, etc., v. Imperial Water Co. [Sup.] 192 Pac. 22), that rule has no application here. In the instant case appellant admits that he had notice at the time of the execution sale of the fact that the stock had been transferred by Jackins to McQuigg by a sale which we hold to be valid. He therefore acquired no title to the stock. Blakeman v. Puget Sound Iron Co., 72 Cal. 321, 13 Pac. 872.

The judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division One, is denied.

We would say, however, that we do not understand the opinion of the District Court of Appeal as holding that section 3440, Civil Code, does not apply to a transfer of stock whose ownership is evidenced by stock certificates. We understand the opinion as going upon the fact that the transfer had been made on the books of the corporation, and thereby the requirements of section 3440, Civil Code, had been complied with.

All concur.

ALBERTSON v. MacFARLANE. (Civ. 3593.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 20, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 18, 1921.)

1. Estoppel §68(3)—Defense in former action held an election to treat deed as mortgage.

Where defendant in action to quiet title set up a defense that a deed given to plaintiff was intended as a mortgage, such election to treat the conveyance as a mortgage precluded him from later attempting to treat the deed as a trust deed and to proceed in another action to enforce the trust.

2. Judgment §744—Matter determined in former suit not again considered.

Where defendant in suit to quiet title set up defense that deed to plaintiff was intended as a mortgage, and the judgment was in favor of plaintiff, defendant could not in a later action claim that the deed was intended as a mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Rasmus H. Albertson against M. MacFarlane. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

Sawyer & Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

H. L. Breed, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. On December 31, 1917, the plaintiff filed a complaint in the trial court, asking that the trial court adjudge him to be the owner of, and that the defendant was holding, a certain piece of property in Alameda county as trustee for the plaintiff. The defendant filed an answer in which he denied the allegations stated in the complaint, and as a second defense he pleaded a certain judgment in bar, and he also filed an amendment to his answer in which he set forth the statute of limitations. A trial was had, in which all the issues so made by the pleadings were fully tried out. In other words, the judgment of the trial court did not turn solely on the statute of limitations, nor solely on the plea of a judgment in bar, but rested on all of the issues. The judgment of the trial court was in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff has appealed, and has appeared in person during a part of the proceedings, and latterly Sawyer & Sawyer, attorneys at law, did, as a matter of charity, prepare and present to this court a brief on behalf of the appellant. The appellant's brief makes four separate points: (1) That appellant is the owner of the land; (2) that the deed to MacFarlane is a mortgage; (3) that it has never been foreclosed; and (4) that the prior judgment was made and entered against the appellant at a time when he was actually insane and actually an inmate of a state hospital, and therefore is not a bar. The respondent, in reply, makes three separate points: (1) That all the material allegations in the complaint were tried out by the trial court, that the evidence perchance may be said to be conflicting, but that all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were found against the plaintiff, and that such findings are conclusive on this court; (2) that the question of title to the lands in dispute was tried out in a former action between the same parties, and that the judgment in the former case is a bar; and (3) that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any he has, is barred by the statute of limitations. Among other things, the court found that on, and long prior to, the 6th day of February, 1913, plaintiff was the owner in fee of the lands described in plaintiff's complaint; that on February 6, 1913; plaintiff sold said lands to the defendant, who has ever since been in possession thereof, claiming to own the same; that the deed of conveyance was absolute in form, and was not intended to be a mortgage, nor to be a conveyance in trust; that prior to the commencement of this action, the plaintiff never demanded of defendant an accounting, nor did he ever tender to the defendant $1,240, together with interest thereon from the 6th day of February, 1913; that on the 6th day of February, 1913, and at the time of the trial, the property in dispute was of the value of $1,500, and no more; that subsequent to the execution of the deed dated February 6, 1913, the defendant gave to the plaintiff an option to purchase said property on, or before, the 6th day of April, 1913, and the plaintiff never exercised said option; that on May 27, 1913, plaintiff made a deed, absolute in form, conveying said lands to John W. Striker, and thereafter John W. Striker made a quit claim deed to this defendant; that plaintiff's action herein is barred by a certain judgment rendered on the 17th day of December, 1913, by the superior court of Alameda county, in an action therein pending wherein this defendant, M. MacFarlane, was the plaintiff, and this plaintiff, Albertson, was the defendant, wherein the title of this defendant, M. MacFarlane, was quieted, and this plaintiff, Albertson, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the 29th day of August, 1913, were forever barred and enjoined from claiming any right, title, interest, or estate, of, in, or to, said real property, or any part thereof, or lien thereon, adverse to this defendant; that said judgment was duly given and made in the superior court of Alameda county, and was entered on the 19th day of December, 1913; that plaintiff's action herein is barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 337, and the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339, and by the provisions of section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California.

[1] The plaintiff's complaint hints at fraud. The hint is predicated upon what purports to be a secret oral agreement that the deed from the plaintiff to the defendant was intended to be a conveyance in trust. On conflicting evidence the court found against the plaintiff. The finding was in accordance with the great weight of the evidence. If any fraud was committed, the plaintiff was advised of the defendant's contentions as early as August 29, 1913, the date of the filing of the complaint in the first action. The claimed fraud was a matter which could have been and should have been litigated in that action. True it is that in that case this plaintiff claimed that his deed to this defendant was intended as a mortgage. He was bound to elect which theory to advance. In making the election to proceed upon the mortgage theory he precluded himself from the right to claim thereafter that the deed was intended to be a trust deed. The two theories are inconsistent. The election in 1913 to treat the conveyance as a mortgage precluded this plaintiff from later attempting to treat a bargain and sale deed as a trust deed. Parke, etc., Co. v. White River L. Co., 101 Cal. 37, 40-41, 35 Pac. 442.

[2] As we have stated above, in his brief, as distinguished from his pleadings, the plaintiff now claims that his deed to the defendant was intended as a mortgage, and that the mortgage has never been foreclosed. But, that theory was expressly advanced in the prior action, and was expressly determined adversely to the contention of this plaintiff. As to this last contention the prior judgment has become a bar, and the courts are not at liberty to again consider the question.

Something is said in the briefs regarding the fact that during a part of the time that the first action was pending this plaintiff was being confined pursuant to a judgment of lunacy. No claim is made that summons was not duly served. No facts are shown which indicate that the incarceration for insanity prevented a full presentation of the plaintiff's case in the first action; and, even though such facts existed, they would not be a proper subject for consideration under the pleadings in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying the application for hearing in this court after decision by the district court of appeal of the first appellate district, division two, we wish to state that we are not prepared to approve what is said with relation to the matter of the alleged insanity of the plaintiff at the time the former action was instituted, pending and decided. This matter, however, was material only on the issue of bar by former judgment. The finding on this issue is not essential to the judgment here in view of the findings on the other issues which sufficiently support the judgment in favor of defendant, regardless of the finding on the issue of former judgment.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

RAMSEY v. CALIFORNIA PACKING CORPORATION et al. (Civ. 2269; Sac. 3087.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 23, 1921. Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing, April 19, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨659(3)—Original complaint made part of record on appeal.

Where answer denied certain allegations of complaint on information and belief by specific reference to the numbered lines and pages of the original complaint, but not to the complaint, as to the paging and the numbering of the lines thereof, as printed in the transcript on appeal, a suggestion of diminution of record, with the object of bringing before the appellate court, the original complaint, should be allowed.

2. Chattel mortgages ⇨136 — Removal of crop with consent of mortgagee not tortious, and lien is lost.

If mortgaged crops are removed with the consent of the mortgagee, they are not wrongfully or tortiously removed, and the lien of the mortgage on removal ceases by operation of law, under Civ. Code, § 2972.

3. Acknowledgment ⇨20(2), 53 — Chattel mortgages ⇨150(1)—Execution of chattel mortgage before joint beneficiary not notice to third persons when recorded.

Every instrument required to be recorded, with the exception of those belonging to the class mentioned in Civ. Code, §§ 1159, 1160, 1202, 1203, cannot be recorded, unless execution is acknowledged by the person executing it, and an acknowledgment taken before a grantee or one standing in the position of a beneficiary under a conveyance or other instrument is void, and does not entitle an instrument to be recorded, and a chattel mortgage executed before a notary public, who was a partner and joint beneficiary in the notes and mortgage, while in full force and binding between the parties, did not impart any notice to third persons of the mortgagee's right under it, though recorded.

4. Chattel mortgages ⇨229(3) — Mortgagee must rebut presumption that he consented to removal of crops.

In an action by mortgagee against purchaser of mortgaged tomatoes, where it appeared in evidence that the tomatoes had been removed from the premises before the purchase, the burden was on the plaintiff to rebut the presumption that the lien had been extinguished by showing that the tomatoes were removed without his knowledge and consent, and that it was therefore a tortious removal.

5. Chattel mortgages ⇨229(3) — Mortgagee, suing purchaser of crop, must show knowledge of tortious removal from premises.

In action by mortgagee of crop of tomatoes against third person, who had purchased the same after they had been tortiously removed from the premises by the mortgagors, burden was on the plaintiff to show that the purchaser had knowledge of the wrongful removal of the crop from the premises.

6. Chattel mortgages ⇨136—Permitting mortgagors to remove crop and sell same substitution of personal obligation.

An agreement of mortgagee, allowing mortgagors to sell mortgaged crops and turn over the proceeds to mortgagee, amounted in practical effect to a substitution of the personal obligation of the mortgagors for the security of the mortgage.

7. Pleading ⇨355—Refusal to strike out denials in answer on information and belief proper.

In an action by mortgagee of crop against third persons, purchasing the same from mortgagors, court properly refused to strike out from answer denials on information and belief relating to allegations of complaint, which referred to execution of notes, mortgage, good faith thereof, acknowledgment and recordation of the mortgage, and that no part of the note was paid; the mortgage not being recorded as required by law, in that it was executed before a joint beneficiary of the note and mortgage.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1047(3)—Striking lease from evidence in action on chattel mortgage held not prejudicial.

In action by mortgagee against purchasers of mortgaged crop, tried on the theory that mortgagors were owners of the crop and tortiously removed the same, it was not prejudicial error, if error at all, to strike from the evidence a lease of the land from mortgagee to mortgagors, wherein it was provided that title to crop should remain in mortgagee; it being immaterial whether or not mortgagors were tenants of the plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by W. C. Ramsey against the California Packing Corporation and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.

R. C. Minor and Nutter, Hancock & Ruth-erford, all of Stockton, and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit granted at the end of plaintiff's case on the motion of the defendants California Packing Corporation and E. Powers, who interposed their respective answers to the complaint. The defendants Kim and Hahn did not file an answer or answers to the complaint. The appeal is supported by a bill of exceptions. The facts, in summary, may be stated as follows:

Plaintiff was the owner in fee of 320 acres of ranch property which he leased to the defendants Kim and Hahn on the 1st day of November, 1917, for the term of one year wherein, plaintiff asserts in his brief, there was a stipulation that "the title to the crops shall remain in the party of the first part [plaintiff] until the entire rental is paid and the work performed." The complaint alleges on the 18th day of March, 1918, the same defendant lessees gave to the plaintiff two promissory notes, one for $3,000, and the other for $2,000, and, to secure the payment thereof, at the same time gave to said plaintiff and owner of said real property a crop or chattel mortgage on all crops of sugar beets, tomatoes, beans, Egyptian corn and similar products "being, standing, and growing" on the land described in the mortgage at that time, namely, March 18, 1918, when the chattel mortgage was signed. The note for the smaller amount was subsequently paid in full by the makers, who, also, before this suit, paid $500 on the other note. At the close of the harvest season of 1918, the answering defendants, California Packing Corporation and E. Powers, purchased and received possession from the said mortgagors (Kim and Hahn) of all the said crops of Egyptian corn and tomatoes and applied the same to their own use. Shortly after such sale and delivery of said crops by Kim and Hahn, the plaintiff demanded the aforesaid crops from said purchasers, or enough of the proceeds thereof to satisfy his mortgage claim. The said answering defendants refused to return the crops so sold and delivered as aforesaid, or to pay or satisfy said mortgage note. This action is for damages in the sum of $2,622.50; the said damages being equal to the balance due on said note, for the tortious removal of the mortgaged chattels from the land described in the mortgage and the wrongful conversion of said property. The case was tried by the court without a jury.

The court, upon the close of the plaintiff's case, and on motion of counsel for the answering defendants, struck from the record the lease whereby the premises described in the mortgage were demised to Kim and Hahn. Immediately following the making of that order, the motion of the defendants California Packing Corporation and Powers for a nonsuit was granted upon the following grounds and reasons:

"First, that the crop or crops, the value of which plaintiff is suing for, were not crops included in the mortgage; second, because the mortgage itself is invalid, as the execution of the instrument was before a person who was one-half interested in the proceeds of these crops; third, the general principle of law, of course, is that cited in the section, that the crops when severed—the old law was when severed from the soil—the crop mortgage became extinguished, and later the statute went one step further and stated they had to be removed from the premises; in other words, so long as the crops are on the premises, of course, the mortgage still exists, but, when removed, the mortgage becomes extinguished—here are the exceptions, and the plaintiff must show we are in the excepted class—that the goods were moved tortiously, and that there was some act or thing done by the defendant himself that caused that removal; fourth, the law says there must be some testimony of diligence on the part of the mortgagee of a crop mortgage. He cannot sit by, and wait for a season to pass, and allow those crops to leave the lands, or to be taken therefrom, and then afterwards, when an innocent purchaser buys the property, go to the man for the crops, or go to the man for the money."

[1] Before taking up for consideration the points involving the merits of this controversy, it is proper that we should first dispose of the suggestion of a diminution of the record on appeal made and filed by the respondent California Packing Corporation. The answer of said respondent denied certain allegations of the complaint on information and belief by specific reference to the numbered lines and pages of the complaint as they were numbered in the original draft of that pleading. Counsel for the plaintiff moved in the court below that so much of the answer as denied the allegations thus referred to "on information and belief" be stricken out, on the ground that the matters as to which, by its denials, the Packing Corporation disclaimed knowledge were presumptively within its knowledge, and should therefore have been directly denied. Typical of the allegations thus denied were those relative to the execution of the mortgage and the promissory notes by the nonanswering defendants, Kim and Hahn. It appears, however, that the denials of the answer to said allegations of the complaint on information and belief, while so conforming to the original complaint as it was numbered by page and lines as that no possible misunderstanding could arise as to the particular allegations of the complaint to which such denials were addressed do not conform to the complaint, as to the paging and the numbering of the lines thereof, as it is printed in the transcript on appeal. The object, therefore, of the suggestion of the diminution of the record was to bring before this court the original complaint, so that this court would be afforded enlightenment upon the point urged by the appellant that the court below erred in refusing to grant his motion to strike from the Packing Corporation's answer the denials referred to. We think the suggestion should be allowed, and it is therefore the order that the record certified to this court on the suggestion be and the same is incorporated into the record as a part thereof. Whether the court erred in refusing to strike from the said answer the denials referred to will be considered herein later on.

Upon the merits, we first remark that the ground of the nonsuit first above stated, to wit, that "the crop or crops, the value of which plaintiff is suing for, were not crops included in the mortgage," is, to the mind of the writer of this opinion, not only very technical but of doubtful validity. The argument supporting that position is, in effect, that the language of the mortgage describing the property to which it was intended the lien should attach, being in the present tense, or having reference to crops then (at the time of the execution of the mortgage) growing and standing on the land, and that the crops, the value of which the plaintiff is suing for, not having been planted, and not "being or growing or standing" on said land, until several months after the mortgage was executed, the crops involved herein are not and could not be held to be affected by the mortgage lien.

The judgment, however, must be affirmed for other reasons, as presently we will show, and therefore, while it is not necessary and we will not attempt to construe the mortgage for the purpose of ascertaining its just scope and effect, we will nevertheless suggest that it is very doubtful (at least in the mind of the writer) whether the language of the mortgage referred to, although in the present tense, is required to be so construed as to compel the conclusion that the mortgage does not include, nor was intended by the parties to cover, any crops of the kind specifically mentioned in the instrument (beans, tomatoes, corn, etc.) whenever seasonably produced upon the land within the year during which the notes and mortgage were to run (year 1918), it being shown, and, indeed, a matter of common knowledge, that at the date of the execution of the notes and mortgage it was not the season of the year to plant and grow such crops. That the mortgage was intended and is sufficiently definite to include the crops involved herein would certainly be not only the just, but the equitable construction of the mortgage, and the view that a court of equity would be strongly inclined to take in such a case before it would deny to the mortgagee the only security he in good faith believed his mortgage afforded him for the payment of a just and honest debt, in the event that the case reached that forum by proceedings in foreclosure, as thus it could properly be taken there (Civ. Code, § 2967; Code Civ. Proc., §§ 726-729), the remedy by foreclosure being of equitable cognizance, albeit the right to make and to take a chattel mortgage to secure an indebtedness is purely of statutory origin. But as stated, it is not necessary to decide the question here, and it is to be understood that the suggestions we offer are wholly gratuitous and do not involve a definite, or, indeed, any construction of the scope and meaning or intent of the mortgage in the particular mentioned. We will, however, in considering the remaining questions, assume that the mortgage is not susceptible to the construction to which the respondents subject it.

[2] The other three grounds and the reasons upon which the nonsuit was presumptively granted practically involve the same ultimate propositions, viz.: Whether the crops were tortiously removed from the freehold and sold, and, even if so, whether the respondents were parties to those tortious and unlawful acts. Obviously, if the crops were removed by and with the consent of the plaintiff, then they were not wrongfully or tortiously removed, and in that case the lien of the mortgage ceased upon such removal by operation of law. This proposition follows from the terms of section 2972 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"The lien of a mortgage on a growing crop continues on the crop after severance, whether remaining in its original state or converted into another product, so long as the same remains on the land of mortgagor."

It is in order first to inquire whether, assuming for the purposes only of such inquiry that Kim and Hahn wrongfully removed the crops from the land, the answering defendants knew, before or at the time they purchased the crop, that such removal was tortious, and the first step to that end is to ascertain whether they had either actual knowledge or legal notice of the existence of the mortgage at the times designated. As to actual knowledge, it is to be said that there is no evidence showing, or even remotely tending to show, that they had any such knowledge of the mortgage, and if, therefore, they are to be charged with any wrong in the transaction culminating in the sale of the tomatoes and corn to them, they can only thus be bound because there must be imputed to them the notice of the mortgage constructively imparted to them by reason of the recordation of said mortgage as required by law.

[3] The contention of the respondents is, and so the court below expressly held in its decision of the motion for the nonsuit, that the mortgage was not legally recorded, and, consequently, did not impart constructive notice of its existence to third parties, for the reason, so it is asserted, that the evidence shows that T. F. Emerson, the notary public before whom the instrument was acknowledged, was a partner and joint beneficiary with the plaintiff in the notes and mortgage securing the same at the time of and subsequent to the execution of those instruments.

The law is, as is well understood, that every instrument required to be recorded, with the exception of those belonging to the class mentioned in sections 1159, 1160, 1202, and 1203 of the Civil Code, cannot be recorded unless its execution is acknowledged by the person executing it, "or if executed by a corporation, by its president or secretary, or other person executing the same on behalf of the corporation," etc. Civ. Code, § 1161. But it is the settled law in this state, as well as in other jurisdictions, "that an acknowledgment taken before a grantee, or one standing in the position of a beneficiary under a conveyance, or other written instrument, is void, and does not entitle an instrument to be recorded." Greve v. Echo Oil Company, 8 Cal. App. 275, 284, 96 Pac. 904; Merced Bank v. Rosenthal, 99 Cal. 39, 31 Pac. 849, 33 Pac. 732; Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364-370, 51 Pac. 549, 955; Murray v. Tulare Inv. Co., 120 Cal. 311, 49 Pac. 563, 52 Pac. 586; Henrici v. Land Co., 177 Cal. 442, 446, 170 Pac. 1135. While, as between the parties to a mortgage so acknowledged, the mortgage is in full force and binding efficacy, the record of the instrument does not impart any notice to third persons of the mortgagee's right under it. Lee v. Murphy, supra, 119 Cal. 370, 51 Pac. 955, and cases there cited.

The evidence in this case shows, without conflict, that at the time of the execution of the notes and mortgage, and in fact at all times, Emerson was not only a partner of the plaintiff in the real estate business in the city of Stockton, but was interested as a partner of and beneficiary with plaintiff in the notes and mortgage in question here. The plaintiff, testifying on his cross-examination, stated that—

"T. F. Emerson, the notary public who took the affidavit of W. T. Kim and C. H. Hahn to the crop mortgage pleaded in the complaint, and who also took the acknowledgment of W. T. Kim and C. H. Hahn to the crop mortgage, is the owner of a half interest in the land described in the complaint; that he and Emerson were partners in business; that Emerson owned one-half interest in all the crops that were growing on the premises on the day the mortgage in question was executed; that Emerson's interest in the said crop was similar to his (plaintiff's)—that is, each of them had a like interest in the crops."

Emerson, while denying that he had any interest in the land described in the mortgage, did not deny owning an interest in the crops grown thereon and the notes and mortgage. From his testimony generally, however, the inference appears to be justified, if not irresistible, that he was interested in the crops to the extent of the mortgage lien thereon. It was Emerson who personally prosecuted efforts to secure the payment of the note secured by the mortgage after the tomatoes and corn had become ready for harvesting. He testified that he saw said crops while they were growing, that he saw them after they had been harvested, and that he kept in such touch with the situation as to know that portions of said crops had been severed from the land and sold to the two answering defendants. He talked with Kim and Hahn about the crops, and told them that they (plaintiff and himself) desired to secure payment of the note from the sale of said crops; that after he found out that the crop of tomatoes had been sold to the defendant Packing Company he—

"talked with Mr. Kim about it, and he was to make some payment upon the note for rent—this mortgage note; and I had been after him on that right along, because we wanted to get it fixed up. I asked him how soon he could pay something, and he said that he could pay just as soon as they remitted to him—the cannery company."

He further testified that, after considerable effort to obtain an interview with Mr. Davis, the local manager at Stockton of the Packing Corporation, after the latter had purchased the tomatoes and before paying for them, he met him (Davis) in the month of October, 1918, when—

"I told him that Mr. Kim owed us some money, and we had been after Mr. Kim for it, and he (Kim) said that Mr. Davis, or the company, was to pay the money. I said [to Davis]: 'How soon will that be?' He said they would all be in in a little bit and it would be fixed, if possible—they were always glad to fix up anything of that kind, and didn't want any trouble about the matter. I said we are anxious about it, just as much as you are. * * * Mr. Davis said to me: 'I will take the matter up with the company. I will get in correspondence with them, and you will hear from them later.' I did say that we wanted our money for our goods."

And this was the trend of all of Emerson's testimony, and from it, as stated, it is clearly to be inferred that he was a partner of and joint beneficiary with the plaintiff in the notes and the mortgage in controversy. In view of the fact that there was not a direct or even inferential denial by Emerson of the positive statement of plaintiff that he (Emerson) was interested in the note and mortgage equally with plaintiff, and of the further fact that Emerson at all times in his testimony in effect referred to the indebtedness evidenced by the note described in the mortgage as being due to him and plaintiff jointly, and there being no testimony upon that proposition, other than that of plaintiff and Emerson, there is, it is manifest, clear justification for our statement, above made, that the evidence without conflict, appears to show that plaintiff and Emerson were and are partners and joint beneficiaries in the note and mortgage described in the complaint. Indeed, it seems to us that no other conclusion can follow from the testimony introduced by the plaintiff. It, of course, results that the mortgage was and is, as to third parties, illegal and void. And it is to be noted that there is a marked distinction between the case where there are several grantees or mortgagees, each taking or having a separate and defined interest in the grant or mortgage, and the case we have here. In the former it has been held that the deed or mortgage should be treated as if made separately to each of such grantees or mortgagees, and that therefore the acknowledgment should be held good to all of them except the party taking it. Murray v. Tulare Inv. Co., 120 Cal. 311, 314, 49 Pac. 563, 52 Pac. 586.

In the present case, as will be observed, the evidence shows that the mortgage was, in fact, though not eo nomine, to the plaintiff and the party taking the acknowledgment as copartners—in point of fact, joint mortgagees. There was no "separate and defined interest" in either of the two parties constituting the partnership for and in behalf of which the acknowledgment was taken. It follows that the mortgage, being void in its effect upon third parties because of the defective acknowledgment, or in fact, for the reason that in law there was no acknowledgment at all of the execution thereof which would entitle it to be recorded, imparted no notice of its existence to the answering defendants herein by the mere act of its having been recorded. In other words, the act of placing the mortgage of record was without legal force or effect so far as the respondents were concerned, and did not, as to them, operate as constructive notice of its existence. Nor was there any evidence showing that respondents had knowledge of any facts sufficient to put them on inquiry which, if followed up with reasonable diligence, would have discovered to them the existence of the mortgage.

Obviously, if the answering defendants had no actual knowledge or any notice of the existence of the mortgage at the time they purchased the crops in question, they were innocent purchasers, and cannot be bound by the acts of Kim and Hahn in removing the crops from the freehold, even if such removal was tortious and unlawful.

But, aside from the above considerations, it is very plain that the nonsuit was properly granted for the reason that the evidence clearly shows that the understanding between the parties was that Kim and Hahn were to remove and sell the crops and with the proceeds pay their mortgage indebtedness to plaintiff and Emerson. From the testimony of Emerson, some of which is referred to in connection with the above consideration of the question of the validity of the acknowledgment of the mortgage, it is clear that he knew, before the removal of the crop, that Kim and Hahn intended to remove and sell the same. Emerson admitted that he knew that certain portions of the crop had been removed from the premises and sold, and that the mortgagors intended to remove and sell the remainder; yet neither the plaintiff nor his partner took any steps to prevent such removal and sale. But there was, evidently, according to Emerson's uncontradicted testimony, no intention on the part of plaintiff and Emerson to object to such removal and sale—that, indeed, the removal and sale of the crops by the mortgagors they sanctioned—for, having been asked by counsel for the Packing Corporation the following question:

"It was your understanding, was it not, throughout this transaction, from Kim, that he should sell the tomatoes?"

—he replied:

"Yes, sir, and pay the rent to us; that he should have the power to sell them and deliver them to whomsoever he chose."

He further testified, referring to a conversation he had with Kim at the premises on which the crops were grown, on the 25th day of October, 1918:

"Yes; I had been talking with Kim at that time, and then right along after. Kim said (addressing Emerson): 'You will get all your money, because Egyptian corn is good. * * * There will be plenty of money, with the tomatoes and the Egyptian corn, to pay for rent.' * * * He assured me that just as quick as the crops were cut off and sold we would get the money. That was satisfactory to me."

The plaintiff did not contradict that testimony, nor, as stated, is there any testimony in the record contradictory thereto. Indeed, the plaintiff himself testified:

"I am familiar with farming in this location, and I know when tomatoes generally ripen and are ready for delivery at Manteca (near which place are situated the premises on which the crops involved herein were grown); they commence to ripen along in September and October; I knew they were ripening in those months, but I did not know that they had been sold; I did not know what Kim was doing with them, or where they were being delivered; I judged that they were, but I could not have told to whom they were delivered or to whom they were sold."

Every act and movement of Emerson in the transaction seems to corroborate the foregoing testimony. Emerson, as between himself and Ramsey, appeared to be the most active in looking after their interests in the crops and in securing, after the maturity of the crops, a satisfaction of the mortgage debt, and furthermore, after the sale of the tomatoes to the Packing Corporation, it does not appear that he complained to Kim and Hahn for removing and selling the crops. He did not tell them that they had done wrong in doing so, but by his general conduct of quiescence as to such removal and sale, very clearly appeared to have regarded their acts as within the power and the rights of Kim and Hahn. His only concern about the matter then seemed to be as to the payment by the Packing Corporation for the tomatoes; his purpose being to obtain such payment direct to him and the plaintiff, instead of to the mortgagors. Certainly, if the understanding was not such as Emerson positively testified that it was, to wit, that Kim and Hahn were vested with full power to remove the crops from the premises and sell the same, and thereupon pay the money to plaintiff and Emerson in extinguishment of the mortgage, the latter were, according to their own testimony, culpably negligent in the matter of the preservation of the integrity of their security. As to the tomatoes, they knew, as everybody knows, that that vegetable is of the perishable kind, requiring immediate preservation very soon after being harvested. Emerson said he visited the premises very often, and, of course, he knew from that fact, if not from his general acquaintance with the seasonal characteristics or peculiarities of the tomato—that is, the time for planting the same and the time when, in the ordinary course of nature, it has so developed as to require that it be harvested—when the time for harvesting was reached, and still, as before declared, he and the plaintiff themselves made no move looking to the disposal of any of the crops. It would thus seem that there was no other course left to Kim and Hahn, if anything was to be realized from said crops, but to dispose of them themselves.

[4-6] Even if it were necessary to concede here that there was no other showing of an abandonment of the mortgage security by the plaintiff and Emerson, but the circumstances to which we last above refer, it is very clear that the judgment of nonsuit would have to stand; for, at the time of the purchase of the tomatoes by the Packing Corporation and the corn by Powers, the lien of the mortgage had prima facie been extinguished by the removal of those crops from the land on which they were grown (Horgan v. Zanetta, 107 Cal. 27, 30, 31, 40 Pac. 22; Gates v. Tom Quong, 3 Cal. App. 443, 446, 85 Pac. 662), and it rested upon the mortgagee, if he would still enjoy the benefit of his mortgage security, to rebut that presumption by showing that the crops were removed without his knowledge and consent, and that it was therefore a tortious removal; and, as before declared, even if it had been shown that the mortgagors had wrongfully removed the crops and sold the same to a third party, it would still be necessary, to bind the latter in an action for damages for such wrongful removal or for the conversion of the crops, further to show that such removal was tortiously effected with his knowledge or by connivance on his part with those wrongfully removing the crop to effect such removal. There is not only no such showing here, but, to the contrary, as has been stated, even without regard to the positive testimony that Kim was authorized by plaintiff and

Emerson to remove and sell the crops, the circumstances of the whole transaction, as shown by the testimony of both plaintiff and Emerson, very clearly strengthen and sustain the presumption that the crops were removed from the premises and sold by Kim under a specific understanding and agreement with the plaintiff and Emerson that he was thus to dispose of the crops upon their maturity. This agreement (allowing the mortgagors to sell the mortgaged crops and turn over the proceeds of sale to plaintiff and Emerson) amounted in practical effect to a substitution of the personal obligation of the mortgagors for the security of the mortgage. Minneapolis Thresh. Machine Co. v. Calhoun, 37 S. D. 542, 159 N. W. 127.

The authorities cited by the appellant have to do with cases in which the evidence clearly disclosed a tortious removal of the mortgaged crop, and, of course, are not in point here.

The other assignments to which attention will be given involve objections to the action of the court in refusing to strike from the answers certain denials contained therein and heretofore referred to, and in striking from the record the lease, previously received in evidence whereby the premises on which the crops in question were grown were demised to Kim and Hahn by plaintiff.

[7] 1. As stated above when considering the matter of the suggestion of the diminution of the record, the particular denials of the answer to which the motion to strike out was addressed were upon information and belief, and related to those allegations of the complaint which referred to the execution of the notes, the execution of the mortgage, the good faith thereof, the acknowledgment and recordation of the mortgage, that no part of the promissory note described in the mortgage has been paid, except a certain specific amount, and other like averments.

The disallowance of the motion to strike out the denials referred to was proper. The matters in the complaint to which said denials were addressed involved private transactions between private individuals, and it is not the law that such matters are presumed to be within the knowledge of third persons, unless the same are required by law to be made a public record, or are of such common notoriety that all persons must know of them. As to the mortgage, which, of course, cannot be binding upon third persons unless it is recorded as required by law, we have already shown that, in law, it was not recorded, and therefore the answering defendants were not to be charged with constructive notice thereof.

[8] 2. The lease, which was received in evidence and subsequently stricken from the record, was, as seen, from the plaintiff to Kim and Hahn, and demised to the latter, for a certain specified consideration, the premises upon which the crops in question were grown. That lease, however, had been modified or changed in vital particulars, and was, consequently, not the lease under which Kim and Hahn were holding the property at the time that the said crops were removed from the premises and sold. But, waiving a consideration of that proposition, we cannot perceive wherein the order of the court striking the lease from the record, even if in any view erroneous, can be held prejudicial. The only purpose the lease could have served as evidence in the case would be to show that Kim and Hahn held possession of the land thereunder as tenants of the plaintiff. If it was important under the issues that this fact should be known, the reply is that the answering defendants conceded at the trial that the land was held by Kim and Hahn under a lease from plaintiff. But it seems to us that whether Kim and Hahn held possession of the land as tenants of the plaintiff, or held such possession as tenants of some other person, or themselves were the owners of the land, is wholly without significance here, if, as is conceded by all parties hereto to be true, and which is the theory upon which the complaint was framed and the issues were joined and tried, they owned the crops which are referred to in the mortgage. The question whether the mortgagors of the crops held possession of the land could have no bearing on the case, unless their ownership of the crops and right to mortgage them was made an issue, and no such question was raised in the case either by the pleadings or the proof. Therefore, as we have shown, the only questions in the case were whether Kim and Hahn, having mortgaged the crops to plaintiff, tortiously removed the same from the land on which they were grown and sold them to the answering defendants, and, if so, whether the latter purchased the said crops with knowledge before and at the time of the purchase that the crops were under mortgage and had been removed and sold wrongfully, or without the knowledge and consent of the mortgagee.

The cases mentioned by appellant as in support of his position that the ruling striking out the lease from the record was error and prejudicial to his rights promulgate very sound and wholesome rules, but, while applicable in proper cases, have no application to the instant case upon the theory upon which its issues were framed and tried.

The judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank
Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal or the Third Appellate District is denied, without reference to or intimation of view on our part relative to the correctness of the discussion in the opinion on the question of the proper construction of the chattel mortgage as covering the personal property here involved, and the question of the validity of the notary's acknowledgment in the matter of such chattel mortgage. The opinion shows that the non-suit was properly granted in that the removal and sale of crops here involved was not tortious, and also that the trial court did not err in denying motion to strike out certain denials of the answer, or in striking out the lease theretofore received in evidence.

McEWEN v. NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO.
(L. A. 6533.)(Supreme Court of California. Sept 27, 1921.
On Application for Rehearing, Oct. 27, 1921.)1. Insurance ⚡291(7)—Answer omitting mention of accidents held answer that no accidents were sustained.

Answer of applicant for insurance in medical examination to the question, "What illnesses, diseases, or accidents have you had since childhood?" which omitted all mention of accidents was in effect an answer that no accidents had been sustained, and, if applicant had been seriously injured in an accident, such answer was false.

2. Appeal and error ⚡1195(1)—Statement of law on appeal law of case.

A statement of law by District Court of Appeal on second appeal became law of case, and was binding on trial court on third trial.

3. Evidence ⚡377—Witnesses ⚡255(1), 258—Memorandum held not admissible, nor proper to be used in refreshing memory.

A witness cannot refresh his memory or testify from a memorandum, unless it is made to appear that it complies with the qualifications specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 2047, and court did not err in sustaining objections to the offer of a memorandum in evidence, or the use of such memorandum to refresh memory of witness who had no independent recollection of the fact, where the only fact disclosed in connection with the memorandum was that it was signed by the witness; there being no showing that the witness wrote or dictated it, or that it was written at a time when it was fresh in his memory, or that he knew the fact was correctly stated therein, especially where it was dated nine years after the happening of the event.

4. Evidence ⚡77(6)—No presumption against insurance company failing to call physician as witness.

In action on life policy, defended on ground that insured made false statements in medical examination, no presumption arose that the examining physician's testimony would have been adverse to defendant from the fact that defendant failed to call the physician as a witness, and objected to plaintiff's counsel questioning the physician, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 5, 6, particularly in view of the fact that physician was unable to recall the medical examination, and it did not appear that there was any legally competent memorandum which he might use to aid him in testifying.

On Application for Rehearing.

5. Tender ⚡26—Directed verdict held not to deny plaintiff's right to recover fund deposited by defendant in court.

In an action by beneficiary on life policy, where defendant set up fraud on the part of the insured and deposited the amount of premiums paid in court, on the theory that defendant had a right to rescind, a directed verdict and judgment for defendant held not to deprive plaintiff of a right to the money deposited in court; the verdict and judgment necessarily carrying the implication that such money should be given to the party entitled thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Rachel A. McEwen against the New York Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 183 Pac. 373.

Murphey & Poplin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve and Paul H. McPherrin, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This action was instituted for the recovery of the amount of a life insurance policy issued by the defendant, New York Life Insurance Company, in July, 1910, to plaintiff's son, Charles B. McEwen, who died in November, 1910. Defendant resists payment of the policy upon the ground that the decedent procured the issuance of the policy by means of fraud, concealment and misrepresentations in answering written questions propounded to him by defendant's medical examiner on June 29, 1910, and that defendant accepted the application and issued the policy in reliance upon the truth of these answers. The present litigation has been pending for over 9 years, and this is the third appeal which has been taken. The first trial resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff, but judgment thereon was reversed by the District Court of Appeal upon the ground that the trial judge had submitted to the jury the issue of the materiality of the questions claimed to have been falsely answered (McEwen v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal. App. 694, 139 Pac. 242); likewise a judgment entered upon a verdict rendered in plaintiff's favor upon the second trial was reversed by the District Court of Appeal (McEwen v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co. [App.] 183 Pac. 373). On the third trial the judge directed a verdict for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals, claiming that a directed verdict was unwarranted by the facts of the case.

[1] The only answer of decedent in the medical examination which is of importance for the purposes of this appeal is the following:

"What illnesses, diseases, or accidents have you had since childhood? (The examiner should satisfy himself that the applicant gives full and careful answers to this question.) Name of disease: Typhoid pneumonia. Number of attacks: One. Date: 1891. Duration, Severity: Severe. Results: Complete recovery."

The above-quoted question was asked for the purpose of ascertaining information concerning the condition of decedent's health in certain particulars deemed deserving of especial consideration in connection with the issuance of a life insurance policy. The question is neither ambiguous nor misleading. It calls for facts in regard to accidents suffered since childhood, as well as illnesses and diseases, and an answer which omits all mention of accidents is, in effect, an answer that no accidents have been sustained. Malicki v. Chicago Guar. Fund Life Soc., 119 Mich. 151, 77 N. W. 690. At the close of the written questions and answers the insured certified:

"That I have carefully read each and all of the above answers, that they are each written as made by me, that each of them is full, complete and true."

It was proven by the defendant company, and is conceded by plaintiff, that in July, 1909, just a year prior to the application for the policy, the decedent Charles B. McEwen was injured by being struck or kicked in the chest by the foot of a mule, as a result of which his chest was injured, his back strained and one rib broken; owing to temporary total disability caused by the injury he received from an accident insurance company the sum of $25 per week for a period of 16 weeks, amounting in all to $400. The injury received for the time being rendered him unfit for any business whatsoever and seriously impaired his health. Notwithstanding the serious consequences ensuing from the accident sustained by decedent in July 1909, which disabled him for a period of nearly 4 months, he failed to set forth the accident in his answers to the questions asked by the defendant company in an examination held on June 29, 1910. Inasmuch as decedent made no mention of accidents in answer to a question calling for disclosures of accidents, and since, on the third trial, it was conceded that decedent has sustained the above-described accident less than a year before answering the said question, the conclusion is inescapable that the question was falsely answered.

[2] Upon the second appeal of this case the District Court of Appeal held that it was error for the trial judge to submit to the jury the question whether or not the accident tended to affect the longevity of the decedent, that the only question to be passed upon by the jury was the truth or falsity of decedent's answers, and that a determination of this point would settle the rights of the parties. This statement of the law by the District Court of Appeal became the law of the case and was binding upon the trial court upon the third trial.

"The doctrine [of the law of the case] means simply this: That the court having once decided the law, and the cause having gone back to the lower court for further proceedings in accordance with the law as thus established, and the parties and the lower court having acted in reliance upon that law, this court will not, upon a second appeal, again enter into a consideration of the question, but, if the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, will treat it as settled law, regardless of its accuracy." Brett v. S. H. Frank & Co., 162 Cal. 735, 739, 124 Pac. 437, 439.

Since the evidence conclusively shows the answer to the question concerning "illnesses, diseases, and accidents" was untrue and, according to the law laid down for the guidance of the trial court, the truth or falsity of the answers was the determining factor and the only question to be submitted to the jury, it was proper for the judge to direct a verdict for defendant upon the theory that a material question had been falsely answered by decedent. Wilson v. Alcatraz Asphalt Co., 142 Cal. 182, 75 Pac. 787; Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 Pac. 267.

[3] It is claimed that, on the third and last trial, the court erroneously sustained objections to certain evidence offered by plaintiff. This evidence, plaintiff contends, tended to show that decedent informed defendant's medical examiner of the said accident, and that the examiner thought the accident unimportant, and for that reason did not include it in the written answer. We may assume, without deciding, that, had that been shown to be the fact, the company, and not decedent, would have been responsible for the failure to mention the accident in the written answers to the medical examination, and therefore that it would have been error to exclude competent evidence on this point. We are of the opinion that no competent evidence in support of this contention was proffered by the plaintiff. The only evidence sought to be introduced on this point was the testimony of the physician who examined decedent on June 29, 1910. The physician testified that he had no independent recollection whatever of his examination of the decedent. It appears that the witness was seriously ill in September, 1919, and that the trial at which he testified took place in November, 1919. Plaintiff's attorney sought to have the witness refresh his memory from, or testify from, a written memorandum. Defendant's counsel objected to the witness testifying from this memorandum, and the court sustained the objection. Section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a witness may refresh his memory respecting a fact from a written memorandum or "may testify from such a writing, though he retain no recollection of the particular facts." A witness cannot, however, refresh his memory or testify from such a memorandum unless it is made to appear that the memorandum complies with certain qualifications specified in said section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the present case the only fact disclosed in connection with the memorandum, aside from the fact that it was dated July 19, 1919, nine years after the medical examination, is the fact that it was signed by the witness; there was no showing that the witness wrote or dictated the memorandum, or that it was written at a time when the fact was fresh in his memory, or that he knew the fact was correctly stated therein. It would, therefore, have been improper for the court to have permitted the witness to testify from the memorandum in question. Morris v. Lachman, 68 Cal. 109, 112, 8 Pac. 799; Stone v. S. F. Brick Co., 13 Cal. App. 203, 109 Pac. 103. Furthermore, the memorandum itself, which is set forth in the bill of exceptions, furnishes evidence of its own unreliability. It purports to have been made 9 years after the happening of the event, and states that the physician examined decedent in 1908, and found no evidence of injury from the accident; whereas, the examination with which the parties are concerned in the instant case is one held in 1910, and the accident occurred in 1909.

[4] Counsel for plaintiff further contends that, since defendant objected to plaintiff's counsel questioning the physician who examined decedent for the defendant and itself failed to call the physician, the presumption arises that the physician's testimony would have been adverse to defendant. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 5 and 6. However, defendant was under no obligation to call the physician as its own witness or to permit him to testify for plaintiff, particularly in view of the fact that the physician was unable to recall the medical examination at all, and it does not appear that there was any legally competent memorandum which he might use to aid him in testifying.

Defendant, by its answer, alleged a cancellation of the policy and deposited in court the sum of $347.10, the amount of premium paid on the policy. It is claimed that plaintiff is entitled to this sum and that she was deprived of it by the directed general verdict in favor of defendant. The testimony of plaintiff in the case shows that the money necessary for the payment of this premium was advanced by plaintiff to decedent as a loan, and thereafter repaid by him to her. It is evident, therefore, that plaintiff is not entitled to receive the returned premium in her own name and as her own property, but that the money is the property of the decedent's estate. Nor does it appear that there has ever been an administrator of the estate of said Charles B. McEwen, or any other legal representative to whom payment could be made. In the absence of any such showing, there is no person to whom such payment could be made, even in the event that the plaintiff expressed a willingness to accept the same and rescind the contract.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.

On Application for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The opinion heretofore rendered in the above-entitled cause is hereby modified as follows: By striking out the last paragraph thereof, and in lieu thereof inserting the following:

[5] Defendant, by its answer, alleged the cancellation of the policy and deposited in court $347.10, the amount of premium paid on the policy. It is claimed that plaintiff is entitled to this sum, and that she was deprived of it by the directed general verdict in favor of defendant. We are entirely satisfied that such is not the effect of the verdict or judgment given. The request of the defendant for an instruction directing a verdict in favor of defendant was based on its claim that the policy was voidable on the ground of fraud on the part of the insured in obtaining the policy, and that therefore the defendant had a right to rescind. This was the position of the trial court in directing a verdict for the defendant, and this result carried with it necessarily the implication that the money paid into court should be restored to the party entitled thereto. There was uncontradicted evidence sufficient to support a finding of a gift of the policy by the insured to the plaintiff, and the directed general verdict in favor of the defendant necessarily implied that the plaintiff was entitled to the premium money paid into court by the defendant for the purpose of effecting a rescission. The judgment given in this case upon the directed verdict does not preclude the plaintiff from recovering this money. Neither does our affirmance of such judgment have any such effect.

The application for rehearing is denied.

PARSONS v. SEGNO. (L. A. 6256.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Contracts $\S$ 111—Contract to pay attorney percentage of property received from defendant husband in divorce action held void as against public policy.

A contract to pay an attorney a percentage of all the property received by plaintiff in a divorce action, under a property settlement with her husband, is void as against public policy, being a contract for a contingent fee in a divorce action.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(4)—Assumed in favor of judgment for plaintiff that court decided defendant did not misunderstand purport of plaintiff's statement of account.

In an action on an account stated, it must be assumed in favor of a judgment for plaintiff that the court decided from the evidence, if sufficient to support such a conclusion, that defendant did not misunderstand the import of statements of account and letters sent her by plaintiff, and that she realized he was demanding the amount of the balance shown by the statement sued on, to which she made no objection.

3. Account stated $\S$ 19(3)—Evidence held sufficient to show account stated.

In an action on an account stated, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that an account was rendered, consented to, and became an account stated.

4. Account stated $\S$ 18(2)—To falsify for fraud or mistake, facts must be pleaded, reopening asked for, and proof confined to allegations.

To surcharge and falsify an account stated on the ground of fraud or mistake, such facts must be pleaded, a reopening of the account asked for, and the proof confined to such allegations.

5. Account stated $\S$ 18(1)—Defendant's allegations of fraud held insufficient.

In an action on an account stated, allegations of a counterclaim and cross-complaint that the original agreement was void, and praying for recovery of an amount paid plaintiff thereunder, held insufficient to allege fraud or facts on which a finding thereof could be predicated.

6. Account stated $\S$ 19(3)—Evidence held to show repudiation of void contract and substitution of new contract.

In an action on an account stated, evidence held to show that the original contract between the parties, which was void, was repudiated by them, and a second contract substituted.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 728(3)—Assignment to exclusion of evidence insufficient where no particular evidence referred to nor any offer to prove stated.

On appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in an action on an account stated, an assignment of error in not allowing defendant to prove an amount paid to plaintiff was the basis of all the accounts rendered, and was included in the account stated, was insufficient, where no particular evidence was referred to as having been improperly excluded, and no offer of proof stated.

8. Appeal and error $\S$ 757(3)—Assignments not considered where rulings not printed in briefs nor errors shown.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c, assignments of error to findings "on the ground that the court would not allow any evidence on those issues," merely referring to the transcript for certain rulings on the admission and rejection of testimony, without printing the same in the briefs, or showing wherein the errors lie, and a contention that "there are other questions involved in this appeal particularly set forth in the assignment of errors to which we beg leave to refer without reprinting," cannot be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by S. J. Parsons against Annie Dell Segno. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred E. Putnam, and Will D. Gould, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

S. J. Parsons, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $3,509.11 and costs, being the full amount demanded in an action in three counts to recover the sum of $250, with interest, on each of two promissory notes signed by the defendant, as maker, and the sum of $2,160.61, with interest, on an alleged account stated.

[1] In June, 1911, appellant retained respondent as her attorney for the purpose of bringing an action for divorce against her husband, A. Victor Segno, effecting a property settlement with him, and looking after other legal business for her. The divorce was granted and the property divided. In the course of handling her affairs, aside from the divorce action and the property settlement, respondent appeared as her attorney in the trial of certain other cases, organized a corporation for her, and otherwise assisted in the conduct of her affairs. At the time appellant retained respondent, they entered into an agreement in writing whereby appellant agreed to give respondent 7 per cent. of all the property she received from her husband under the settlement. According to the evidence, the value of this property was never definitely ascertained. It is not disputed that this contract was void as against public policy, being a contract for a contingent fee in a divorce action (Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 Pac. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548), but both parties testified they were unaware of the illegality of the contract at the time. Respondent testified that this contract was repudiated, and a new agreement arrived at after the divorce was granted, whereby he was to receive $5,600, or 7 per cent. on $80,000, which he asserted they both agreed should be assumed to be the value of the property received from the husband. Appellant testified respondent made an offer to her of such a proposition, but that she never agreed to it. It is this asserted second contract which respondent contends is the basis of his claim.

Respondent charged appellant additional sums for the services he performed for her after the divorce was granted and the property settlement concluded. From time to time she paid him varying amounts of money to apply on the total bill. In June, 1913, she gave him the two notes for $250 each, one payable to respondent, and one to his wife, to apply on the account, on which notes it was agreed respondent was to borrow money.

Respondent sent appellant several statements of account and letters asking her to make him payments. On November 1, 1913, he sent her a statement of account, the first item of which was: "Bill as per agreement, $5,600.00"—and according to the account the total amount due on that date was $1,286.21. This balance was never objected to by appellant prior to the trial. Ten months later, September 1, 1914, he sent her another account which he insists constituted an account stated. The first item of this account was the balance of $1,286.21 shown by the account of November 1, 1913. Then followed charges and payments showing a balance of $2,160.61 due on September 1, 1914. To this statement of account respondent received no reply, although he wrote appellant on December 19, 1914, inclosing a copy thereof, and on February 1 and 12, 1915, concerning it.

In 1915 respondent assigned the notes referred to, and the account as represented by the statement of September 1, 1914, to one Fred O. Ricketts, who commenced suit on them. According to the testimony of Neil S. McCarthy, respondent's attorney in that action, while the suit was pending appellant promised to pay the amount demanded, and to give her note for it. A demurrer was interposed and sustained. On June 30, 1915, on motion of plaintiff, the case was dismissed. After the dismissal the notes were re-assigned to respondent by Ricketts, and this action followed. The notes constitute the causes of action in the first two counts, and the statement of account of September 1, 1914, alleged to be an account stated the cause of action in the third count.

As defenses to the notes, appellant pleaded the statute of limitations; that the action brought by Ricketts was a bar to this one; that the notes were for the purpose of enabling respondent to borrow money, which he failed to do; that as a result of such failure appellant was not liable on them; and that there was no consideration for the note given to respondent's wife. As a defense to the alleged account stated, appellant pleaded the statute of limitations, the action by Ricketts as a bar, and specifically denied the allegations of the complaint that the account was stated. In a cross-complaint appellant alleged respondent had received $3,318.86 for the use of appellant and in trust for her, and prayed judgment for that amount. In a counterclaim appellant alleged that the agreement between herself and respondent was void, and set it out in hæc verba. She also alleged that she had paid respondent $4,512.36, $3,318.86 of which was paid under the void agreement before she knew it was void, and prayed judgment for the latter amount.

The court found in favor of respondent on all three counts, that the allegations of the answer, counterclaim and cross-complaint were untrue, and that the amounts respondent demanded were due and owing to him.

Appellant states:

"If this court should hold that the plaintiff rendered an account stated and thereby bound his client, we shall not expect a reversal of the judgment, however harsh and unjust it may be. * * * Mrs. Segno, the defendant, is not learned in the law, and was not informed by the plaintiff that he was presenting to her an account stated, and she was not informed of her rights and privileges in the matter; and we think sufficient objection was made to the account when presented."

It is also stated:

"In this case the attorney cannot bind his client by giving to her an account stated of which she had no knowledge as to its legal effect or as to any formal requirements of objections."

Respondent insists there was a valid account stated, that the evidence supports the finding to that effect, and that there was no error in the rulings of the court.

1. We shall first consider the question of whether there was an account stated. In support of his position that respondent could not bind appellant by an account stated, appellant cites no authority.

In Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 63, 15 Pac. 372, it was said:

"A stated account is an agreement between both parties that all the items are true; but this agreement may be implied from circumstances, as where merchants reside in different places, and one sends an account to the other, who makes no objection to it within a reasonable time. Stebbins v. Niles, 25 Miss. 267; 1 Wait's Actions and Defenses, 191-198.

"In such cases, the action is based upon the agreement, which has all the force of a contract. The original account becomes the consideration for the agreement, and it is not necessary to prove the items of such account; nor can they be inquired into or surcharged except for some fraud, error, or mistake, and such grounds must be, according to the weight of authority, set forth in the pleadings. [Citing cases.] * * *

"The term 'stated account' is but an expression to convey the idea of a contract, having an account for its consideration, and is no more an account than is a promissory note, or other contract, having a like consideration for its support."

In Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 427, the court declared:

"In support of an action upon an account stated, it is necessary to show that there was a demand in favor of the plaintiff, which was acceded to by the defendant. But the admission of the correctness of the demand need not be expressed and in terms. If the account be sent to the debtor and he do not object to it within a reasonable time, his acquiescence will be taken as an admission that the account is truly stated. * * * The evidence in relation to the amount of the account was properly excluded. It is not alleged in the answer that there was any fraud or mistake in the original accounting."

In Crane v. Stansbury, 173 Cal. 631, 161 Pac. 7, the plaintiff sued as the assignee of an attorney upon an account based on charges for professional services rendered. It was contended by the defendant that the fees of an attorney could not be the subject of an account stated. The court said:

"The bill of an attorney for services, like any other bill, may under proper circumstances and conditions be the subject of an account stated."

"The court instructed the jury that when an account was rendered it became the duty of the recipient to make his objections thereto within a reasonable time, and that, if he did not do so, the account became an account stated and the foundation of an independent cause of action based upon the account stated; also that silence and nonobjection under the circumstances of this case for six months would constitute an unreasonable time. Exception is taken to these instructions. But the complaints made against them are not well founded. They are unimpeachable in point of law."

It was also held that—

"While all questions of fraud and mistake in combating the force of an account stated are questions of fact for the jury, where assent is based upon acquiescence arising from a failure to object, the length of time which must pass before an account rendered becomes, by virtue of the recipient's failure to object, an account stated, is one of law for the court."

In Lane & Bodley Co. v. Taylor, 80 Ark. 469, 97 S. W. 441, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 924, an attorney sought to reopen an account stated. The court declared:

"When an attorney makes a charge for services, and the same is accepted by the client, it becomes an account stated between them, and may be sued upon as such by him. Wilcox v. Boothe, 19 Ark. 684; Pulliam v. Booth, 21 Ark. 421."

See, also, 1 C. J. 696, 703; Bennett v. Potter, 180 Cal. 736, 183 Pac. 156; Crawford v. Hutchinson, 38 Or. 578, 65 Pac. 84; Beals v. Wagener, 47 Minn. 489, 50 N. W. 535; Gruby v. Smith, 13 Ill. App. 43.

According to the evidence, after the account of November 1, 1913, was rendered, appellant paid respondent several amounts, for which he gave her credit; that following this the account of September 1, 1914, was mailed to her, the first item of which was the balance shown by the statement of account of November 1, and that to this statement of account of September 1 appellant made no objection. When appellant was under cross-examination by respondent, she testified:

"After that [referring to the divorce action and the property settlement] you had some seven or eight actions for me, and that account included what you did for me for a number of years. I didn't dispute the correctness of the bill; I thought the contract was high, Mr. Parsons."

Neil S. McCarthy testified:

"Mrs. Segno came to the office, introduced herself, and to the best of my recollection said you [respondent] had sent her in there. This was after the suit was filed. She said she couldn't pay up at that time, but would give a promissory note for it for the entire amount. I told her that if she would give some security for the promissory note that it would be satisfactory to you. I do not recall what answer she made. However, she never gave the note to me, nor the security, nor anything else."

The evidence also shows that the relationship of attorney and client had existed between the parties from 1911 to 1915—the year the Ricketts action was brought; that during that period they discussed his compensation and had some correspondence concerning it; that they agreed he should receive for his services in the divorce action and property settlement $5,600; that he reported to her the various expenses he incurred for filing fees, traveling expenses, and the like, and charges for services; that she made no objection; that the statements of account of November 1, 1913, and September 1, 1914, and the two letters of February 1 and February 12, 1915, were clear and explicit as to his claim; that between the rendering of the two statements of account she made payments without in any way questioning the correctness of the account; that appellant had a great deal of experience in business; that she conducted an enterprise—the "American Institute of Mentalism"—which yielded at one time, according to her own testimony, "anywhere from five to twenty-five hundred gross per month"; and that she had figured in litigation besides the divorce action and the case at bar.

[2, 3] We must assume in favor of the judgment that the court decided from the evidence, which is amply sufficient to support such a conclusion, that appellant did not misunderstand the import of the statements of account and respondent's letters, and that she realized he was demanding the amount of the balance shown by the statement of account of September 1, 1914. As shown by the evidence there was a lapse of several months after this statement of account was rendered, during which time respondent received no word from appellant; that she never disputed the correctness of the account, and that after the amount claimed to be due was demanded she said she would settle and offered to give her note for it. In our opinion it cannot be maintained that there was not evidence from which the court could have found that an account was rendered, assented to, and became an account stated.

[4] 2. Appellant next contends:

"We submit that an attorney cannot receive money in a divorce case, on a void agreement against public policy, and keep the money in fraud of his client, and cover his tracks by presenting an account stated to his client for further demands, and in this case, plead an account stated and thereby bind his client."

In Gruby v. Smith, supra, the court held:

"The fact that the relation of attorney and client subsisted between the parties, at the time of this alleged assent to a grossly exorbitant bill and promise to pay such a balance, should have had an important, if not controlling, effect upon * * * the point of permitting an investigation by him into the merits of the several items of that bill."

It was said in Beals v. Wagener, supra, that—

"The court would probably scrutinize such an agreement [an account stated between an attorney and his client] closely, to see that there was no overreaching, and that the client acted with as full and candid information as the attorney can give him."

But in order to surcharge and falsify an account stated on the ground of fraud or mistake the facts constituting the fraud or mistake must be pleaded, a reopening of the account asked for, and the proof must be confined to the allegations of fraud or mistake. Auzerais v. Naglee, supra; Terry v. Sickles, supra; Branger v. Chevallier, 9 Cal. 353; 1 Encyc. of Evidence, 147.

[5] The answer here is a general denial, and neither mistake, fraud, nor any other ground touching the account stated is alleged. The counterclaim merely alleged that the original agreement was void; that the sum of $3,318.86 was paid thereunder; and prayed for a recovery of that amount. The cross-complaint alleged only that said amount had been paid by appellant to respondent to his use and for his benefit, and prayed for judgment accordingly. It is clear, therefore, that there is no direct allegation of fraud, nor are any facts pleaded upon which a finding of fraud could be predicated.

[6] However, assuming that the asserted fraud was pleaded, that the reopening of the account stated was asked for, and that evidence was offered to support such a charge, still there is ample evidence from which the court could have concluded that the void contract was repudiated by the parties, and the second contract for compensation substituted. No claim is made that the latter contract was invalid. Appellant testified:

"I had conversation with him after this matter was concluded in regard to his compensation for the work he had done. He asked me what I thought would be fair as a settlement, and I said, 'Mr. Parsons, I don't know.' He asked me if I thought 7 per cent. on a value of $80,000 would be equitable, and I said I didn't know, because I could get no basis of value on the properties that I received; it was left open that way."

On the other hand, respondent testified:

"Q. The account you rendered included what this contract called for up to the point that it was paid for, did it not? A. No, that is not true.

"Q. Does not the account on its face show—A. After the settlement with her husband in which she obtained, as she claimed, $150,000 or $200,000 worth of property, she repudiated that contract, and said that she would not settle on the terms of it, but that she would—I finally asked her what she would pay me, and she said that she would give me seven per cent. on $80,000 and that she was perfectly satisfied to call the amount for that particular service $5,600, and we settled on those terms. She repudiated the contract entirely."

At the trial the following colloquy occurred:

"Mr. Putnam: When you were first sued on the assignment made here to Mr. Ricketts, Ricketts v. Segno, they sued on the contract, didn't they; the same contract?

"Mr. Parsons: I object to that as calling for a conclusion, if your honor please; the record is the best evidence.

"The Court: You repudiated it then, didn't you? A. No, your honor.

"Mr. Putnam: The court found it void.

"The Court: She pleaded the invalidity of it. It just goes to show how much effect you get out of testimony that a thing is or is not repudiated. Now, the witness has testified that she never repudiated that contract. I find that she did, because she pleaded its invalidity."

The first item in the account is the charge of $5,600 for the original service, and this is the amount respondent testified was agreed upon for such service after the original contract was repudiated. The fact that this sum was included in the statement of account of November 1, 1913, suggests that the court, as indicated by the remark it made during the above colloquy, concluded that the original contract was repudiated by appellant. In other words, such a finding is to be implied from the finding that an account was stated. That the second contract was a new agreement and that the old one was repudiated by both parties is further borne out by the fact that appellant testified that Mr. Segno, in the trial of another action, stated that the property appellant received from him was actually worth from $150,000 to $200,000. As already pointed out, appellant's only assignment of fraud is the alleged inclusion by respondent in the account stated of the demand based upon the void contract. Since this was the only assignment of fraud, and there was evidence from which the court could have found the void contract was repudiated by the parties, and a new one entered into in lieu thereof, appellant's claim of fraud cannot be sustained.

[7] 3. Appellant further contends that—

"The court erred in not allowing defendant to show that $4,512.36 paid to the plaintiff was the basis of all accounts rendered, and was included in the purported account stated, and in finding (finding 3) that the defendant became indebted upon an open account, etc., while the evidence shows that there was a written agreement which was against public policy and void."

No particular evidence is referred to under the first point as having been improperly excluded, and it is not stated that appellant made any offer to prove that the said sum formed the basis of all the accounts upon which the balance shown by the account stated was struck. Concerning the asserted error in finding 3, we have already stated there was evidence from which the trial court could have found the original contract to have been repudiated and another substituted. The evidence shows the account to have been open and current, for items were added and credits given from time to time.

Error is assigned to finding 7 upon the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. This finding is to the effect that the sum of $2,660.61, with interest and costs, is owing to respondent. As heretofore stated, the evidence on the subject of the account stated was sufficient to support the findings, and upon this hypothesis the amount of $2,160.61 is correct. Appellant does not object to the findings as to the promissory notes, which make up the other $500. These notes were admitted in evidence, thus supporting the finding of the court as to the amount due thereon. Error is assigned to the conclusions of law, which are to the effect that the said amount of $2,660.61, with interest and costs, was owing to respondent, but from what we have already said it follows there is no merit in this contention.

[8] Appellant assigns error to findings 4, 5, and 6 "on the ground that the court would not allow any evidence on those issues." On this assignment of error we are merely referred to the transcript on appeal for certain rulings of the court on the admission and rejection of testimony, but no attempt has been made to print in the briefs these portions of the record, or to show wherein the errors, if any, lie. Such an assignment of error does not conform to the requirements of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, and hence does not call for consideration. The same disposition is to be made of appellant's further contention that—

"There are other questions involved in this appeal, particularly set forth in the assignment of error to which we beg leave to refer without reprinting."

This has reference to some 17 specifications of error in appellant's motion for a new trial. Judgment affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. BLODGET et al. (L. A. 6628-6631.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨3(3)—Intention controls as to whether contract is an agency or an option.

Whether an agreement giving "an option on our land" to another to "handle and sell" created the relation of principal and agent or that of vendor and purchaser depended on the intention of the parties; the words "handle and sell" not conclusively showing agency.

2. Contracts ⇨170(1)—Parties' construction may be considered.

Where the intention of the parties is imperfectly expressed and the language employed by them is ambiguous, and requires interpretation, it is permissible to take into consideration a construction placed thereon by the persons concerned.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence held to show contract was intended as an option, and not an agency.

Evidence held sufficient to show that a contract granting to plaintiffs an option on the land of another to handle and sell was intended as an option, and not merely an agency to sell.

4. Estoppel ⇨78(6)—Party held estopped to deny validity of contract under which he had acted.

Where defendants had treated a contract by landowners giving an option to plaintiff as a valid contract, and had procured an assignment thereof to plaintiff, and had made a sale thereunder, they were estopped to deny that it was a valid contract because not signed by a trustee for some of the owners.

5. Account ⇐7—Will lie for fraud.

Action for accounting is within the jurisdiction of equity in cases of fraud, as well as where there is a fiduciary relation between the parties and the facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of one, as the court, having assumed jurisdiction, will retain it to grant the relief demanded by the situation.

6. Principal and agent ⇐78(2½)—Third person conspiring with agent to defraud principal may be held jointly liable in an accounting.

Where plaintiff obtained an option on the lands of another and employed one of the defendants as his agent to dispose of the lands, and the other defendants joined the first in a scheme to obtain an assignment of the option from plaintiff to themselves and complete a sale thereunder, in fraud of the plaintiff, plaintiff might bring an action against all for an accounting and recover a joint judgment, as those fraudulently aiding in the attempt of fiduciaries to obtain profits may be held liable regardless of sharing in the profits.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)—Finding of trial court on conflicting evidence conclusive.

Though the trial court might have drawn a different inference from conflicting evidence, it being possible to draw conflicting inferences therefrom, the appellate court will not disturb the conclusion.

8. Principal and agent ⇐78(6)—Evidence held sufficient to show certain defendant conspired with agent to defraud principal.

In an action by principal against agent and others for an accounting for profits from a fraudulent conspiracy, evidence held sufficient to show that a certain defendant joined therein.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Frank H. Smith, Jr., and another against R. B. Blodget and others. On judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles J. Kelly, D. A. Stuart, Blodget & Blodget, N. P. Moerdyke, John C. Stick, Rosecrans & Emme, and E. F. Crawford, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fred N. Arnoldy, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LENNON, J. From the following facts the present litigation arose: Plaintiffs were the owners of certain land in Kern county, Cal., and desired to dispose of the same. In June, 1918, plaintiff Frank H. Smith, Sr., held a conversation with defendants R. B. Blodget and T. E. Commins, dealers in real estate, wherein defendant Blodget stated that the Associated Oil Company was interested in purchasing 1,000 contiguous acres in said county at $150 an acre, and that plaintiffs' land was in the contemplated area. The necessity of securing united action on the part of the several owners of the land in the tract under consideration was discussed, and plaintiff Smith, Sr., stated that his son, Frank H. Smith, Jr., could obtain a written option on 160 acres thereof which was owned by several persons jointly, to wit, C. H. Plummer, Emelie H. Smith, and certain others represented by Leslie S. Smith as trustee. The subsequent dealings concerning this particular parcel of land, called the "Plummer quarter section," gave rise to the present controversy. Pursuant to the above conversation, Smith, Jr., obtained a written instrument reading:

"Los Angeles, July 15th, 1918.

"This agreement witnesseth that we herewith give to Frank H. Smith, Jr., an option on our land S. W. ¼ section 18, T. 11 N., R. 22 W., S. B. M., to handle and sell for us at a net price to us of $100.00 per acre. This option good for 60 days from date except that it may be revocable by a 10 days' notice to him or to his last P. O. address. C. H. Plummer. Emelie H. Smith."

This authorization plaintiffs immediately intrusted to defendant Blodget, under an agreement that Blodget should act as their agent in finding a purchaser for the said land at $150 per acre, in which event Blodget was to receive a commission of $2,000. Later, on August 10, 1918, plaintiffs agreed that Blodget's commission should be raised to $2,500. In the meantime defendant Blodget had discussed the proposed sale with defendants Potter and Fickeissen, each of whom owned a quarter section in the 1,000-acre tract. After learning of the contemplated deal, defendant Potter engaged Smith, Jr., in a conversation and discovered that he was about to leave town on a 30-day vacation. Shortly thereafter defendant Potter succeeded in inducing the owners of the Plummer quarter section to give plaintiffs a 10 days' notice of the cancellation of their option, to take effect on August 27, and to give defendant Potter an option on the same property commencing on the day on which the plaintiffs' option expired. Smith, Sr., who was not on friendly terms with the owners of the Plummer property, received the notice of cancellation on August 17, during the absence of his son on a vacation at a point where it would be difficult to reach him by mail or telegraph.

About the same time that the notice of cancellation was delivered word was received that the Associated Oil Company was not interested in the purchase of the lands. Defendant Blodget then assured plaintiff Smith, Sr., that he would be able to dispose of the Plummer property to other purchasers prior to the expiration of the plaintiffs' option. In these representations he was joined by defendants Commins and Fickeissen, the latter having met Smith in the meantime.

All three defendants mentioned one Patterson and Graham as prospective purchasers of the land. As a matter of fact, Patterson and Graham never had any intention of buying the property, and were never considered by any of the defendants to be likely purchasers. Finally, on August 26, the last day of the life of plaintiffs' option, a meeting was held at the office of defendant Commins at which defendants Commins, Blodget, and Fickeissen met plaintiff Smith, Sr., by appointment. Defendants then stated that, as the option was about to expire, it would be necessary to furnish the sum of $250 to be paid to the grantors of the option in order to secure a 30-day extension. The sum was advanced by the three defendants present, defendant Fickeissen making a statement to the effect that, as she was putting up half the money, she wanted half the proceeds. This money was paid to the grantors as a deposit on the exercise of the option and to apply on the payment of the purchase price, and the parties were thereupon given 30 days in which to complete the purchase.

At the time this payment was made, defendants Blodget, Commins, and Fickeissen represented to Smith, Sr., that they had found a purchaser by the name of Gross, an old friend of defendant Fickeissen, who resided in St. Louis, Mo., and was taking a trip to California. Later, on September 3, defendant Blodget induced Smith, Jr., who had then returned, to execute and deliver to said Blodget an assignment of the plaintiffs' option. This assignment was procured without consideration upon the representation that it constituted a mere agency authorization, and that its sole purpose was to afford written evidence of Blodget's authority to represent plaintiffs in selling the land to Gross. Defendants dated this assignment "August 9, 1918." Various representations were made by the said defendants to plaintiffs from time to time to the effect that Gross had been communicated with, had arrived in town, and that a sale to him was under way. However, on September 23, Smith, Sr., discovered that the dealings with Gross were purely mythical. If any such person existed, defendants never communicated with him, and he was never a prospective purchaser of the land in question. Upon this revelation, plaintiffs demanded the return of their option, but defendant Blodget had delivered it to defendant Fickeissen, who refused to surrender it. The evidence reveals that on September 18, without plaintiffs' knowledge, Blodget had executed an option to purchase the property in question in favor of one Graham, and on the following day Graham executed a similar option to defendant Potter. A few days later, as a result, and by means of the assignment to defendant Blodget of plaintiffs' option and Blodget's option to Graham and the latter's option to Potter, a sale of the land was consummated by defendant Potter to the Chanslor Canfield Midway Oil Company for the price of $125 an acre, or over $20,000. Previous to this sale, defendant Potter had effected sales to said Chanslor Canfield Company of at least three other quarter sections in the vicinity of the Plummer property, including the quarter sections belonging to himself, defendant Fickeissen, and a third person not involved in this controversy. The four defendants retained the proceeds of this sale of the Plummer land over and above the sum paid to the owners of the property (about $16,000) and incidental expenses amounting to a few hundred dollars. Plaintiffs instituted the present action for the sum thus retained, and the trial court rendered a judgment against all the defendants jointly for the sum of $3,945.50. The four defendants have appealed separately, but since each appeals on the same grounds as the others they have joined in the preparation of briefs, and the briefs filed by each are identical in content.

According to defendants' theory, the written instrument executed by C. H. Plummer and Emelie Smith in favor of Smith, Jr., is not an option to purchase, but merely an authorization to sell the property as agent of the owners. If this be so, defendants affirm that the said instrument was inadmissible under the issues raised by the pleadings, and that defendants' objection to its introduction in evidence should have been sustained, for the reason that in the present suit plaintiffs seek to recover the portion of the proceeds of the sale retained by defendants, not as agents and on behalf of the vendors of the land, but as owners of the said funds by virtue of rights arising under an option to purchase the land.

[1] The fact that the agreement conferred the option to "handle and sell" the property for a certain sum, rather than to "purchase," does not, as defendants contend, necessitate the conclusion that the contract is merely one of agency. Whether an agreement permitting a person "to sell" land on certain terms creates the relation of principal and agent or that of vendor and purchaser under a contract of sale depends upon the intention of the parties. James, Law of Option Contracts, § 114. Where there was a revocable authorization to a firm of real estate agents to sell land for $10,000 net to the owners, with an agreement to pay "a commission of all over said sum of $10,000 net, for which they may sell said property with our consent," it was held in this state that a sale by the firm under this agreement was effected in the capacity of vendor on its own account, and not as agent of the owners of the land. Robinson v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 93 Cal. 80, 28 Pac. 796, 27 Am. St. Rep. 167. The determining factor in that case was the direct interest in and right to a part of the proceeds of the sale which was granted to the persons making the sale. The written instrument in the case at bar contains no express provision that plaintiffs shall retain that portion of the purchase price which exceeds the specified selling price. However, Smith, Jr., is given the right to sell "at a net price to us [the owners] of $100 per acre." Had the contract stated that Smith was authorized to sell the property for not less than $100 per acre net to the owners, it might be held that the provision was purely one of limitation, and that the intent was fairly clear, that the person bringing about the sale should have no interest in the proceeds as such. Allen v. Clopton (Tex. Civ. App.) 135 S. W. 242. But the broad and unrestricted provision giving Smith the right to effect a sale at a net price to the owners of $100 per acre is susceptible of sundry interpretations. It may mean that all net proceeds above the specified price belong to him, the owners of the property agreeing to part with all interest in the property, whatever the price may be, provided they receive the sum of $100 per acre free from all deductions, in which case Smith would be in the position of a vendor selling on his own account; it may mean that the owners of the property are entitled to receive all of the net proceeds of the sale and that Smith cannot look to them for any compensation for services unless he obtains for them a net price in excess of $100 per acre, and in that case he would be a mere agent. Ford v. Brown, 120 Cal. 551, 52 Pac. 817; Wolverton v. Tuttle, 51 Or. 501, 94 Pac. 961, 963.

[2] The provisions of the contract are not clear in this respect. If this were a case where the parties had plainly failed to make any provision for compensation, a simple agreement to pay the reasonable value for the services of an agent would be implied (Ford v. Brown, supra; Kennedy v. Merickel, 8 Cal. App. 378, 383, 97 Pac. 81), but the case here presented is one where the intention of the parties is imperfectly expressed and the language employed by them is ambiguous and requires interpretation. It was therefore permissible for the court to take into consideration the construction placed upon the instrument by the various persons concerned. Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 2, 14, 84 Pac. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275.

[3] Taking into consideration the dealings previously set forth, the various assignments of the option and the manner in which the sale was conducted by all the persons involved, the evidence must be held sufficient to support the finding of the trial court "that the said instrument was acted upon and construed by the grantors thereof and all the parties to this action as an option, and not as a mere agency authorization." It follows, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to that portion of the net proceeds in excess of $100 per acre.

[4] On this appeal, defendants raise the objection for the first time that the instrument in question was not signed by Leslie Smith, trustee for some of the owners of the land sold. This objection is of no avail to defendants in this case in view of the fact that a sale of the land was consummated by defendants under the said option and the terms of the option were observed and complied with without question by all of the owners of the land. Whether or not the written instrument was of value at the time it was first acquired by plaintiffs, it subsequently attained value, and defendants cannot now attack it upon this ground after having assumed a fiduciary relation to plaintiffs in regard to it and realized financial profit by means of it.

[5, 6] The complaint sets forth two causes of action, one for money had and received and one for an accounting. The case was tried and decided under the latter count. Defendants claim that the action was in reality an equitable action for an accounting against defendant Blodget for failure to carry out his agency agreement, and not one for damages for fraud, and therefore that it was error for the trial court to render a judgment against all four defendants jointly for the amount found to be due from defendant Blodget.

An action for an accounting lies within the jurisdiction of equity, among other instances, in cases of fraud as well as where there is a fiduciary relation between the parties and the facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of one. Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 2, § 910; vol. 4, § 1421. Having once taken jurisdiction, the court will grant further relief demanded by the situation and necessary to complete justice. If through fraud and conspiracy other defendants assisted the defendant Blodget in violating his obligation to his principal by effecting a sale without plaintiffs' knowledge and retaining the proceeds, they, as well as the agent Blodget, are equally liable for all the consequences of the conspiracy, regardless of the extent of their participation or the share of the profits obtained by them. It is the civil wrong, not the conspiracy, which constitutes the cause of action, and therefore the plaintiff may bring his suit along any lines which he deems most likely to afford him redress for the particular injury which he has sustained, and, if successful in proving an injury of the nature claimed, may recover judgment in that action against all those who have united or co-operated in inflicting that injury. Revert v. Hesse, 193 Pac. 943. And where, after the violation of a fiduciary obligation, an accounting is had and an amount found to be due from the agent or trustee, judgment for the same amount may also be rendered against those proven to have fraudulently aided in the attempt of the fiduciary to obtain secret profits, although they themselves are not fiduciaries and receive no share of the profits. Lomita Land & Water Co. v. Robinson, 154 Cal. 36, 97 Pac. 10, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106.

It is not, and, in view of the evidence, cannot, be argued that defendants Blodget, Commins, and Fickeissen did not enter into and succeed in a conspiracy to effect a sale under plaintiffs' option without plaintiffs' knowledge, and to retain the proceeds thereof. It is, however, contended that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that defendant Potter was involved in these dealings.

[7, 8] The trial court might have drawn the inference from the evidence before it that defendant Potter did not act in conjunction with the other defendants in this matter. However, the conclusion reached was that said defendant was implicated in the conspiracy, and, in view of the fact that the evidence was conflicting, and that it was possible to draw conflicting inferences from that part of the evidence which was not itself conflicting, the conclusion cannot be disturbed on appeal. Defendant Potter's participation in the conspiracy was more veiled than that of the other defendants, and it is difficult to ascertain the exact point of time at which he came within the orbit of the conspiracy. However:

"The law recognizes the intrinsic difficulty of proving a conspiracy. * * * The conspiracy may sometimes be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relation of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators and other circumstances." Revert v. Hesse, supra; Woodruff v. Hughes, 2 Ga. App. 361, 58 S. E. 551.

When we consider that the climax in which the conspiracy culminated was an act consummated by defendant Potter, namely, the sale of the property to the Chanslor Canfield Oil Company; that during the negotiations herein set forth the said defendant was actively engaged in selling to the same company other land in the vicinity; that Patterson, Graham, and defendant Fickeissen, all of whom seem responsible for considerable and effective negotiating between the various parties, were close friends or former business associates of defendant Potter—we believe the circumstances proven were such as to support the conclusion of the trial court that defendant Potter, if not the instigating and moving force behind the whole transaction, was at least implicated in the conspiracy. Defendants claim that it is absurd to hold that defendant Potter had any part in keeping alive plaintiffs' option by paying $250 on deposit on August 26, and that it would have been to defendant Potter's interest to have permitted the option to expire and proceed under his own option, which he had obtained from the owners of the property. However, it may very well be that his own option was less favorable in its terms than plaintiffs' option, and that defendant Potter's only object in procuring it was to enable the other defendants to more easily get control of plaintiffs' option by curtailing the life of the latter option. But, even assuming that defendants Blodget, Fickeissen, and Commins were acting adversely to defendant Potter in extending the plaintiffs' option on August 26, by raising the sum of $250, nevertheless "it was not essential to liability on his part that he should have been a party to the scheme from its inception." Lomita Land & Water Co. v. Robinson, supra. The evidence is sufficient to warrant the inference that, subsequent to that time, Potter did wrongfully aid and abet in securing and withholding the profits from the plaintiffs, and, the trial court having drawn that inference, he is equally liable with the other defendants.

Defendants contend that on August 26, at the time defendants advanced the $250 to be paid as a deposit on the option, Smith, Sr., entered into an agreement with the said defendants as to the division of profits, and therefore plaintiffs cannot now claim all of the profits from the sale. However, any agreement which said plaintiff Smith, Sr., might have made at that time was not freely made, but was induced by the fraudulent representations and conduct of the defendants, and the agreement is thereby vitiated and not binding against the plaintiffs.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHAMBERS, State Controller, v. MUMFORD et al. (L. A. 6616.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 14, 1921.)

1. Taxation ⇨878(1)—Heir to whose trustee was distributed part of proceeds of note in settlement of claim against estate, acquired interest, not as heir, but as beneficiary under contract with trustee.

Where the proceeds of a note were assigned and distributed by agreement of certain heirs of an estate to the trustees of other heirs, in settlement of their claim against the estate, the interest thereby created passed to the latter, not as heirs, but as beneficiaries under the contract with their trustees.

2. Courts ⇨95(2), 97(6)—Decisions of foreign state courts and United States Supreme Court, construing foreign statutes, not controlling in determining what property subject to inheritance tax.

The decisions of the courts of other states, and of the United States Supreme Court, construing the statutes of other states, are not controlling in determining what constitutes property subject to inheritance tax in California.

3. Taxation 867(1)—Choses in action subject to inheritance tax at creditor's domicile; "property."

All tangible personal assets of nonresidents are subject to inheritance tax in the state where located at the time of succession, but since in view of Const. art. 13, § 1; Pol. Code, § 3607, subjecting "all property in this state" to taxation for revenue, there is no distinction in the definition of "property" as used in the Inheritance Tax Act of 1913 and the general property tax laws, an interest in the proceeds of a promissory note, being a mere chose in action, attends the person of the creditor and is taxable at his domicile.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Action by John S. Chambers, as Controller of the State of California, against Rose Skeel Mumford and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John W. Carrigan and E. H. Pennock, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This appeal involves the liability to an inheritance tax in the state of California of certain property interests passing to the defendant and appellant, Rose Skeel Mumford, under the last will of her deceased husband. Both the decedent and the appellant were at the time of the former's death nonresidents of the state of California, having their domicile in New Jersey. The property interest involved consisted of a contractual interest held for the testator by trustees, also nonresidents of California, in the proceeds of a promissory note executed by a resident of California to the defendant, Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles, in its capacity as administrator of the estate of one Arcadia B. De Baker, deceased. The Trust Company is a California corporation, and the note at all times was held, owing, and payable in the state of California, and was secured by a mortgage on California real estate.

The interest of testator, appellant's husband, in the proceeds of this note arose under the following conditions: He with other persons claiming to be interested as heirs in the De Baker estate, in order to prosecute their claims advantageously, assigned their respective interests growing out of such claims to trustees, who were empow-ed to act for them. These trustees have likewise at all times involved in this proceeding been nonresidents of the state of California.

These claims of heirship were litigated in the superior court in the county of Los Angeles, but met with an adverse ruling from which an appeal was taken to this court. During the pendency of this appeal a contract of settlement was entered into with the De Baker heirs, or most of them, whereby these heirs agreed to procure a complete assignment of this note and a distribution thereof from the De Baker estate to these trustees. Such was the status of the transaction at the time respondent succeeded to her husband's interests at the time of his death. This contract was thereafter carried out, and the note was distributed to these nonresident trustees, and subsequently the amount of the note was collected by the Title Insurance Company, which continued to hold the note after distribution, as the agents of the nonresident trustees. The principal sum of the note was $704,439.50, of which amount Mumford's interest was an undivided one-sixth. At the time of the commencement of this action the note had been collected, and sufficient of the amount due the respondent from her husband's share remained in the hands of the defendant Title Insurance Company to satisfy the inheritance tax demanded. No question is raised as to the amount of or liability for this tax, if it is a proper charge against the interest which passed to respondent under her husband's will.

[1] In determining the liability of this interest under the inheritance tax laws of California, the matter may be simplified without at all changing the legal aspect of the case by eliminating from consideration all facts involving the nonresident trusteeship, and the De Baker estate. The contract with the trustees was for the sole use and benefit of the beneficiaries of that trust, and the interest thereby created did not pass to them as heirs of the De Baker estate, but by virtue of the contract in settlement of the litigated claim.

The fact that the property interest in question was acquired by assignment from the De Baker heirs and afterwards vested in the assignees by virtue of a decree in the De Baker estate presents no different condition than if the rights had been created by contract and assignment from the original payee of the note. Neither is there any different situation created by the fact that the Mumford interest was held by a trustee than if the entire transaction had been carried on directly with Mumford in person.

The note was executed by a resident of California to a resident of California, and secured by mortgage on California real estate. The note itself was at all times retained in California in the hands of the payee, who afterwards became the agent of the assignee, and who collected the money due on the note, and retains it in the state of California for the benefit of the appellant.

[2, 3] There is no dispute as to the facts, and the sole question involved is whether or not the interest of the nonresident testator acquired under the contract to assign constituted "property within this state," under sections 1 and 2 of the California Inheritance Tax Act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 1066). It is conceded that the succession to the property is subject to the inheritance tax only in the event that the interest passing to appellant is property within the state of California. There has been in several of the states in the matter of fixing the situs of personalty for purposes of taxation under the inheritance tax laws a far departure from the common law rule, and commonly accepted rule that such property follows the domicile of the owner. It is impracticable to trace the modification of this rule through all its ramifications, but it may be said that as to all tangible personal assets it has become the settled law that they are subject to inheritance tax in the state where they are located at the time of the succession, under statutes imposing such tax upon property of a nonresident owner situated within the state. Blakemore & Bancroft, Inher. Taxes, p. 143; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; McDougald v. Lillenthal, 174 Cal. 698, 164 Pac. 387, L. R. A. 1917F, 267; State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 17 Atl. 82, 3 L. R. A. 372; In re Rogers, 149 Mich. 305, 112 N. W. 931, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1134, 119 Am. St. Rep. 677. Some of the authorities may be said to have gone further, and for the purposes of such taxation to have fixed the situs of intangible property interests such as contract debts and other mere choses in action, within the jurisdiction where the debtor resides and to which the creditor must come to enforce his claim.

The rule supported by these authorities, as applying to choses in action against nonresidents of the state where the inheritance tax is claimed, is that if the owner must invoke the laws of that state to reduce his claim to possession, or secure the beneficial enjoyment thereof, and particularly if the security and evidences of indebtedness are in that state, the property interest is one within the state and subject to the local tax. State v. Probate Court, 128 Minn. 371, 150 N. W. 1094, L. R. A. 1916A, 901; Blackstone v. Miller, supra; People v. Griffith, 245 Ill. 532, 92 N. E. 313; Greves v. Shaw, 173 Mass. 205, 53 N. St. Louis*, etc.,

Ct., 128 Minn. 371, 150 N. W. 1098, L. R. A. 1916A, 901; State v. Ramsey County Prob. Ct., 124 Minn. 508, 145 N. W. 390, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 262, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 861.

In re Blackstone's Estate is a leading case arising in the New York courts, and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States (69 App. Div. 127, 74 N. Y. Supp. 508, affirmed, 171 N. Y. 682, 64 N. E. 1118, affirmed, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439). In that case the decedent was a resident of the state of Illinois. At his death he left deposits of money in a trust company in the city of New York, and also in a New York bank. The deposits were subject to payment on demand of the Illinois creditor. They constituted choses in action, as the relation between the bank and its depositors is merely one of debtor and creditor. These claims were held on contested hearing in the Supreme Court of New York to be property in that state. This decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeals in a memorandum opinion, and again by the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to that court.

It may be said, however, for these decisions holding that bank deposits are property in the state where the bank account is created, that they rest to some extent upon the popular fiction that the bank deposit represents actual money in specie. It would require a further and somewhat advanced step to apply this construction to any ordinary contract debt.

It may be admitted that there is much reason and perhaps sound policy for accepting a rule which recognizes as the situs of contract debts the place where the debtor resides, and to which the creditor must come to enforce his claim. It may be said with truth that everything which gives value to such a claim exists at the domicile of the debtor. The adopting of such a rule in California, however, would be a reversal of the common-law doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam which has prevailed in this state, and which has been followed by our courts in determining the situs of choses in action. The decisions of the courts of other states, and of the Supreme Court of the United States construing the statutes of other states, may be suggestive, but are not controlling in determining what constitutes property within the state of California.

No distinction is apparent in the use of the word "property" in our inheritance tax law to differentiate it from the same term in the laws governing the levy and collection of an ordinary property tax. Under section 1, article 13, of the Constitution, and section 3607 of the Political Code, "all property in this state" subject to certain exemptions is made subject to taxation for revenue. The term under consideration in the inheritance tax law is "property within this state." There seems to be no room under our statutes for the distinction as to definitions of property which exists in many jurisdictions between the property tax and the tax upon succession to property.

The California rule as to property taxes is stated in Estate of Fair, 128 Cal 612, 61 Pac. 186, as follows:

"As to corporeal chattels such as live animals, manufactured goods, and the like, it is doubtless the rule that they are taxable in the state where they have local situation, though the owner may reside elsewhere. * * * The general rule is that debts attend the person of the creditor, and are taxable at his domicile." San Francisco v. Lux, 64 Cal. 481, 483, 2 Pac. 254; Mackay v. San Francisco, 113 Cal. 398, 399, 45 Pac. 696; People v. Park, 23 Cal. 139.

In Mackay v. San Francisco, 128 Cal. 681, 61 Pac. 382, it is said:

"The weight of authority is that a debt so due or to become due should be taxed at the place of residence of the creditor or owner, and that the situs of the debt is that of its owner, and that it is not property in the state of the debtor."

A concession has been made under the decisions of this court in the right to modify the application of the maxim, mobilia sequuntur personam, in the matter of certificates of stock in a domestic corporation. It has been held for purposes of the inheritance tax law the situs of stock in a corporation is in the state of the incorporation. McDougald v. Low, 164 Cal. 107, 110, 127 Pac. 1027; Murphy v. Crouse, 135 Cal. 19, 66 Pac. 971, 87 Am. St. Rep. 90; McDougald v. Lillenthal, supra, 174 Cal. 701, 164 Pac. 387, L. R. A. 1917F, 267. A reason for making a distinction between certificates of stock, and ordinary choses in action is in the fact that the former represent an interest in and derive their value from the tangible assets of the corporation. Beyond this the California decisions have shown no disposition to limit or modify the common-law rule that the situs of mere choses in action follows the domicile of the owner.

The nearest adjudication of this point as applied to the inheritance tax law we have in California is in the Estate of Hodges, 170 Cal. 492, 150 Pac. 344, L. R. A. 1916A, 837, where it was held that certain bonds and securities, deposits in bank and other chattels, held in the state of Massachusetts, but owned by a resident of California, were subject to an inheritance tax in this state. Discussing the application of the maxim, mobilia sequuntur personam, Mr. Justice Lorigan, writing the opinion, says:

"That maxim, universally applied in the jurisdictions of all civilized nations, is that the personal estate of a decedent, wherever it may in fact be located, is, for the purposes of succession and distribution, deemed to have no other locality than the domicile of the decedent. As a general rule, the domicile of the decedent draws to it in contemplation of law all the personal property of the decedent no matter where its actual situs may be at the time of his death, and the distribution of it is governed and controlled by the laws of succession existing at the place of the domicile of the decedent. The courts of the various states have had frequent occasion to pass upon the power of a state having jurisdiction through its courts over the estate of a domiciled decedent to impose an inheritance tax upon the personal property of such decedent located outside of the state, and the authorities are uniform in holding that though personal property may be actually located in another state than that of the residence of the decedent at the time of his death, its situs for the purpose of imposing an inheritance tax upon it is in the state which was the domicile of the decedent, and where the primary administration of his estate is being had. Ross on Inheritance Taxation, pp. 221, 229; Blakemore and Bancroft on Inheritance Taxes, §§ 207, 225; Dos Passos on Inheritance Tax Law (2d Ed.) § 29; Estate of Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L. R. A. 709, 32 N. E. 1096; Frothingham v. Shaw, 175 Mass. 59, 78 Am. St. Rep. 475, 55 N. E. 623; People v. Union Trust Co., 253 Ill. 168, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 514, 99 N. E. 377; In re Bullen's Estate, 143 Wis. 512, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1114, 128 N. W. 109; Mann v. State Treasurer, 74 N. H. 345, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150, 68 Atl. 130; In re Dingam's Estate, 66 App. Div. 228, 72 N. Y. Supp. 694; In re Hartman, 70 N. J. Eq. 664, 62 Atl. 560; State v. Probate Court, 124 Minn. 508, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 262, 145 N. W. 390; Commonwealth v. Williams, 102 Va. 778, 1 Ann. Cas. 434, 47 S. E. 867; Estate of Bittinger, 129 Pa. St. 338, 18 Atl. 132.

"All of these cases were decided in favor of the right of the state having control of the primary administration of the estate through the application of the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam; the well-established general rule that the personal property of a decedent wherever situated is governed by the law of the domicile of the owner both as to distribution and the right to succession."

Such application of this rule has been established by a line of decisions antedating the inheritance tax, and as there is nothing in the enactments creating the inheritance tax to limit or change such application of the rule, it must be held under familiar rules of construction that in the use of the term "property in this state" the Legislature intended it to have the same meaning as had already been given to practically the same expression in the laws governing property taxes.

This rule of construction has been in force so long and has been so consistently followed that if it is to be changed or modified it should be by the Legislature and not by the courts.

The judgment is reversed.

(187 Cal. 245)

McNUTT v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES (two cases). (L. A. 6579, 6577.)

1. Municipal corporations ⚡269(3)—Could change grade of streets under Street Improvement Act of 1913 to conform to previously established grades; "improvement."

A city, under Street Improvement Act 1913, §§ 1, 2, 5, could change the grade of a public street to make it conform to previously established grade, it being unnecessary that the grade be concurrently established, in view of section 46, defining term "improvement" to include "establishment, change or modification of grade, if any," and the legislative history of the act, notwithstanding section 1 of the amendatory act of 1915.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Improvement.]

2. Municipal corporations ⚡269(3)—City authorized to establish grade for tunnel to be used as public thoroughfare.

Street Improvement Act 1913, § 1, providing for improvement of public street by establishment, change, or modification of the grade of the street, held to authorize the city to establish a grade for a tunnel to be used as a public thoroughfare.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡293(2)—Resolution of intention held to sufficiently designate work to be done.

Resolution of intention providing that grade of streets shall be altered as shown on various plans and specifications on file in city engineer's office, referred to for more particular description, held sufficient under Street Improvement Act of 1913, requiring the resolution to designate the proposed grade, in absence of a showing that all the data required to be shown was not contained in the plans and specifications referred to.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡294(8)—Requirement that city clerk make and file affidavit as to mailing notice of passage of resolution of intention to property owners mandatory.

Street Improvement Act 1913, § 3, requiring city clerk, immediately on passage of resolution of intention, to mail notice thereof to proper owners, and to file affidavit that he has mailed notices, held mandatory, the making and filing of affidavit being a jurisdictional fact.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡294(8)—City clerk's affidavit as to notice to property owners must show notice in compliance with statute.

City clerk's affidavit that he has mailed postal cards notifying property owners of passage of resolution of intention under Street Improvement Act 1913, § 3, must show that the notice was mailed in compliance with requirements of the statute, to give city council jurisdiction to proceed with the work.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡294(8)—City clerk's affidavit conclusive evidence that notice was properly directed, mailed, and delivered to property owners.

City clerk's affidavit that he mailed postal cards giving notice of passage of resolution of intention to property owners under Street Improvement Act 1913, § 3, in compliance with the statute, is conclusive evidence that the notice was properly directed, mailed, and delivered.

7. Municipal corporations ⚡294(4)—City clerk's notice of passage of resolution of intention held insufficient for failure to designate the improvement.

City clerk's notice to property owners under Street Improvement Act 1913, § 3, of the passage of the resolution of intention "for the improvement of B. tunnel," giving ordinance number thereof, held insufficient to give city council jurisdiction to proceed with an improvement other than B. tunnel, provided for in the resolution of intention, the reference to the resolution of intention being insufficient, in view of section 44.

8. Eminent domain ⚡283—Owner held not estopped from claiming damages for change in grade of street by attempted proceedings under Street Improvement Act.

Owner of lot abutting on street was not estopped from claiming damages for change in grade because of attempted proceedings by city under Street Improvement Act of 1913 where city council had no jurisdiction to proceed with the improvement because of insufficiency of city clerk's notice to property owners of passage of resolution of intention under section 3.

9. Judgment ⚡256(7)—Plaintiff not entitled to interest though order directed judgment in accordance with prayer of complaint claiming interest, where findings showed plaintiff not entitled thereto.

Order granting plaintiff's motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, to vacate judgment for defendant, and directing entry of judgment for plaintiff upon the court's findings of fact, in accordance with the prayer of complaint, did not entitle plaintiff to amount claimed under complaint with interest, though complaint demanded such amount with interest from specified date, where, under the findings, plaintiff was not as matter of law entitled to interest on such amount.

10. Appeal and error ⚡1071(2)—Erroneous conclusion of law no ground for reversal if judgment is right.

An erroneous conclusion of law does not constitute a cause of reversal if the judgment is right.

11. Eminent domain ⚡302—Plaintiff suing for damages for change in grade of street not entitled to interest.

Owner of land abutting on street suing city for damages for change in grade of street could not recover interest before judgment, the claim being unliquidated.

12. Interest $\S$ 19(1)—Not recoverable before judgment on unliquidated claim.

Plaintiff suing on an unliquidated claim cannot recover interest on amount claimed before judgment, even as against an individual defendant.

13. Municipal corporations $\S$ 1002—States $\S$ 171—Interest not recoverable against state or municipality in absence of statute.

As against the state or a municipality, interest cannot be recovered except under special statutory authorization.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Harry W. McNutt, substituted in the place and stead of J. H. Smith, against the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation. Judgment for plaintiff for less than amount claimed, and both parties appeal. Affirmed.

Charles S. Burnell, W. P. Mealey, and J. H. O'Connor, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. C. Cross, Chas. S. Conner and Herbert Cutler Brown, all of Los Angeles (Delphin M. Delmas, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff in this action recovered judgment against the city of Los Angeles, the defendant, in the sum of $5,000 for damages resulting from changing and lowering the grade of streets bordering on plaintiff's lot. Both parties have appealed from the judgment.

The defendant appeals on the ground that the street work complained of was done in conformity with the Street Improvement Act of 1913, and that plaintiff, having failed in such proceedings to make his claim for damages as required by the act, was not entitled to recover in this action.

The plaintiff appeals on the ground that he was entitled to interest upon the amount of his recovery, which was not included in the judgment.

The appeals will be considered together in this opinion.

It is conceded by the defendant that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages unless the city of Los Angeles had jurisdiction to carry on the work complained of under the Street Improvement Act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 954).

The plaintiff was the owner of a city lot at the northwest corner of the intersection of California street and Broadway. A tunnel for street purposes had been constructed on Broadway in the year 1908 through a steep hill lying northerly from the intersection of the streets named. The southerly opening of the cut to the entrance of this tunnel, as originally established and constructed, appears to have been approximately upon the grade of plaintiff's lot.

The change for which damages are claimed consisted of cutting down the grade at the southern entrance of the tunnel and along plaintiff's land to a depth of upwards of 18 feet. This tunnel was originally constructed under an act of the Legislature approved March 19, 1889, and acts amendatory thereto, and in accordance with plans and specifications adopted by the legislative body of the city, and was accepted and thereafter used as a public way by the city for many years. There seems to have been no formal establishment of the grade for the floor of the tunnel at the time it was constructed.

It is alleged in the third amended complaint, the averments of which are stipulated and held by the findings to be true, that "on the 9th of July, 1912, the council of the city duly adopted an ordinance changing and establishing the grade of California street and of North Broadway," and that the grades thus established are the grades to which Atkinson (the contractor with the city) reduced these streets by the work hereinabove mentioned. The complaint also alleges that on the 25th of March, 1913, the council adopted an ordinance establishing the grade of the Broadway tunnel, in conformity to the grade thereafter used and conformed to by said contractor.

At any rate, if any authority existed for changing the physical grade of the streets and tunnel adjacent to plaintiff's lot under the proceedings thereafter had, it was by action of the city council taken prior to and independently of the proceedings under the act of 1913.

Plaintiff states his grounds of objection to the work complained of as follows:

"1. (a) The legislative body of the city of Los Angeles had no power under the Street Improvement Act of 1913 to order the grading and improvement of California Street, or North Broadway tunnel, because the official grade of these streets, highways or thoroughfares had already been established before the passage of the ordinance of intention to order such grading and improvement (passed October 9, 1913), and, as appears upon the face of said ordinance, the grading and improvement of said streets, highways, or thoroughfares was ordered to conform to the official grade thus theretofore established.

"2. The ordinance adopted by the legislative body of the city of Los Angeles on March 25, 1913, purporting to establish the grade of the Broadway tunnel, was illegal and void. Thus, for the following reasons:

"(a) There was, at that time, no law of this state, and no provision of the charter of the city, which authorized that body to establish the grade of a tunnel used for purposes of public travel.

"(b) As appears by the facts found, the grade of the Broadway tunnel had been officially established in the year of 1898. In accordance with the official grade thus established the tunnel had been constructed, and upon that grade the public travel had passed for 12 years and more. No ordinance changing that grade could legally be adopted under the pretense of originally establishing an official grade, even if it were assumed that power existed either to establish or change the grade of such tunnel.

"3. The Street Improvement Act of 1913 has no application to such underground tunnels as was the Broadway tunnel; and, therefore, all the proceedings set forth in the findings of fact, so far as they affect that tunnel, are illegal and void.

"4. Were it conceded that under the Street Improvement Act of 1913 the legislative body of the city of Los Angeles was invested with the power to order done the improvements described in its ordinance of intention adopted on the 8th day of October, 1913, that body had no power, under the facts here found, to pass the ordinance ordering said work to be done. And this for the following reasons:

"(a) The city clerk never made or filed the affidavit required by section 3 of said act.

"(b) The affidavit which the clerk did make shows upon its face that the notices which he mailed did not conform to the requirements of said act."

[1] A debatable question arises under the first objection above stated. Does, or does not, the Street Improvement Act as adopted in 1913 authorize the physical improvement and change of grade of a public street independently of a concurrent establishment, change or modification of the official or paper grade in the same proceeding?

The language of such act as it stood when the work here was undertaken, so far as it has any bearing on this point, and eliminating for the sake of clarity portions of the text which have no relation to the point at issue, is as follows (Stats. 1913, p. 954 et seq.):

Section 1. "Whenever the public interest or convenience may require, the legislative body of any city is hereby empowered to *establish or change or modify the grade of any public street, lane, alley, court, place, or right of way in said city, * * * and * *  to order the whole, or any part, * * * of such public street * * * to be improved to conform to such official grade."

Section 2. "Before ordering any establishment, change or modification of grade or any improvement described in section one herein, the said legislative body shall pass an ordinance or resolution, declaring its intention so to do, * * * designating the proposed grade, describing the proposed improvement, fixing a time and place for the hearing of protests * * * and specifying the exterior boundaries of the district of land to be benefited by said improvement."

Section 5. "If no protests are filed, * * * or if protests are filed, and after hearing are denied, * * * the legislative body shall have jurisdiction to order the establishment, change or modification of grade and the improvement described in the ordinance or resolution of intention. Having acquired such jurisdiction, it shall by ordinance or resolution order the establishment, change or modification of grade and such improvement to be made."

Section 46. "The term 'improvement' includes the establishment, change or modification of grade, if any, and all of the improvements mentioned in section one of this act."

The title to this act declares it:

"An act to provide for the establishment and change of grade of public streets, * * * and providing for the improvement thereof, in cases where any damage to private property would result from such improvement."

The italics used in the foregoing quotations are supplied to emphasize the construction contended for by plaintiff.

In defining the scope and purpose of this act it is apparent that all references to change of grade and improvement work are made conjunctively. The only constructive basis for a different interpretation is the use of the term "if any," in section 46, referring to the preceding words "establishment, change, or modification of grade."

Counsel for the appellant argue that, if a concurrent establishment or change of grade was an essential and prerequisite condition in every instance to any physical improvement of a street, under this act, the expression "if any" could find no place or significance in the application there given to the word "improvement." There is force in the suggestion. The word "improvement," as used in the act, is defined to cover proceedings which authorize the physical grading of the street, and a concurrent change of the official grade, "if any."

But a more potent reason for such construction comes from a consideration of the history of this act. The Legislature of 1909 enacted two separate measures for street improvement, one known as the Change of Grade Act (Stats. 1909, p. 1018), which provides a procedure for changing the official or paper grades of streets, without any concurrent physical work thereon, and the other known as the Hammond Act (Stats. 1909, p. 1042), which established a proceeding for actual street work where the grades were already established. But no provision was made in either act for a condition where it might be desirable to change or establish a grade and authorize the work of improvement concurrently.

Construed as appellant contends for, the Street Improvement Act of 1913 here under consideration very sensibly remedies this omission by permitting in the same proceeding the governing body of a city to take proceedings for the physical grading and improvement of a street, and at the same time where there is no official grade, or a change of grade was desired, to establish such grade.

The act of 1913, it will be seen by comparison, while it repeals the Hammond Act of 1909, is a substantial re-enactment thereof, with the incorporation of the provision for establishing or changing the grade concurrently where such need exists; and the manner in which the amendment of the statute is made and the obvious reasons therefor, would indicate that it was not intended to change the operation of the law in cases where grades were already established, but merely to supplement the former provision by allowing concurrent changes of grade where required, without the necessity of a separate and independent proceeding.

It is true that the act of 1913 is at least open to the criticism of being ambiguous and uncertain as to its interpretation in this respect. The Legislature has apparently fallen into the error so common in legal parlance of using the conjunctive article "and" where the disjunctive "or" is intended. But this can be disregarded if the obvious purpose of the act and the intention indicated by other phraseology justify it.

It is strongly insisted by respondent that the subsequent amendments to section 1 of this act show the legislative interpretation to have been that the statute did not in its original form authorize actual grading work, except where the official grade was changed or established in the same proceeding.

Section 1 of the act of 1913 was amended in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1217) by adding a proviso:

"That wherever the official grade of any such public street * * * has been theretofore established, changed or modified in any manner authorized by law, the legislative body of said city may order * * * such public street * * * to be improved under the provisions of this act."

The conclusion urged by respondent does not necessarily follow. It is often the function of an amendment to remove just such uncertainty and ambiguity as it is claimed exists here, by expressing the point involved in obscurity in language that cannot be misunderstood (Independent School District v. Kelley, 120 Iowa, 119, 94 N. W. 284; Alexander v. Mayor of Alexandria, 5 Cranch, 1, 3 L. Ed. 19).

It is obviously the part of reason and common sense that the Legislature should have intended by the original enactment of the act of 1913, to supplement the law as announced in the Hammond Act of 1909, by extending its scope to apply to the improvement of streets where an establishment of grade has not already been made, by providing a concurrent procedure for that purpose where needed, rather than to limit its application alone to streets where such concurrent change of grade is required, that every intentment of the statute should be applied to the broader construction.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the city council had jurisdiction to proceed under this statute with a view to contracting for the work complained of in conformity to previously established grades.

There is no sufficient justification for the collateral attack in this action upon the regularity and validity of the proceedings under which the official grades of the Broadway Tunnel and California street and North Broadway were established. The complaint itself alleges that the grades on California street and North Broadway to which the contractor conformed were duly adopted by an ordinance of the council on the 9th of July, 1912. As we gather from the record, no part of the tunnel proper was upon or contiguous to the property of plaintiff. That part of the street lying along the North Broadway side of plaintiff's lot, as we understand, was occupied by the cut complained of leading to the southerly opening of the tunnel.

So far as damage to plaintiff's land is concerned, the change of grade of the tunnel is not material. It is only as the right to lower the floor of the tunnel affects the jurisdiction of the city to proceed in the matter that it becomes significant. The complaint also alleges the adoption of an ordinance on the 25th of March, 1913, establishing the grade to which the contractor later lowered the floor of the tunnel, and also sets out such ordinance as Exhibit C of the complaint.

Nothing appears in the complaint attacking the regularity or validity of the proceeding for the adoption of these ordinances.

[2] The objection that there was no authority under the Street Improvement Act of 1913 to establish a grade for a tunnel to be used as a public thoroughfare is not pressed in respondent's brief. In any event, we think the act sufficiently authorizes tunnel work. Section 1, in authorizing streets to be improved to established grades, includes as part of the authorized work the construction of "culverts," "bridges," and "tunnels." The construction of a bridge over a chasm, or the boring of a tunnel through an obstructing hillside, would be integral parts of the actual highway improvement, and not a mere accessory structure. Bailey v. Hermosa Beach, 192 Pac. 712. In the case of Thompson v. Hance, 174 Cal. 572, 163 Pac. 1021, which held that tunnel construction was not authorized under the Vrooman Act as amended in 1911, the court was considering a statute which only mentioned tunnels as obviously intended for drainage purposes in connection with the street, the reference being to tunnels, sewers, ditches, * * * conduits, and channels for sanitary and drainage purposes."

[3] Plaintiff further attacks the jurisdiction for this procedure on the ground that the resolution of intention did not designate the grade upon which the work on the tunnel was to be done. The act of 1913 provides that before ordering any street work under such act the legislative body of the city "shall pass an ordinance or resolution declaring its intention to do so, * * * designating the proposed grade." It may be questioned if the requirement to designate "the proposed grade" applies where the grade is already established, but rather refers to proceedings where an establishment or change of grade is contemplated concurrently with the physical improvement of the street. The Hammond Act of 1909, upon which we have seen the present act is based, and which only dealt with street improvements where the grades were already established, did not direct any reference to the grade in the resolution of intention. In other words, in this proceeding there was no "proposed grade," the grade having previously been established. This resolution does, however, provide that the work shall be constructed as shown on various plans and specifications referred to for more particular description, and on file in the city engineer's office.

It is not alleged in the complaint, does not affirmatively appear from the resolution itself, and is not found by the court, that all the data required to be shown was not contained in the plans and specifications referred to. If this reference makes the specifications a part of the resolution of intention, we cannot infer that all the information required was not contained in such specifications.

In Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 368, 80 Pac. 81, Mr. Justice Shaw writing the opinion, it is held that a reference to plans and specifications on file will serve to make sufficient the description of the work in a resolution of this character where by the terms of the description in the resolution itself it would be void, and that it is not required that such plans and specifications should be published as part of the resolution.

In the case before us counsel for plaintiff recite in their notice of motion for judgment in plaintiff's favor on the findings that it appears upon the face of the ordinance that "the grading and improvement of said streets and highways or thoroughfares was ordered to conform to the official grade thus theretofore established."

Another and more serious objection to the validity of these proceedings under the Street Improvement Act of 1913 is the alleged failure of the city clerk to make an affidavit before the work was ordered that he had mailed postal cards to the property owners within the assessment district containing the notice required by the statute of the proposed improvement. Section 3 of the act requires that the city clerk shall, immediately upon the passage of the resolution of intention, mail to each of such property owners a postal card giving notice of the passage of the resolution of intention, "the name of street to be improved, and between what streets located." It is then further provided as follows:

"The city clerk shall immediately upon the completion of the mailing of said cards file in the office of the superintendent of streets an affidavit setting forth the time and manner of his compliance with this requirement; provided, that the failure of the city clerk to address said cards or any of them to the true owners of said property, or to mail said cards, or the failure of the property owners to receive the same, shall in no wise affect the validity of the proceedings or prevent the legislative body from acquiring jurisdiction to order the work; provided, however, that the legislative body shall not pass any ordinance or resolution ordering the work until such affidavit is made and filed as herein prescribed."

[4] The making and filing of this affidavit is mandatory and jurisdictional as affecting the power of the city council to pass an ordinance ordering the performance of the work. The reservation made in the proviso, that failure in fact in properly addressing or mailing or delivering said cards shall in no wise affect the validity of the proceedings, is clearly intended to avoid the uncertainty and complication that would inevitably arise if the proceeding could be attacked for failure to reach any one or several of the interested property owners with such cards by making the affidavit conclusive evidence of the facts alleged; but the negative provision contained, that such failure in the actual making and delivery would not invalidate the proceedings, or destroy jurisdiction, coupled with the final proviso, that the legislative body "shall not pass any ordinance or resolution ordering the work until such affidavit is made and filed as herein prescribed" emphasizes the intention of the Legislature to make such affidavit a condition of jurisdiction to take further action.

[5, 6] There was an affidavit made and filed in this instance. The vital question is, Did it meet the substantial requirements of the statute? Obviously, an affidavit by the clerk that he had mailed notice of intention to pave the Appian way would not suffice in this case. In order to conform to the requirement of the statute the affidavit must show that the notice mailed was in compliance with the requirements of the law. When this is done the affidavit becomes conclusive evidence that such notice was properly directed, mailed, and delivered, but the notice itself must, of course, conform to the statute.

[7] The notice which the clerk did make affidavit that he had mailed was as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 22, 1913.

"You are hereby notified that on the 9th day of October, 1913, the legislative body of the city of Los Angeles, California, by virtue of the street improvement act of 1913, passed an ordinance (resolution) of intention numbered 28,413 (new series) for the improvement of Broadway tunnel. Protests will be heard on the 19th day of November, 1913, at the hour of 9 o'clock a. m. in the council chamber of said city.

"Your property is in the district to be assessed for this improvement.

"Chas. L. Wilde, City Clerk."

Three distinct improvements were included in the resolution of intention—Broadway tunnel between Temple street and Sunset boulevard, California street between North Broadway and Hill street, North Broadway between Temple street and California street. In the notice certified to by the affidavit the only reference to the location of the work proposed is in the words, "for the improvement of Broadway tunnel." Is this the notice called for by the statute and required to be certified to in the affidavit?

The change in the streets for which plaintiff claimed damages was not in the Broadway tunnel, but on North Broadway and California street. He may have been indifferent to improvements to be made in the tunnel and willing to bear his portion of the assessment therefor without further investigation. The law required specific notice of the work proposed on these other streets. There was nothing in the notice certified to that can be said to have put a property owner on inquiry as to the inclusion of any other work than the improvement of the tunnel, and there was nothing on the face of the notice to suggest that the proposed improvement would extend to property in the other localities. If there had been it might well be said that the property owner was put on inquiry, and should have gone to the records for particulars.

That it was not the legislative purpose to make reference to the resolution of intention help out the notice in question is indicated by the provision of section 44 of the act that in "all resolutions, notices, orders and determinations subsequent to the 'notice of street work' a description of the work by reference to the ordinance or resolution of intention shall be sufficient." This notice was not subsequent, but prior to, or at least concurrent with, the notice of street work.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, Beale v. City of Santa Barbara, 32 Cal. App. 235, 243, 162 Pac. 657, cited by counsel for appellant, does not apply here, for the reason that such affidavit of mailing postal notices there involved was not made a condition precedent to ordering the work, under the Vrooman Act as then in force, which was under consideration in that case. Neither is there room for application of the rule referred to in Bailey v. Hermosa Beach, 192 Pac. 712, that jurisdiction does not depend upon record evidence or affidavit of notice, but upon the fact of notice. In this case the statute makes the affidavit of mailing the exclusive and conclusive proof of the fact of notice, and there is no allegation or offer of other proof that the law was complied with. In fact, the affidavit itself contains the proof that the notice mailed was not the notice required by the statute.

[8] We see no escape from the conclusion that in this absence of a substantial compliance with the law relating to the mailing of such notice there was a failure of jurisdiction to order the street improvements from which plaintiff's claim for damages arose. It follows that plaintiff was not estopped by such attempted proceedings from pursuing his relief in this action.

In view of the conclusion thus reached upon the merits of this proceeding, it is perhaps unnecessary to pass upon plaintiff's objection that the appeal was not properly taken.

We have not heretofore referred to the fact that judgment in this action was originally for the defendant, and that such judgment was vacated and a judgment on the findings entered for plaintiff, in pursuance of a motion under section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal is from this final judgment, and it is the contention of plaintiff that it should have been from the order directing the new judgment. Without discussing the merits of the question thus raised, it is sufficient for the purposes of this decision that a motion to dismiss this appeal on the grounds stated was heretofore presented to this court and denied. The circumstances attending the rendition of the new judgment, however, become material in the consideration of the appeal taken by plaintiff.

[9] The prayer of the third amended complaint was that plaintiff recover judgment for $5,000 damages, with interest thereon from the 1st day of September, 1915. In granting the motion vacating the first judgment for defendant and directing judgment for the plaintiff, the order of the court recites as follows:

"The plaintiff's motion to set aside and vacate the judgment (based upon findings of fact made by the court) heretofore rendered against him and entered on the 24th day of December, 1919, and to enter upon said findings a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in accordance with the prayer of his third amended complaint, filed here on the 24th of November, 1919, came on regularly to be heard on the 20th day of January, 1920, the parties appearing by their respective counsel, whereupon, after argument heard from both sides, the court being duly advised, grants said motion and orders that judgment be entered accordingly."

The judgment thereafter made and entered, after reciting the foregoing order, decrees as follows:

"Wherefore, it is now ordered, adjudged and decreed that the conclusions of law heretofore announced be amended and corrected by striking out said conclusions as the same now appear in the findings of fact and conclusions of law and substituting in lieu thereof the following: As conclusions of law from these facts the court decides that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment according to the prayer of his third amended complaint. And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment heretofore entered herein on the 24th day of December, 1919, be and the same is hereby set aside and vacated, and that the plaintiff do have and recover from the defendant the sum of $5,000, together with his costs."

Thereafter, on the 9th day of April, 1920, judgment was entered for the plaintiff for $5,000 damages, but without interest. Plaintiff at the time objected to the entry of a judgment without interest as not being in accord with the order of the court directing such judgment, but the court overruled the objection and caused the judgment to be entered without interest, to which ruling plaintiff excepted.

No question is raised by the defendant as to the regularity of the proceedings on the motion under section 663, Code of Civil Procedure. The new judgment is therefore to be considered precisely as though it were founded on original findings of fact and conclusions of law. Plaintiff's rights in the premises are to be measured by the findings of fact rather than the conclusions of law, and if the facts do not entitle him to interest he is not prejudiced by the judgment.

[10] The trial court, under section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, still had jurisdiction to further amend its conclusions of law if they did not conform to the findings of fact. This, perhaps, would have been the consistent course, but if under the findings of fact plaintiff is not entitled to recover interest he would not be entitled to relief on this appeal. An erroneous conclusion of law does not constitute a cause of reversal if the judgment is right. Spencer v. Duncan, 107 Cal. 423, 40 Pac. 549; Helm v. Duncan, 3 Cal. 454; Bleven v. Freer, 10 Cal. 172.

[11, 12] As has already been shown by the record, this judgment was for damages arising from the unlawful changing of the street grade in front of plaintiff's premises by the city of Los Angeles. The claim sued on was unliquidated, and could not draw interest before judgment even as against an individual defendant. Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 Pac. 50; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164.

[13] As against the state or a municipality thereof, interest cannot be recovered except under special statutory authorization. Engelbretson v. City of San Diego, 197 Pac. 651; Savings Society v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 356, 363, 63 Pac. 665.

The appeal by plaintiff is therefore also without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

RABE v. LLOYD et al. (L. A. 7069.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 20, 1921.)

Appeal and error — 422—Failure of notice of appeal to specify court to which taken held not ground for dismissal.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 941b, relating to appeals by alternative method, and requiring the notice to state to which court the party appeals, failure of such notice to specify the court in an appeal, where the Supreme Court was the only court to which such appeal would lie, was not ground for reversal, especially in view of Const. art. 6, § 4, forbidding appeal to be dismissed when not taken to the proper court, but to be transferred.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by J. W. Rabe against Mae Lloyd and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Denied.

Morganstern & Smith, of San Diego, for appellant.

Sherman Lacey, of San Diego, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Motion to dismiss appeal; the ground of motion being that the notice of appeal is fatally defective, in that it does not state to what court the appeal is taken. The notice is most specific in all other respects, describing with the utmost particularity the judgment from which the appeal was attempted to be taken.

Under the provisions of our Constitution the only court to which the appeal in this case would lie is this court. Section 941b, Code of Civil Procedure, relative to appeals taken by the alternative method, provides that the notice of appeal shall state, among other things, that the party does hereby appeal "to the Supreme or District Court of Appeal, as the case may be," from the judgment or order, identifying the thing appealed from with reasonable certainty. Technical compliance with the provisions of this section would include a statement of the court to which the appeal is taken; but we are of opinion that failure in this regard should not be held to invalidate the notice of appeal. As we have noted, any appeal in this case could properly be taken only to this court. In every case there is only one court to which an appeal may properly be taken, this court or one of the three District Courts of Appeal, the respective appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal being specified in the Constitution. It is further expressly provided in the Constitution (section 4, art. 6) that—

"No appeal taken to the Supreme Court or to a District Court of Appeal shall be dismissed for the reason only that the same was not taken to the proper court, but the cause shall be transferred to the proper court upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be just, and shall be proceeded with therein as if regularly appealed thereto."

In view of the fact that the only court in which an appeal in any case can be heard is determined by constitutional provision, and in view of the further constitutional provision which we have just quoted, we are of the opinion that this notice which does state an appeal from a judgment described with absolute certainty should be held sufficient to sustain the appeal.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

STARR v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION. (L. A. 6177.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 19, 1921.)

1. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 127(1)—Specific denial of allegation of negligence in starting car held not to admit negligence in general operation.

Where a complaint specifically counts on the negligent starting of a street car after stopping it, an answer, specifically denying this allegation, does not admit negligence in the general operation of the car.

2. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 93(1)—On denial of negligence other count, alleging contributory negligence, does not admit negligence.

Where the first count of answer denied negligence and the second count alleged contributory negligence, failure to deny negligence in that count, since defendant had a right to make inconsistent defenses, was not an admission of negligence.

3. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 191(9)—Instruction, assuming that street car conductor had duty to be in a certain place, held erroneous.

In action for injuring plaintiff by giving the car a sudden jerk or lurch and throwing plaintiff off, an instruction that, if the conductor of a pay-as-you-enter car knew that plaintiff was about to alight, and that the alighting place was dangerous, and, because the car was traveling at a fast rate of speed, would necessarily give a lurch upon reaching a certain place, and the conductor was not in his place, he was negligent, was erroneous in assuming that a conductor under such circumstances had a duty to be at a certain place in the car, and in view of the fact that the conductor's position was not the proximate cause of the injury.

4. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 296(3)—Instruction, omitting to charge that defendant's negligence must be the proximate cause of injury, cannot be cured by other instructions on proximate cause.

In action for injuries caused by negligence of a street railway, an instruction for plaintiff, omitting the questions of proximate cause and contributory negligence, is not cured by instructions asked by defendant, and containing these questions.

5. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 253(7) — An instruction directing verdict for plaintiff if certain facts are found must embrace all things necessary to show liability.

Where an instruction directs a verdict for plaintiff if the jury finds certain facts to be true, it must embrace all things necessary to show the liability.

6. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 251(8), 253(9)—An instruction on negligence, referring to three rates of speed, held erroneous as ignoring contributory negligence and authorizing recovery for negligence not pleaded.

In an action for negligently causing a jerk or lurch, throwing plaintiff from a car and causing injuries, an instruction that defendant may be justified under certain circumstances in running its cars at a very fast or the fastest rate of speed, while under other circumstances to run its cars at a high rate of speed might be negligence is erroneous, as allowing a verdict for plaintiff if the rate might be negligent, in failing to mention the question of contributory negligence, and in permitting the verdict for injuries on account of a high rate of speed when plaintiff relied on a negligent jerk or lurch.

7. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1064(1)—Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 243—Where instructions are flatly contradictory, they are erroneous and prejudicial.

Instructions are to be construed together, but where they are flatly contradictory, as where the jury is instructed upon a specific state of facts to bring in a verdict for plaintiff or defendant, and is elsewhere instructed in general terms not to do so, the instructions are erroneous and prejudicial.

8. Carriers $\hookrightarrow$ 347(3)—Evidence of previous conduct and habit of conductor in sitting down and talking to passengers held incompetent.

In action for injuries because of causing a jerk or lurch throwing plaintiff from a street car, evidence as to the previous conduct and habit of the conductor in sitting down and talking to passengers was incompetent.

9. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 77—On cross-examination of a 10 year old boy, a question as to conflict with his written statement should have been permitted.

On cross-examination of a boy 10 years old, a question as to conflict between his oral testimony and a prior written statement should have been permitted, since his answer would aid the jury in weighing and considering his degree of intelligence.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ernest E. Rogers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment for personal injuries received by her by reason of being thrown from a car of the defendant railway company while she was a passenger thereon. The complaint alleges that the car was so negligently operated that it started with a sudden jerk while the plaintiff was standing on the platform of the car, thereby throwing her with great force and violence to the pavement. The defendant denied this act of negligence and by way of affirmative and separate defense alleged that the plaintiff contributed to her own injuries by negligently attempting to alight from the car while it was still in motion. It appeared from the evidence that the car was operated westerly on West First street in Los Angeles and was descending a steep hill from Figueroa to Fremont street about 9 p. m., November 17, 1917. The hill ends at the easterly line of Fremont street. The intersection of First and Fremont streets is level; and in order to stop on the level it is customary to cross Fremont street before stopping. The plaintiff knew of this custom. The evidence as to where the plaintiff struck the pavement on leaving the car varied from 15 to 75 feet east of the east line of Fremont street. Thus, according to the witnesses which place the point of accident nearest to the usual stopping place of the car, it was the entire width of Fremont street, plus 15 feet from the point where the rear end of the car usually stopped.

The plaintiff testified that after the conductor gave the signal to stop the car he took a seat in the rear of the car with a lady passenger; that plaintiff walked to the rear platform of the car, and stood there, holding an upright stanchion with one hand and the handhold of the rear seat with the other. While so standing on the rear platform the car came to a stop; that she did not attempt to alight, but that the car suddenly started forward with a jerk that threw her from the platform; that she alighted on the stone pavement on her head, and was rendered unconscious. Jefferson Owens, a boy of 10 years, was watching the car from the window of his residence, opposite the scene of the accident. He saw the plaintiff fall from the car, and noticed at the time that the conductor was seated at the time, talking to a lady passenger; that the car was slowing down on the hill from 20 miles per hour to 10; that at 10 miles the car either suddenly accelerated, or decreased its speed 2 miles per hour (he testified both ways) with a jerk that threw plaintiff from the platform to the pavement. The conductor was in France with the A. E. F. and his testimony could not be secured. The only other witness who saw the accident testified that the plaintiff walked down the steps from the rear platform, and either stepped off the car backwards or fell off from the lower step while the car was still in motion; that there was no jerk or lurch or unusual motion of the car. Ten witnesses called by the defendant testified that there was no jerk or lurch of the car, and that the car did not stop before reaching its usual stopping place.

[1, 2] Before passing to a consideration of the main points of the case, one or two preliminary matters may be briefly disposed of. The respondent claims that the plaintiff alleges negligence and carelessness in the operation of the car, and that the answer by failure to deny this allegation, admitted the same. The plaintiff is in error in that regard. As already stated, the complaint specifically counts on the negligent starting of the car, after stopping, and this allegation is specifically denied. The respondent also claims that by reason of the fact that the defendant raised the issue of contributory negligence, its own negligence was thereby admitted. In the first count of the answer, negligence was specifically denied. The second count alleges the contributory negligence of the plaintiff and by failure to deny its own negligence in that count, thereby, for the purpose of that count, admitted negligence. The defendant had a right to make inconsistent defenses and did so.

The evidence in the case was conflicting, and would have justified the jury in the conclusion that the car never stopped until it had passed beyond the point where the plaintiff was thrown to the pavement; that the car stopped at the point where plaintiff was thrown to the pavement, and suddenly started with a jerk, thereby causing her fall; that the plaintiff heedlessly attempted to alight while the car was moving with considerable speed and fell, either because she heedlessly walked off the car backward, or fell off while attempting to alight, or was thrown off by a sudden jerk or lurch of the car while she was on its steps, attempting to alight, or while standing on the platform, either holding on with both hands, as she testified, or while standing without holding on; that at the time of the accident the conductor was forward in the car; or that at the time of the injury he was seated, engaged in conversation with a lady passenger.

[3] The car was a "pay-as-you-enter" car and the usual station of the conductor in such a car is at the rear entrance, where passengers enter the car and from which some of them make their exit, others going to the forward exit. In this state of the evidence the court gave the following instruction:

"You are further instructed that if you find from the facts in this case that the conductor was not attending to his duties, in this, that he had knowledge that this plaintiff was about to alight, and that said place was a dangerous place, in this, that the car was traveling at a fast rate of speed, and would necessarily give a lurch or jerk upon reaching Fremont street, then and in this case I charge you that the acts of the conductor, consisting in his failure to be at his post, constitutes negligence on the part of this defendant, and in that case, if you so find, you are instructed to bring in a verdict for this plaintiff."

Appellant contends that this instruction should not have been given, for the reason that there is no issue in the case as to negligence arising from the position of the conductor; that it instructs the jury upon a question of fact; and that it is prejudicially erroneous because it fails to take into account the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff and also the fact that the negligence of the conductor, if any, must be the proximate cause of the injury in order to justify recovery based upon such negligence. Each of the points is well taken. The instruction advances the proposition that—

If the conductor knew that the plaintiff was about to alight, and that the alighting place was dangerous because the car was traveling at a fast rate of speed and would necessarily give a lurch upon reaching Fremont street, and was not in his place, "then and in this case I charge you that the acts of the conductor * * * constitutes negligence, * * * and in that case, if you so find, you are instructed to bring in a verdict for this plaintiff."

The instruction thus assumes as a matter of law that it is the duty of the conductor under such circumstances to be at a certain place at the rear end of the car. This is purely a question of fact. The place of duty of the conductor depended upon the terms of his employment, while the duty of the defendant to the plaintiff arose out of the relationship of passenger and carrier. The law fixes no particular place for the performance of the duties of the employees of the carrier, it merely fixes the obligation of the carrier to the passenger. A conductor has various duties to perform. Cary v. L. A. Ry. Co., 157 Cal. 599, 604, 108 Pac. 682, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 764, 21 Ann. Cas. 1329.

It is argued that in the "pay-as-you-enter" car it is the duty of the conductor to be at the rear end of the car and that decisions recognizing the fact that the conductor might be called to other parts of the car, such as Cary v. L. A. Ry. Co., supra, are not applicable for that reason. This contention merely emphasizes the vice of the instruction, for it concedes that, in the old-fashioned car, where the conductor went about the car collecting fares, his position might be at any point in the car where his duties called him, but that in the "pay-as-you-enter" car, he must remain upon the rear platform, and from this it is apparent that the place of duty of a conductor varies with different circumstances; in other words, it is a question of fact and not of law. The instruction is also erroneous because it entirely overlooks the principle that the negligence must be a proximate cause of the injury in order to justify recovery. This is manifest from the fact that the lurch or jerk referred to in the instruction is the necessary lurch or jerk of the car upon reaching Fremont street. According to some of the witnesses, in this case the plaintiff was thrown to the ground 75 feet before reaching Fremont street, and thus the fact that the conductor had reason to anticipate such a jerk at Fremont, if it be a fact, would have nothing whatever to do with the injuries to the plaintiff, if she in fact was thrown from the car before the point indicated was reached, for, in that view of the case, the jerk or lurch that caused the accident was not the one the conductor had reason to anticipate, and hence his conduct could not be the proximate cause of the accident. If we accept the testimony of the plaintiff herself, the instruction has no application to the facts, for the instruction is predicated upon a sudden jerk necessarily resulting from the descent of the hill at a fast speed, while her evidence involves a jerk upon starting from a standstill. If we accept the testimony of her only other witness to the accident, the boy of 10 years, the instruction has no applicability, because the jerk was caused by the increase or decrease of the speed at 10 miles per hour, which the jury could have hardly considered "fast" as the car had been running 20 miles per hour, according to this witness. If we accept the testimony of the defendant's sole witness to the accident, there was no jerk or lurch of the car, and the plaintiff was on the lower step. On any of these theories as to the injury to the plaintiff, we fail to see how it could be said that the position of the conductor was a proximate cause of the injury. According to the plaintiff and her witness, the proximate cause of her fall was a sudden and unexpected jerk of the car, with which the position of the conductor had nothing whatever to do, and the instruction introduced an entirely false quantity. We are not considering, let it be observed, what the duty of the conductor or of the defendant was with relation to a usual and expected lurch or jerk of the car; we are merely illustrating the fact that his position could not be the proximate cause of the injury. If there was negligence in failing to warn the plaintiff of such a usual and anticipated shock as described in the instruction, it was not alleged, or counted upon by plaintiff, and such contention is wholly at variance with her complaint and testimony. The proximate cause of the injury would be the shock or jar in any such an event, and not the position of the conductor. The instruction then is faulty, not only because it permitted the jury to find a verdict upon conduct of the conductor which could not be a proximate cause of the injury, but also because it in effect required them to find a verdict for the plaintiff if she was injured by a jerk or lurch of the car, necessarily incident to its operation over the intersection of First street at fast speed, and if the conductor was not in his place.

[4] The respondent justifies the giving of the instruction for the reason that, while such negligence is not specifically alleged, it is claimed that the complaint alleges negligence in general terms, and that evidence was given as to the whereabouts of the conductor. The complaint, as already stated, counts upon the negligence of the company in suddenly starting the car with a jerk while the plaintiff was alighting. There is no general allegation of negligence, and evidence of the whereabouts of the conductor was introduced by the plaintiff over the defendant's objections. However that may be, the instruction was so erroneous and prejudicial that it should not have been given in any event. Respondent's contention that this instruction was cured because of other instructions on the subject of proximate cause and contributory negligence cannot be maintained. The jury were elsewhere instructed, at defendant's request, that unless the plaintiff proved the negligence of the railroad company, and that such negligence proximately contributed to the injuries sustained, there could be no recovery; that the defendant was not responsible for the negligence of its employees unless it contributed directly or proximately to the injuries of the plaintiff; that, if the plaintiff voluntarily undertook to step from the car while it was in motion and before it reached its usual stopping place, and fell as a direct and proximate result of so attempting to leave the car, plaintiff could not recover.

[5] The difficulty is that when the court specifically instructed the jury that in a certain state of facts they must bring in a verdict for the plaintiff, the jury has the right to assume that the court in that instance is determining as a matter of law that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and that there was no contributory negligence. Furthermore, as already pointed out, the position of the conductor was not in any possible view of facts a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. The rule is that where an instruction directs a verdict for plaintiff if the jury finds certain facts to be true, it must embrace all the things necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant and to warrant the direction or conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict. Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 184, 118 Pac. 700, citing Killelea v. Cal., etc., Co., 140 Cal. 602, 74 Pac. 157.

[6] Appellant assigns as error the giving of instruction No. 4, as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that the defendant Los Angeles Railway Corporation may be justified under certain circumstances in running its cars at a very fast, or the fastest rate of speed, while under other circumstances to run its cars at a high rate of speed might be negligence. If you find in this case that the defendant company operated its car at such a rate of speed while approaching West First and Fremont streets, and that said speed contributed to or was the proximate cause of this accident, then I charge you that your verdict in this case shall be for the plaintiff."

The instruction is ambiguous because it does not appear therefrom what rate of speed was considered by the court in the last sentence of the instruction. The jury were told in the first sentence of the instruction that the defendant might be justified in running its cars at a very fast or the fastest rate of speed and under other circumstances that a high rate of speed might be negligent. Three rates of speed are dealt with in this sentence, "very fast," the "fastest rate," and a "high" rate. The first two might be justified and the last negligent. The instruction is plainly susceptible of the construction that if the defendant's car was approaching Fremont street at justifiable rate of speed, and that such speed contributed to or was the proximate cause of the accident, the verdict should be for the plaintiff, which would be clearly erroneous. Assuming, however, that the speed referred to in the last sentence is the high rate of speed which "might be negligence," the concluding clause of the sentence should be interpreted as follows:

"If you find in this case that the defendant company operated its car at such a rate of speed (as might be negligent) while approaching West First street and Fremont street, and said speed contributed to or was the proximate cause of the accident, then I charge you that your verdict in this case shall be for the plaintiff."

This instruction is still erroneous for several reasons. In the first place, it allows the jury to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff if the rate of speed "might be negligent." In order that the plaintiff should recover because of the speed alone, it is essential that the speed should have been negligent under the circumstances. Furthermore, the complaint does not count upon a high and excessive rate of speed as a basis of recovery. On the contrary, it counts on the shock due to a sudden starting of the car. A more serious objection to the instruction, if possible, is the fact that the jury were instructed that if the speed contributed to or was the proximate cause of the accident, their verdict should be for the plaintiff. The court may have intended to have used the words "contributed to" and "proximately caused" as synonymous. But, as pointed out by the appellant, a certain amount of lurching and jerking of a car may be attendant upon the speed at which it is usually operated, and such lurching and jerking is to be anticipated by the passenger. Under this instruction, the defendant would be liable even though the lurching and jerking of the car was usual upon the customary motion of the car. The instruction also ignores the question of contributory negligence by the plaintiff justifying a verdict if defendant's conduct contributed to the accident. The jury is specifically instructed that if the high rate of speed of the defendant might have been negligence and contributed to her injuries she was entitled to a verdict. The instruction was erroneous.

[7] It is true, as respondent points out, that the instructions are to be construed together, but where the instructions are flatly contradictory, as is the case where the jury is instructed upon a specific state of facts to bring in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff or defendant and is elsewhere instructed in general terms not to do so, the instructions must be held to be conflicting and prejudicial, because it cannot be ascertained upon what theory the verdict was returned. The theory of the plaintiff and defendant were diametrically opposed, and the evidence, as well as the instructions, was sharply conflicting. Under this condition it cannot be said that there is no miscarriage of justice when it cannot be ascertained from the record upon what theory the jury was authorized by the instructions of the court to render its verdict, or upon what state of facts shown in evidence the verdict was reached.

Because of the foregoing erroneous instructions, it will be necessary to reverse the case, and in view of a new trial it is proper to pass upon some of the other questions presented by the record.

The appellant complains of the refusal to give certain instructions offered on its behalf, one to the effect that if the conductor was seated in the rear open section of the car it was not negligence on his part and could not be made a basis of a verdict against the defendant. Another, that if the conductor was not in his usual position, but was seated and talking to a lady, it could not be considered as negligence, and could not be considered except in determining how the accident occurred. In view of the discussion of the subject herein, it is sufficient to say that the refusal of these instructions emphasizes the error in instruction No. 3.

Instruction C, asked by the defendant, was a correct exposition of the doctrine of proximate cause as applied to the seating of the conductor and the accident; it also pointed out that the plaintiff must be free from contributory negligence in order to recover. Respondent points out no error in this instruction and we observe none. It is, however, unnecessary to say more than that this refusal emphasizes the error in giving instruction No. 3, in which these two elements of proximate cause and contributory negligence are omitted. The court did not specifically point out the necessary connection between the misconduct of the conductor and the accident, when requested to do so by the defendant, and it is not likely that the jury would have been more able or willing to do so, under a very general direction as to the necessary causal connection between the accident and the conduct of the conductor.

[8] Evidence as to the previous conduct and habit of the conductor as to sitting down and talking to passengers was improperly received, not only because of the fact that the matter was not in issue, but also because of the fact that his habit was not competent (Langford v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 729, 732, 733, 164 Pac. 398; Steinberger v. Cal. Elec., etc., Co., 176 Cal. 386, 168 Pac. 570) to establish the condition at the time of the accident. We need not here consider the effect of the exception to this general rule considered in Wallis v. S. P. R. R. Co., 195 Pac. 408, where circumstantial evidence only is relied upon, and there are no eyewitnesses.

[9] On cross-examination, the boy, Jefferson Owens, having testified on direct examination that the conductor was seated talking with a woman passenger at the time of the accident, was asked concerning his statement in writing theretofore made to the defendant's representative. The question and answer in the statement are as follows:

"Where was the conductor at the time of the accident? Answer: When the lady fell he ran to the door."

After his attention was called thereto, he was asked:

"Why didn't you say there that you saw him sitting talking to her?"

The objection offered and sustained was as follows:

"That is objected to as asking this witness, a youth of tender years, for a conclusion that a grown person could not make."

Cross-examination as to conflicting statements is one of the most important rights of the adverse party. If it was true that the boy could not explain or understand the question, he should have been permitted to say so in response to the question, and thus the jury could weigh and consider his degree of intelligence.

Judgment reversed.

CAPUTO v. FUSCO. (Civ. 3883.)

1. Husband and wife ⇨270(7)—Presumption that note to wife was separate property rebutted by allegation that it was community property.

From the pleaded fact in complaint, in action by husband on note, that the note was executed to the wife of plaintiff, merely a disputable presumption arose that it was her separate property, and a further allegation that it was in fact community property rebutted the presumption and rendered the complaint immune from attack on the general ground of want of facts to state a cause of action.

2. Husband and wife ⇨270(1)—Wife not proper party plaintiff in action to recover community property.

Wife was not proper party plaintiff in an action on a note executed to her in return for money loaned from community property, and action was properly brought by husband alone.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Giovanni Caputo against F. S. Fusco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carl A. Day, and Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Hoefler, Cook & Snyder, and William E. Billings, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff in his own name brought an ordinary action to recover upon a promissory note made, executed, and delivered to his wife, Elisa Caputo, by the defendant, in the sum of $1,500. It was alleged that the money so loaned to the defendant was the community property of the plaintiff and his said wife, and that the promissory note and the money due thereon was community property. Defendant filed no demurrer to the complaint. He interposed only a general denial by way of answer, and made no further appearance. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiff as prayed for.

[1, 2] Defendant now appeals to this court, and seeks a reversal of the judgment on the sole ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of plaintiff, for the reason that the money having been loaned by Elisa Caputo, and the promissory note being an instrument in writing, the presumption of law is that the money is her separate property. From the pleaded fact, however, that the note was executed to the wife of plaintiff, merely a disputable presumption arose that it was her separate property. Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 346, 55 Pac. 1011; Volquards v.

Myers, 23 Cal. App. 500, 504, 138 Pac. 963. The further allegation that it was in fact community property rebutted the presumption, and rendered the complaint immune from attack on the general ground of want of facts to state a cause of action. Elisa Caputo, the wife, was not a proper party plaintiff in the action to recover the community property. Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 349, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170; In re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 393, 44 Pac. 734.

The appeal appears to have been taken for the purpose of vexation and delay. The judgment is affirmed, and it is ordered that plaintiff recover of the defendant, as part of the costs of appeal, the sum of $100.

SPINDLER v. WITTEMANN CO. (Civ. 3904.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 13, 1921.)

Judgment ⇨256(6)—Findings held not to support judgment.

Where plaintiff claimed that commissions earned amounted to $1,192.50, and that he agreed with defendant to reduction of $365, leaving net balance of $827.50, that defendant paid $285 and that net balance unpaid was sum of $540.42, findings of court that allegations of complaint "are true except that defendant paid to plaintiff on account of said commissions $300 * * * $350 * * * and $150, * * * and not $285, as stated in said complaint, and that there is due and owing plaintiff only the sum of $392.40," would not support a judgment for the latter amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by Charles Spindler against the Wittemann Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Willard P. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles L. Brown, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor for the sum of $392.40 as the balance due for services rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant in the matter of the sale of certain machinery. The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, and the appellant's sole contention is that the findings do not justify the judgment for the sum declared therein to be the balance due, but only for a much smaller sum.

The plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he had performed certain specified services for the defendant, which had resulted in the sale of the machinery in question for the sum of $7,950, upon which sale price the defendant had promised to pay plaintiff a commission of 15 per cent.; that the commission thus earned amounted to $1,192.50; "that plaintiff agreed with the defendant to a deduction of $365 from said commission, leaving the net balance thereon the sum of $827.50; that the defendant has paid this plaintiff on account thereof the sum of $285; and that the net balance of said commission unpaid and due and owing from the defendant to the plaintiff is the sum of $540.42, together with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from December 1, 1918."

There is another cause of action stated in the second count of the complaint, with which we are not concerned upon this appeal, the judgment having been as to that account in the defendant's favor.

The answer of the defendant as to the first count of the complaint, while admitting the sale of the machinery by plaintiff for defendant, denied its promise to pay a commission of 15 per cent. upon the selling price of the machinery so sold or any greater commission than 10 per cent. thereon, all of which it alleges has been fully paid. It makes no reference in its answer to the plaintiff's averment of an agreed reduction in the amount of said commission.

Upon the trial of the cause the court made its findings as to the first count in the plaintiff's complaint as follows:

"That paragraphs I, II, III, and IV of the first cause of action set out in the second amended complaint are true except that defendant paid to plaintiff on account of said commissions $300 on July 31, 1918, $350 on December 16, 1918, and $150 on December 28, 1918, and not $285, as stated in said complaint herein, and that there is due and owing plaintiff only the sum of $392.40, with interest thereon from December 1, 1918."

Judgment was accordingly rendered for the sum of $392.40.

Upon this appeal the appellant contends that upon the face of the foregoing finding it appears that there could only be due to the plaintiff the sum of $27.40. The respondent makes no satisfactory reply to this contention. The plaintiff having alleged an agreed reduction of $365 from the amount of the gross commission which he claimed, and the answer by its silence having admitted this agreement, and the trial court having found that the plaintiff's allegation as to the gross amount of the commission due and as to the said agreed reduction thereof in said sum, leaving a balance of $27.50 due thereon, was true; and having followed this finding with the further finding of three specific payments made by the defendant to the plaintiff, to wit, $300 on July 31, 1918, $350 on December 16, 1918, and $150 on December 28, 1918, said payments aggregating the sum of $800.10, it follows inescapably that there could only have remained due to plaintiff the sum of $27.40, instead of the sum of $392.40, for which judgment was given.

It follows that the judgment must be reversed; and it is so ordered.

MALTER v. NATIONAL FIRE INS. CO.
OF HARTFORD et al. (Civ. 3954.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 12, 1921.)

1. Insurance ☞665(3)—Evidence held to warrant finding of ownership of property under fire policy.

In an action on a fire policy, evidence held to warrant a finding that plaintiff was the sole and unconditional owner of the property specified in the policy.

2. Appeal and error ☞1057(2)—Exclusion of evidence held harmless, if error.

In an action on a fire policy, any error of the court in excluding statement made by plaintiff to assessor concerning ownership of property was not prejudicial, where the statement would not have contradicted in any way the testimony introduced, and plaintiff admitted making such statement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; M. F. McCormick, Judge.

Action by George H. Malter against the National Fire Insurance Company of Hartford and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Miller, Thornton, Miller & Watt and Miller, Thornton & Miller, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Short, Lindsay & Woolley and F. W. Docker, all of Fresno (C. O. Hansen, of Fresno, of counsel), for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This action is to recover from each of the defendants $2,000 on fire insurance policies issued and delivered by them, covering certain personal property and insuring plaintiff against loss by fire. The case was tried by the court, without a jury. Judgment was for the plaintiff against both defendants.

[1] The first ground for appeal urged by the appellants is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of the court. The finding which is particularly attacked is the one wherein the court finds that the plaintiff was, at the time of the insurance and delivery of the policies, and at the time of the fire, the sole and unconditional owner of the property specified in the policies. The testimony of the plaintiff on this point amply supports the finding. There was also other testimony which would raise a presumption of ownership in the plaintiff. The only evidence tending to prove the contrary is the testimony of a deputy tax assessor who testified that the plaintiff had signed a tax return in 1917 in which the wines and brandies and wine-making apparatus covered by the insurance policies and also other property, real and personal, were listed in the names of Pacific Vineyard Company and Mabel P. Malter. Plaintiff admitted signing the tax statement, in which the property was so listed, and explained that his vineyard and wines and manufacturing apparatus had at one time been transferred to the Pacific Vineyard Company merely for convenience; that that he had always been the real owner; that the stock of that company was owned by him, and that he had always paid the taxes on the property, although for a time the record title had been in this company; that it was no longer in the company, and that he had neglected to have the name changed on the assessment list, which list was made out by the assessor from previous records. There was no other testimony tending to disprove plaintiff's ownership in the property. We are of the opinion that the court was clearly justified in finding for the plaintiff on this issue.

[2] The only other objection urged by appellants is that the court erred in excluding the statement made by the plaintiff to the assessor in 1917. Granted, for the purposes of this opinion, that the statement should have been admitted in evidence, nevertheless, its exclusion therefrom does not under the facts of this case, constitute prejudicial error. The record contains the testimony of the tax collector regarding this statement, and also the admissions of the plaintiff that he did make it and his explanation thereof, and these matters were before the trial judge in making his findings. An examination of the statement offered in evidence discloses that it covers certain wines and brandies, which were a part of the property covered by the policies, and also musical instruments, farming utensils, wagons and other vehicles, horses and cows, poultry, sewing machines, automobile and other items. The statement was headed "Pacific Vineyard Co. and Mabel P. Malter." At the bottom of the statement the plaintiff signed the following oath:

"I do swear that I am a resident of the county of Fresno, that the above list contains a full and correct statement of all property subject to taxation, which I, or any firm of which I am a member, * * * owned, claimed, possessed or controlled," etc.

If the statement had been admitted in evidence, it would not have contradicted, in any way, the testimony of Mr. Malter already in the record regarding the assessment of the property. He stated that the vineyard and liquors had for a time been in the name of Pacific Vineyard Company and that he had neglected to have the assessment record changed, but that he had always paid the taxes on this property personally and had paid them for the year covered by this assessment list.

With the other property listed, which was not covered by the policies, we are not concerned, and it is immaterial whether this belonged to Mabel P. Malter or Pacific Vineyard Company or the plaintiff.

The admission in evidence of the assessment list signed by plaintiff would have added nothing to defendants' case; its execution and contents were admitted by the plaintiff and were testified to by the deputy tax collector and these matters were therefore before the court. It was not conclusive as to ownership, and plaintiff contradicted it and explained the reason for the mistake. Under the circumstances, its exclusion even though conceded to be erroneous, would not warrant a reversal of this judgment which is clearly a proper and just one upon the entire record before this court.

The judgment is affirmed.

RIEDER v. HOGAN CO. et al. (Civ. No. 3120.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 12, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1921.)

1. Principal and agent 23(5)—Evidence held to show an ostensible agency.

Evidence that S. had been authorized or permitted to deal with P., the agent of plaintiff, in matters of the same character, and the knowledge of P. that S. held an important position of trust with defendant, supports a finding that there was an ostensible agency, under Civ. Code, § 2300.

2. Appeal and error 931(1)—Findings presumed supported.

The Court of Appeals, in the absence of a showing, is bound to indulge that assumption which leads to a support of contested findings as to ostensible agency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Lester Rieder against the Hogan Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Flint & Mackay, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Oliver O. Clark, Claud B. Andrews, and James Roche, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action for the recovery of the purchase price paid by plaintiff for five automobile lease or sales contracts. Plaintiff had judgment for the amount from defendant the Hogan Company, and that defendant appeals.

[1, 2] The contracts were purchased for respondent by the firm of Porter & Brown, who were his agents in the deal, the negotiations leading up to the sale having been conducted by Porter, a member of the firm. Porter made the purchase from defendant Sears. In fastening liability upon appellant the trial court found that Sears, in making the sale, acted as the ostensible agent of appellant. The result of the appeal depends on the question whether this finding is supported by the evidence, for appellant contends that it is not. At the time of the sale of the contracts Sears had been for some time the manager of an insurance department which was operated by appellant, and Porter knew that he was employed by appellant in that capacity. We must assume, from the very designation given to this position, that Sears occupied a somewhat important place with appellant, and Porter was justified in so regarding him. Laying aside, for the moment, the question of his authority to make sale of the five contracts, appellant held Sears out to the world as a person worthy of trust, for appellant itself had placed him and had retained him in a position of trust. That being so, no more than slight additional evidence would be necessary to justify Porter in assuming that Sears had authority to sell the contract. What additional evidence was there upon which Porter might have relied, as entitling him to assume that Sears had actual authority to sell? At the same time, what evidence is there to which we may look for a support for the finding that Sears was the ostensible agent of appellant in making the sale? Undoubtedly, evidence leading Porter justly to assume the existence in Sears of an actual authority will at the same time warrant our upholding the finding that he was clothed with an ostensible authority. Civ. Code, § 2300. Sears, after having testified concerning the sale of the five contracts to Porter, went on to say, "I had sold other contracts to Porter, acting as manager of the insurance department of the Hogan Company." This statement, especially when taken in connection with Porter's knowledge that Sears held an important position of trust with appellant, appears to us to afford a sufficient support for the finding that there was an ostensible agency. It was evident to the trial court that appellant had authorized, or at least had permitted, Sears to deal with Porter in and about matters which were of the same character with the transaction out of which this litigation arose. Appellant asserts, however, that this evidence is not "binding" upon it for the reason that it "appears from the evidence, and the findings are to the effect, that Sears purchased and sold many contracts without the knowledge of appellant." This language is followed by no reference to any part of the evidence, but attention is directed to one of the findings. It is true that the trial court did find as stated, but it is also true that immediately preceding that finding it was found that Sears had been employed by appellant for about three years at the time of the sale of the five contracts, that during most of that time he had been the manager of appellant's insurance department, and that while acting in that capacity and with the knowledge of appellant he had bought and sold for appellant numerous automobile sales contracts. There is no means pointed out to us whereby we may ascertain whether the earlier deals between Sears and Porter were among those mentioned in the findings as having transpired without the knowledge of appellant, or whether they were among the number designated by the findings as having occurred with appellant's knowledge. We are bound, of course, in such a situation, to indulge the assumption which leads to a support of the contested finding as to ostensible agency; that is, that the earlier sales to Porter were among those declared by the trial court to have been made with the knowledge of appellant. Under these conditions it appears to us that the finding of ostensible agency is supported by the evidence. There are other portions of the evidence which lend additional support to the finding, but it is not necessary to refer to them.

Appellant contends that error was committed by the trial court in several instances in rulings upon objections to the admissibility of evidence. In view of the conclusion we have reached upon the question above discussed, we find it unnecessary to consider the points mentioned, as nearly all of them are connected with that question. If it be granted, which we do not decide, that appellant's claims as to the errors of law are well founded, it still appears to us that none of the alleged errors was prejudicial.

DETELS et al. v. LAWRENCE et al. (Civ. 3956.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 20, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨870(3)—Order transferring cause not reviewable on appeal from order dismissing.

An order transferring a cause from one superior court to another, being an appealable order under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, and no appeal being taken, the nature of the action and the propriety of its transfer are not subject to consideration on appeal from an order of the court to which it was transferred dismissing it for failure to pay transfer fees.

2. Venue ⇨80—Suit subject to dismissal for failure to pay transfer fees within one year.

Code Civ. Proc. § 581b, as to payment of transfer fees within one year after the transfer of a cause, is mandatory, and a suit is properly dismissed for such failure.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by John Detels and others against Mabel Lawrence and others. From an order dismissing the action, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

L. O. Pistolesi, of San Francisco, for appellants.

S. Laz Lansburgh and S. Joseph Theisen, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Marin county dismissing the action on motion of defendants under the provisions of section 581b, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] The action was originally commenced in the city and county of San Francisco, from which county it was transferred to the court in Marin county. The transfer was made upon the motion of the defendants, based upon their residence in the county of Marin. Appellants admit that they did not pay the fees required by section 581b, Code of Civil Procedure, for more than one year after the transfer of the action. Their position upon appeal is that the order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco transferring said action was erroneous, for the reason that the action involves title to real property part of which is situated in the city and county of San Francisco. The complaint also prays for personal judgments against certain defendants, residents of Marin county. However, the nature of the action and the propriety of its transfer are not matters for our consideration upon this appeal. The order transferring the cause was an appealable order. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. No appeal was taken from this order, and the same has become final. The superior court of Marin county acted upon this final determination, and properly dismissed the action under the provision of the Code section above referred to. The provisions of said section are mandatory. Davis v. Superior Court (Sup.) 195 Pac. 390.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

REED v. CORNELL et al. (Civ. 3803.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 8, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 7, 1921.)

1. Accord and satisfaction ⇨25(1)—Must be specially pleaded.

An agreement of accord and satisfaction must be specially pleaded.

2. Pleading ⇨409(4)—Plaintiff waived defendant's failure to plead accord and satisfaction by not objecting to evidence of settlement.

Where plaintiff, in an action to recover possession of a piano, payment for which had not been made as required by defendant's contract with plaintiff's assignor, interposed no objection to, and made no motion to strike out, testimony as to a settlement with such assignor at less than the agreed price, he waived defendant's failure to specially plead an accord and satisfaction.

3. Trial ⇨404(5)—Where court found defendant not indebted for article sold to her, plaintiff could not recover possession, whether full contract price paid or less amount accepted in payment of balance.

In an action to recover possession of a piano, payment for which had not been made as required by defendant's contract with plaintiff's assignor, where the trial court found substantially in the language of the pleadings, which alleged defendant's indebtedness and title to and ownership of the instrument in plaintiff, that nothing was due and unpaid from defendant, and that title was in her, it was immaterial whether defendant paid in full according to the terms of the contract or settled with plaintiff's assignor for a less amount, plaintiff's right of recovery depending on the existence of an indebtedness.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1012(1)—Weakness of evidence for consideration of trial court.

Alleged weakness and lack of convincing force of evidence is primarily for the consideration of the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by W. W. Reed against Ada A. Cornell and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Werner Olschewski and Frederick Olschewski, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Marcus L. Samuels, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff, as assignee, brought this action to recover the possession of a certain piano. He alleged that the defendant had entered into an agreement with the Heine Piano Company, plaintiff's assignor, for the purchase of the instrument; that payment had not been made as required by the contract; that by reason of the violation of the terms of the agreement, plaintiff was entitled to a return of the piano. The defendant denied any indebtedness, and alleged that the piano had been fully paid for, and asserted title in herself. Judgment was entered for the defendant, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

The contract for the sale of the piano provided for an initial payment of $40 upon the signing of the agreement, and monthly payments of $10 each, until the whole amount of $458, the purchase price, together with interest, had been paid. According to the plaintiff's theory the defendant was in arrears $147.63, plus some additional interest, at the time of the trial. The defendant testified that she made payments on the contract until the sum of $185 had been paid. Becoming tired of making installment payments, she asked to be allowed to settle the contract in full. Her proposition was accepted, and she paid the sum of $200 in cash, and received a receipt for full payment of the contract. This receipt she subsequently lost when moving from one house to another. The account books of the Heine Piano Company showed the payments testified to by the defendant, and what purported to be a subsequent additional payment of $50, made in the form of a Liberty Bond. This item was repudiated by the defendant as not having been made.

[1, 2] Appellant's major contention relates to the proof adduced in support of the defendant's case. He first contends that the evidence does not prove payment in full of the contract, but an accord and satisfaction, which, not having been specially pleaded, could not operate as a defense to the action.

The well-settled rules of pleading in this state require an agreement of accord and satisfaction to be specially pleaded, before it can be availed of as a defense, but the appellant is not in position to urge the point for the first time in this court on appeal from the judgment. The record discloses that he interposed no objection to the evidence introduced on the part of the defendant as to the real nature of the settlement with the Heine Piano Company, and made no motion to strike out the testimony when apprised of its purport and effect. So far, therefore, as relates to the introduction of the testimony, the appellant must be held to have waived any advantage he might have gained if the timely objection had been made.

[3] The appellant raises the same objection in another way. He attacks the findings as not being supported by the evidence, his point being that only an accord and satisfaction was proved, and not that the piano was "fully paid for," as found by the trial court. Thus stated, the contention is correct, but the court found other facts. The appellant based his right to recover the piano upon an alleged indebtedness of the defendant, and title to, and ownership of the instrument in himself, all of which was denied by the defendant. The trial court found substantially in the language of the pleadings, as the ultimate facts, that nothing was due and unpaid from the defendant, and that title to the piano was in her. These facts were amply sufficient to warrant its conclusion that the defendant was the lawful owner and holder of the piano, and entitled to its possession. Whether the defendant paid in full for the piano according to the terms of the contract, or settled with the Heine Piano Company for a less amount than it would have been entitled to under that agreement, and received a receipt and discharge in full, does not matter. The ultimate fact was the indebtedness, if any, due from the defendant to the plaintiff upon the existence of which depended the right of the plaintiff to recover. This was determined and found not to exist, upon the evidence submitted to the court. Jacobs v. Ludemann, 137 Cal. 176, 182, 69 Pac. 965; Tower v. Wilson, 188 Pac. 87. The appellant was content to submit the matter upon evidence received without any objection on his part, and under the circumstances we must hold that the findings properly concluded the whole controversy.

[4] Appellant urges upon our attention the alleged weakness and lack of convincing force of the evidence for the defendant, but that was a matter primarily for the consideration of the trial court. We find no abuse of its power in that regard.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. VITRO. (Cr. 558.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 12, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1921.)

1. Seduction ☞45—Evidence held to show previous chaste character.

In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage of an unmarried female of previous chaste character, held that there was evidence tending to show previous chaste character.

2. Seduction ☞40—Evidence of subsequent acts admissible.

In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage of an unmarried female of previous chaste character, court properly permitted the prosecution to prove that defendant indulged in frequent acts of sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix after the commission of the act charged, and that she gave birth to a child.

3. Seduction ☞50(4)—Court did not err in modifying requested instruction.

In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage of an unmarried female of previous chaste character, where defendant requested the court to instruct that: "Illicit intercourse, permitted by a woman as a mere barter and trade for a promise of marriage, is not seduction. There must be the exercise of certain influence on her affections by reason of the promise. If, in order to obtain an agreement from the defendant, the prosecuting witness permitted him to have sexual intercourse with her, then there is no seduction, and the defendant should be acquitted"—court did not err in modifying the instruction by striking out the last sentence, which stated no rule of law not contained in the part given.

4. Criminal law ☞1160—Denial of new trial for newly discovered evidence contradicted by affidavit conclusive.

In a prosecution for seduction, where only evidence as to previous chastity was testimony of prosecutrix, and on motion for new trial defendant produced affidavit of third person that he had intercourse with prosecutrix prior to time of act charged, and affidavit of prosecutrix was introduced in denial, it was for the trial court to determine whether prosecutrix or the third person told the truth, and its determination, denying new trial, is conclusive on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Antone Vitro was convicted of seduction under promise of marriage, and appeals. Affirmed.

L. J. Maddux, of Modesto, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of seduction, under promise of marriage, of an unmarried female of previous chaste character, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] It is claimed that the evidence does not show that the prosecutrix was of previous chaste character. The prosecutrix gave her testimony through an interpreter and counsel, and the interpreter at times fell into the bad practice of putting questions and answers in the third person. The prosecutrix testified, "I had sexual intercourse with the defendant," stating the time and place, and that it was her first act of sexual intercourse with him. Thereafter the following testimony was given by her:

"Q. Why did she permit the defendant to have sexual intercourse with her during January, 1919?

"Mr. Maddux: '18.

"Q. 1918. A. Promised to marry her.

"Q. Had you ever had intercourse with any other person before that time? A. No, sir."

It is logically argued that the word "intercourse" does not necessarily mean "sexual intercourse," but, following as it does immediately after the use of the term "sexual intercourse" in the preceding question, there can be no doubt that the witness understood that "sexual intercourse" was meant.

[2] The court permitted the prosecution to prove, over the objection of the defendant, that he indulged in frequent acts of sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix after the commission of the act charged and up to February, 1920, and that she gave birth to a child October 8, 1920. It has so often been held that such evidence is admissible in the trial of a defendant on a charge of illicit sexual intercourse that citation of authorities would be superfluous.

[3] The defendant requested the court to give the following instruction:

"Illicit intercourse, permitted by a woman as a mere barter and trade for a promise of marriage, is not seduction. There must be the exercise of certain influence on her affections by reason of the promise. (If in order to obtain an agreement from the defendant, the prosecuting witness permitted him to have sexual intercourse with her, then there is no seduction, and the defendant should be acquitted.)"

The court modified the proposed instruction by striking out the part inclosed in parentheses, and gave it as so modified. The part stricken out states no rule of law not contained in the part given, and hence the modification was not error.

[4] On his motion for a new trial the defendant produced the affidavit of one Emanuel Teixeira to the effect that the affiant had sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness in September, 1917, a few months prior to the time of the act charged by the information. In opposition to the motion the affidavit of the prosecutrix was introduced in which she denied that she ever had sexual intercourse with Teixeira. The affidavits of defendant and his attorneys were introduced, stating that they had made diligent effort to obtain the facts in connection with the case, and that neither of them had learned of the facts stated in the affidavit of Teixeira until after the trial. The only evidence admitted at the trial on the issue of the previous chaste character of the prosecuting witness was her own testimony that she had never had intercourse with any other person prior to the act charged. It is thus apparent that the testimony of Teixeira, if worthy of belief, would be of vital importance in a retrial of the case.

But "a motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence has always been regarded by the courts with a great deal of suspicion and disfavor." People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 366, 28 Pac. 264.

"The question as to the effect upon the case of newly discovered evidence is from its nature peculiarly one that is addressed to the discretion of the trial court." People v. Oxnam, 170 Cal. 215, 149 Pac. 167.

"It is well settled in this and many other states that not only may the facts of diligence and materiality be inquired into, but the truth of the evidence itself, or the truth of the facts as alleged, as well as the weight thereof and the credibility of the witnesses, may be contested by counter affidavits." Haynes' New Trial and Appeal (Rev. Ed.) p. 442.

"Upon the ground of newly discovered evidence it is sufficient to say that the affidavits offered in support thereof were fully contradicted by counter affidavits on the part of the prosecution, and for that reason the court below exercised a proper discretion in refusing to grant the motion." People v. Fice, 97 Cal. 460, 32 Pac. 532, People v. Sing Yow, 145 Cal. 6, 78 Pac. 235.

In the case of People v. Byrne, 160 Cal. 225, 116 Pac. 525, the court said:

"While a mere reading of the record in this case necessarily leaves one in grave doubt on the question of the defendant's guilt, there is certainly enough in the evidence to sustain the conclusion of the jury and trial judge who saw and heard the various witnesses, and who were in a much better position to determine the truth than a court that does not possess such an advantage. An apparently very strong showing was made for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, but in the light of the well-settled rules applicable in the consideration of appeals from orders of trial courts denying such motions, we do not see how it can properly be held that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion."

It was for the trial court to determine whether the prosecutrix or Teixeira told the truth relative to the facts stated in the latter's affidavit, and under the foregoing authorities that determination is conclusive on appeal.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. BACH et al. (Civ. 3645.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California, Sept. 14, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 673(3)—In view of record judgment held not shown to be res judicata.

It cannot be held on appeal that action of court in sustaining a demurrer to plaintiffs' second amended complaint in a former action was an adjudication of subject of litigation and a bar, where neither the second amended complaint in the former action nor the demurrer thereto is set forth in the record.

2. Money received $\S$ 14—Defendants held not jointly liable.

Where liability of defendants was not founded on contract upon which they were jointly liable, but upon an implied obligation of each for money had and received without consideration, one of the defendants was not liable for money received by the other.

3. Contracts $\S$ 139—Illegality of contract held not to prevent recovery of money paid by one not in pari delicto.

Where contract, pursuant to which money was paid by plaintiffs, was for the purchase of lots referred to as delineated upon an unrecorded map, and hence null and void, as declared by St. 1907, p. 290, plaintiffs are not estopped from maintaining an action for money had and received to recover the sum so paid by reason of their having had knowledge that the map was unrecorded; plaintiffs being comparatively innocent, and not in pari delicto.

4. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 334(1)—Money paid on void contract recovered.

Where money was paid for lots referred to as delineated upon an unrecorded map, and the contract was null and void as declared by St. 1907, p. 290, no obligation was imposed upon defendants to convey the lots to plaintiffs, and hence money paid thereon was paid without consideration, and could be recovered as for money had and received.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Clara L. Smith and others against George J. Bach and John Borgh. From judgment in favor of Bach but against Borgh, the latter appeals. Affirmed.

Clifford C. Pease, of San Diego, for appellant.

SHAW, J. Action in assumpsit. Upon a trial of the case first had, a nonsuit was granted, followed by judgment against plaintiffs, which on appeal therefrom was reversed, to which decision (reported in [Sup.] 191 Pac. 14), we refer for a full statement of the facts upon which the action is founded.

Upon a retrial, judgment was rendered in favor of defendant Bach and for plaintiffs against Borgh, but for a less sum than the amount claimed by plaintiffs. Thereupon plaintiffs, insisting they were entitled to judgment against both defendants for the full sum of their claims, appealed. This judgment was affirmed. See 199 Pac. 1106.

[1] Borgh has likewise appealed from the judgment so rendered against him. Based upon the record presented, there is no merit in his contention that, by reason of the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer to plaintiffs' second amended complaint in a former action, an adjudication of the subject of litigation was had which constituted a bar to the bringing of a new suit to recover the amount claimed. Neither the second amended complaint in the former action nor the demurrer thereto is set forth in the record, without which we cannot say the subject of the litigation in the former action is the same as in this, nor that the complaints are identical. No attack is made upon the sufficiency of the complaint in the present action. Moreover, assuming the action of the court had and taken in the former suit to have been free from error, it may have been based upon defects in the complaint not affecting the merits; hence such ruling could not bar a new suit founded upon a complaint the sufficiency of which is conceded.

[2] As held in plaintiffs' appeal (reported in 199 Pac. 1106), the liability of defendants was not founded on contract upon which they were jointly liable, but upon an implied obligation of each for money had and received without consideration. Hence, in the absence of a joint liability, Bach was not liable for the money received by Borgh.

[3] The contract pursuant to which the money was paid by plaintiffs was for the purchase of certain lots referred to as delineated upon an unrecorded map, and hence, as declared by statute (see Stats. 1907, p. 290), it was null and void. Nevertheless, appellant insists that, as plaintiffs must be deemed to have had knowledge that the map was unrecorded prior to making the payments, they are estopped from maintaining an action to recover the sum so paid. In other words, appellant's claim is that parties by their acts may destroy and render nugatory the plain language of this prohibitory provision. The contention is wholly without merit. As said by the Supreme Court in discussing the question on the former appeal by plaintiffs (Smith v. Bach [Sup.] 191 Pac. 14):

"Where money has been paid in consideration of an executory contract which is illegal, the party who has paid it may repudiate the agreement at any time before it is executed and reclaim the money."

And in answer to appellant's claim that, conceding his violation of the statute (which act is declared a misdemeanor and punishable by fine and imprisonment), plaintiffs are in pari delicto, and hence should not assert claim to the money so paid, the court said:

"In such a case it is the duty of the court in furtherance of justice to aid one not in pari delicto, though to some extent involved in the illegality, but who, as here, is comparatively the more innocent, and to permit him to recover back money paid on a contract as the circumstances of the case may require."

What is said in the decisions on the former appeals herein cited is determinative of other points made by appellant.

[4] Since the contract was null and void, it imposed no obligation upon defendants to convey the lots of land to plaintiffs; hence the money paid thereon was without consideration, and their right to recover from each of the defendants the amount paid by him, except as barred by the statute of limitations, would seem clear.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by the Calexico Lumber Company against Springer Emerson and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

H. E. Gleason, of El Centro, for appellants.

Ault & Anderson, of Calexico, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action of conversion. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appeal.

The first point made by appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to support the court's finding of conversion. The property involved in the action consisted of 556 bundles of laths, and the parties had already had a contest over the same property in an action of replevin. In that action, which, for convenience, will be referred to henceforth as the replevin action, the defendants in this action, appellants also, were plaintiffs, and vice versa. The replevin action resulted peculiarly, in this, that the judgment was that the plaintiffs take nothing, but it did not require a delivery of the laths to the defendant, assuming for the present that at the commencement of the action the plaintiffs took possession of them from the defendant, as, of course, they had the right to do in an action of replevin.

[1] In the present cause the appellants allege in their answer that in the replevin action they, as plaintiffs therein, took the laths into their possession under the appropriate provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondent points to this allegation as one of the steps leading to the finding of conversion, insisting that it is an admission against the interest of appellants. Appellants, in turn, contend that the allegation cannot be so considered. The answer is composed of two separate defenses, the first one, in which the allegation in question is contained, being that respondent is estopped to maintain the present action for the reason that the question of the possession of the laths was litigated, or could have been litigated, in the replevin action. The second defense consists of specific denials of various averments of the complaint. Appellants' contention that the allegation of the taking of the laths in the replevin action, pleaded in the first defense of the answer in this action, cannot be considered as an admission, is based upon the fact that in the second defense of the answer they specifically deny the taking. The denial is, in terms, that—

They, "or either of them, wrongfully or otherwise, took, carried away, converted, and disposed of to their own use, or the use of either of them, or took, carried away, converted, or disposed of to their own use, or the use of either of them, said bundles of laths, or any part thereof."

Appellants say in their brief:

"If respondent relied upon proving a conversion by showing that the appellants took the lath in the former action, * * * it was just as incumbent upon respondent to prove the taking in that action as if the answer contained only the defense consisting of denials, and the affirmative defense was omitted therefrom."

They then cite Billings v. Drew, 52 Cal. 565, and Light v. Stevens, 8 Cal. App. 74, 103 Pac. 361, to the effect that affirmative matter pleaded in one defense in an answer does not operate as a waiver of a denial contained in another defense. This rule is based upon the principle that inconsistent defenses may be pleaded by a defendant, or, to use the language of some of the cases and of the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 441), a defendant may plead as many defenses as he may have. In addition to the cases cited by appellant, we refer to Miller v. Chandler, 59 Cal. 540; Dillon v. Center, 68 Cal. 561, 10 Pac. 176; McDonald v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 101 Cal. 206, 35 Pac. 643; Meyers v. Merillion, 118 Cal. 352, 50 Pac. 662; Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 414, 53 Pac. 935; Butler v. Delafield, 1 Cal. App. 367, 82 Pac. 260.

These additional authorities are mentioned for the reason that the decisions in this state were not formerly in harmony on the question. In Bell v. Brown, 22 Cal. 671, there is a dictum at variance with the principle of the cases just cited, and the language of that case, at least, was applied in Hayes v. Silver Creek, etc., Co., 136 Cal. 238, 68 Pac. 704. Although the dictum in Bell v. Brown is apparently in accord with the rule in many of the other states (note to Seattle National Bank v. Jones, 48 L. R. A. 177, 188, and note to Susznik v. Alger Logging Co., Ann. Cas. 1917C, 704, 712, 713), the language of that case, in so far as it may conflict with the views we express in this opinion, has been directly repudiated by McDonald v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., supra, and Banta v. Siller, supra, and that language is inconsistent, as well, with the cases cited by counsel and with the additional cases cited by us above. Hayes v. Silver Creek, etc., Co., seems to present an instance of inconsistent allegation and denial within the confines of a single defense. There are many cases in this state containing expressions at variance with the dictum in Bell v. Brown, but in which the allegations and denials under consideration appear not to have been of the directly contradictory character which evidenced those advanced in that dictum. Those other cases apparently present allegations and denials inconsistent by implication of law rather than inconsistent in fact; the latter having been the nature of those discussed in Bell v. Brown. In order that the profession may have the history of this interesting question collated in one place, we present a list of the cases referred to: Willson v. Cleaveland, 30 Cal. 192; Siter v. Jewett, 33 Cal. 92; Nudd v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 39; Buhne v. Corbett, 43 Cal. 264; Botto v. Vandament, 67 Cal. 332, 7 Pac. 753; Eaton v. Metz, 5 Cal. Unrep. 59, 4 Pac. 947; Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 308, 46 Pac. 1076; Ball v. Putnam, 123 Cal. 134, 55 Pac. 773; Snipsic Co. v. Smith, 7 Cal. App. 150, 93 Pac. 1035; Shepherd-Teague Co. v. Hermann, 12 Cal. App. 394, 107 Pac. 622; Tustin Packing Co. v. Pac. Coast F. A. Co., 21 Cal. App. 274, 131 Pac. 338; Cass v. Rochester, 174 Cal. 358, 163 Pac. 212; Clovis Fruit Co. v. California Wine Ass'n, 40 Cal. App. 623, 181 Pac. 229; Globe Grain & M. Co. v. Drenth, 41 Cal. App. 604, 183 Pac. 285; Newark Trust Co. v. Kriebel, 193 Pac. 962.

It is undoubtedly the settled law in this state that the allegation of a fact in one defense of an answer will not operate to the disadvantage of the party making it, when the allegation is invoked against him on the trial, in the same action, of an issue presented by a denial in a separate defense of the existence of the same fact. Therefore, the affirmative allegation in question here cannot be considered as an admission against the interest of appellants, nor as a support to the finding of conversion.

[2] Respondent sees in the testimony of its president a basis for the finding of conversion. The witness said, on direct examination, that the laths "were delivered to the representative of Mr. Emerson on the order of the sheriff." This statement was but a conclusion, and a motion was immediately made to strike it out on that ground, but the court made no ruling upon the question. If we leave this state of the record out of consideration, however, and ascribe any weight whatever to the statement, an inspection of the remainder of the direct examination and of the cross and redirect examinations demonstrates that it was without foundation. On direct examination the witness testified that the laths were "hauled away and used in the construction of the Emerson building." If we indulge the wholly gratuitous assumption that this building was the property of appellants, we are met by the statement of the witness on cross-examination that he knew only that the person who took the laths away left in the direction of the Emerson building. On that examination he also said that he did not know of his own knowledge that the material was used in the construction of the building; that, so far as he knew, it might have gone into that building and it might not; and that the laths were taken away by a son of appellant Springer Emerson and of the deceased Mary A. Emerson, but that he, the witness, did not know whether or not the son was a deputy or employee of the sheriff, or whether or not he was an agent or representative of his parents. The cross-examination and redirect examination of the witness show that he had no knowledge upon the question whether the taking of the laths had any connection with the replevin action. We are satisfied that the record shows no support for the finding of conversion.

[3] Respondent contends that the bill of exceptions contained in the record cannot be considered because it does not purport to contain all the evidence bearing upon the point made by appellant, and cites Moore v. Tice, 22 Cal. 513. The opinion in that case does contain language indicating that a statement of the case or bill of exceptions must show affirmatively that it contains all the evidence touching questions presented on appeal. It was said, however, in Abbey Homestead Ass'n v. Willard, 48 Cal. 614:

"The moving party is required to set forth so much of the evidence (and no more) as may be necessary to explain the points specified in his statement or bill of exceptions; and when such statement or bill of exceptions is settled, it will be presumed that it contains all the evidence given in the cause, which was necessary to be stated, in order to explain the points specified; and that it would not have presented a different case in respect to the specified points, had it contained, also, the omitted evidence. It is desirable that counsel shall consider this point as settled."

This rule has since been followed in many decisions, several of which are noted in Polkinghorn v. Riverside P. C. Co., 24 Cal. App. 615, 142 Pac. 140.

[4] Relying on the rule that a demand for the return of converted property is necessary where the conversion results after possession has been rightfully acquired, appellants insist for the first time in their reply brief that a reversal of the judgment must result for the reason that there was no such demand in this action. We have not considered this point. A question ordinarily will not be considered by a court of review if it be presented for the first time in a closing brief. Glasspoole v. Pac. Lumber Co., 22 Cal. App. 338, 134 Pac. 349; Camp v. Boyd, 41 Cal. App. 83, 182 Pac. 60.

COOKE v. NEWMARK GRAIN CO.
(Civ. 3535.)(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1. California. Sept. 21, 1921.)1. Frauds, statute of § 116(3, 4)—Action on contract of agents for purchase of barley not to be sustained without evidence of written authority.

Where a contract for the purchase of barley by defendant's agents involved more than $5,000, action thereon could not be sustained where there was no evidence that the agents signing the contract were authorized in writing as required by Civ. Code, § 2309, to make the contract, which, being for the sale of personal property for $200 or more, required a written memorandum under sections 1624 and 1739; no part of the purchase price being paid nor any of the barley accepted.

2. Frauds, statute of § 116(10)—Oral ratification of contract of agent whose authority is required to be in writing held insufficient.

Oral instructions to the buyer's agent for the purchase of barley held insufficient as a ratification of the sales contract signed by the agent, since, under Civ. Code, § 2310, the ratification of the agent's act can only be made in the manner that would have been necessary to confer original authority for the act ratified; section 2309 providing that authority to enter into a contract required to be in writing can only be given by an instrument in writing.

3. Principal and agent § 137(1)—Buyer of barley held not estopped to deny authority of agent signing contract.

In an action by the seller for breach of a contract to purchase barley, that defendant accepted and paid for other shipments from others purchased by the same agents held not to estop him to deny that the agents signing plaintiff's contract were duly authorized to do so; plaintiff having no knowledge of such other transactions at the time of his sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by C. E. Cooke against the Newmark Grain Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. R. Simon, of El Centro, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In this action the plaintiff has recovered a judgment in damages for the breach of an alleged contract for the purchase of a quantity of barley. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

The defendant is sued as an undisclosed principal in relation to a contract whereby the alleged agents in their own name made a written agreement to buy the barley. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that the contract was made by the defendant in this, that the evidence is insufficient to prove that the alleged agents were authorized to make the contract as agents for or on behalf of the defendant. An agreement for the sale of personal property for a price of $200 or more is invalid unless the agreement, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or his agent, unless the buyer accepts or receives part of such goods and chattels or pays at the time some part of the purchase money. Civ. Code. §§ 1624, 1739.

"An oral authorization is sufficient for any purpose, except that an authority to enter into a contract required by law to be in writing can only be given by an instrument in writing." Civ. Code § 2309.

[1] The contract sued on in this case involved a consideration of more than $5,000. The defendant has not accepted or received any of the property alleged to have been sold to him, nor was any part of the purchase price paid. There is no evidence of any written authority given to the alleged agents to make the contract in question. We may assume, without so deciding, that the evidence would be sufficient to sustain the finding if an oral authorization of the agency were legally sufficient for the purpose, although it may be noted that the fact of such oral authorization is warmly disputed by the defendant, which wholly disclaims that it authorized the contract in any manner whatever.

[2] On behalf of respondent it is suggested that the defendant ratified the agency authorization by giving shipping instructions, through an agent named Wolz, for the plaintiff's grain. We have been unable to discover in the record any evidence of such instructions given by Mr. Wolz, other than a telephone message to which Hayward testified, or any evidence that Wolz had authority to give such instructions on behalf of the defendant. The ratification of the agent's act can be made only in the manner that would have been necessary to confer an original authority for the act ratified. Civ. Code, § 2310.

[3] Respondent further suggests that the defendant is estopped to deny that Hayward, Rath & Marshall, who signed the contract with plaintiff, were its duly authorized agents. This claim of estoppel is based upon the fact that the defendant accepted and paid for two other shipments of barley purchased by Hayward, Rath & Marshall at about the same time. It is argued that these three independent purchases from separate and independent sellers were all made under one authorization, and that the defendant cannot be permitted to accept the benefits from such agency authorization in two instances and reject the third. Whatever might be said in favor of this contention if this were an action between the agents and their alleged principal, it can have no application for the purpose of raising an estoppel in favor of respondent. It does not appear that at the time when he sold his barley respondent had any information whatever concerning said other transactions, or relied upon them as constituting any matter of inducement to him in making the sale. As to those other transactions, the plaintiff is a third person who knew nothing of the conduct of the defendant and placed no reliance thereon.

The judgment is reversed.

In re BEFFA'S ESTATE.

DOTTA v. ROCCHI.

(Civ. 2324.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 9, 1921.)

1. Wills ⚡69—"Will" is disposition of property to take effect at testator's death.

A "will" is a disposition of property to take effect at testator's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Will.]

2. Wills ⚡87—Court in determining nature of instrument will give effect to testator's intention.

In determining whether an instrument was intended to be testamentary, its language will be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, and, if such intention appears, the court will give effect thereto if it can be done consistently with the language, regardless of the particular form of the instrument; the true test being, not testator's realization that it is a will, but his intention to create a revocable disposition of his property to accrue and take effect only on his death and passing no present interest.

3. Assignments ⚡31—"Assignment" defined.

An "assignment" is a transfer or setting over of property or some right or interest therein from one person to another, and includes transfers of all kinds of property, but is ordinarily limited to transfers of choses in action and to rights in or connected with property, as distinguished from the particular item of property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assignment.]

4. Wills ⚡88(1)—Whether instrument as signing and transferring decedent's property was deed or will determined from surrounding circumstances, maker's intention not being conclusively shown by language.

Whether an instrument assigning and transferring all of deceased's property is a deed or will must be determined in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, the words "assign" and "transfer," while sufficient to convey property by deed or will, not being the usual operative words of either, so that the language does not show conclusively whether deceased intended the instrument as a will or as a conveyance of a present interest.

5. Wills ⚡88(4)—Undelivered instrument placed by maker where beneficiary would find it after his death held will.

Where a decedent, who committed suicide, executed an instrument disposing of his property, after having determined to take his life, and did not deliver it, but placed it where it would come into the beneficiary's possession after his death, the inference was justified that he intended it as a will rather than a deed; he being presumed to have known the law that without delivery the instrument would be ineffective as a deed, but effective as a will.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Application by Teodora Rocchi for the probate of the will of Candido Beffa, deceased.

From a judgment for proponent, Pacifica Dotta, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Daly, of Long Beach, and Snyder & Snyder, of San Andreas, for appellant.

Virgil M. Airola, of San Andreas, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This appeal is from a judgment and order admitting the instrument hereinafter set out to probate as the last will of Candido Beffa, deceased.

The appellant is a sister of the deceased and his sole heir at law. Her home is in the state of Missouri and she had not seen her brother for many years prior to his death, though they kept up a correspondence and he occasionally sent her money. The deceased was a native of Switzerland. He came to this country in 1899, at the age of 17 years, and thereafter made his home with his aunt, Mrs. Teodora Rocchi, and her husband until the latter's death; they residing on a farm in Calaveras county. Upon the death of Mr. Rocchi, Beffa and his aunt took up their residence in San Andreas where, in the language of the trial judge, "they practically lived in the relationship of mother and son" until the death of Beffa; she being the housekeeper and he being employed by others for a time and later engaging in business for himself in partnership with one Louis Queirola. Queirola, shortly before Beffa's death, decided to withdraw from the partnership business, and it seems to have been agreed that an effort would be made to sell the same. During the forenoon of April 11, 1920, the partners went over their business affairs with the purpose of ascertaining the extent of their assets and liabilities and were to meet again in the afternoon for the same purpose. Beffa failed to appear in the afternoon and his body was found the next day in the basement of a neighbor's barn. A coroner's jury found that his death was due to a gunshot wound self-inflicted, he having shot himself some time during the afternoon of the 11th.

After his death the instrument admitted to probate as his will was found in the partnership safe, in a sealed envelope, together with other papers belonging to Mrs. Rocchi. The instrument was pinned to the deed of trust referred to therein, and on the face of the envelope was written: "Papers belong to Mrs. Teodora Rocchi." Mrs. Rocchi had no knowledge of the existence of the instrument prior to Beffa's death. It is wholly in the handwriting of the deceased and reads as follows:

"April 10th, 1920.

"I Candido Beffa I sign and trasfer all my right and title of thi Deed of trust to Mrs. Teodora Rocchi is part payment of twenty years House keaping for me I also sign to her my house here in San Andrea my automobile a lot at leas Palmas and all wat will be realize of my share in the stock here in the store.

"Candido Beffa."

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the instrument is not testamentary in character. A will is a disposition of property to take effect at the death of the testator.

"It is well settled in this country and in England: First, that in determining whether the instrument propounded was intended to be testamentary, reference will be had to the surrounding circumstances, and the language will be construed in the light of these circumstances. Second, that if it shall appear under all the circumstances that the instrument was intended to be testamentary, the court will give effect to the intention, if it can be done consistently with the language of the instrument; and in such cases the particular form of the instrument is immaterial." Clarke v. Ransom, 50 Cal. 600.

"A will may be informally drawn, and may consist of one or more papers. No particular words are necessary to show a testamentary intent. It must appear only that the maker intended by it to dispose of property after his death, and parol evidence as to the attending circumstances is admissible." Mitchell v. Donohue, 100 Cal. 207, 34 Pac. 615, 38 Am. St. Rep. 279.

"It is undoubtedly the general rule enunciated by the leading case of Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 231, and oft repeated, that the true test of the character of an instrument is not the testator's realization that it is a will, but his intention to create a revocable disposition of his property to accrue and take effect only upon his death and passing no present interest." Nichols v. Emery, 109 Cal. 329, 41 Pac. 1091, 50 Am. St. Rep. 43.

[3, 4] It is apparent, of course, that by "sign and trasfer" the deceased meant "assign and transfer." They are the words usually employed to convey a present interest in property of the character of the deed of trust to which they are applied in the instrument. The instrument further provides, however:

"I also sign to her by house here in San Andrea my automobile a lot at leas Palmas."

The word "assign" is not the usual operative word to effect a conveyance of property of the character enumerated.

"The words 'transfer and assign' are not the usual operative words of a conveyance of real estate." Sanders v. Ransom, 37 Fla. 457, 20 South. 530.

"An assignment in law is a transfer or setting over of property, or some right or interest therein, from one person to another. * * * The word is sufficiently comprehensive to include transfers of all kinds of property, but ordinarily it is limited in its application to the transfers of those things which are commonly designated choses in action, and to rights in or connected with property as distinguished from the particular item of property itself." 2 R. C. L. 593.

"In its original and technical sense it is held to refer to a transfer of an interest in land only. It is most frequently used, however, to describe the transfer of nonnegotiable choses in action." 5 C. J. 836.

"The term 'assignment' refers to a class of acts by which the right or title to something of value is transferred to another before the object of the transfer has become property in possession. The assignment of such property is considered in law as an authorization to the assignee to reduce it to his possession." Cross v. Sacramento Savings Bank, 66 Cal. 466, 6 Pac. 96.

The deceased had not attended the schools of this country, and the instrument in question shows that he was not familiar with the use of the English language. It is evident that he did not use words in their strict technical sense. While the words "assign" and "transfer" are sufficient to convey property by deed or by will, they are not the usual operative words of either. The language of the instrument in question does not show conclusively whether the deceased intended it as a will or as a conveyance of a present interest and resort must be had to the circumstances under which it was made.

[5] It conclusively appears from the face of the instrument that the deceased intended that the property described therein should go to Mrs. Rocchi. He is presumed to have known the law. Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 344, 55 Pac. 1011. He is presumed to have known that without delivery the instrument would be ineffective as a deed but effective as a will. The court was justified in believing that the instrument was executed by the deceased after he had determined to take his own life. Under such circumstances, the fact that the instrument was not delivered but was placed where it would most certainly come into Mrs. Rocchi's possession after his death justifies the inference that the deceased intended it as a will rather than a deed. "The nondelivery of a writing is a circumstance favoring it as a will." Nichols v. Chandler, 55 Ga. 369. The case of Tozer v. Jackson, 164 Pa. 373, 30 Atl. 400, is similar to the instant case. The will there under consideration was as follows:

"High James Rogers do give to John Jackson, Sr., my property known as 'Pen argyl Hotel' and the land adjoining in Pen argyl, in Northampton county, P. A.

"James Rogers."

The deceased shot himself in his room and, immediately after his death the instrument was found on a trunk in the same room, inclosed in an unsealed envelope indorsed "John Jackson." The court said:

"It is manifest * * * that at the moment of the death of James Rogers the paper was in his possession, and that fact alone conclusively disproves the theory that he intended it to take effect in his lifetime. He had never delivered it. * * * The paper was exposed conspicuously, lying on top of the trunk, where it could readily be seen. * * * These circumstances are only consistent with the theory that, so far as the intention of the deceased was concerned, it was his purpose that the gift of the property should become effective after his death. In truth the undisputed facts entirely exclude any other inference. * * * It is impossible to conceive of a stronger or more convincing act of testamentary purpose and intent. There is of necessity no room for any other inference."

KELLER et al. v. CITY OF OAKLAND et al.
(Civ. 3952.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 7, 1921.)

1. Municipal corporations ⚡658—Public streets belong to the people of the state.

The public streets of a municipality belong to the people of the state.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡657(1, 5)—Legislature may delegate to municipality authority to close streets.

The Legislature has power to vacate public streets, and could delegate that power to the municipality by Act March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70), but its exercise by the municipality is dependent upon the will and subject to the control of the Legislature, and where the mode is prescribed it must be followed, and failure to acquire jurisdiction in prescribed manner cannot be cured by consent of abutting property owners.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡657(3)—Erection of bulkhead in a street from curb to curb for parking purposes not an abandonment of street.

Where plaintiffs claim property in a street from property line to property line, and a bulkhead is erected by the municipality in the street from curb to curb, and the action sought to be taken by the municipality showed the relinquishment of a portion of the street was not permanent, but revocable at will by the city, such act by the municipality was not an abandonment of its street.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡657(3)—Easement in street not extinguished by disuser in less period than provided by Code.

Under Civ. Code, § 811, subd. 4, relating to the extinguishment of servitudes by disuse for five years, the right to use a street was not lost to a municipality by an ordinance of June, 1917, under which a bulkhead was erected from curb to curb, and action commenced to quiet title for abandonment July 14, 1920, is untimely.

5. Easements ⚡29—Revocation of license to another to use easement revives right.

Where the owner of an easement licenses another to do an act which affects the enjoyment of the easement, when the license is revoked, the right to the easement revives.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡657(3)—Ordinance held not to effect abandonment by city of a street.

Oakland city ordinance June 6, 1917, giving property owners a parking license in the street, revocable at will by the city, and the erection in the street of a bulkhead from curb to curb, not being permanent, is not such abandonment of the street that an action would lie by plaintiffs claiming the street on account of abandonment of the city's easement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Mary E. Keller, individually and as administratrix of Estate of Patrick J. Keller, deceased, and others against the City of Oakland and others. Demurrer to complaint sustained, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Ostrander & Carey, of Oakland, for appellants.

H. L. Hagan, T. J. Ledwich, and Earl Warren, all of Oakland, for respondent City of Oakland.

F. L. Arbogast, of Oakland, for other respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment against them, after the demurrers of the defendants to the complaint had been sustained. Plaintiffs declined to amend, and judgment was entered against them. The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs "are the owners-in fee of all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the said city of Oakland, county of Alameda, state of California, lying between the northwestern curb line of that certain public street in said city known as 'Fairmount avenue' and the southeastern line of that certain public street in said city known as 'Piedmont avenue', and between the northeastern and southwestern property lines of what is now known as 'Rio Vista avenue.' " Plaintiffs claim title as the heirs at law of Patrick J. Keller, deceased, and it is alleged that—

"At the time of the death of said Patrick J. Keller, the said piece or parcel of land was subject to an easement over the same as a public street of the city of Oakland."

It is further alleged that on the 6th day of June, 1917, the city council passed and adopted an ordinance of said city numbered 1202 (N. S.) which ordinance is set out in hæc verba in the complaint. It is entitled "An Ordinance setting apart a portion of Rio Vista Avenue for Parking Purposes. * * *" Section 1 of this ordinance provides:

"The portion of Rio Vista avenue lying between the present northeastern and southwestern curb lines thereof and extending from the northwestern curb line of Fairmount avenue to a line distant 695 feet southeasterly from the southeastern line of Piedmont avenue, is hereby set apart for parking purposes, and the abutting property owners, at their own expense, are hereby permitted to plant and maintain said parking portion, subject to the condition that said permit is revocable at the pleasure of this council."

It is further alleged that—

"Pursuant to said petition and ordinance, the said city of Oakland did cause a bulkhead composed of concrete to be constructed from curb to curb upon said Rio Vista avenue."

It is to be observed that the ordinance and the bulkhead have reference only to the property from curb to curb, and plaintiffs are claiming the area of the street from property line to property line. It is not alleged that the plaintiffs are the owners of any property abutting on Rio Vista avenue.

Respondents contend, in support of the orders sustaining the demurrers, that the Legislature has prescribed a certain definite procedure for the closing of a city street, and that a street can be closed and abandoned in no other way, and that the allegations of the complaint indicate that that procedure has not been followed in the present case. The power to close up, in whole or in part, any street, etc., is given to the city council of any municipality by an act approved March 6, 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 70). Appellant contends that the jurisdictional provisions of that act apply only to cases where assessments are required for improvements, etc. No such distinction is made in the act, but, on the contrary, section 6 thereof provides that after the city council has acquired jurisdiction in the manner provided for by the act, "the city council shall order said work to be done, and unless the proposed work is for closing up and it appears that no assessment is necessary shall appoint three commissioners," etc. It appears, therefore, that a distinction between cases where assessments are necessary and those where assessments are not necessary is first made at a point in the procedure when the city council has acquired jurisdiction by the passage of a resolution of intention, the posting of such notice in the manner prescribed, the publication thereof, and such other matters as are prescribed by said act.

[1, 2] It appears therefore that the street could not be closed by the procedure alleged in the complaint. It is settled that the public streets of a municipality belong to the people of the state. Ex parte Daniels, 192 Pac. 442. The Legislature has power to vacate a street in a city and may delegate that power to the municipal authorities of a city, but its exercise by the municipal authorities is dependent upon the will and subject to the control of the Legislature. Polack v. S. F. Orphan Asylum, 48 Cal. 490; McNeil v. City of South Pasadena, 166 Cal. 153, 135 Pac. 32, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138. The rule is general that where power is delegated to municipal bodies, and the mode for the exercise of that power is prescribed, the mode must be followed. As has been repeatedly held, the mode in such cases constitutes the measure of the power. Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 97, 81 Am. Dec. 96; Nicolson Pavement Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699; McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, vol. 3, § 1412. It is true the plaintiffs alleged that the abandonment and closing of said portion of said Rio Vista avenue was with the consent and approval of, and without objection by, the owners of the property abutting thereon. But failure of the city council to acquire jurisdiction in the manner prescribed by the statute cannot be cured by the consent of the abutting property owners. Dehail v. Morford, 95 Cal. 457, 460, 30 Pac. 593.

[3] Appellants argue that if the proceedings alleged in the complaint are insufficient to constitute an abandonment of the street, nevertheless, the erection of a concrete bulkhead from curb to curb of Rio Vista avenue, as alleged in the complaint, is a physical closing of the street, and amounts to an actual abandonment by the city. In the first place, it is apparent that only a part of the street claimed by plaintiffs is closed by this bulkhead, for it is alleged that it extends from curb to curb while the plaintiffs are claiming the land from property line to property line. Furthermore, it is apparent from the action sought to be taken by the city council as evidenced by the ordinance set out in the complaint that the relinquishment of a portion of this street was not a permanent relinquishment, but was made upon the condition that it was to be revocable at will by the city,

[4] Reliance is placed upon the provisions of section 811, Civil Code. Subdivision 4 thereof would be inapplicable, in any event, because the ordinance is alleged to have been passed in June, 1917, and the bulkhead to have been erected in pursuance thereof. The action was commenced January 14, 1920, less than three years later. Under subdivision 4 of section 811 an easement acquired by enjoyment may be extinguished by disuser for a period of five years. Garbarino v. Noce, 181 Cal. 125, 130, 183 Pac. 532, 6 A. L. R. 1433. The only other portion of section 811 which could have any possible application is subdivision 3 thereof, providing for the extinguishment of an easement by the performance of acts by the owner of the servitude, or with his assent, which are incompatible with its nature or exercise. It is said in the case of Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 292, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674, that this is a recognition and statutory declaration of the well-settled rule that if the owner of a dominant estate do acts thereon which permanently prevent his enjoying an easement, the same is extinguished.

[5, 6] When the owner of an easement licenses another to do an act which affects the enjoyment of the easement, when the license is revoked, the right to the easement revives with full vigor. Washburn on Easements and Servitudes (4th Ed.) p. 726. In the present case it is clear that the ordinance pleaded merely gives to the abutting property owners a license to park the street with the express warning to them that the same is revocable at will. The bulkhead was erected in connection with the license granted, and may be removed whenever the license granted to the abutting owners is revoked.

Upon the face of the complaint, then, it appears that the erection of the bulkhead was not a permanent matter. Furthermore, even the temporary relinquishment of the enjoyment of the easement, in favor of the licensee, was not coextensive with the easement, for it appears that a substantial portion of the street which was occupied by the sidewalks is yet open to traffic by the public.

The judgment is affirmed.

BELIEU v. POWER, Sheriff, et al. (Civ. 2320.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 14, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1921.)

1. Homestead §88—Equitable interest of vendee under contract sufficient upon which to file declaration of homestead.

Vendee, having an equitable title under a contract to purchase property, has a sufficient interest to entitle him to file a declaration of homestead.

2. Judgment §780(3)—Lien does not attach to equitable interest of vendee under contract.

A judgment lien does not attach to the equitable interest in real property acquired by a vendee under an ordinary contract to purchase the property, the vendee having paid a portion of the purchase price and entered into possession under Code Civ. Proc. § 671.

3. Judgment §752—Lien matter of statutory regulation.

A judgment lien is wholly a matter of statutory regulation.

4. Judgment §780(3)—Lien held not to attach to land.

Where a judgment was obtained and defendant subsequently acquired equitable interest in real property under a contract to purchase the property, and thereafter, before receiving a deed of conveyance, filed a declaration of homestead, the lien of the judgment never attached, and the land could not be sold under execution after the deed of conveyance was received, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 542, 638.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by W. T. Belieu against Newt Power, as Sheriff, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed. George R. Freeman, of Willows, for appellants.

W. T. Belieu, of Willows, for respondent.

PREWETT, Presiding Justice pro tem. This appeal involves the single question whether a judgment lien attaches to the equitable interest in real property acquired by a vendee under an ordinary contract to purchase the property—the vendee having paid a portion of the purchase price and entered into possession. A statement in chronological order of the facts upon which the controversy depends will aid in its solution. They are:

(a) On March 29, 1916, a money judgment was regularly docketed against the property of the respondent, Belieu.

(b) On December 21, 1918, the respondent entered into a contract with the owner to purchase the real property in question. He at once entered into possession and paid one-half the agreed purchase price.

(c) On April 2, 1919, the respondent filed a declaration of homestead in all respects sufficient in form to effect a valid dedication of the premises as a homestead.

(d) On May 15, 1919, the respondent paid the remaining one-half of the purchase price and received a deed of conveyance in satisfaction of the terms of his contract of purchase.

(e) On October 4, 1919, the appellants caused a writ of execution to be levied upon the property thus dedicated as a homestead and were about to expose it for sale when this action was commenced to restrain them from so doing. The levy was made under the claim that the property became and remained subject to the lien of the judgment of March 29, 1916.

[1] Upon this state of facts, the trial court enjoined the sheriff from proceeding further with the sale, and held, in effect, that although the equitable estate acquired by the respondent coupled with his possession was sufficient to entitle him to dedicate the property as a homestead, it was insufficient to render the property subject to the lien of a judgment. The conclusion of the trial court that such equitable estate was sufficient to sustain the claim of homestead is not open to question. Bell v. Wilson, 172 Cal. 123, 155 Pac. 625, and numerous authorities there cited. The same cases sustain the contention of the respondent that every addition to his title feeds the homestead right. These cases render this contention so clear that an extended examination of the point would be superfluous.

[2-4] The judgment was docketed before, and the homestead declaration was filed after the date of the contract of purchase. It becomes necessary, therefore, to inquire whether the inchoate right acquired by the respondent under his contract of purchase constituted such ownership of real property as rendered it subject to the lien of the judgment. It is clear and is perhaps conceded that property must be "owned" by the judgment debtor before any lien can attach. It is not, by any means, every interest in property to which the lien of a judgment will attach, nor will it, in fact, attach to every species of property. The lien is not even a uniform consequence of the fact that a contract lien upon the property may be protected by the recording laws, as in the case of various classes of personal property; nor that the property may be taken under execution issued upon the judgment, as is seen in the case of personal property of every class. The whole matter is statutory. If it were purely a question of logic, it might be inquired why, if the lien of a chattel mortgage is, under certain conditions, protected by the recording laws the lien of a judgment against the same classes of property should not, in like manner, be protected. Or, if certain inchoate interests in real property may be seized on execution, why they should not be subject to a judgment lien. But a judgment lien is wholly a matter of statutory regulation. In Boggs v. Dunn, 160 Cal. 283, 116 Pac. 743, Angellotti, afterwards Chief Justice, speaking for the court, says: "The lien of a judgment is purely the creature of the statute, no such lien having existed at common law," and in support of the text cites other California cases.

An examination of the authorities discloses a vast difference in the classes of property and interests therein that will support judgment liens, homesteads, and levies under execution. Section 671 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a docketed judgment becomes a lien upon "all the real property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution in the county, owned by him at the time, or which he may afterwards acquire." Property interests of any and every kind, whether real or personal, and every interest therein are subject to seizure under attachment or levy on execution, unless exempt from execution. Sections 542 and 688, Code Civ. Proc. While many classes of property may be taken on execution, only two classes are subject to the lien of a judgment—real property owned by the debtor at the time of docketing and real property that he may afterwards acquire. While any interest in real property, legal or equitable, may be seized and sold under execution, only real property actually owned by the judgment debtor will support a judgment lien. That a mere equitable interest in real property acquired under a contract of purchase and sale is not such ownership as is contemplated by section 671 was clearly decided in the early history of the state. The case of People ex rel. v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 428, was a case identical in all essential respects with the one involved in this appeal. An attempt was made to assert a judgment lien against the interest of a vendee under a contract substantially similar to the one now before the court. The court, in that case, says:

"It is undoubtedly true that the statutory lien of a judgment upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, can attach only upon property in which such debtor has a vested legal interest."

The Irwin Case has been cited a number of times in later decisions, and, if sound, conclusively disposes of the present appeal adversely to the contentions of appellants.

In Riley v. Nance, 97 Cal. 203, 31 Pac. 1126, 32 Pac. 315, the court cited the Irwin Case with approval and made quotations therefrom. Zenda Mining Co. v. Tiffin, 11 Cal. App. 62, 104 Pac. 10, refers to the Irwin Case with approval.

"We have already noted that a docketed judgment cannot 'become a lien' on after acquired property of the judgment debtor until the property is actually acquired by him." Hertweck v. Fearon, 180 Cal. 71, 179 Pac. 190.

"The judgment only becomes a lien upon the real property [owned by] the judgment debtor * * * at the time of the docketing of the judgment, or afterward and before expiration of lien acquired." Wolfe v. Langford, 14 Cal. App. 359, 112 Pac. 203.

In Summerville v. Stockton Co., 142 Cal. 529, 76 Pac. 243, it is held that an estate for years is not such an interest in real property as is subject to a judgment lien. The importance of this authority is appreciated when it is recalled that an estate for years is an interest in real property and is subject to execution.

In Nebraska it is provided by statute that "the lands and tenements of the judgment debtor within the county where the judgment is entered shall be bound for the satisfaction thereof." This is substantially our own statute on the subject. The courts of that state have repeatedly held that a judgment is not a lien upon mere equitable interests in real estate. Flint v. Shaloupka, 72 Neb. 34, 99 N. W. 825, 117 Am. St. Rep. 771; Nessler v. Neher, 18 Neb. 649, 26 N. W. 471; Woolworth v. Parker, 57 Neb. 417, 77 N. W. 1090.

The state of Oregon provides by statute that "all property, including franchises or rights or interests therein," etc., shall be liable to execution. The court in construing this statute in Pogue v. Simon, 47 Or. 6, 81 Pac. 566, 114 Am. St. Rep. 903, 8 Ann. Cas. 474, holds that a judgment is not a lien upon mere equitable interests in real property in that state, and cites a number of cases in support of its conclusions. The court, in discussing the characteristics of an equitable title, says:

"An equitable title is a right or interest in land, which, not having the properties of a legal estate, but merely a right of which courts of equity will take notice, requires the aid of such court to make it available."

In Bourn v. Robinson, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 157, 107 S. W. 874, a Texas case, the court says:

"The term 'real estate' within the statute [making all the real estate of the judgment debtor subject to the lien of a judgment] means a freehold, which is either an estate for life or in fee simple, and not a mere chattel interest in land, nor a simple contract right to perform conditions."

The text-writers sustain the same doctrine. In Pomeroy's Equity (4th Ed.) § 367, we read:

"What is the effect at law of a contract whereby the owner agrees to sell and convey a designated tract of land, but which is not a true conveyance operating as a present transfer of the legal estate and the legal seisin? It is wholly, in every particular, executory and produces no effect upon the respective estates and titles of the parties and creates no interest in nor lien or charge upon the land itself. * * * On the other hand the vendee acquires no interest nor property right whatever; he can maintain no proprietary nor possessory action for its recovery; his right is a mere thing in action to recover compensation in damages for a breach from the vendor, and his duty is a debt—an obligation to pay a stipulated price; on his death, both his right and his duty pass to his personal representatives and not to his heirs. In short, the vendee obtains at law no real property nor interest in real property. The relation between the two contracting parties is wholly personal. No change is made until, by the execution and delivery of the deed, the estate in the land passes to the vendee. * * *

It is quite true that that learned author in section 105 of the same work says:

"The vendee is looked upon and treated as the owner of the land and an equitable estate has vested in him commensurate with that provided for by the contract, whether in fee, for life, or for years," etc.

He announces a similar doctrine in other parts of his work; but in enunciating these principles, he is dealing with the rights of a vendee in courts of equity. It is an established doctrine of equity, disputed by no one, that a court will, for the purpose of administering equitable relief, treat the purchaser under a valid contract of purchase, as the legal owner of the property, but this is far from saying that he is vested with a legal title such as would be recognized at law.

None of the California cases cited by appellants are in point. They rely with much confidence upon the case of Fish v. Fowle, 58 Cal. 373. But that case deals only with the estates or interests in real property that are subject to levy on execution, and we have already noted that the statutes relating to the two matters are quite unlike. Real property "or any interest therein" may be seized on execution, while only real property owned by the judgment debtor at the time is subject to a judgment lien. No more does the case of Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 387, aid the appellants. In that case the court was construing the rights of citizens under the provisions of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which stipulated that the property of the inhabitants of the newly acquired territory should be protected. In this connection, the court held that the word "property" as applied to lands embraces all titles, legal or equitable, perfect or imperfect. While the case is authority in the connection in which it arose, it is not applicable to the case in hand. The case of Martinovich v. Mariscano, 137 Cal. 354, 70 Pac. 459, has no application to equitable estates. In that case the court held that the title which descends to a widow in probate proceedings constitutes ownership in her within the meaning of section 671, supra. No question as to inchoate or equitable titles arose in that case, and none was decided.

The citations from other jurisdictions to which appellants direct our attention are, for the most part, singularly inapt. We find no case among them that sustains their position. The few which, at first glance, might seem to help them, are found on examination to be cases where statutory provisions impose a judgment lien upon equitable interests. In Ohio, for instance, the courts held, since the amendment to section 11,655 of their General Code, that the interest of the vendee under a contract to purchase land is bound by the lien of a judgment; but they have placed their conclusions squarely upon the amendment to said action. First National Bank v. Logue, 89 Ohio St. 288, 106 N. E. 21, L. R. A. 1915B, 340. Prior to the amendment, it had often been held that no such lien existed.

In the state of Georgia, it is held that such lien exists, but in that state it is expressly provided by statute that the judgment "shall bind all the property of the defendant." Stewart v. Berry, 84 Ga. 177, 10 S. E. 601. A similar statute prevails in Iowa; hence the citations from that state are not in point.

Hook v. Northwest Thresher Co., 91 Minn. 482, 98 N. W. 463, is cited by appellants, but it is held in that case that the words "real property" are qualified by the statute which provides that the lien shall cover "all rights thereto and interests therein."

We find no authority inconsistent with the conclusions of our Supreme Court in People ex rel. v. Irwin, supra. That case seems never to have been overruled or doubted, and it must be accepted as a correct exposition of the law upon the subject.

It may be added that we discover no anomaly in the rule which requires different measures of title to support levies on execution, the liens of judgments and homestead dedications. If such anomaly should be found, it may be answered that the Legislature has seen fit so to provide.

The judgment is affirmed.

YOUNG v. COLYEAR et al. (Civ. 3512.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 14, 1921. Rehearing Denied Oct. 8, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1921.)

1. Interpleader § 12—Warehouseman barred by conduct from right to exercise interpleader.

Warehouseman employed by codefendants to store goods of which they claimed to be owners, who at their request sent his employes to plaintiff's residence, where they under codefendants' instructions, removed property in a manner little short of larceny, although innocent of any unlawful intent, was an active participant in the wrongful act, which act would bar him from asserting the right to exercise an interpleader, which is a proceeding of equitable nature.

2. Interpleader § 10—Defendant held to have assumed position inconsistent with that of disinterested stakeholder.

Where warehouseman, at codefendants' request, sent employes to plaintiff's residence, where they took property of the plaintiff in a manner little short of larceny under codefendants' instruction, and, on plaintiff's entering claim therefor, told her she must sue in replevin, and when she brought action in claim and delivery, he joined with the codefendants in denying plaintiff's title and claim to possession of the property, and contested her right thereto, and in a cross-complaint asserted claims arising from his contractual relation with his codefendants consisting of a lien for cartage, storage, and attorney's fees, he cannot contend that his cross-complaint constituted a proceeding in interpleader, under Code Civ. Proc. § 386, but must be deemed a complaint in intervention, under section 387, and he cannot complain of a judgment against him for costs.

3. Warehousemen § 30—No lien on property of third person.

While a warehouseman, as provided by section 27 (St. 1909, p. 437), may by virtue of his lien retain possession of goods deposited by the owner or by one in the lawful possession thereof until the charges for which the lien exists are paid, such right does not apply to property of which the depositor has neither title nor right of possession, and who has obtained the same from a third person with the warehouseman's knowledge in a manner little short of larceny.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Marie J. Young against Curtis C. Colyear, doing business in the name of Colyear's Van & Storage Company, and others. From an adverse judgment, the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Adair, of Los Angeles (Henry E. Carter and W. S. Baird, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Winslow P. Hyatt and Henry O. Wackerbarth, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action in claim and delivery for the recovery of certain household goods and furnishings. Judgment went against all of the defendants, from which defendant Colyear alone appeals.

It appears that defendant Colyear was a warehouseman, who as such was employed by his codefendants to store certain household goods and furnishings of which they claimed to be the owners. Acting at their request, he, on October 25, 1919, sent his employes with a truck to plaintiff's residence during her absence therefrom, at which time they, under instructions from defendants they, under instructions from defendants Young and Appell, who had gained access to the house by unlawfully entering the same through a window and then opening a door, took the goods and chattels from plaintiff's dwelling to Colyear's warehouse, where they were, without the issuance of a receipt therefor, deposited in the name of Young and Appell. Immediately upon learning of the removal of the goods, and on the same day that they were taken, plaintiff went to Colyear and demanded a return thereof, and, in consideration of his delivering the goods, offered to give him an indemnifying bond. He refused to surrender the goods, stating that she would have to bring an action in replevin to obtain them. Thereupon, and after notice in writing served upon him that the property had been "burglariously taken from her residence," she instituted this action, wherein Young and Appell are made codefendants with Colyear. After Young and Appell had answered, denying all the material allegations of the complaint, defendant Colyear filed an answer likewise denying that plaintiff was entitled to possession of the property, and with it a cross-complaint wherein he alleged that both plaintiff and his codefendants claimed the property, upon which as warehouseman he asserted a lien for cartage, storage, and attorney's fees of $250 incurred in the action, offering to surrender the property to such person as the court might designate, subject to the payment to him of said alleged lien, and asked that his codefendants and plaintiff be required to interplead as to their respective rights in the property so alleged to be subordinate to his claims.

The court, upon ample, though conflicting, evidence, found that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to immediate possession of the larger part of the property, the value of which was fixed at $370, for which, with costs, judgment was given to plaintiff, and from which Colyear has appealed.

[1] The taking of plaintiff's property from her residence was little short of larceny thereof, and while Colyear, under the circumstances, should be deemed innocent of any unlawful intent, nevertheless he was, with notice of plaintiff's claim at the time of the taking, given by his agents and employees, an active participant in the wrongful act, which fact alone, since the proceeding of interpleader is of an equitable nature, should bar him from asserting a right to the exercise thereof. First National Bank v. Bininger, 26 N. J. Eq. 345; North Pac. Lumber Co. v. Lang, 28 Or. 246, 42 Pac. 799, 52 Am. St. Rep. 780;

[2, 3] However this may be, we are clearly of the opinion that the cross-complaint filed with the answer, and not before, as provided by the statute, and without application for defendant Colyear's discharge as a party and in the absence of a tender, free from his asserted claims arising from the contractual relation with his codefendants, cannot be construed as a proceeding in interpleader under section 386, Code of Civil Procedure, but must be deemed a complaint in intervention (section 387, Code Civ. Proc.), wherein it appears that upon the institution of the action, instead of disclaiming any interest by lien or otherwise in the property and delivering the same subject to the order of the court, and, before answer filed, asking, upon affidavit as provided by said section 386, to be discharged as defendant, he joined with his codefendants in denying plaintiff's title and claim to possession of the property or any part thereof, and at the trial contested her right thereto, and now on appeal strenuously attacks the findings made adversely to his codefendants, Young and Appell, upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the same. Such a position is wholly inconsistent with that of a disinterested stakeholder, which he claims to be. As cross-complainant in the action, his position, as appears from his pleading and arguments made, is that of a party litigant, wherein he not only resists the claims of the plaintiff but asserts the right to affirmative relief against her, the sole basis for which is his wrongful act. His claim of lien, in so far as valid, must be measured by the contract with his codefendants, against whom he had judgment. Having refused, upon plaintiff's tender of an indemnifying bond, to surrender the property upon demand therefor, and joined with his codefendants in an effort to sustain their right to possession thereof, upon the success of which his right depended, he is in no position to complain because of the fact that the court, in awarding possession of the property to plaintiff, adjudged that she recover from him and his codefendants her costs laid out and expended in pursuit of her property. While a warehouseman, as provided by section 27 of the act (St. 1909, p. 437) may, by virtue of his lien, retain possession of goods deposited by the owner, or by one in the lawful possession thereof, until the charges for which the lien exists are paid, such right does not apply to property of which, as in the instant case, the depositor has neither title nor right of possession. As against the true owner, the keeper of a garage could have no lien for storage upon an automobile left with him by one who had stolen it.

The appeal is not only without merit, but, in view of appellant's active participation in the unlawful entry and taking of the property from plaintiff's house, it would be impossible to conceive of a principle so unjust as to entitle him to a lien thereon for the costs and attorney's fees incurred by him in resisting her lawful claim to the possession of the property, particularly so when she offerred to give him a bond indemnifying him against any loss from so doing.

The judgment is affirmed.

BUTLER v. SCHOLEFIELD, Supervisor in and for Sacramento County.
(Civ. 2362.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 14, 1921.)

1. Counties 67 — Supervisor prejudiced against employee may sit in judgment and hear charges.

Strictly speaking, board of supervisors of county, when engaged in the prosecution or investigation of charges of misfeasance, nonfeasance, malfeasance, or other dereliction of duty of an employee or officer appointed by such board, exercises functions which are merely administrative, and a member thereof who has filed the charges for removal of the employee may sit in judgment on the latter.

2. Counties 67—Board of supervisors sole tribunal for trying charges against county engineer.

It is clear from St. 1919, p. 1290, authorizing the appointment of county engineer by the boards of supervisors of counties, that the Legislature intended, in a case where the engineer appointed is charged with dereliction of his duties as such, to constitute the board of supervisors itself the sole tribunal by which such charge or charges should be heard and determined, though they cannot arbitrarily discharge him, and it is not necessary to resort to Pen. Code, § 758, or section 772.

3. Counties 67—Municipal corporations 159(4)—Tribunals for trying officers or employee not subject to rules appertaining to judicial tribunals.

Trials of charges against an officer or employee of a municipality or county are not controlled by or subject to the rules that appertain to judicial tribunals, where the Legislature has expressly given the governing body of the municipality or the county the exclusive cognizance or jurisdiction of such trials.

4. Judges 49(1)—Not disqualified for bias in absence of statute.

In the absence of statute, judges of courts would not be disqualified from trying cases in which they have some bias or feeling for or against one of the litigants, except any pecuniary interest they might have in the litigation.

Original application by Drury Butler for writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to John S. Scholefield, as Supervisor in and for the County of Sacramento, to prevent him from sitting as a member of the Board of Supervisors. Writ denied.

Butler & Van Dyke, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Hugh B. Bradford and White, Miller, Needham & Harber, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an original application for a writ of prohibition. The petitioner is, and was for some time prior to the institution before the board of supervisors of said county of Sacramento of a proceeding looking to his discharge therefrom, county engineer of said county, having been duly appointed by said board of supervisors to perform and discharge the duties of said position. St. 1919, p. 1290. The respondent, as the title of this proceeding indicates, is, and has been for several years, a duly elected and qualified member of said board of supervisors and regularly acting as such member.

On the 31st day of May, 1921, there were filed before and with said board written charges against the petitioner, accusing him of having committed, in his official capacity of county engineer of said county, "numerous offenses of misfeasance and malfeasance in office, of inefficiency, neglect of duty, and misconduct in his said office."

It is alleged in the petition:

"That said respondent, John S. Scholefield, has heretofore expressed his desire and intention to secure the removal of this petitioner as such county engineer, and that, in furtherance of his said desire and intention, said charges and specifications were formulated and prepared at the instigation of respondent, John S. Scholefield, and at his special instance and request and by his, said John S. Scholefield's procurement, and were signed by Ford P. Gage and Maurice Leavitt, who allege themselves to be residents, electors, and taxpayers of Sacramento county."

It is further alleged in the petition:

"That respondent, John S. Scholefield, as supervisor of Sacramento county, threatens and intends, and, unless prohibited by the order of this court, will proceed, to sit in judgment upon said charges, and will proceed to vote upon their truth or falsity, and will proceed to vote upon the removal or retention of said Drury Butler, petitioner herein, as such county engineer, and petitioner avers that John S. Scholefield has prejudged the said case and is solicitous for petitioner's removal, and intends and will, unless prohibited, without cause or any reason, except his dislike for and prejudice against this petitioner, proceed to vote to sustain the said charges against this petitioner, and will vote to remove this petitioner from office, and that such vote of said Scholefield may decide the judgment of the said board."

The petition declares:

"That none of the charges and specifications set forth in said Exhibit A (the written charges filed before said board, and made a part of the petition here) are true, and this petitioner has a good and sufficient defense to each and every charge therein contained."

It is further made to appear by the petition that on June 14, 1921, the petitioner filed a petition in the superior court in and for the county of Sacramento for a writ of prohibition to restrain said Scholefield, respondent here, from sitting as a member of said board of supervisors in the proceeding before said board involving an investigation and trial of the charges preferred against the petitioner, as set forth in Exhibit A attached to and made a part of the petition here; that a demurrer was interposed to the petition so filed in said superior court upon the ground that said petition did not state facts sufficient to entitle the petitioner to the relief therein and thereby prayed for; and that said demurrer was sustained by said court, and the writ denied. It is alleged that the remedy by appeal from the judgment of the superior court is inadequate, since an appeal therefrom cannot be perfected and the same prosecuted to a finality so as to render it effectual; the time for the hearing of the said charges by said board having been fixed for Monday, July 11, 1921, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Upon the filing of the petition in this court an order to show cause and an order temporarily restraining the respondent from sitting with said board on the trial of the charges against petitioner were issued. Upon the return day respondent appeared by counsel and filed a demurrer to the petition on the general ground and on the further ground that—

"It appears on the face of the petition of plaintiff and petitioner herein that a final judgment has been entered in the same matter by the superior court of the * * * county of Sacramento."

Thus two questions are here presented for decision: (1) Whether the writ herein applied for will lie where the precise question at issue has already been determined against petitioner at nisi prius and an appeal from the judgment of the trial court therein is available to the petitioner. (2) Whether, in any event, the respondent, as a member of the board of supervisors, may be restrained by the writ herein prayed for from sitting in the trial by said board of said charges on the ground that he is, as the petition alleges, biased and prejudiced against the petitioner, and therefore disqualified from sitting in the investigation of the charges because of having been personally active in instituting or causing to be instituted the proceeding for the removal of the petitioner from the position of county engineer.

At the hearing of this proceeding it was stated by counsel for the petitioner that an appeal had been taken from the judgment of the superior court in this matter, but it is claimed by counsel for petitioner that, even if the facts as stated in the petition are not such as to justify the issuance of the peremptory writ for the purpose of prohibiting the respondent from sitting at all in the investigation of the charges, it is nevertheless still the duty of this court in this proceeding, upon the facts as disclosed by the petition, to order a provisional writ to issue as ancillary to his remedy by appeal, or, in other words, for the purpose of preventing the board from proceeding with the trial of the charges pending the determination of petitioner's appeal, and thus preserving the efficacy thereof or the judgment on appeal in case it be favorable to him; it being manifest that the denial in toto of the application for the writ will mean that the trial of the charges may proceed, with respondent as one of the triers, before the appeal is determined.

As forecast above, the appeal from the judgment of the superior court of Sacramento county in this matter involves and is limited to precisely the same jurisdictional question that is involved in this proceeding. In other words, the petition here discloses that the petition filed in the superior court was for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent, as a member of the board of supervisors, from participating in the trial of the charges preferred before said board against the petitioner, and that the same broad question presented therein is submitted here, to wit, whether the respondent is, by reason of the facts set forth in said petition, disqualified as a member of the board of supervisors from acting as such member in the investigation of the charges filed against the petitioner. This being the question of overruling importance submitted both by the appeal and in this proceeding, and inasmuch as we have been persuaded to the conclusion that the respondent is not disqualified from acting in his official capacity in the hearing of the charges against petitioner, there can be no impropriety in passing upon and determining said question in this proceeding. The conclusion thus announced upon the principal question propounded here will obviously render it unnecessary to notice or consider here in the question of the propriety, under the circumstances of the case as revealed by the petition, of the remedy herein petitioned for. We will therefore now proceed with an exposition of the reasons supporting the conclusion at which we have arrived upon the jurisdictional question submitted herein.

The argument advanced in support of the position of petitioner is that the board of supervisors, when engaged in the prosecution of an investigation of charges of misfeasance, nonfeasance, malfeasance, or other dereliction of duty by an employee or officer of the county appointed by such board, exercises functions which are judicial in their nature, and therefore to permit respondent, upon the showing made by the petition that he is personally interested in and likewise solicitous for the removal of the petitioner from the position of county engineer, to sit in judgment upon the latter in the matter of the charges pending before the board of supervisors against the petitioner, would be to impinge upon the just principle that no one should be a judge in his own case; that, at all events, the petition, the allegations of which are admitted to be true by the demurrer interposed thereto, clearly discloses that respondent is biased and prejudiced against the petitioner, or at the least has been personally so active in the preferment and thus far the prosecution of the charges against the petitioner as to raise the implication of his bias and prejudice against the petitioner; that therefore he could not try the charges fairly and impartially, and for this reason he is legally disqualified from participating in the investigation of said charges. The proposition last stated, it will be noted, involves an insistence upon the rigor with which the rules as to the disqualification of judges and juries in the trial of cases in the courts are applied.

[1, 2] While it cannot be doubted that in investigations such as the one concerned herein the board of supervisors in a sense exercise judicial functions, still we are of the opinion, considering the relation, officially, of such board to the county, or its general purpose and scope as a part of the governmental machinery of the county, that, strictly speaking, such investigations are merely administrative, and we are therefore firmly of the conviction that the respondent here is not disqualified for either of the reasons suggested by counsel for the petitioner. Moreover, it is clear from the statute authorizing the appointment of county engineers by the boards of supervisors that the Legislature intended, in a case where the engineer appointed is charged with dereliction of his duties as such, to constitute the board of supervisors itself the sole tribunal by which such charge or charges should be heard and determined.

The statute giving the board of supervisors authority to appoint a county engineer in any of the counties of the state was passed by the Legislature of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 1290, supra), and the first section thereof reads as follows:

"The board of supervisors of any county at their option may appoint, and upon petition therefor signed by qualified electors of the county equaling in number not less than twenty-five per cent. of the total vote cast in the county for governor at the last preceding election at which a governor was elected, they must appoint a competent civil engineer who has had within five years last past, not less than one year's actual experience in practical road building as county engineer, who shall be deemed an employee and not a county officer. The county engineer shall, under the general direction and supervision of the board of supervisors and except as otherwise provided in this act, have complete direction and control over all of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of county roads, highways and bridges."

The second section reads in part as follows:

"The county engineer shall hold his employment for the term of four years from the date of his appointment; provided, that he may be removed at any time by the board of supervisors for inefficiency, neglect of duty, malfeasance, or misconduct in office, or other good cause shown, upon written charges to be filed with and heard by the board of supervisors and sustained by a three-fifths vote of said board after a hearing as herein provided. Said board is hereby vested with the power to administer oaths, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers and testimony."

From the above provisions of the statute these propositions irresistibly follow: (1) That it was the legislative intent that the county engineer appointed by the board of supervisors should be possessed of the skill as an engineer necessary to enable him to cope with the requirements of modern road construction, and that he should, as such engineer, be entirely under the control and subject to the orders of the board; (2) that the Legislature intended to and did constitute the board of supervisors the exclusive tribunal by which any charges which might be preferred against the engineer should be heard and determined. The latter proposition follows from express language contained in the statute, while the former is deducible from the provision that the engineer so appointed "shall be deemed to be an employee and not a county officer," although it may be here parenthetically added that whether he is an employee only or a county officer is not material or important to the decision herein; the reference to said provision being made here only for the purpose of disclosing that it was the intent of the Legislature that the board of supervisors should be empowered to discharge the engineer, not arbitrarily, of course, but when, for any reason, his services as such proved unsatisfactory, much upon the same principle that a private employer may discharge an employee for inefficiency or deficiency in the qualifications required of his employment.

If, then, we were required to hold with petitioner that, where a member of the board of supervisors has himself filed charges against the engineer or has been personally instrumental in procuring such charges to be filed by some other person, such supervisor would be incompetent to sit with the board in the investigation of the charges so preferred, upon the principle that no one is to be permitted to "act as a judge in his own case," it would be necessary to hold that the provision of the statute constituting the board of supervisors the tribunal by which such charges are to be tried and determined is unconstitutional, since, by reason of the provision that the engineer can be removed only upon a three-fifths vote of the board, the statute clearly contemplates that upon such charges he is entitled to the judgment of the whole membership of the board, and obviously, if one or two or any number of the members were incompetent, for the reasons suggested, to serve, the tribunal trying him would not be the tribunal as constituted by the Legislature. But, as above declared, we are of the opinion that the power vested in the board by the statute to investigate charges preferred against the engineer and to remove him from the position if the charges be by evidence sustained is perfectly valid and in no manner infringes the constitutional rights of the engineer. Indeed, it is clear that the Legislature, ex industria, constituted the board of supervisors the exclusive tribunal for the trial of charges of inefficiency or malfeasance or nonfeasance against the engineer, for the reason that, when appointed, he holds the position under the direct authority of said board, which is responsible to the public for the manner in which he discharges his duties as such engineer. The board is charged with the duty of seeing that he performs his official duties according to the requirements of the county, and may or may not accept as satisfactory such work as he may perform in his official capacity. We know of no other legal way than that as outlined or contemplated by the statute authorizing the appointment of a county engineer in which the supervisors may exercise the complete control over that officer or employee, whichever he may be, which the statute has undoubtedly vested in them. It is argued, however, that resort may be had either to section 758 or section 772 of the Penal Code in the case of charges preferred against the engineer, but we think that a comparison of those sections with the statute authorizing the appointment of an engineer will make it entirely clear that, if the procedure for the removal of the engineer was limited to that prescribed in either of the Code sections named, there still might be a just ground for the removal of said employee and at the same time no legal way by which such removal could be effected. Section 758 of the Penal Code provides:

"An accusation in writing against any district, county, township, or municipal officer, for willful or corrupt misconduct in office, may be presented by the grand jury of the county for or in which the officer accused is elected or appointed."

The provisions following said section provide for the subsequent proceedings to be taken, including the trial by jury and judgment of removal in case of his conviction. Section 772 provides for the removal of any officer within the jurisdiction of the superior court who has been found guilty of charging and collecting illegal fees for services rendered or to be rendered in his office or who has refused or neglected to perform the official duties pertaining to his office. Section 2 of the statute in question, it will be observed, provides that the engineer may be removed at any time by the board of supervisors for inefficiency, neglect of duty, malfeasance, or misconduct in office, or other good cause shown. It will thus be noted that, while some of the grounds upon which the engineer might be removed under the statute of 1919 are in effect the same as some of the grounds prescribed in the two sections of the Penal Code for the removal of public officers, yet it sets forth one cause for his removal which is not embraced within the provisions of the said sections of the Code, viz. inefficiency. It is hence to be seen that, if the right vested in the board to try and determine charges against the engineer and to remove him from his employment, if the charges be proved, is to be denied upon the ground that it involves a trespass upon the fundamental rights of that employee, then, obviously, if he were inefficient or incompetent as an engineer and no other ground for his removal could be sustained, there would be no power which could remove him until the expiration of his term of employment as such engineer, which, under the statute, is for four years from the date of his employment. And this very ground of distinction between the statute and the Code sections referred to clearly gives added support to the proposition heretofore stated, to wit, that it was the legislative intent to make the board of supervisors the sole and exclusive tribunal for the hearing and determination of any charges which might be preferred against the engineer.

[3] Nor are trials of charges against an officer or employee of a municipality or county controlled by or subject to the rules that appertain to judicial tribunals, where the Legislature has expressly given the governing body of the municipality or the county the exclusive cognizance or jurisdiction of such trials, and the law creating such body the exclusive tribunal by which such trials should be had makes no provision for disqualifying a member from acting upon the ground that he is biased or prejudiced against the officer or employee on trial. Of course, such an investigation, as has been before stated, is in a sense of a judicial nature, and the members of the board acting as the tribunal for the trial of the charges should not permit their bias or prejudice, if any they have, to influence them against the accused official. It is, of course, their duty to determine the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused officer or employee exclusively upon the evidence presented before them, and not to allow their minds to be influenced in the slightest degree by any personal feeling that they or any of them might have against the officer or employee on trial before them; yet, while this is all true, it is also true, as before declared, that if any one of them happens to possess a feeling of prejudice against the accused or has acted in the preliminaries of the matter in such manner as to justify the implication that he may be biased or prejudiced against him in the trial, public policy, as it is established by the law creating the board the tribunal in such case, does not permit the member or members having such bias or prejudice to be precluded from participating in the trial upon that ground.

These propositions are sustained by the greater weight of authority, as, indeed, is the conclusion at which we have arrived upon the proposition first above considered—that is, that a member of the board who has himself filed charges or is personally interested in their filing would be acting as a judge in his own case should he be permitted to sit in the trial of the charges. In 2 McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, § 565, it is said:

“Some authorities hold that a council or other municipal board in proceedings for removal acts judicially, and therefore those boards whose members prefer the charges are disqualified from sitting as members of the council or board on hearing them, since they cannot act both as accusers and judges. But the contrary view is usually taken. Thus, in a proceeding to remove, members of the council are not disqualified because of the fact that they were members of a committee to investigate and afterwards preferred charges; the fact that they may have formed an opinion concerning the accused was regarded as immaterial. * * * On the trial of the mayor, the fact that one of the councilmen will act as mayor in event of removal, and the further fact that another councilman signed the charges, does not prevent either from sitting as councilmen at the trial. The formalities of a criminal court need not be observed.”

In People ex rel. Burby v. Common Council of City of Auburn et al., 85 Hun, 601, 33 N. Y. Supp. 165, the relator, as city attorney of the city of Auburn, stipulated with counsel for the defendant in a case against the city for damages that he would abide the decision of the Supreme Court on appeal and not take the case to the Court of Appeals in the event the decision in the former court was against the city. The matter of making this stipulation was investigated by two members of the city council, and upon that investigation said members preferred charges against the city attorney of inefficiency in the management of the case referred to, and on investigation of the charges by the city council the relator was found guilty by a majority vote and removed from office. He thereupon applied for a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court for the purpose of securing judgment nullifying the action of the city council removing him from office and assailed the jurisdiction of that body upon the ground, among others, that the two councilmen who preferred the charges against him had taken part in the proceedings for his removal and had voted to sustain the charges. The same argument was made upon the hearing before the Supreme Court as is made here against the legal competency of the respondent to sit with the board of supervisors in the investigation of the charges preferred against the petitioner here. The court in that case said, inter alia:

“The common council is created, by statute, the only tribunal that can take proceedings against the relator for the matter alleged against him. It is therefore absolutely necessary that this body take this action, or it cannot be taken at all. Consequently the duty that devolved upon each member of the common council to take part in the proceeding was absolute, notwithstanding he may have formed such an opinion or taken such action in the premises as would disqualify him if he were a judge or juror in an action at law. In re Ryers, 72 N. Y. 1, 11–13, the county judge of Richmond county had made an order appointing commissioners in a proceeding to drain lands under a statute, and lands in which the judge was interested; he being the only authority, under the statute, that could appoint such commissioners. The point was made that the judge was disqualified from making the appointment, on account of being an interested party; and the Court of Appeals, after citing many authorities, reaches the conclusion ‘that it must be the law, from these cases, that where the judicial power has been confided to one judge, and if he should fail to act there would be no means of proceeding in the matter, though interested, he may take such cognizance of the case as is absolutely necessary, so far that the party shall not be without remedy.’ This we understand to be confined to cases where the judicial officer has not such an interest in the cause or matter that the result must necessarily affect his personal or pecuniary interest; or where his interest is minute, and he has so exclusive a jurisdiction, by Constitution or statute, that his refusal to act in the cause or matter will prevent any proceeding in it, then he may act, so far as that there may not be a failure of remedy. This is the rule as to judicial officers. The rule would be more liberal still in this case. The common council, in this proceeding, were, strictly speaking, not a court, nor were its members judges. The proceeding was not a common-law trial, with the incidents and common-law rights pertaining to a trial; nor, strictly speaking, was it a trial before a court. It was an investigation required by the statute to furnish information to the common council, upon which it could act. People v. Board of Police Com’rs, 93 N. Y. 102, 103; Id., 98 N. Y. 334, 335; People v. Doolittle, 44 Hun, 293. These members of the common council had no pecuniary interest in the result of the proceeding, and were not in any sense parties to it, further than to discharge the duties imposed upon them by law. We must hold that the common council had jurisdiction, and that the authority conferred upon it by the statute in relation to the subject-matter has been pursued in the mode required by law in order to authorize them to make the determination.”

In State ex rel. Starkweather v. Common Council of the City of Superior, 90 Wis. 612, 619, 64 N. W. 304-306, a proceeding before the city council involving an investigation by said body of charges of official misconduct against the mayor was reviewed, and in said case the argument was made that the power conferred upon the city council to investigate charges against the mayor and remove that official from his office in case the charges were sustained was unconstitutional, because it was a grant of judicial power that could not be conferred upon any body of men save courts and justices of the peace. It was further claimed that the "court" so constituted was unconstitutional because at least two of the aldermen or councilmen were interested in the result, they having preferred the charges before the common council against the mayor. To these contentions the Supreme Court of Wisconsin replied:

"There are certainly some decisions lending color to the view that the amotion of an officer of a corporation is purely an exercise of judicial power. Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392; Tompert v. Lithgow, 1 Bush, 176. The better authority, however, is clearly to the effect that the power to remove officers for cause, though to be exercised in a judicial manner, is administrative, not judicial. It is a part of the power of the corporation which is very useful, in fact almost necessary, for the efficient performance of the corporate duties. * * * The common council, not being a court, but merely an administrative body, is not subject to all the rules governing courts in the transaction of business; and thus it undoubtedly is the law that the fact that one of the aldermen will discharge the duties of mayor in case of the removal of the mayor, and that another of the aldermen signed the charges upon which the mayor was tried, does not bar these aldermen from sitting. The Legislature has power to designate the officers who shall possess and exercise the power of removal, and it has designated in this case the common council. It created the office, and it may provide for the removal of the officer; and it may undoubtedly provide for such removal by a body, one of whom will be called to exercise the duties of mayor in case of his removal. Nor is there any affidavit of prejudice provided for by the statute. Passion and prejudice frequently play an important part in such proceedings as those before us, but in the absence of constitutional or legislative restrictions they do not disqualify the members of the removing board from acting. 'Ita lex scripta est.' Andrews v. King, 77 Me. 224."

The doctrine of the above authorities is expressly approved by our own Supreme Court in Federal Construction Co. v. Curd, 179 Cal. 479, 177 Pac. 473, Id., 179 Cal. 494, 177 Pac. 469, 2 A. L. R. 1202, in which the subject is elaborately considered, and the reasoning thereon squarely in line with that of the cases and the authorities above cited. See, also, Grosjean v. Board of Education, 40 Cal. App. 434, 441, 181 Pac. 113; Riggins

v. Richards et al., 97 Tex. 229, 237, 77 S. W. 946; Barrett v. Board of Comm'rs, 85 N. J. Law, 134, 88 Atl. 856, 857; Rutter v. Burke, 89 Vt. 14, 93 Atl. 842, 849; Tibbs v. City of Atlanta, 125 Ga. 18, 53 S. E. 811, 812; People ex rel. Jones v. Sherman et al., 66 App. Div. 231, 72 N. Y. Supp. 718, 720; State ex rel. Heimburger v. Wells, 210 Mo. 601, 109 S. W. 758, 761-762; State ex rel. Murphy v. Burney, 269 Mo. 602, 191 S. W. 981, 982, et seq.

All the foregoing cases declare that the power to remove an officer of a municipal corporation for cause is administrative, not judicial, and may be vested in such a body as the common council, and that the power of removal is not subject to all the rules governing courts in the transaction of business.

The case of Stockwell v. Township Board, etc., 22 Mich. 341, cited by petitioner, is one of the very few cases which hold adversely to the principles established by the cases above named. But we are not impressed with the reasoning by which the conclusion in that case was reached, and, as before declared, think the sounder reason is at the bottom of the cases cited by the respondent, above referred to.

[4] It may be added to what has already been said that even the judges of our courts would not be disqualified from trying cases in which they had some bias or feeling for or against one of the litigants, except for any pecuniary interest they might have in the litigation, were it not for the statutory provisions disqualifying them under certain circumstances and conditions.

We may also add that neither in the present case nor indeed in any case where the sole power of the trial of an officer upon charges which, if proven true, would result in his removal from office, is vested in the governing body of a city or county, is it to be assumed that any member of said body who is big enough, broad enough, intelligent enough, and honest enough to be elevated to so important a local public office would not be able in the trial of the officer to cast entirely aside any personal bias or prejudice he might have against such officer and so try him and determine the question of his guilt or innocence of the charges preferred wholly upon the competent evidence adduced before him. Indeed, we doubt not that the respondent in this case, even if it be true that he has entertained such a feeling of prejudice against the petitioner as appears to be shown by the petition, will try the petitioner upon the charges pending against the latter in the same fair and impartial manner as he himself would desire, and, indeed, be entitled to be tried were he placed in petitioner's position.

However, for the reasons herein stated, the demurrer to the petition herein is sustained, and the application for a writ of prohibition, either peremptory or as auxiliary to petitioner's appeal, is denied.

BRIGDEN et al. v. DODGE et al. (Civ. 3622.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 19, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 17, 1921.)

1. Levees and flood control ⇨25—Assessment of cost of improvements in protection district without appointment of commissioners void.

Acts of board of supervisors of county in letting contracts for work in a protection district before commissioners had been appointed, as provided in St. 1895, p. 247, as amended by St. 1911, p. 446, were irregular, and assessments levied to pay the cost of the work were void.

2. Levees and flood control ⇨5—Protection districts possess no separate entity from county.

A protection district, created under St. 1895, p. 247, as amended by St. 1911, p. 446, relating to improvement of channels of innavigable streams and water courses, is in no wise a public corporation, and possesses no separate entity from the county itself, the scope of the statute being to authorize the creation of an assessment district to the end that the property in the district may be required to pay the cost of the work in proportion to the benefits received.

3. Levees and flood control ⇨26—County liable for assessments illegally collected in protection district.

If assessments have been illegally collected in a protection district created under St. 1895, p. 247, as amended by St. 1911, p. 446, then the county wherein such district is located is responsible, and must respond to a claim for reimbursement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Petition by T. Dwight Brigden and others for a writ of mandamus against Jonathan S. Dodge and others, Supervisors of Los Angeles County, and others. From an adverse judgment granting the writ, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, County Counsel, and Gordon Boller, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hartley Shaw and T. C. Gould, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Plaintiffs, having recovered a judgment against the county of Los Angeles for a sum of money, brought this proceeding in the superior court to compel the supervisors of said county and the other disbursing officers named to audit, allow, and pay the amount of said judgment from the general fund of the county. Mandate was decreed agreeable to the prayer of the complaint, and the defendants have appealed. The judgment roll alone constitutes the record on appeal.

[1-3] In 1912 the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, acting under authority of an act to provide for the improvement of channels of innavigable streams and water courses, as the same was approved in 1895 (St. 1895, p. 247) and amended in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 446), adopted a resolution by which a district was described under the name of Fair Oaks Protection District, and proceed further to have surveys made and to provide for the doing of certain work and the assessment of the cost thereof against the property within said district. However, the board of supervisors did not proceed regularly with its action, but let contracts for work before commissioners had been appointed. Such procedure was not in accordance with the requirements of the act referred to. The case thus made was the same as that considered in Pasadena Park Improvement Co. et al. v. Leland, 175 Cal. 511, 166 Pac. 341. There it was held that the acts of the board of supervisors in ordering the doing of protection work and in levying assessments to pay the cost thereof were void. Plaintiffs having paid assessments levied against their property, located within the said Fair Oaks Protection District, brought an action to recover back the money, and obtained a judgment against the county, which judgment was general in its form without limiting or restricting terms as to the fund from which it was to be paid. Being a general judgment against the county, its payment would ordinarily be made from the county's common or general fund. In due course the plaintiffs presented their demand to the board of supervisors in their effort to collect upon the judgment, and the board allowed the demand, but ordered that it should be paid from the Fair Oaks Protection District improvement fund. At the time the demand of plaintiffs was so allowed no money was shown upon the books of the auditor and treasurer to the credit of the fund named, and no money was thereafter credited to that fund. As it appeared that there was ample money in the general fund of the county, plaintiffs insisted that their demand should be paid, and petitioned the superior court for the writ of mandate, which was, after final hearing, allowed to them. The position of appellants is that the Fair Oaks Protection District constituted an organization apart from the county of Los Angeles and one possessing individual and separate responsibilities, and their counsel say that, if the funds of that district were depleted, plaintiffs could not obtain satisfaction of their demand from any other source. This conclusion would be right if the premise were correctly chosen. The situation bears no analogy to that of a school district, which is referred to in some of the decisions cited, for it has been directly held that a school district is in itself a public corporation possessing powers of a quasi municipal character. Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. 1067; Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 432, 32 Pac. 558. In Pasadena Park Improvement Co. v. Leland, supra, our Supreme Court determined that a protection district, such as that attempted to be organized by the board of supervisors, is in no wise a public corporation, and that it possesses no separate entity from the county itself, but that its scope is to authorize the creation of an assessment district to the end that the property in the district may be required to pay the cost of the work in proportion to the benefits received, and the court there says:

"In all essentials is the power conferred by the act like that conferred upon city councils and boards of trustees to create assessment districts for the improvement of streets," etc.

The act provides that the district shall be governed and controlled by the board of supervisors, and that the board, in employing the power of eminent domain, shall act in the name of the county. While it is provided that the supervisors in the formation of the district shall proceed upon receiving a petition of landowners, that is a means only for calling into use the power of the county as vested in its legislative and administrative board, and for the particular purposes provided in the act. It is true that a special fund is created into which moneys collected to defray the cost of the improvement work are to be segregated and kept; nevertheless the county is in effect the contracting agency and the collecting power. If the assessments have been illegally collected, as was determined in the cases of these plaintiffs, then the county is responsible, and must respond to a claim for reimbursement. Our Supreme Court has said, as we have noted, that a protection district of the kind referred to is similar to an assessment district described within a municipality under street improvement proceedings. In a case of the latter it has been held that the city itself owes the obligation to pay back to the property owner the amount of an assessment illegally levied and collected. Spencer v. City of Los Angeles, 180 Cal. 103, 179 Pac. 163. Our conclusion is that the plaintiffs are entitled to the writ which the judgment of the superior court awarded to them.

The judgment is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 19, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 17, 1921.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Petition by C. B. Scoville for a writ of mandate against Jonathan S. Dodge and others, Supervisors of Los Angeles County, and others. Judgment granting the writ, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Gordon Boller, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hartley Shaw and T. C. Gould, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The facts in this case are in all essentials parallel to those shown by the record in Brigden et al. v. Dodge et al. (No. 3622), 201 Pac. 631, in which decision was this day filed. Pursuant to stipulation, both cases were submitted on the same briefs.

For the same reasons as those stated in the opinion filed in Brigden et al. v. Dodge et al. the judgment herein is affirmed.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner has filed an application for a writ of certiorari to review the action of the defendant Engram as city clerk of the city of Redding in determining that a certain petition filed in the office of said clerk for the recall of certain of the city trustees of said city is sufficient to authorize a recall election, as provided in section 1 of the act of January 2, 1912, providing for the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns. Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128.

We are satisfied that the action required of the clerk by that act is not judicial in character, and that, consequently, certiorari will not lie to review his decision. The act provides that, after the recall petition has been filed in his office "within ten days from the date of filing such petition, the clerk shall examine and from the records of registration ascertain whether or not said petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified voters, and he shall attach to said petition his certificate showing the result of said examination." It is this action which is claimed to be judicial and to be, therefore, subject to review. We think all that is required of the clerk to accomplish this duty is to use his eyesight and capacity for counting to determine whether the names on the petition which also appear on the record of registration constitute enough persons to authorize the recall under the statute; that is, whether or not they number 25 per cent. of the entire vote cast in such city at the last preceding regular municipal election at which the officers to be recalled were voted for. The record of registration will be sufficient for his information upon the question whether or not the persons signing the petition are qualified voters. The law does not require him to go outside for information, but he must determine "from the records of registration" whether or not the fact exists. Such an examination involves merely ministerial acts and is in no sense judicial.

If it should happen that names were forged to the petition in sufficient number to reduce the lawful signatures to the petition below the statutory requirement, persons legally interested perhaps might have a remedy, the nature and character of which we need not here decide. It is enough for the disposition of this application to say that the action of the clerk is not judicial, and hence certiorari is not the proper remedy.

The petitioner relies upon Baines v. Zemansky, 176 Cal. 376, 168 Pac. 565, and Fickert v. Zemansky, 176 Cal. 443, 168 Pac. 891. These cases hold that the action of the registrar of election of the city of San Francisco in determining whether or not a recall petition is sufficient under the provisions of the charter of that city is judicial in character. That conclusion was, however, based entirely on the elaborate provisions of the

Certiorari  24—Does not lie to review decision of city clerk as to signing of recall petition by sufficient qualified voters, his action not being judicial.

Under St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, § 1, providing that after a recall petition has been filed in the office of a city clerk he shall examine and "from the records of registration" ascertain whether the petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified voters, his action is not judicial, but merely clerical, so that certiorari will not lie to review his decision.

city charter, which are wholly different from the above-quoted provisions of the recall act applying generally to the cities within the state. The charter provided for an investigation which involved notice to the voters to come forward and prove their eligibility to sign the petition, and involved the decision of various other facts which were appropriate for judicial proceedings and which were not ministerial or clerical in their character. It was held that under the provisions of the Constitution relating to the powers of the city of San Francisco it was competent for that city to commit the determination of judicial questions, such as were or might be involved in a recall proceeding, to an officer specially authorized for that purpose, and that such exclusive jurisdiction was not subject to review in the superior courts on certiorari, nor even by way of injunction. This was put upon the ground that the matter was political, and that all officers elected were presumed to take their office subject to the conditions imposed by the charter and the provisions thereof for their recall. The cases above mentioned can have no application to the question here presented for consideration. Our complicated system of city government, which gives each city above a certain size power to adopt a charter for its own government, and our numerous statutes relating to and providing for the recall of elective officers, tend to create great confusion on the subject, and, when a decision of a court is resorted to for information, close attention must be paid to the particular city and the particular law on which the decision is predicated; otherwise the legal profession is likely to be misled in regard to the construction of the particular law in controversy.

The application for the writ is denied.

All concur, excepting ANGELLOTTI, C. J., absent.

1. Municipal corporations ⚡122(2)—Presumptions in favor of regularity of revenue ordinances.

Every reasonable presumption will be indulged in as to the regularity of a municipal ordinance imposing license taxes for revenue, and if its terms, in any condition of the subject dealt with, appear valid, it will be sustained.

2. Constitutional law ⚡230(3)—Licenses ⚡7(4)—Ordinance licensing auctioneers held not discriminatory.

A municipal ordinance requiring auctioneers to procure a license at $50 per year for those who sold real estate, live stock, or secondhand goods, and at $10 per day for those who sold other property, or other property in connection with that mentioned, held not invalid as discriminatory, since a difference in the amount exacted may be justified, where it can be referred to the volume of business done.

Application by A. G. Bruce for a writ of habeas corpus, to be directed to the chief of police of the city of San Diego, to secure petitioner's release after conviction of conducting the business of an auctioneer without a license. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

L. E. Dadmun, of San Diego, for petitioner.

C. G. Selleck, City Pros., of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Petitioner was convicted in the police court in the city of San Diego of the offense of having conducted a business of an auctioneer without having first procured a license from said city entitling him so to do. He seeks to be discharged from custody of the chief of police on the ground that the ordinance, under the terms of which his conviction resulted, is unconstitutional and void. The particular contention made is that the ordinance in question, as its terms affect the business of auctioneering, is discriminatory. A copy of the ordinance is attached to the petition, and in section 29 thereof we find the following provisions:

"Class A. For every person who sells or offers for sale at public auction any real estate, live stock, or secondhand goods, wares, or merchandise, the sum of fifty dollars ($50.00) per year.

"Class B. For every person who sells or offers for sale at public auction any other property than real estate, live stock, or secondhand goods, wares, or merchandise, or who sells or offers for sale at public auction any real estate, live stock, or secondhand goods, wares, or merchandise together with other property, the sum of ten dollars ($10.00) per day."

The charge as made by the complaint filed against petitioner declared that he did willfully and unlawfully "sell and offer for sale at public auction new goods, wares, and merchandise, without having first secured a license." From the whole text of the ordinance in question it appears that its provisions were designed to be in part regulatory and in part for purposes of revenue. If that portion of it having to do with this petitioner's case could be said to be of a purely regulatory nature, and hence to be justified under the police power, there would be little room for any contention to be made against its validity.

"The police power, the power to make laws to secure the comfort, convenience, peace, and health of the community, is an extensive one and in its exercise a very wide discretion as to what is needful or proper for the purpose is necessarily committed to the legislative body in which the power to make such laws is vested.' Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 Pac. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152. * * * The manner and extent of such regulation are primarily legislative questions, and the courts will not interfere unless it clearly appears that the Legislature has, under the guise of regulation, imposed an arbitrary or unreasonable burden upon the use of property or the pursuit of an occupation." County of Plumas v. Wheeler, 149 Cal. 758, 87 Pac. 909.

[1] And the purposes of a taxing ordinance may be of a mixed nature and include both regulatory provisions and those designed to produce a revenue. San Francisco v. Ins. Co., 74 Cal. 113, 15 Pac. 380, 5 Am. St. Rep. 425. Conceding that an ordinance of the kind here presented, of mixed purpose and intent, is to be measured according to constitutional limitations affecting revenue measures, nevertheless every reasonable presumption will be indulged in as to its regularity, and if its terms, in any condition of the subject dealt with, appear valid, it will be sustained.

"A municipal ordinance must be very clearly obnoxious to such objections as those made, or some one of them, before it will be declared invalid by the courts. Every intendment is to be indulged in favor of its validity, and all doubts resolved in a way to uphold the law-making power; and a contrary conclusion will never be reached upon light consideration. It is the province and right of the municipality to regulate its local affairs—within the law, of course—and it is the duty of the courts to uphold such regulations, except it manifestly appear that the ordinance or by-law transcends the power of the municipality, and contravenes rights secured to the citizen by the Constitution, or laws made in pursuance thereof. * * * The very power to license for purposes of regulation and revenue involves the right to make distinctions between different trades and between essentially different methods of conducting the same general character of business or trade." Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 412, 44 Pac. 725, 32 L. R. A. 527.

Under an ordinance imposing a license tax for revenue, an apparent discrimination may appear to be made between persons engaged in the same general business. The difference in the amount exacted is justified, where it can be referred to the volume of business done or profits realized. The bare terms of such an ordinance may not demonstrate that such a difference exists, but that is a matter which the legislative body of the municipality must be presumed to have considered and determined. In the case of the provisions of the ordinance before us, we are not required to say that it appears that persons such as would fall within "Class B" necessarily must transact a business greater in volume or profit than those included in "Class A." It seems altogether within reason that such may be the case; that being true, we must here assume, in support of the ordinance, that such would be the condition of the business.

[2] In Ex parte Lemon, 143 Cal. 558, 77 Pac. 455, 65 L. R. A. 946, there was considered an ordinance of a city which required persons conducting a restaurant or boarding house to pay a license tax of $3 per month where the meals were cooked and served by the proprietor or members of his family, and to pay $8 per month in other cases. The ordinance was attacked as being discriminatory. It was sustained by the Supreme Court. In the light of that decision and the reasoning of it, we find no difficulty in concluding that the terms of the ordinance under which petitioner was prosecuted are valid.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city of San Diego.

TITLE GUARANTY & SURETY CO. v. DUARTE et al. (Civ. 2288.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 19, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 17, 1921.)

Subrogation — § 31(3)—Surety on bond of sheriff paying judgment entitled to recover under bond indemnifying sheriff.

Surety on the bond of a sheriff, which paid a judgment rendered against the sheriff and the surety jointly in favor of one whose property had been sold under attachment, was entitled to bring action and recover under a bond executed by the attaching creditor to indemnify the sheriff against loss by reason of the selling of the property under the writ, under Civ. Code, §§ 2777, 2848, 2849.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the Title Guaranty & Surety Company against Joe Rose Duarte and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. W. Henderson and Terry W. Ward, both of Merced, for appellants.

Edward Bickmore, of Reno, Nev., for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action against the defendants, Vincent, as principal, and Joe Rose Duarte and Gonzales, as sureties, on a bond executed and given by said defendants as indemnity to the sheriff of Merced county on a sale of certain personal property seized by said officer under a writ of attachment.

The plaintiff, a corporation, is and was, at all the times mentioned in the complaint, engaged in a general guaranty and surety business, and at all said times one S. C. Cornell was sheriff of said county of Merced; that the plaintiff was at all said times and down to the date of the death of said Cornell, on the 27th day of May, 1914, the surety on the official bond of said Cornell as sheriff of said county.

It appears that the writ of attachment referred to was issued out of a justice's court in said county, in an action wherein the defendant Vincent was plaintiff and one Frank Duarte defendant, and that on the 26th day of February, 1912, at Atwater, in said county, said Cornell acting in his official capacity of sheriff, levied upon and attached a certain carload of sweet potatoes as the property of said Frank Duarte, and noticed the sale thereof for the 28th day of February, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m. It further appears that, prior to the sale, the ownership of the carload of potatoes so levied upon was claimed by a third party, and that, to protect himself as said sheriff, from any claim or claims of damages made by any third person claiming that said potatoes were not the property of said Frank Duarte at the time of the seizure thereof under said writ of attachment or thereafter, said Cornell, as sheriff, demanded of and received from said Fred Vincent, the attaching creditor, an indemnity bond whereby he (said sheriff) would be held free or immune from any liability for damages resulting to him in the event said potatoes at the time of said attachment and sale were not the property of said Frank Duarte, defendant in said justice's court action. The condition of said bond which, as stated, was executed by the defendants, Vincent, Joe Rose Duarte, and Gonzales, was in the sum of $500, "to be paid to the said Sam Cornell, against any loss arising from the attachment of one carload of sweet potatoes, now supposed to be the property of Frank Duarte." It appears that the ownership of the potatoes in question at the time of their seizure and sale under the writ of attachment was claimed by a corporation designated and known as Brinkley-Douglas Fruit Company; that said corporation, after the sale of said potatoes by the sheriff, brought an action in the superior court of the county of Merced against the sheriff and the plaintiff in this action, the latter as surety on the official bond of said sheriff, claiming damages for the conversion and sale of said potatoes; that said S. C. Cornell died on the 27th day of May, 1914, and that on the 15th day of June, 1914, and in the superior court of Merced county, A. L. Silman was duly appointed administrator of the estate of said Cornell, deceased, and on the 17th day of June, 1914, duly qualified as such administrator and continuously after said last-named date until the 29th day of October, 1917, was the duly qualified and acting administrator of said estate; that on the 15th day of May, 1915, said Silman, as such administrator, was duly substituted as a party defendant in said action instituted by said Brinkley-Douglas Fruit Company, as plaintiff, in the place and stead of S. C. Cornell, as sheriff of Merced county, and that on the 1st day of August, 1916, a joint and several judgment in the sum of $472, with costs taxed in the sum of $34.20, was duly rendered and entered against said A. L. Silman, as administrator, etc., and said Title Guaranty & Surety Company, as said surety on the official bond of said sheriff; that a motion for a new trial in said action was denied and thereafter said defendants appealed from said judgment and said order denying said motion for a new trial to the District Court of Appeal for the Third District and that said Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment and the order in said action; that the amount of said judgment with all costs of suit incurred during the trial of said action and the appeal thereafter and the interest thereon amounted to the total sum of $625.30; and that the same was paid by the plaintiff in this action. The complaint alleges:

"That at all times after the execution of said instrument of indemnity, hereinbefore set forth, and up to the said death of said S. C. Cornell, he was the owner and holder of the same, and that at all times after said death, until the execution of the assignment of said instrument of indemnity hereinafter alleged and set forth, the said estate of said S. C. Cornell, and the heirs of the same, each represented by said A. L. Silman, as administrator of said estate, were the owners and holders of said instrument of indemnity and all rights secured thereunder; that on or about the 27th day of August, 1917, said A. L. Silman, acting as the administrator of said estate, and in consideration that the said plaintiff herein would duly pay and discharge said judgment so rendered against said plaintiff and said A. L. Silman, as administrator of said estate, did sell, assign, and set over unto the said plaintiff herein, all the right, title, and interest of the said estate of said S. C. Cornell, deceased, in and to said instrument of indemnity hereinbefore set forth; and said plaintiff herein did so pay and discharge said judgment and that said assignment to plaintiff was duly confirmed by this court in the matter of said estate of S. C. Cornell, deceased, on the 29th day of October, 1917, and that plaintiff, at all times since said assignment and confirmation has been, and now is, the legal owner and holder of said instrument of indemnity and all the right, title, and interest of said estate, and said heirs in and to said instrument of indemnity, and any and all rights accruing thereunder and any and all right of recovery thereon."

Upon findings substantially in accord with the averments of the second amended complaint, of which the above statement represents an epitomized résumé, the plaintiff was awarded judgment, from which the defendants Joe Rose Duarte and J. J. Gonzales appeal, under the alternative method.

There was no oral evidence received at the trial, the evidential features of the record consisting wholly of certain facts stipulated by the parties and certain documents. The fact of the execution of the indemnity bond, the fact of the bringing of the action by the Brinkley-Douglas Fruit Company against plaintiff here and said Cornell, the fact of a judgment having been given in favor of said fruit company in said action against the plaintiff here and Silman, as administrator and substituted defendant, and the satisfaction of said judgment by the plaintiff here, were admitted at the trial. The documentary evidence, which was admitted over objection by appellants, consisted of the petition in the estate of said Cornell, deceased, for an order confirming the sale and transfer of said indemnity bond to plaintiff and the order confirming said sale and transfer.

The discussion in the briefs revolves around attacks upon the findings, upon the ground that there is no evidence in the record which supports them and the rulings allowing in evidence the documents above mentioned. It is first contended by appellants that there was no legal assignment of the indemnity bond to plaintiff because said bond was an asset of the estate of Cornell and had, previously to the purported assignment, been distributed to the heirs of the deceased, and for the further reason that there was some irregularity in the proceeding in which the order purporting to authorize the administrator of Cornell's estate to transfer said bond was made. It is, however, argued that, even assuming the transfer or assignment to have been valid, still the plaintiff in this case cannot claim any rights thereunder, inasmuch as the bond was given for the express purpose of indemnifying Cornell against loss by reason of selling the potatoes under the writ of attachment and so expressly provided, and, indeed, that the bond is even of no avail to the estate of Cornell, since to justify action by the administrator of said estate upon said bond it must have been made to appear that Cornell or his estate had suffered some loss by reason of the sale of the potatoes; but we regard all this discussion beside the legal propositions which are determinative of this appeal. The important or real questions in this case are whether the plaintiff, having paid the judgment awarded against it and Cornell in the action for damages against them for the seizure and sale of the potatoes, and the payment of said damages having been made for the benefit of the estate of said Cornell, is entitled to have recourse to the indemnity bond as in recoupment for the moneys so expended, and, if so, whether upon the payment of said damages it was subrogated to the rights of Cornell under said undertaking. It is clear that these propositions are answered by the Civil Code. Section 2777 of said Code provides:

"One who indemnifies another against an act to be done by the latter, is liable jointly with the person indemnified, and separately to every person injured by such act."

The above section requires no construction. Its terms are plain and unambiguous and obviously applies to a case of this character. There can be no possible doubt that the plaintiff in this case was damaged by the act of the sheriff in seizing and selling the potatoes. See Lewis v. Johns, 34 Cal. 629, 635; Stewart v. Wells, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 79, 81; Freeman v. Adams, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 116. And that upon the payment of the damages there ipso facto accrued to plaintiff the right of subrogation to the rights of Cornell under the indemnity bond, is a proposition free from doubt. The rules pertaining to subrogation are succinctly stated in the Civil Code as follows:

"A surety is entitled to the benefit of every security for the performance of the principal obligation held by the creditor, * * * at the time of entering into the contract of suretyship, or acquired by him afterwards." Civ. Code, § 2849.

"A surety, upon satisfying the obligation of the principal, is entitled to enforce every remedy which the creditor then has against the principal." Civ. Code, § 2848.

As is said by Mr. Justice Shaw in Martin v. De Ornelas, 139 Cal. 41, 49, 72 Pac. 440, 444, referring to the above Code sections:

"These sections are but a re-enactment of the well-settled rules of equity on the subject of subrogation or substitution. Story's Equity Jurisprudence, §§ 495-502; Brandt on Suretyship, § 260 et seq." "This right does not depend upon any contract, express or implied, but grows out of the relation of surety and creditor, and the principles of natural justice. Brandt on Suretyship, § 260; Hidden v. Bishop, 5 R. I. 29; Mathews v. Aikin, 1 N. Y. 595."

See, also, 37 Cyc. 406 and 391; Bankers Loan, etc., Co. v. Hornish, 94 Va. 608, 27 S. E. 459; Berry v. Bullock, 81 Miss. 463, 33 South. 410; Boone Co. Bank v. Byrum, 68 Ark. 71, 56 S. W. 532; Hawpe v. Baumgardner, 103 Va. 91, 48 S. E. 554; Coffee v. Tevis, 17 Cal. 239.

It is true that as a general rule the surety only becomes subrogated to any rights of the judgment creditor, but this is not always so. As was said in Townsend v. Cleveland, etc., Co., 18 Ind. App. 568, 47 N. E. 707, 709:

"More broadly, [subrogation] is the substitution of one person in the place of another, whether as a creditor, or the possessor of any other rightful claim."

See also Leavitt v. Can. Pac. R. Co., 90 Me. 153, 37 Atl. 886, 38 L. R. A. 152; Jack- son Co. v. Boylston Ins. Co., 139 Mass. 508, 2 N. E. 103, 52 Am. Rep. 728.

From the above authorities it is obvious that it was not necessary that the administrator of the estate of Cornell should have assigned the indemnity bond to plaintiff in order that the rights of Cornell thereunder should inure to the benefit of said plaintiff. It will also be observed that, in view of the above considerations, the rulings of the court admitting the documents above referred to in evidence and of which complaint is here made are not material to this decision. Nothing more can be added to what the Code sections above say upon the questions involved in this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re WASSON.

WASSON v. WALDROP.

(Civ. 3940.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 20, 1921.)

1. Adverse possession ⇨100(4)—Deed is color of title only to land actually described.

A deed is color of title only as to land actually described by it.

2. Adverse possession ⇨100(4)—Possession of land conveyed not constructive possession of land not included in deed.

Use and possession of land conveyed did not amount to constructive possession of a portion outside the boundaries in the deed consisting of part of a sand bar on the opposite side of the river forming the boundary line.

3. Adverse possession ⇨24—Clandestine acts held not to amount to continuous and uninterrupted possession.

Isolated acts of ownership, not exclusive and more clandestine than open and notorious, held not to amount to the continuous and uninterrupted possession which is necessary to constitute an adverse possession sufficient to bar the claim of one holding the record title.

4. Adverse possession ⇨95—Payment of taxes on very land in controversy must be proved.

Where payment of taxes is claimed as an element of adverse possession, claimant must prove payment of taxes on the very land in controversy, and it is not sufficient to show payment of taxes on a tract of land which he supposed contained the portion in dispute.

5. Trial ⇨139(1)—When directed verdict proper, stated.

A directed verdict is proper only when there is no substantial evidence tending to prove, in favor of the party upon whom the burden rests, all the controverted facts necessary to establish his case; but whenever, upon the whole evidence, the court would be compelled to set aside a finding as unsupported by the evidence, it should direct a verdict.

6. Records ⇨9(3)—Purpose of application to register title is to settle title.

The general purpose of an application under the registration act, or Torrens Law, is to clear up and settle the title to land; it is a proceeding in the nature of an action to quiet title.

7. Records ⇨9(4)—Applicant for registration of title must prove possession title in fee claimed.

The applicant for initial registration of title, as a title in fee, must produce proof that he is possessed of such title, either by a chain of conveyances from the general governor or by title by adverse possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Application by Louis Logan Wasson for initial registration of title to land, to which Helen L. Waldrop objects. From a judgment denying the application as to part of the land applicant appeals. Affirmed.

A. W. Hollingsworth, of Healdsburg, Carl Barnard, of Santa Rosa, and Russell P. Tyler, of San Francisco, for appellant.

E. M. Norton, and Fred W. McConnell, both of Healdsburg, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This proceeding was instituted by the appellant Wasson as applicant under the provisions of the act for the certification of land titles (Stats. 1897, p. 138), commonly known as the Torrens Land Act, for initial registration of title to 78 acres of land situated in Sonoma county. He predicated his claim to the land upon the fact that he had been in actual, peaceful possession of the property, adversely to all other persons, for a period of more than five years next preceding the filing of his application, and during all of the time he had paid all taxes assessed against the property. The application for registration was opposed by the respondent, Helen L. Waldrop, denied that the applicant had been in adverse possession of 8.12 acres of the land described in the petition, lying westerly and southwesterly of the Russian river, and alleged that she was, and for more than 10 years prior to the filing of her answer had been, the owner in fee simple absolute of that portion of the property; and, further, that she had during all of that time been in actual, open, exclusive, notorious, continuous, and adverse possession of the land, and had paid all taxes levied or assessed against that particular parcel. When the evidence was in the court granted a motion, made by the objector, for an instructed verdict in accord with her contention. From the judgment entered thereon, denying his claim to the 8.12 acres, the applicant has appealed, contending that there is ample testimony in the record to support a verdict, if one had been rendered in his favor, and that the trial court, therefore, erred in withdrawing the case from the jury, and instructing it to return a verdict for the objector.

The applicant claims to be the owner of, and entitled to registration of title to, 78 acres of land. In 1908 Levi Sutton and others deeded to him, in the same instrument, two parcels of land, aptly described by metes and bounds, lying east and northeast of the Russian river, and containing 47 acres, "and also all lands of the said parties of the first part, lying southwest of and adjoining the above-described premises, commonly called the gravel bar or waste land." Appellant went into possession of the property and has continuously lived on the place ever since. He seeks in this proceeding to have registration of title to the 47 acres conveyed to him by metes and bounds in the Sutton deed, and in addition asks for confirmation of ownership to 31 acres of gravel bar, 8.12 acres of which are cut off from the rest of the tract by the bed of the Russian river. This severed portion lies to the west and southwest of the stream and is contiguous to the lands of the respondent. The controversy here waged over this small tract.

The appellant takes the position that he has established title to the 8.12 acres of gravel bar west of the Russian river by adverse possession and payment of taxes for a period of five years. Such possession is of two kinds: First, where possession is taken by bow and spear without color of title; second, where possession is taken under a claim of title founded upon a written instrument. Kimball v. Lohmas, 31 Cal. 154, 159.

Appellant introduced in evidence a number of deeds carrying the chain of title backward from his immediate grantors to the year 1886, when B. M. Jones conveyed a tract of land containing 363 acres, more or less, to W. B. Reynolds. There is nothing in the record by which appellant can assert title to any land not embraced in the deed from Jones to Reynolds, yet the general description and the particular description by metes and bounds contained in that instrument fix the bed of the Russian river as the south and westerly boundary line of the property conveyed. One of the calls in the description runs "thence down Russian river near center." The land conveyed by the Jones deed is referred to as, and was a part of, the Alexander tract of the Sotoyome ranch. From various exhibits it is made to appear that the southerly and westerly boundary line of that tract is the Russian river. The 8.12 acres of land in controversy was never a part of the Alexander tract. The appellant sought to show that the Russian river is a changeable stream, and that its bed has shifted within recent years to such an extent that it has severed the 8.12 acres of gravel bar from his larger portion. The proof was vague and unsatisfactory, and was apparently disregarded by the trial court as not worthy of consideration. At most, it only tended to prove that the bed of the stream occasionally changed from bank to bank.

[1, 2] In tracing the title from Jones through various transfers to appellant to that portion of the property conveyed to Reynolds by Jones, now owned by the appellant, we find that the bed of the Russian river constantly appears in the various descriptions in the deeds, wherever appropriate, as the west or westerly boundary line. One of the monuments frequently referred to is "an iron pin near the bed of the Russian river." Another is "a station in the bed of the Russian river." We can reach no other conclusion than that when the Suttons deeded to appellant "all lands of the parties of the first part lying southwest of and adjoining the above-described premises, commonly called the gravel bar or waste land," such general description was intended to, and did, carry only the portion of the gravel bar to which the grantors had title, the westerly boundary line of which was the Russian river. To hold otherwise would be to give effect to a deed conveying more property than the grantors owned. It is elementary law that a deed is color of title only as to land actually described by it. 2 C. J. 177, par. 339. That being so, the deed from Sutton to appellant is color of title only as to land lying east of the river. Having gone beyond the limits of the land described in his deed, and claiming to hold adversely, he can only claim possession by bow and spear, without color of title. Consequently appellant's use and possession of and residence on the land on the east side of the river, the only land conveyed by his deed, did not amount to constructive possession of that portion of the gravel bar on the other side of the stream, owned by the respondent. Wheatley v. San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co., 169 Cal. 505, 516, 147 Pac. 135.

[3] The respondent, Mrs. Waldrop, satisfactorily proved good title in herself to a large tract of land on the west side of the Russian river, opposite the holdings of the appellant, and including the 8.12 acres of gravel bar in controversy. She was in actual possession of the property, had lived on a portion of it many years, and devoted the whole to the ordinary purposes for which it was adapted. Most of her land was fenced, but the part nearest the river, being gravel and sand and closely overgrown with willows, was of little use and was open. The respondent from time to time allowed parties to cut wood on this open land, and to cut the willow trees for props for supporting prune trees, and to take out sand and gravel. In other ways she exercised the ordinary acts of dominion of an owner over the property. She testified that she knew nothing of the hostile claim of the appellant, and did not know that he had ever attempted to exercise any acts of possession over the gravel bar on her side of the river. In rebuttal the appellant produced witnesses who testified that under permission from him, they had gone on the land, cut wood and prune props, and removed gravel. He himself claimed to have once planted a crop on a portion of the gravel bar. But these acts were isolated, some of them occurring before the five-year period relied upon by appellant, and from their nature were more clandestine than open and notorious. They were not exclusive, and did not amount to the continuous and uninterrupted possession which is necessary to constitute an adverse possession sufficient to bar the claim of one holding the record title. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586, 590, 49 Am. Rep. 100; Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508, 517; Mauldin v. Cox, 67 Cal. 387, 392, 7 Pac. 804; De Frieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 653, 663, 30 Pac. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 151.

[4] One of the requisites of title by adverse possession is the payment of all taxes for the statutory period. Appellant was assessed and paid taxes for the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive, upon 78 acres of land; but, as shown by the record, it was on land located on the easterly side of the Russian river. On the other hand, Mrs. Waldrop, the respondent, conclusively established the fact that she had been assessed and paid the taxes during that period on all the adjacent lands on the westerly side of the stream. Manifestly, appellant did not pay the taxes levied and assessed on the 8.12 acres of gravel bar involved in this controversy. One of the statutory requirements to the acquisition of a title by adverse possession was, therefore, not fulfilled. Mann v. Mann, 152 Cal. 23, 29, 91 Pac. 994. It was not sufficient for appellant to show that he had paid taxes on 31 acres of gravel bar land, supposing them to include the portion in dispute. He was bound to prove that he had actually paid the tax on the very property in controversy. Reynolds v. Williard, 80 Cal. 605, 608, 22 Pac. 262.

[5] A directed verdict is proper only when there is no substantial evidence tending to prove, in favor of the party upon whom the burden rests, all the controverted facts necessary to establish his case. But whenever, upon the whole evidence, the court would be compelled to set aside a finding of the jury as unsupported by the evidence, it should direct the verdict. It is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence, but to deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one. Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 473, 123 Pac. 267; Los An- geles F. & M. Co. v. Thompson, 117 Cal. 594, 601, 49 Pac. 714.

[6, 7] The general purpose of an application under the registration act, or Torrens Law, is to clear up and settle the title to land. It is a proceeding in the nature of an action to quiet title. 3 Tiffany on Real Property (2d Ed.) § 581, p. 2275; Peter v. City of Duluth, 119 Minn. 96, 103, 137 N. W. 390, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1044. The applicant for initial registration of a title, as a title in fee, must produce proof that he is possessed of such title, either by the production of a regular chain of conveyance from the general government, or by proof of the creation of a title by adverse possession, and evidence establishing title good as against the world is essential to warrant a decree awarding such registration. Glos v. Kingman, 207 Ill. 26, 34, 69 N. E. 632; Glos v. Holberg, 220 Ill. 167, 170, 77 N. E. 80. The applicant was unable to make the required showing. His claim of ownership of the 8.12 acres of disputed gravel bar was not entitled to be registered. There was no dispute as to the remainder of the land. The action of the trial court in directing the verdict was proper, and the finding of the jury correctly disposes of the rights of the applicant and the objector in the land, title to which was sought to be registered.

The judgment is affirmed.

CONRAD v. FOERST. (Civ. 3930.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 21, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. Nov. 17, 1921.)

1. Contracts —296—Authorized or trivial alterations do not bar recovery.

The rule that one who has acted by virtue of a written contract has no right of recovery unless he can show that he has completed his contract, or that completion had been waived or excused, has no application, where the contract stipulates that the owner or architect may request alterations or deviations, and the deviations were either ordered or were trivial in character.

2. Contracts —302—Recovery by contractor not barred by trivial defects.

A contractor, who has substantially performed his contract to construct a building, will not be held to have forfeited his right of recovery by reason of trivial defects or imperfections in the work performed.

3. Appeal and error —842(1)—What constitutes trivial imperfections in work under contract, question of fact and not reviewable.

What constitutes "trivial imperfections," which will not bar recovery by a contractor who has substantially performed his contract to construct a building, is a question of fact in each case, and the decision of the trial court upon proper evidence cannot be reviewed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Henry Conrad against Wilhelm Foerst. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Castelhun, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Leon Samuels and Chas. J. McDonnell, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. Action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Plaintiff contracted with defendant to furnish all the work on a two-story and basement frame building, with certain exceptions, for the sum of $4,644, payable at specified times as the work progressed. Plaintiff entered upon the performance of the contract, and thereafter, so it is alleged, completed all the conditions on his part to be performed. Notice of completion of work was filed, and thereafter the architect delivered to plaintiff a certificate that the last payment mentioned in the contract was due. This payment amounted to the sum of $1,164. Plaintiff also claimed the further sum of $112, alleged to be the reasonable value of certain extra work ordered by defendant. The sum of $600 was paid by defendant upon these claims, leaving a balance due thereon of $676, for which sum plaintiff filed his claim of lien. The amount not being paid, this action was brought to recover the same.

Defendant, answering, alleged that plaintiff had not performed all the conditions of the contract, and charged that the building was not completed in a good and workmanlike manner as required by the contract, and, further, that the building was never completed. The answer specifies 24 particulars wherein it is alleged that the plaintiff failed to construct the building in accordance with the plans and specifications. Then follows a cross-complaint by which defendant seeks to recover from plaintiff an amount in excess of one-half of the entire cost of the building for alleged defects and delay in its construction.

[1-3] The trial court found that all the alleged objections and defects were of a trivial nature, and that the same could be readily remedied and repaired at a cost not exceeding $30. After signing the findings and decision, however, the court ordered and the respondent stipulated that the judgment provided for by the findings should be reduced, and that the sum of $76 thereof should be remitted. Accordingly judgment was entered for the sum of $600, from which judgment defendant appeals.

It is here contended that, as the plaintiff never completed his contract in strict compliance with the plans, drawings, and specifications, it is insisted that the law will not for this reason permit him to recover on the contract, for the reason that his pleadings do not recite that such changes were either waived or justified by defendant's conduct. We are cited to the case of Herdal v. Sheehy, 173 Cal. 163, 150 Pac. 422, as supporting this contention. It is true that it is there held that one who has acted by virtue of a written contract has no right of recovery unless he can show that he has completed his contract or that completion had been waived or excused. This principle, however, has no application to the instant case. One of the provisions of the contract stipulated that should the owner or the architect at any time during the progress of the work request any alterations or deviations in the work provided for, either of them should be at liberty to do so, and that the same should in no manner affect the contract, but that the same should be held to be completed when the work was finished in accordance with the original plans as amended by such changes. There was a conflict in the evidence upon the subject as to the completion of the building according to the plans and specifications, but it is sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that the changes or omissions complained of were either ordered by the architect or were trivial in character. A contractor who has substantially performed his contract will not be held to have forfeited his right to recovery by reason of trivial defects or imperfections in the work performed. Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 541, 150 Pac. 769; Schindler v. Green, 149 Cal. 752, 87 Pac. 626. What constitutes "trivial imperfections" is a question of fact in each case, and the decision of the trial court upon proper evidence cannot be reviewed here. Bianchi v. Hughes, 124 Cal. 27, 56 Pac. 610.

Respondent also claims that the certificate issued by the architect, who had power to accept or reject the work, is binding and conclusive against appellant. He also claims that the lower court was without jurisdiction to settle appellant's bill of exceptions for the reason that it was presented too late. Considering the conclusion we have reached, a discussion of these questions can answer no useful purpose.

Judgment affirmed.

McMORRY et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR SUTTER COUNTY. (Civ. 2347.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Aug. 24, 1921. Rehearing Denied Sept. 23, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 20, 1921.)

1. Prohibition ☞10(2) — Defendants not granted writ against trial of other previously instituted actions involving same question.

Contractor's sureties, being sued by laborers and materialmen in actions transferred from one county to another, will not be granted writ of prohibition against first county entertaining jurisdiction in actions by the laborers and materialmen against the county, based on stop notice, on theory that same question was involved and that jurisdiction was first acquired in the action against the sureties, where one of the stop notice actions which had not been transferred to the second county was commenced prior to the commencement of actions against the sureties.

2. Prohibition ☞27—Petitioners seeking to prevent trial of actions on theory that other court first acquired jurisdiction have burden of proof.

On application for writ of prohibition to prevent court from trying certain actions on theory that other court acquired prior jurisdiction in actions involving same question, petitioners have the burden of showing that the other actions were filed before the actions the trial of which was sought to be prevented.

3. Courts ☞30—Superior court, by transfer of case to other county, did not divest itself of jurisdiction to try previously filed cases between other parties.

Superior court, by transfer of case to court of other county, did not divest itself of jurisdiction to try other cases between different parties which had been begun before complaints in the transferred actions were filed.

4. Prohibition ☞10(1)—Insufficiency of complaint not ground for issuance of writ to prevent trial.

Writ of prohibition will not be granted to prevent the trial of certain actions on the ground that the complaints of the plaintiffs in such actions did not state a cause of action, since the insufficiency of the complaint does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.

5. Prohibition ☞10(2)—Contractor's sureties held not entitled to writ to prevent trial of materialmen and laborers' stop notice action against county.

Highway contractor's sureties, being sued by laborers and materialmen, under St. 1919, p. 487, held not entitled to writ of prohibition to prevent the trial of actions by the laborers and materialmen against the county pursuant to stop notice given county under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, to subject reserve fund to payment of their claims, on theory that such stop notice actions involve the same question and that jurisdiction was first acquired in the actions on the bond, since the laborers and materialmen had no right to such fund, and the sureties, who claimed merely to be subrogated to the rights of laborers and materialmen, could have no right thereto.

6. Highways ☞113(4)—Statute providing for stop notice to owner inapplicable to materialmen and laborers with claims against public contractor.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, requiring owner to withhold amount due contractor on service of stop notice, and making fund withheld subject to claims of laborers and materialmen by whom notice was given, held inapplicable to claims of laborers and materialmen against contractor constructing public highway, required to give bond under St. 1919, p. 487.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

7. Prohibition ☞10(1)—Not granted unless lower court is proceeding in excess of its lawful jurisdiction.

Writ of prohibition directed against superior court to prevent trial of certain actions will not be granted in the absence of a showing that the superior court is proceeding in excess of its lawful jurisdiction.

Application for writ of prohibition by W. H. McMorry and another against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Sutter. Denied.

Thomas B. Leeper and Robert H. Schwab, both of Sacramento, for petitioners.

Arthur Coats, Dist. Atty., and A. H. Hewitt, both of Yuba City, and Harry Deirup, of Chico, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The petition shows that in 1920 one D. C. Howard entered into four separate contracts with the county of Sutter for the construction of four different highways in said county; that bonds were given by said contractor as required by the statute (Stats. 1919, p. 487), and that petitioners herein were the sureties on said undertaking; that said contractor failed to complete his contracts and failed to pay a large number of laborers and materialmen who furnished labor and material for said construction; that said laborers and materialmen thereafter filed their respective claims as provided by said act and brought suit therefor against said sureties in the superior court of the county of Sutter; that subsequently said actions were transferred to the superior court of the county of Sacramento for trial; that said laborers and materialmen also served upon the county of Sutter a "stop notice" or "withhold notice," as provided by section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the same claims, and have commenced actions against said county to subject to the payment of their claims said reserve fund withheld by the county from the money due upon said contracts; that petitioners are not parties to said actions against said county, but they are interested in how said money is paid out; that, if said actions against the county are prosecuted separately from the actions upon said bonds, then petitioners will be deprived of their right to preserve said fund for the payment of said claims for which petitioners are liable; that said actions against the sureties were commenced and transferred to Sacramento county prior to the commencement of the actions against the county; that "the Commercial Bank of Durham, a corporation, and the First National Bank of Yuba City, a corporation, have filed their separate complaints in intervention in said stop notice actions, in which they allege they are the owners of the balance withheld by said county on said contracts by reason of an assignment thereof from said contractor, D. C. Howard; that, if said banks were permitted in said actions to recover said money so withheld on said contracts, these petitioners will be denied their rights to have said money applied upon the claims upon which they are being sued; * * * that, if said actions on said claims and on said stop notices are heard and determined by one court, it will avoid a multiplicity of suits and will save all the parties to said action the labor and costs of prosecuting two actions for the same thing."

The foregoing statement comprises all the material facts that appear in the petition, although there are many allegations of legal conclusions, which we deem unnecessary to set out. The theory of petitioners is that the vital question in all this litigation is as to the proper disposition or payment of said reserve fund, in other words, to whom it should be paid by the county, and that two different courts of concurrent jurisdiction have before them in different actions for adjudication this important controversy, and that in such situation the court first acquiring jurisdiction has the exclusive right to dispose of the whole matter. In support of their contention as to the law of the case they cite: State v. Tallman, 29 Wash. 411, 69 Pac. 1115; Spiller v. Wells, 96 Va. 598, 32 S. E. 46, 70 Am. St. Rep. 878; State v. McClure, 17 N. M. 694, 133 Pac. 1063, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1110; Adams v. Tri-City, 124 Va. 473, 98 S. E. 647; Ryan v. Donley, 69 Neb. 623, 96 N. W. 234; State v. Davis, (Mo. App.) 190 S. W. 964; Reugger v. De Breueys, 146 La. 283, 83 South. 556; State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 43 S. E. 153, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932; Sangamon v. Eminger, 257 Ill. 281, 100 N. E. 906; Keefe v. Dist. Court, 16 Wyo. 381, 94 Pac. 459.

We deem it unnecessary to comment upon these decisions. It may be admitted that the rule is as stated by petitioners, and that prohibition may issue in such cases; but we may add that this remedy is allowed, not for the reason, as is generally true, that the other court has no jurisdiction, but the practice is based upon necessity and comity, and so it is held:

"That when the object of the action requires the control and dominion of the property involved in the litigation, that court which first acquires possession, or that dominion which is equivalent, draws to itself the exclusive right to dispose of it, for the purposes of its jurisdiction." Heidritter v. Oilcloth Co., 112 U. S. 294, 5 Sup. Ct. 135, 28 L. Ed. 729.

[1] The application of this principle, however, to the situation herein results in the undoing of petitioners. This follows from the fact that the superior court of Sutter county was first in time as to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It does not so appear by the petition, but in accordance with the allegations of respondent's answer and the agreement of counsel at the oral argument the facts are these: The action of Diamond Match Company against petitioners on the bond was begun in the superior court of Sutter county on November 29, 1920, and it is still pending therein; no application having been made for a transfer to Sacramento county. On the same day the said company brought an action against said county of Sutter on said stop notice, and it is still pending therein. The action of the Standard Oil Company against the county of Sutter on said stop notice was commenced in the superior court of said county on December 16, 1920, and is still pending therein. These actions were all commenced before any of the actions that were transferred to the superior court of Sacramento county, and, if it can be said that the latter actions involved the proper disposition of said reserve fund, with equal propriety can the same thing be affirmed of said action of Diamond Match Company against petitioners, and with still greater reason may it be said that the superior court of Sutter county acquired dominion over said fund by reason of said actions against the county.

[2] Again, in reference to the actions on the bond which were transferred we may notice this: Butcher v. McMorry and Kaster was commenced on February 8, 1921, but on the same day the same plaintiff brought an action against the county on said stop notice. It does not appear which action was filed first, but, of course, the burden is upon petitioners, and we must therefore conclude that the stop notice action is entitled to precedence. The same thing may be said of the two actions filed by Murphy on January 5, 1921.

[3] Moreover, the superior court of Sacramento county did not acquire jurisdiction to try any of these actions until the order of transfer was made, which was subsequent to the filing of all the complaints in Sutter county. But, conceding that, for the purposes of this case, its jurisdiction would relate back to the time when said actions were begun, it is manifest that by said order of transfer the superior court of Sutter county did not divest itself of jurisdiction to try the other cases between different parties which had been begun before the complaints in said transferred actions were filed. After the transfer the superior court of Sacramento county could have no greater jurisdiction than if the actions had been originally brought in said court; but, if so brought, under the rule already stated, they would be subject to said prior actions commenced in Sutter county.

[4] Petitioners claim that the so-called "stop notice" actions should not be allowed to weigh in the proceeding, for the reason that, under the decisions of the appellate courts of the state, the laborers and materialmen have no interest in said reserve fund, and therefore their complaints against the county fail to state a cause of action. Adamson v. Paonessa, 179 Pac. 880; Hunt v. Continental Nat. Bank, 188 Pac. 300; Slayden v. O'Dea, 182 Cal. 500, 189 Pac. 1066; Hunt v. Empire Securities Co., 194 Pac. 744. In these cases it is held that—

"Section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to contracts for the improvements of streets or highways, and that therefore a stop notice given pursuant to that section, under such a contract, does not have the effect of sequestering the funds in the hands of the person who is charged with their disbursement." and that the rights of the assignee of the contractor in and to said fund, where the assignment precedes the contracts for labor and material, are superior to any claim of the laborer or materialman.

As to this contention, however, it may be observed that the insufficiency of the complaint as to its allegations does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to try the action. Besides, if such ground be tenable, it must operate to defeat this proceeding by petitioners. This is true for the reason that the pleadings herein show that they also have no interest in said funds. They are claiming by right of subrogation, but no such right exists, as they have not paid any of the claims of the laborers or materialmen. But if they had paid any such claims they would be subrogated only to such right as existed in favor of such claimant, which, under the said decisions, does not embrace any of said fund in face of the prior assignment of the contractor. Not having made such payment, the sureties could have no greater claim to said fund than the principal, who was the contractor, but he, as we have seen, has no interest in said fund, having assigned it to interveners.

[5, 6] From the foregoing it is apparent that the sureties need not concern themselves about the trial of the actions against the county of Sutter as to the application of said fund. As said fund cannot be used to reduce their liability on their bond, they are not interested in said actions, and the question of superior jurisdiction is really of no practical importance to petitioners. Their position is based upon an erroneous construction of section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure and of said statute of 1919 under which the bonds were executed. Under the decisions in this state, as we have seen, said section of the Code does not afford any relief to laborers and materialmen in a case like this where the work is done upon a public highway. It may also be said that under said statute of 1919 the bond—

"must provide that if the contractor, person, company, or corporation, or his or its subcontractor, fails to pay for any materials, provisions, provender or other supplies, or teams, used in, upon, for or about the performance of the work contracted to be done, or for any work or labor done thereon of any kind, that the surety or sureties will pay the same in an amount not exceeding the sum specified in the bond, and also, in case suit is brought upon such bond, a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court."

It is quite apparent that this bond is entirely for the benefit of the laborers and materialmen, and they must depend for their compensation upon the personal responsibility of the contractor and sureties.

As to the sureties, the bond does not obligate them to complete the work, nor does it make them responsible for the fulfillment of the obligations of the contractor to the state or the county. It follows that, as sureties, they are not authorized to complete an abandoned contract, nor can they claim any interest in the fund, which is reserved primarily for the purpose of securing the completion of said contract and saving the county or state from loss. Under such circumstances, there would be also, of course, no reason for the principle of estoppel to operate in favor of said sureties as against one to whom the contractor has assigned his claim for value. It may be added that we are not here concerned with any claim that the county may urge to any portion of said fund by reason of having to complete the work.

The well-considered cases from Oregon (Derby v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 87 Or. 34, 169 Pac. 500, and Wasco County v. New England Equitable Insurance Co., 88 Or. 465, 172 Pac. 126, L. R. A. 1918D, 732, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 656) are so essentially different from this as not to impair the confidence we feel in the conclusion which we have reached.

The order to show cause is discharged, and the writ is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Action by Archibald Heesom Walker against the Harbor Business Blocks Company. From a judgment for plaintiff for recovery of the money paid as price of certain lots, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Riley, of San Francisco, for appellant.

B. M. Jackson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against it in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover on his own behalf, and as the assignee of his sister-in-law, money paid by them under contracts with the defendant for the purchase of two lots, on the ground that the defendant had breached the contracts, in that it had failed to put in street improvements as agreed within the time specified in the contracts.

[1] This case has been before the Supreme Court of this state on a prior appeal, and the opinion of that court appears in 181 Cal. 773, 186 Pac. 356. A reading of that opinion, which is the law of this case, reveals the fact that it covers all matters disclosed by the evidence in the present record. The legal questions involved are discussed by the Supreme Court from every possible angle, and it would, therefore, be a useless proceeding for us to indulge herein in a similar discussion of the same legal principles.

Upon both appeals, the defendant made the contention that the action was prematurely brought. Upon the former appeal, that argument was answered by the Supreme Court by pointing out that the president of the defendant corporation, on its behalf, had made statements to plaintiff and his assignor which were tantamount to a declaration that the corporation could not and would not perform its obligations under the contract within the time prescribed therein, and the well-settled rule was applied that the failure or refusal to perform an obligation assumed expressly or by implication, or the voluntary abandonment of a contract, * * * gives the obligee an immediate right of action for the breach and to rescind. To meet this situation, in the second trial of the action, the president of the defendant company testified that he had offered to perform the obligations of the defendant corporation under the contracts, but had stated to plaintiff that to do so would be inadvisable, and that the plaintiff had acquiesced in this. The most that can be said for the defendant as a result of this testimony of its president is that a conflict is created in the evidence, which was resolved in favor of plaintiff by the trial court upon this point. For plaintiff testified that the president of defendant corporation had told him, on May 17, 1917, that it would take about three years to do the work required by the contract. The time limited for doing the work expired on June 1, 1917. The defendant had had three and one-half years previous to June 1, 1917, within which to do the work called for by their contracts, and the work had not been done, and, indeed, the record shows that up to the time of the trial (May, 1920) the work had not been done.

Upon the question of waiver by the plaintiff and his assignor of the conditions of the contracts requiring the defendant to put improvements upon this property, the record discloses ample evidence justifying the application of the language and holding of the Supreme Court on this point on the former appeal.

[2] Numerous technical objections are made by appellant, such as the objection that the trial court admitted in evidence a copy of a letter to the defendant by the attorney for the plaintiff upon an insufficient showing. It is urged that the letter was improperly admitted because the witness, who was the attorney for the plaintiff, merely testified that—

"On the 18th of May, I addressed a letter to the Harbor Business Block Company, reading as follows."

It is urged that no presumption of receipt follows from "addressing" a letter, and that the witness should have stated that he placed the letter in the mail. The objection made to the testimony was general, and to the effect that the letter was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. No point was made that the statement of the witness was ambiguous and insufficient in this particular, and it is perfectly clear that, had the point been raised, it would have been met at the trial. There was no attempt by the defendant to deny the receipt of this letter. But conceding an irregularity in the admission of this evidence, the merits of this case are so overwhelmingly in favor of the plaintiff, and the entire record, taken as a whole, so clearly demonstrates that justice has been done by the judgment, that no error in the admission or rejection of evidence, or in the matter of pleading or procedure, would warrant this court in reversing this judgment. Section 4½, art. 6, Const. Cal. The remaining matters urged by the appellant are either specifically covered by the opinion of the Supreme Court on the prior appeal or they are covered by the salutary provisions of the Constitution of this state referred to above.

The judgment is affirmed.

PRODUCERS' HAY CO. v. HARNEY.
(Civ. 3908.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 23, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨684(2) — Refusal to grant continuance cannot be considered where not shown in the record.

Where the papers contained in the record do not show that a motion for continuance was made, or the grounds of the motion, or the contents of the moving papers, or the ruling of the trial court thereon, a refusal to grant a continuance cannot be considered on appeal.

2. Appeal and error ⇨714(4)—Statements of attorneys outside record may not be considered by appellate court.

Statement of attorneys in briefs concerning a motion for a continuance not contained in the record may not be considered by the appellate court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nstrand, Judge.

Action by the Producers' Hay Company against Joseph G. Harney. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Clay, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Albert Picard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant for the sum of $1,081.50 for a balance due upon a book account for goods sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant answered the complaint, and a trial was had by the trial court sitting without a jury in the absence of the defendant and of the attorney for the defendant. The judgment went for the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the record on appeal the appellant has presented to this court copies of the complaint, the answer to the complaint, the judgment, the county clerk's certificate to the judgment roll, the defendant's notice of appeal, the defendant's request for a transcript, and the county clerk's certificate to his transcript. The appellant has also produced the reporter's notes duly certified.

[1, 2] The appellant complains because he was not granted a continuance of the date of the trial. The point is one that we are not at liberty to consider. The papers contained in the record, and which we have enumerated above, do not show to this court that a motion for a continuance was made, or the grounds of the motion, or the contents of the moving papers, or the ruling of the trial court thereon. The attorneys in their briefs have stated certain facts which they respectively claim occurred, but this court may not consider such statements so made outside of the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

MEYER v. WHITE.

WHITE v. MEYER.

(Civ. 3937.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 22, 1921.)

1. Sales ⇨389—Findings in action for breach of contract held inconsistent.

In a seller's action for breach of contract, findings that the seller offered to deliver goods and performed all the conditions of the agreement on his part to be performed, and was at all times ready, able, and willing to deliver, but that the buyer, in violation of his contract and without just cause, refused to accept the goods, and that their reasonable market value at the time of the offer of delivery was less than the selling price, and a further finding that the seller had not suffered damage in any amount, and was not entitled to recover damages, were inconsistent.

2. Appeal and error — 1169(7)—Judgment reversed when findings on appeal on judgment roll are contradictory.

On appeal on the judgment roll alone, where the findings are so contradictory and uncertain as to leave the appellate court in doubt as to their meaning, the judgment will be reversed.

3. Appeal and error — 1172(5), 1178(6)—Judgment reversed for further evidence and findings on question of damages.

Where plaintiff sued for the price of goods sold and damages for refusal to accept other goods and recovered judgment on the first count, but not on the second, though the trial court made findings entitling him to recover, also making an inconsistent finding that he had not suffered any damages, the judgment refusing relief under the second count will be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below to take evidence and make a proper finding as to damages.

Albert White, in pro. per.

KERRIGAN, J. Action for goods sold and delivered, and also for damages. Plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant agreed to purchase 48 pieces of cloth known as velour at the agreed price of $4.17½ a yard for each yard contained in the 48 pieces; and also 40 pieces of broadcloth at the agreed price of $4.12½ for each yard contained therein. In pursuance of this agreement plaintiff alleges that he delivered to defendant, and defendant accepted as part of the goods so contracted for, 30 pieces of velour, containing 1,598¾ yards, and 4 pieces of broadcloth containing 230½ yards. The purchase price of the portion so delivered amounted to the sum of $7,626.64, and defendant paid on account thereof the sum of $3,000, leaving a balance due of the sum of $4,626.64. This amount constitutes the first count of the complaint. By a second count plaintiff alleges that thereafter he offered to deliver to defendant under the terms of the contract an additional amount of 5 pieces of velour, containing 299¾ yards, and also 5 pieces of broadcloth containing 263¾ yards, both being tendered at the agreed price. Defendant, so it is alleged, refused to accept these further deliveries; and plaintiff claims that on account of such refusal he has been damaged in the sum of $709.59. Defendant by answer and cross-complaint claimed that the goods sold and delivered to him were not up to sample, and he prayed for the return of the sum of $3,000 paid by him under the contract. Relief on both counts was prayed for by plaintiff in the sum of $5,336.23. Judgment, however, was rendered in his favor for the full amount prayed for in the first cause of action, but the court refused to award any damages under the second count. Plaintiff appeals from that portion of the judgment denying these damages.

Upon the second cause of action the trial court found that plaintiff, in pursuance of his agreement, offered to deliver the 10 pieces of cloth as alleged, but that defendant, in violation of his contract and without any just cause or reason, refused to accept the same. It also found that the reasonable market value of the velour was only $3 per yard, and the broadcloth $2.85 per yard at the time of the offer of delivery. Further findings are to the effect that plaintiff performed all the conditions of the agreement on his part to be performed, and was at all times ready, able, and willing to deliver all the merchandise in accordance with the agreement.

The court further found, however, that plaintiff had not suffered damage in the amount claimed or in any other sum by reason of the failure and neglect of the defendant to receive, accept, and pay for the goods mentioned, and was not entitled to recover damages from the defendant on account thereof.

[1, 2] The findings are therefor inconsistent. We are unable to account for this inconsistency; the appeal being on the judgment roll alone. Under such circumstances, and where, as here, the findings are so contradictory and uncertain as to leave the appellate court in doubt as to their meaning, the judgment will be reversed. Sloss v. Allman, 64 Cal. 47, 30 Pac. 574.

[3] The appeal is directed solely to that portion of the judgment refusing damages under the second count of the complaint. The judgment on the first count will therefore stand, and that portion of the judgment refusing plaintiff the relief sought under his second count will be and the same is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below to take evidence and make a proper finding upon the question of damages. Mayberry v. Whittier, 144 Cal. 322, 78 Pac. 16; 2 Hayne, N. T. & App. p. 1692 et seq.

Reisner & Honey, of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. W. Hubbard and Hubbard & Johnson, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. [1] This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action to quiet title. There were two trials of this cause. Upon the first trial thereof the court on October 10, 1916, rendered and entered its judgment in the plaintiff's favor, but thereafter and on January 2, 1917, made an order granting the defendant's motion for a new trial. No appeal was or could have been taken from this order, since appeals from orders granting motions for new trials in cases of this character were abolished by the amendment of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure made in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 20). A retrial was had of the cause, at the conclusion of which the court on May 19, 1920, rendered and entered its judgment in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff did not move for a new trial, but appealed directly from this judgment, and the only point which the appellant urges upon this appeal is that the trial court was in error in making its order granting the defendant's motion for a new trial after the first judgment in the case.

[2] It is unnecessary to consider the merits of this contention, since the order of the trial court vacating the first judgment and granting a new trial is not reviewable upon an appeal from the second judgment rendered and entered upon the retrial of the cause, for the reasons fully set forth by the Supreme Court in its recent decision of Furlow Pressed Brick Co. v. Balboa L. & W. Co., 200 Pac. 625, reading in part as follows:

"While the second sentence of section 956, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1915, providing that the court may, on an appeal from the judgment, review any order on motion for a new trial, is broad enough, considered alone, to justify the court in reviewing the order granting the new trial in every case, we think it apparent from the entire context and purpose of section 956, taken in connection with the scheme for appeal adopted by the Legislature in 1915, that it was not intended that any order granting a new trial should be reviewed unless it affects the second judgment and where the entire case is tried de novo, the order granting a new trial could not affect the judgment, however much it might affect the parties to the action."

No other point being urged upon this appeal, the judgment is affirmed.

FEDERAL MUT. LIABILITY INS. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 9753.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1921.)

Master and servant §373—Injury by coemployee engaged in play held not one arising "out of and in course of employment."

Where employee of packing plant engaged in putting grapes into a machine threw grape at other employee, which hit and injured the eye of a third employee engaged in sweeping the floor, the injury to such third employee was not an injury arising "out of and in the course of the employment" within the Workmen's Compensation Act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

In Bank.

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) by Gus Farsais for compensation for injuries. Opposed by the San Joaquin Packing Company, employer, and the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company, insurer. Award for employee by Industrial Accident Commission, and insurer brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Cooley, Crowley & Lachmund, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco (Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a petition in certiorari to annul an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Gus Farsais and against the petitioner, who was the insurance carrier for the San Joaquin Packing Company, the employer of said Farsais.

At the time of the injury Farsais was working for the packing company, engaged in sweeping the floor of a part of the premises where other employees were putting grapes into a machine as a part of their duty. While Farsais was at work an employee threw some grapes at another employee, and, his aim being bad, he missed the other person, and one of the grapes hit Farsais in the eye, thereby causing his injury. Upon the evidence the Commission made a finding that—

The injury occurred "in the course of and arising out of his employment, as follows: One employee threw some grapes at another employee, and one of the grapes struck the defendant Gus Farsais in the left eye, resulting in the permanent disability hereinafter described."

There was nothing in the nature of the employment in which any workmen present were engaged which required any of them to throw grapes at another. The act was either a playful or malicious act of one employee toward another, having no connection whatever with the work in which he was engaged.

The case is not distinguishable from Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164, and Fishering v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 691, 158 Pac. 215. It comes within the general rule of the cases known as the "skylarking" cases or "horse-play" cases. The court did not issue this writ with any desire to overrule those cases. At the time the alternative writ was issued the court had ordered a writ issued in a case previously filed, entitled General Accident F. & L. A. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission (S. F. No. 9633) 200 Pac. 419, in which an opinion was rendered on August 15, 1921, and it was desired to consider that case fully prior to a decision upon the present case. The line of demarcation between cases which come within the definition of an injury "arising out of and in the course of the employment" and those which do not is of necessity a narrow one, and it is not always easy to distinguish the exact point of division without careful consideration. In the case last referred to the employer became engaged in a controversy, amounting to a quarrel, arising immediately out of his business, and while so engaged and before the matter was concluded and because of such controversy he fired a shot at one of the men engaged therein, missing him, but which glanced and hit one of his own employees, thus causing the injury complained of. It is evident that the act which caused the injury was one which arose directly out of the business in which the injured person was employed. As the court said in the opinion in that case, the injury "was received in the course of a series of incidents which had their initiative in a business transaction of his employer, and while the latter was actively and justifiably engaged in defending his business." This was held to be an injury arising out of his employment. In the present case the throwing of grapes had no connection whatever with the general business carried on in the establishment, nor with the particular work of any employee therein. The respondent concedes that the decision of the Commission is inconsistent with the decisions of this court first above cited. It is contended in its behalf that those cases should be overruled. The argument is that in every establishment where a number of workmen are required to be near to each other in the course of their employment for hours at a time "some frolicking is inevitable. It occurs in every plant. The industry, by bringing workmen together in numbers exposes its workmen to this hazard, which is just as much a hazard incident to the employment and 'arising out of the employment' as the danger of slipping upon floors, colliding with other workmen, falling down stairs," and the like.

Although this line of reasoning has support in the decisions of some of the other states, it is contrary to our own, and it seems to us to be an unwarranted extension of the meaning of the controlling language of the Constitution and of the statute defining the character of injuries that are to be compensated out of the earnings of the business in which they occur. In the Coronado Beach Co. Case we said:

"The accidents arising out of the employment of the person injured are those in which it is possible to trace the injury to the nature of the employee's work, or to the risks to which the employer's business exposes the employee. The accident must be one resulting from a risk reasonably incident to the employment."

And after a full review of many authorities on the subject it was held that the injury to the claimant caused by the act of a fellow servant in "tickling" him while he was at work did not "arise out of" his employment. Such injuries have no connection whatever with the work the employee is doing at the time, or with the work the mischievous employee was engaged to do, or with any business carried on in the place of employment, or with any peculiar construction or characteristics of the place of employment for which the employer could be held responsible and which creates "a risk reasonably incident to the employment." All this is true of the case at bar. It is therefore to be decided in accordance with the same rule.

The award is annulled.

FRAZEE et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(L. A. 6601.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1921.)

1. Certiorari 62—Submission set aside when petition not sufficiently definite.

On certiorari to review an order of the railroad commission fixing rates to be charged by a water company, submitted on the petition and demurrers, where the petition positively alleges that the company is a private corporation and not a public utility, and that no part of the water has ever been dedicated to public use, but also contains matters of detail concerning the relation of the corporation to the owners of land supplied with water requiring further explanation, the submission will be set aside to permit an amendment.

2. Partition 116(1)—Waters and water courses 39—Partition did not affect ownership or character of ownership of water rights.

Where prior to partition an entire rancho was riparian to a stream which flowed into it, the riparian rights in the stream attached to every part of the rancho, and after the partition the proportional rights in the waters continued to be attached to the respective parcels of land set apart in severalty to the different owners, the rights being in their nature riparian rights after the partition the same as before, the character of the water right not changing from a riparian right to a right appurtenant even if the particular tract did not abut upon the stream, and such rights were covered by a subsequent conveyance of the land.

In Bank.

Petition for certiorari by Arthur W. Frazee and others against the Railroad Commission of the State of California and the Citizens' Water Company of San Jacinto to review an order of the Commission fixing water rates. Submission set aside, and 60 days given petitioners to amend.

Ray W. Bruce, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Williams & Williams, Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, and Hugh Gordon, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is a petition by 48 persons claiming to be entitled to receive water for irrigation and domestic use upon their lands from the Citizens' Water Company of San Jacinto, to review an order of the Railroad Commission purporting to fix the rates to be charged by said Citizens' Water Company for the delivery of the water to the respective petitioners and others.

The Commission found that the Citizens' Water Company of San Jacinto was engaged in the administration of a public use, being the delivery of water to the persons owning land under its canals and conduits. The petition alleges that the Citizens' Water Company is not a public utility; that the water it controls has never been dedicated to public use, but is attached to and a part of the respective tracts of land owned by the petitioners, and other persons who had theretofore been receiving said water. The main, if not the only, question presented is whether or not the said Citizens' Water Company is a public utility, and whether or not the water it controls is subject to public use. The court, upon the filing of the petition, instead of issuing an alternative writ of review requiring a return to the petition, issued an order to show cause why such writ should not be issued. The defendants have filed separate demurrers to the petition upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to entitle the petitioners to the relief prayed for.

[1] The petition contains the positive allegation that the Citizens' Water Company is a private corporation, and never has been a public utility, and that no part of the water in question has ever been dedicated to public use. If these allegations are to be given full effect, it would follow, as a matter of law, that the Railroad Commission would have no jurisdiction to interfere with the business of the Citizens' Water Company or with the rights of the petitioners to receive the water, or the rates to be paid therefor. The petition, however, contains some matters of detail which appear to us to require further explanation by averments in the petition, and, therefore, we deem it best to state our views on the subject, and thereupon to require the petitioners to file an amended petition before further proceedings are had in the case.

The petition alleges that the lands to which the Citizens' Water Company delivers the water are all included within a Mexican grant containing some 50,000 acres, known as the Rancho San Jacinto Viejo; that along and into said rancho there naturally flows a stream known as the San Jacinto river; that, in the year 1882, a partition of said rancho was made between the owners thereof, successors of the original grantee, in the superior court of the county of San Diego, and by the judgment of partition in said action the said rancho was divided into 17 parcels, each of which was set apart to a different party in said action, and it was adjudged that each owner of the respective parcels should have a right of way for a ditch or conduit across the land of any other owner lying between him and said stream, for the purpose of securing and using upon equal terms with the owners of allotments abutting upon the said stream, the waters thereof for irrigation and other uses upon the land so allotted to him, and that the petitioners, respectively, are owners of portions of the land so allotted in said partition and of the water rights allotted thereto by said judgment.

[2] It follows from the facts so alleged that, prior to said partition, the entire rancho San Jacinto Viejo was riparian to the stream, and that riparian rights in the stream attached to every part thereof, and that after said partition the proportional rights in the waters continued to be attached to the respective parcels of land set apart in severalty to the different owners. These water rights so attached to these several parcels of land were, in their nature, riparian rights after the partition the same as before. Such a partition "did not change the character of the water right belonging to such land from a riparian right to a right appurtenant," even if the particular tract did not abut upon the stream. The right to the water still remained a riparian right and "parcel of the land itself." The result would be that a subsequent conveyance of the land would carry with it the water right belonging to the particular tract conveyed. Rose v. Mesmer, 142 Cal. 328, 75 Pac. 905; Verdugo, etc., Co. v. Verdugo, 152 Cal. 663, 93 Pac. 1021; Strong v. Baldwin, 154 Cal. 157, 97 Pac. 178, 129 Am. St. Rep. 149; Copeland v. Fairview, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 161, 131 Pac. 119. It will be seen that the petition by these allegations shows that the respective petitioners are the owners of parcels of the land so partitioned, and that by virtue of such ownership they are the owners of the water right in the said stream attached thereto by the judgment in partition, unless in some way their right to the water has been divested and the water right has been segregated and separated from the land. The petition contains nothing to show that such separation ever occurred, nor does it show that it did not occur. In order to bring about a positive issue, the petition should allege facts bearing upon this point.

The petition then proceeds to allege that, in 1890, a corporation under the name San Jacinto Water Company was organized, and that an agreement was made by the petitioners or their predecessors in interest whereby that corporation agreed to take water from said river, build the necessary diverting works and distributing system, and deliver the same to the petitioners or their predecessors in interest, upon payment by the said petitioners and predecessors of a sum of money for a so-called "water certificate contract" in sufficient numbers to supply the funds with which to build said works and system, and to pay thereafter a stated annual amount for the water so delivered; that this plan was carried out, the certificates were purchased and paid for as arranged, and with the money derived therefrom said corporation built the said works and distributing system, and thereafter furnished water under said arrangement to the petitioners and their predecessors in interest, until August, 1910. These certificates purported to be signed by the secretary and president of the company, and each declared that the holder thereof was entitled to receive an amount of water equal to one-fifth of an inch to each acre of land mentioned in such certificate for seven months in the year, upon payment of $3 per acre per year. It further declared that the interest represented by the certificate should—“not become appurtenant to or pass by voluntary act or by operation of law with any land upon which the water represented may be used; transfer hereof shall only be made by surrender of this certificate to the company and reissuance of a new certificate.”

None of them was signed by any of the landowners. These allegations concerning the disposition and distribution of the water by said water company are uncertain as to the title to the water. It is obvious that the company could not become possessed of title to the water without a conveyance or a transfer in some manner from the landowners, since the title was vested in the latter by virtue of the partition decree aforesaid. There was apparently the not uncommon situation of a large number of landowners, each entitled to a small quantity of water from a common source, finding it necessary to devise some means by which distribution of their respective quantities of water could be made by some common system carried on at the joint expense of all the persons interested. Under these circumstances, there have been various methods devised for accomplishing this result, and different results upon the title to the water follow, depending upon the mode adopted for that purpose. In Hildreth v. Montecito, etc., Co., 139 Cal. 29, 72 Pac. 398, the court said:

“Where a number of persons owning land are each entitled to take water from a common stream or source, for use upon their respective tracts of land, either by virtue of an appropriation under the Civil Code or by prescription, or as riparian owners, the water right of each is individual and several, and must be considered as private property, and not the subject of public use, although the persons so owning interests in the stream are very numerous and their lands include a large neighborhood. The owners of such water rights may make a joint diversion, and may carry the water from the point of diversion in a common conduit, made with common funds, and in such a case, in the absence of a special contract to the contrary, they will be the owners in common of the diversion works and conduits; but the respective water rights will remain several, and will remain private property. If the persons owning such rights see fit to form a corporation, and delegate to such corporation the work of making the diversion and distribution, and of constructing and keeping in repair the dams and conduits, reserving to themselves their rights in the water, * * * they do not thereby dedicate or appropriate to public use the water thus reserved and used by them. The corporation becomes merely their agent for the purpose of serving their several interests, so far as they may be served by a common system of works, the water remaining the subject of individual ownership and private use as before.”

Examples of this method of serving a common use through a corporate agent may be found in several of our decisions. Descriptions of such systems are set forth in Arroyo Ditch, etc., Co. v. Bequette, 149 Cal. 546, 87 Pac. 10, and Walnut I. D. v. Burke, 158 Cal. 170, 110 Pac. 518. It has often been held that the water so distributed by such corporate means is not dedicated to public use, unless there is some express or implied declaration of such dedication emanating from the parties who own the land and the water. Burr v. Maclay, etc., Co., 160 Cal. 280, 116 Pac. 715; Garrison v. North Pasadena, etc., Co., 163 Cal. 239, 124 Pac. 1009; Thayer v. Cal. Dev. Co., 164 Cal. 130, 128 Pac. 21; Franscioni v. Soledad, etc., Co., 170 Cal. 225, 149 Pac. 161. In Franscioni v. Soledad, etc., Co. it was said that—

“A corporation owning a water supply and engaged in distributing it to persons to whose land it has agreed to deliver it for irrigation, upon a use which is private, and not public, or general,” could “with the consent of the owners of the rights to receive such water, change the use from a private and particular use to a public use, so as to make the service and terms of delivery subject to regulation and control by public authority,” and that, if this was done, “all the parties concerned and consenting thereto, including the corporation engaged in the distribution, will thereafter be bound to conform to such rates, rules, and regulations for the service as may be established by the public body thereunto duly authorized.”

The evidence in that case showed that the change suggested in the foregoing passage had been made, so far as the parties to the action were concerned, but it was said that the judgment in the action would be of no force with respect to other parties owning lands and receiving water from the company. The petition herein is bare of allegations with respect to the title of the water company aforesaid to the water. It does not allege any conveyance or transfer by the owners to the company, nor any submission by the company or the water users to the authority of any public body to fix rates, or anything indicating a change in the character of the use from a private use to a public use. The facts alleged are not inconsistent with an arrangement between the company and the landowners that the company should take charge of the water, build works with the money furnished by the landowners, and thereafter, as agent of the landowners, and as trustee in charge of their property, namely, the water, distributing the water to them annually, keeping the system in repair, and receiving from them the sums mentioned in the certificates aforesaid as compensation for the service. They are inconsistent with the theory that the company was administering a public use, since it does not appear that it ever acquired title to the water, and it does appear that the water belonged to the respective owners of the land. In the Francioni Case, it is to be noted the water company was the owner of the water in controversy; that it alone disputed the fact of the dedication to public use. The petition should more fully state the facts in regard to these propositions. It does not state or purport to set forth any of the powers of the said corporation, or the dealings between it and the petitioners with respect to the water and the title thereto, if any there were.

It further appears from the petition that, in August, 1910, another company was organized, namely, the Citizens' Water Company of San Jacinto, the defendant herein; that thereupon said San Jacinto Valley Water Company sold, conveyed, and delivered to the Citizens' Water Company of San Jacinto, defendant herein, all the property then owned by it, consisting of said water system, water, water rights, lands, rights of way, and personal property used in connection therewith, subject to all outstanding water certificate contracts, theretofore issued by said San Jacinto Valley Water Company; that thereafter said defendant company purchased a large body of land, all of which was riparian to said stream, and capable of being supplied with water therefrom, and from said system, by extending said system and taking out more water from the stream; that this purchase was made by means of and in the name of another corporation known as the San Jacinto Land Company, the stockholders of which were the same persons as those owning the stock of said Citizens' Water Company, and having the identical proportional interests in said stock; that the water company then issued to said land company sufficient water certificate contracts to cover the lands owned by the land company, and thereafter some of said lands and water certificates were sold together to the petitioners, and other parts of said land were sold to other persons, with water certificate contracts attached thereto, by said land company, and thereby enough money was realized to pay for the extensions of the system necessary to deliver the water to the additional land.

The water certificate contract issued by said defendant company states that the certificate entitled the person named therein to receive water from the system upon certain described land for a fixed period of each year, upon the payment of the dues and water rates prescribed in the certificate. There is no allegation in the petition that any conveyance was made by the landowners to the defendant water company transferring the respective rights in the water pertaining to the several parcels of land to said defendant company. The certificate issued by the defendant company is set forth in full, but it is obvious that its recitals do not take the place of allegations of fact, particularly since it does not appear that the landowners, or any of them, ever signed such certificate or any other written agreement purporting to convey their respective water rights.

Thus, it will be seen that the condition of the title to the water rights is left altogether undetermined by the allegations of the petition. In view of the well-known scarcity of water in this state, especially in the region of San Jacinto, it seems unlikely that the owners of land having attached thereto riparian rights in a stream, the water from which they were actually using upon the land, would consent to an extension of the distributing system to nonriparian lands, or that they would transfer such water rights to a distributing corporation otherwise than in trust for their convenient use of the water. For the foregoing reasons, we consider it necessary to an intelligent consideration of the case that the petition should be amended so as to set forth the facts, whatever they may be, from which we can determine the question whether or not the water originally belonging to the land has ever become devoted to public use.

It appears from the petition that the defendant water company, in 1914, without the consent or acquiescence of any of the petitioners, applied to the Railroad Commission for an order fixing its rates for the service of the water which it had under its control; that such order had been made, and that thereafter it endeavored to charge the rates so fixed. All of the petitioners except three, namely, C. E. Borst, E. E. Easley, and L. B. Johnson, appeared before the Commission upon said application, and apparently were parties to the proceeding. The three persons named, however, were not parties thereto. The question whether this order of the Commission is an adjudication to the effect that the Citizens' Water Company is a public utility, that the water it controls is dedicated to public use, and that all persons receiving water from it were the recipients of water devoted to a public use, and not owners of private rights which were not subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, will be an important question in this case, but in the present condition of the petition we do not believe it advisable that we should enter upon the consideration thereof.

It is ordered that the submission be set aside, and that the petitioners have leave to amend their petition, if they are so advised. Sixty days are allowed for that purpose.

CHESTER v. CARMICHAEL et al.
(Sac. 3199.)(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1921.)Municipal corporations §864(1)—Acceptance of deed of land to city on condition of specified improvement as part created "liability."

Acceptance by a city of a deed of land "for and in consideration of the covenants and conditions" expressed therein, which were to the effect that the land should revert to the grantors unless the city should expend not less than $5,000 each year in improving it as a park, total cost of improvements being estimated at $50,000, created a "liability" to the grantors for the entire consideration of $50,000 within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 18, providing that no city shall incur any indebtedness or liability exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Theodore W. Chester, for himself and all other persons similarly situated, against D. W. Carmichael and others, as City Commissioners of the City of Sacramento, and others. Judgment for defendants, and the plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Theodore W. Chester and Meredith, Landis & Chester, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

R. L. Shinn and White, Miller, Needham & Harber, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Plaintiff, a taxpayer of the city of Sacramento, instituted this action on behalf of himself and all other taxpayers, seeking thereby an injunction prohibiting the city of Sacramento and various officers thereof from carrying out the provisions of a certain deed conveying real property to the city for park purposes, and to have such deed declared void; the theory of the action being that such action on the part of the city would be in violation of the provision of our Constitution which declares that—

"No county, city, town * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose, nor unless before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also provision to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof on or before maturity." Section 18, art. 11, Const.

Demurrers to the complaint were sustained, and judgment thereupon given for defendants. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment.

The material facts shown by the complaint are as follows: On or about December 1, 1919, defendants George H. Cutter and Carrie M. Cutter, his wife, and defendant Hickman Investment Company, a corporation, executed and delivered to the city of Sacramento, which accepted the same, a conveyance of an oblong tract of land in Sacramento some 360 feet in width by from 2696 to 2772 feet in length, one-half of which was owned by the Cutters and one-half by the Hickman Investment Company. The conveyance was to the city, its successors and assigns forever, for park and recreation purposes. It was declared therein that it was executed "for and in consideration of the covenants and conditions" expressed therein. The conveyance was declared by its terms to be "subject to the following express conditions subsequent," nine such conditions being stated. These were that the premises shall be used and maintained by the city permanently as a public park or as a public park and playground, known and designated as "Wm. Curtis Park"; that the land shall be divided into three subdivisions as shown on a map attached, each subdivision to have a driveway extending through the same, open for public traffic, as indicated upon said map; that the city shall lay out and maintain a driveway at least 25 feet wide on the eastern outer edge of the property, from the northerly to the southerly portions thereof, and a like driveway on the western outer edge, the same to be public and open to the streets which may be constructed upon the adjoining property and extending to said property; each of the three subdivisions shall have next to the two outer or main driveways a border of forty feet in width to be improved by the city or its representatives "to lawns and shrubbery and to be used as a park," the remainder or interior of each subdivision "to be used as a park or for playground purposes, but playgrounds proper are not to extend on the 40-foot borders"; the permanent improvement within five years of said driveways, and the express provision that "the owners of property bordering or abutting on said park are not to pay for any such driveways, or for the curbs or gutters on either side of such driveways," and that, "in the event that any assessments should be levied against" such owners for any of such purposes, the same shall be paid by the city; that "there shall be expended by" the city "a minimum sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000) per year for the improvement of the parks and playground in said park"; that "the first five thousand dollars ($5,000) is to be expended during the year beginning January 1, 1920, and a like sum is to be expended each year thereafter until the entire property has been improved as a park"; and that the taxes which became a lien on the first Monday of March, 1919, shall be paid by the city. It was then provided that, should the city "fail to conform to or comply with any of the above conditions," the grantors, their successors or assigns, "may, at any time thereafter, give written notice" to the city of such failure, and, if the same are not complied with within six months thereafter, "then said property shall revert to and become again the property of" the grantors, their successors or assigns. The cost of the work of construction and improvement required will exceed the sum of $50,000, and the cost of maintenance will exceed $5,000 per annum. Defendants have commenced the work of improvement, having already expended therein over $1,000 from the income and revenue of the city for the fiscal year 1920, and unless restrained by the courts will carry out all the terms and provisions of the deed. All the funds of the city for the year 1919 were exhausted before December 31, 1919. All of the moneys incident to the proposed work will be paid out of revenue and income received during the year 1920 and each subsequent year. There has been no assent on the part of the qualified electors of the city, or any part thereof, to the carrying out of the proposed plan or any part thereof.

From the foregoing it is apparent that, in so far as the grantors are concerned, the city, in consideration of the conveyance, has agreed, among other things, to expend a minimum sum of $5,000 annually in the work of improving the park site in a designated way and in constructing two driveways for public traffic through the same and also driveways at least 25 feet wide along the whole length on each side, "the same to be public and open to the streets which may be constructed upon the adjoining property," free of cost of any kind to any owner of property bordering or abutting on the park. This work in the aggregate will cost, it is alleged, $50,000. Whether or not the performance of this obligation will benefit the city is an immaterial matter in this controversy. The obligation created by the contract is one in favor and for the benefit of the grantors, who have fully executed their part by the conveyance and delivery of the property, their successors and assigns. As matter of fact, the provisions of the conveyance indicate that the doing of the proposed work in the manner provided was deemed by the grantors to be of special value to the property adjoining on both sides, and the undertaking by the city to do such work was the real consideration for the transfer. This is especially true as to the driveways and the 40-foot strip of garden on each side especially reserved from playground or recreational uses. Performance of the obligation would be, in substance and effect, payment to the grantors, in the way stipulated in the deed, for the property conveyed by them. By means of conditions subsequent expressed in the deed, the property conveyed was practically pledged to the grantors as security for the performance of the undertaking, the title to revert to them, their successors or assigns, in the event of nonperformance, if they so elect. It may be assumed that the city cannot be held liable in damages for failure to carry out this contract, or specifically compelled to perform, and that the only penalty for failure to perform is the reversion of the property to the grantors, their successors or assigns. This being the situation, the question is whether the transaction, the giving and acceptance by the city of the deed, involved the incurring by the city of "any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose" with relation to the grantors, their successors or assigns, within the meaning of section 18 of article 11 of our Constitution. If it did, admittedly, in the light of the facts alleged in the complaint, the liability exceeded the income and revenue provided for the year 1919, the year in which the transaction was had.

Assuming the validity of the transaction between the parties apart from any question as to the effect of the constitutional provision, it seems clear that an obligation was imposed thereby upon the city, in favor of the grantors, their successors and assigns, to expend in the specified work at least $5,000 per annum for a period of years and until the completion thereof. To this extent the income and revenue of future years was attempted to be appropriated for the performance of this obligation in favor of the grantors, an obligation assumed by the city in consideration of the transfer to it of the property. Assuming the complete carrying out of its part of the agreement by the city, there will have been such an appropriation. The doing of this work, with a prescribed minimum expenditure therefor each year, was, as we have said, the purchase price for the land, payable in yearly installments, the grantors having fully performed their part by conveyance and delivery of the land. Notwithstanding the absence of any liability for damages for failure to perform, and the fact that the obligation could not be specifically enforced, there was an obligation in favor of and for the benefit of the grantors, involving the expenditure in a certain way, and for specified purposes, of future revenues of the city, accompanied by what was in substance a pledge of the property conveyed as security for its performance. That the matter was cast in the form of conditions subsequent is unimportant. In substance and effect the transaction was as we have stated it.

So regarding the transaction, we are of opinion that it falls within the inhibition of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, which precludes any city from incurring "any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose" exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof. That there was a liability in favor of the grantors imposed on the city upon the acceptance by it of the conveyance seems clear. The ability of the creditor to enforce a claim by a judgment for money is not essential to a "liability" as that term is used in such constitutional provisions as ours. As the consideration of the executed conveyance to the city there was an obligation in favor of the grantors to expend $5,000 yearly in the completion of the specified work, which, according to the complaint, would cost $50,000, and the property that had been conveyed to the city was pledged for full performance of the obligation. The city must either expend all the money necessary to complete the work from its future revenues, or lose the property with all it may have paid to the time of loss in improving the same. Numerous cases cited holding that, where a city acquires property subject to a mortgage or trust deed with a stipulation that the city is not to be held liable in any way for the payment of the debt thereby secured other than by the enforcement of the lien on the property, such debt constitutes a part of the indebtedness of the city within the meaning of that word as contained in constitutional provisions confining the indebtedness of the city within a proscribed limit, illustrate how such an indebtedness may be incurred without any means of enforcement other than loss of the property. In Browne v. City of Boston, 179 Mass. 321, 60 N. E. 934, the court said of such a transaction:

"But the property, when conveyed, will be subject to the mortgages that have been placed upon it pursuant to the arrangement that has been made, and the city either will have to pay them, or submit to have the property taken from it by foreclosure proceedings. It will thus become indirectly liable for the amount secured by the mortgages, and the taxpayers will ultimately be obliged to pay it as contemplated. * * *

"The object of the statute is to protect the taxpayer by confining the indebtedness of a city within a prescribed limit. The manner in which the indebtedness is created is immaterial, if the result is to subject the city to a present liability, direct or indirect, which the taxpayers eventually will be called on to meet. It seems to us that such will be the result of the ingenious scheme that has been devised in the present case. We think that the statute cannot be evaded in the manner proposed."

See, also, Voss v. Waterloo Water Co., 163 Ind. 69, 71 N. E. 208, 66 L. R. A. 95, 106 Am. St. Rep. 201, 2 Ann. Cas. 978; Eddy Valve Co. v. Town of Crown Point, 166 Ind. 613, 76 N. E. 536, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684; Fidelity Trust & Guaranty Co. v. Fowler Water Co. (C. C.) 113 Fed. 560, 568; Lesser v. Warren Borough, 237 Pa. 501, 85 Atl. 839, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839. We have here the obligation to expend certain specified sums annually, secured by the provision for reversion of the property in the event of nonperformance. The words "any * * * liability in any manner or for any purpose" in our constitutional provision are words of broad import, and we think that, fairly construed, they include such an obligation as the one here involved.

The facts of this case present what at first blush appears a rather novel application of the constitutional provision, but, when the real transaction between the parties is fully understood, the matter appears simple enough. We are not concerned here with the indebtedness to be created in favor of contractors, materialmen, and workmen when the city each year contracts for the doing of certain work, or buys material and employs labor for the doing of the same. We have here simply the liability to the grantors, created by the acceptance of the conveyance. As to them, the transaction was simply one of sale and purchase, completely executed by the grantors, the consideration being the future improvement by the city of the conveyed premises in a specified way for the benefit of the grantors, their successors and assigns, at an expenditure of at least $5,000 per year. Learned counsel for respondents admit that—

"Where a purchase is made upon the installment plan, even though the only remedy for the enforcement by the seller of the payments is the right to declare a forfeiture, yet a debt has been created at the time the contract is entered into for all the sums subsequently to be paid."

Such, as we have said, was in substance this transaction. That the money was to be paid by the city to those actually doing the work deemed by the grantors to be of sufficient benefit to them to warrant them in making it the consideration for their conveyance, instead of to the grantors themselves, is immaterial. It was the construction of the improvement at the specified cost per year, presumably to the benefit of their property, that constituted the consideration for their conveyance. Likewise it is altogether immaterial, in so far as the liability to the grantors is concerned, that the city will own the improved park.

In the view we take of the nature of this transaction, it is obvious that such cases as McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 160, 44 Pac. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, Smilie v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 311, 44 Pac. 556, and Doland v. Clark, 143 Cal. 176, 76 Pac. 958, are in no way in point. Here the full liability to the grantors was created upon the acceptance of the deed; the entire consideration therefor having been furnished. The cases cited involved contracts for the furnishing to a city in the future of service, materials, etc., and it is held that no indebtedness or liability within the meaning of the constitutional provision is incurred until the furnishing of the service, materials, etc., the consideration for the payment to be made. The distinction is clear, and is recognized by many decisions. It is concisely stated in Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co., 172 U. S. 1, 20, 19 Sup. Ct. 77, 43 L. Ed. 341, as follows:

"In the one case the indebtedness is not created until the consideration has been furnished; in the other [where the consideration on the other side is fully furnished at the time of the transaction] the debt is created at once, the time of payment being only postponed."

In support of the claim that the construction of the constitutional provision invoked by appellant is unreasonable in the light of its results, learned counsel for respondents say that to sustain it would mean that a city could not expend money on land granted on condition simply that it be maintained as a park or highway, etc.; in other words, that a city could not expend money on land conveyed solely for park or highway purposes. To our minds this result would not follow. That a city may accept land to be used by it for a specified purpose, and thereafter expend such money thereon as it, in the exercise of its discretion, deems proper in the use to which it is devoted, cannot be doubted. But that would be a very different case from this, wherein the doing of certain prescribed future work in a specified way and at a specified cost to the city per annum is made the consideration for the conveyance.

We are of opinion that the complaint stated a cause of action.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. TROUTMAN. (Cr. 2366.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 7, 1921.)

1. Criminal law § 1159(2)—Conviction supported by evidence not reversible for insufficiency because of abnormality of crime.

Where conviction of an abnormal crime is supported by evidence, the court on appeal cannot reverse on the ground that the abnormality is so extreme as to be unbelievable.

2. Criminal law § 13—Statute held not invalid as uncertain for clerical error.

That Pen. Code, § 288, relating to offenses not constituting other crimes provided for in part 2 of the Code, plainly meaning part 1, was not such an uncertainty as to render it invalid.

3. Criminal law § 507(7)—Child of age protected by statute held not "accomplice" within rules of evidence.

Children under the age of 14 years of age protected against lewd acts by Pen. Code, § 288, are not accomplices within the meaning of rules of evidence requiring corroboration; they not being within section 1111, defining an "accomplice" as one liable to prosecution for the identical offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplish.]

4. Infants § 20—Corroboration not necessary in prosecution for offense against.

No corroboration of testimony of an infant under 14 years of age protected against lewd acts by Pen. Code, § 288, is necessary.

5. Criminal law § 510—Corroborating evidence of accomplice's testimony of other offenses held not necessary.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 288, for lewd acts against a child under 14 years of age, testimony of the prosecuting witness as to other similar offenses after he became more than 14 years of age was receivable without corroboration; it not being necessary to prove any offense, except the one selected by the district attorney occurring before the age of 14.

6. Infants § 20—Instruction to give letters to child innocent construction given by its mother held properly refused.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 288, for a lewd act on or with an infant, a requested instruction that the jury should give the same innocent construction to certain letters written by the defendant to the infant prosecuting witness as was given such letters by the infant's mother was properly refused.

7. Criminal law § 763, 764(17)—Instruction as to evidence of other offenses held not in effect a direction of verdict.

In a prosecution for lewd acts on or with a child, an instruction that testimony has been introduced tending to prove other acts of lewd conduct of defendant prior to and subsequent to the act relied on for conviction, that evidence was introduced to prove the lewd disposition and tendency of defendant to commit the acts, and not introduced to prove distinct offenses, but "is corroborative evidence tending to support the one specific offense," was not bad as positively asserting that the proof corroborated the main charge, and was not in effect the direction of a verdict against the defendant.

8. Criminal law § 1186(4)—Defendant, not exhausting peremptory challenges, cannot complain that district attorney was permitted to pass his peremptory challenges.

That the district attorney was permitted to pass his peremptory challenges on certain oc-cations and then permitted to exercise one, in violation of Pen. Code, § 1088, cannot be held reversible error in view of section 1404, providing that neither departure in form or mode of proceedings renders it invalid without actual prejudice to substantial rights, where no prejudice was shown, and where the defendant complaining had not exercised all his peremptory challenges.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Holmes F. Troutman was convicted of a lewd act with a child under Penal Code, § 288, and appeals. Affirmed.

Ostrander & Carey, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LENNON, J. The order granting a rehearing of this case was prompted by the earnest and persuasive petition for a rehearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal. Here, as in the Court of Appeal, a reversal was sought primarily upon the contention that the evidence adduced in support of the people's case was so inherently improbable as to be unworthy of belief, and therefore insufficient to support the jury's verdict of guilty. Accordingly we have, in addition to giving due consideration to the remaining points made in support of the appeal, painstakingly reviewed and considered in every detail the evidence adduced upon the whole case, with the result that we are constrained to hold, as did the District Court of Appeal, that the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict and judgment.

[1] Conceding, as is contended, that at the time of the commission of the crime charged the physical condition of the boy, not necessary to be detailed here, upon whose person the crime charged was found by the jury to have been committed by the defendant, was so diseased as to be abhorrent, and therefore was calculated to repulse, rather than arouse the unnatural lascivious desires even of an extremely morally degenerate man, nevertheless we are not satisfied that the evidence upon which the conviction was had is so inherently improbable as to be altogether unworthy of belief. While the testimony of the complaining witness concerning the details of the commission of the crime is so out of the ordinary in its revelation of revolting details as to be startling in the extreme and difficult to believe, still it cannot be held to be unbelievable merely because it reveals an exceptional depth of moral degeneracy. To so hold would be "purely a speculative attempt to sound the depths of human depravity and to assign arbitrary rules beyond which desire and passion are held incapable of seducing or impelling human nature." People

v. Von Perhacs, 20 Cal. App. 48, 127 Pac. 1048; Stout v. State, 22 Tex. App. 339, 3 S. W. 231. It will be unnecessary to prolong a discussion of this phase of the case; for, apart from what we have said, we are satisfied that the case is adequately dealt with in so far as the sufficiency of the evidence is concerned and correctly decided from every point of view by the District Court of Appeal in the opinion of Mr. Presiding Justice Langdon, which we quote and adopt as follows:

"This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of conviction of violation of section 288 of the Penal Code. A motion for a new trial was denied, from which order an appeal is also taken.

"A discussion of the facts does not seem to us necessary, and, in view of the nature of the testimony, detailed consideration of the evidence will not be made in this opinion. It is sufficient to say that the evidence has been read with care, and that we cannot agree with the appellant that the testimony of the boy against whom the crime is alleged to have been committed presents such inherent improbabilities as to entitle it to no credence as a matter of law, and thus leave the record with no legal evidence to sustain the conviction. It is, of course, true that all offenses under this section, by their very abnormality, are improbable, measured by the standard of the normal; but the observation and experience of any court handling criminal records demonstrates that many such cases do occur, and their facts are therefore not inherently improbable, as that phrase is used in the law. As to the especially revolting facts in this case in connection with the alleged acts, which are urged by appellant as making the testimony of the boy unbelievable and inconceivable, it is sufficient to observe that once a man slips away from normal, once he enters the uncharted region of abnormality, the details and depths of degradation which his actions will show can no longer be measured. For the normal man we have a standard from human experience; but for the abnormal, there are no rules of conduct. The argument of inherent improbability was doubtless made to the jury, where it was a proper one, but these men and women believed the testimony of the boy, and even under the unusual conditions shown by the evidence did not find the facts unbelievable. We cannot, therefore, as a matter of law, say that the revolting conditions surrounding the abnormal acts in this case, render the commission of them by the defendant inherently improbable.

[2] "Objection is made by appellant that no crime is charged in the information against the defendant because section 288 of the Penal Code is unconstitutional upon the ground that it is vague, ambiguous, indefinite, and uncertain. The specific objection to the section is that the language, 'Any person who shall willfully and lewdly commit any lewd or lascivious act other than the acts constituting other crimes provided for in part two of this code,' etc., is unintelligible in that 'part two' of the Code referred to relates solely to criminal procedure and does not describe acts constituting other crimes. This precise objection was considered in the case of People v. Bradford, 1 Cal. App. 42, 81 Pac. 712, where the court said that it was evident that either by legislative oversight or by clerical misprision the words 'part two' were inserted for the words 'part one' in such section, and that it should be so construed. Appellant refers to this case in his brief, but asks this court to overrule it. We see no justification for so doing, and we consider the question of the validity of this section against such an attack as settled in this state.

[3] "Appellant makes various objections to instructions given and refused by the trial court. His main objection is that the evidence shows the prosecuting witness to be an accomplice, regardless of his age, because of his intelligence, education, and understanding of moral questions, and that the refusal of the court to leave the question of whether or not the boy was an accomplice to the jury, and to instruct the jury that, if they so found, his testimony would require corroboration to sustain a conviction, was prejudicial error. Much argument is indulged in by the appellant regarding the law relating to accomplices and the responsibility of minors for crimes, etc. We are of the opinion that none of the rules discussed governing these matters are applicable to a case such as the present one. The inquiry here is not at all as to the guilt or moral responsibility of the child, and under the section of the Code under which the conviction here was had the minor is guilty of no legal offense, regardless of his mental capacity or moral insight and regardless of his acquiescence. A different situation might exist if the defendant here was of the age of 13 years and charged with any act included in section 288 against 'a child under the age of 14 years.' Then the question of the defendant's knowledge of right and wrong would be important. It would be a question of fact, and the disputable presumption regarding the responsibility of infants between the ages of 7 and 14 years for crimes might be rebutted by the evidence. But the gist of the offense under section 288 is the crime against a 'child under the age of 14 years', and in the present case the prosecuting witness, even if it were overwhelmingly proved that he had full knowledge of right and wrong and that he had innumerable vicious and criminal tendencies himself, and that he had suggested to the defendant (a man of 38 years of age) the commission of the act charged against said defendant, yet he would not be guilty of an offense under section 288, for the gist of that offense is that the act is committed with one under the age of 14 years.

"Section 1111 of the Penal Code, while requiring the testimony of an accomplice to be corroborated in order to sustain a conviction, expressly defines an accomplice as 'one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given.'

[4] "However, in addition to the foregoing reasons, it has been expressly decided in this state, in the case of People v. Raich, 26 Cal. App. 286, 146 Pac. 907, that there is no statute or other rule of law which calls for the corroboration of the testimony of a complaining witness in a case of this character. Also in the case of People v. Thourwald (App.) 189 Pac.

124, it is said, in considering a conviction under this same section, 'Upon her testimony [the prosecutrix] alone a verdict of conviction may securely rest,' and it is then pointed out that no corroboration is required in cases of rape, and that the same rule applies to cases under section 288 of the Penal Code. Furthermore, there is some corroboration of the boy's testimony in the letters appearing in the record which were written to him by the defendant from time to time. The appellant contends that under certain cases in this state such corroborating evidence is insufficient. But, be that as it may in a case where corroboration is required, under the ruling in the cases of People v. Raich and People v. Thourwald, supra, corroboration of the testimony of the prosecuting witness is unnecessary in a case like the present one, and, therefore we are not concerned with whether or not the possible inference which the jury might draw from the letters would have sufficiently corroborated the boy's story.

[5] "A somewhat different, though a closely related, proposition to the one just discussed is involved in the further contention of counsel that testimony of the boy relating to the commission of similar acts by the defendant subsequent to the act charged, and after October 30, when the boy became 14 years of age, was improperly admitted to show the disposition of the defendant to commit the act charged. It is appellant's contention that, even though it be held that the boy was not an accomplice while he was under the age of 14 years and while he came within the scope of section 288, Penal Code, nevertheless, as to acts committed after he reached the age of 14 years, he would be an accomplice, and as to such acts, at least, the court should have instructed the jury that his testimony must be corroborated. There is no merit in this contention, as it was not necessary to prove any offense except the one selected by the district attorney as the charge upon which the state relied for a conviction. The instruction given by the court of which complaint is made did not refer to other 'crimes,' but referred to other 'acts' which it was stated were introduced to show the disposition of the defendant to commit the act charged, and as corroborative evidence of the main charge.

[6] "Reference has been made herein to certain letters written by the defendant to the prosecuting witness. These letters were introduced in evidence, and appellant contends that the jury should have been instructed specifically that they must give the letters an innocent construction for the reason that the mother of the boy saw these letters as they were received by him, and gave to them an entirely innocent construction. We do not see how the jury could be bound by the construction given to the letters by the mother before she was in possession of the information given by her son's testimony. The letters are not isolated from all other facts when being construed by the jury; they are interpreted in the light of all the other testimony in the case. It is perfectly clear from the record that, when the mother was informed by her son of the alleged acts, she no longer gave to the letters of the defendant an innocent construction, but that thereupon such letters became exceedingly significant to her. We see no error in the action of the trial court in permitting the letters to go to the jury.

[7] "Complaint is made of the following instruction: 'Testimony has been introduced by the prosecution tending to prove other acts of lewd and lascivious conduct of the defendant toward Herbert Cramer prior to and subsequent to the acts relied upon for conviction. This evidence is introduced for the purpose of proving the lewd and lascivious disposition and tendency of the defendant to commit the lewd and lascivious acts. This evidence is not introduced to prove distinct offenses, but is corroborative evidence tending to support the one specific offense for which the defendant is being tried.' Appellant contends that this instruction positively asserts the existence of a fact, i. e., that the proof of similar offenses is corroborative of the main charge. Practically the same instruction was approved in the case of People v. Gasser, 34 Cal. App. 541, 544, 168 Pac. 157. Certainly it is well recognized that in cases of this character evidence of similar acts tending to prove a lewd and lascivious disposition and the tendency of the defendant to commit lewd and lascivious acts would be corroborative of the specific charge. There is nothing in this instruction, nor in the other instructions, which would prevent the jury from disbelieving the entire testimony of the prosecuting witness, both as to the main charge and the other offenses tending to show a lascivious disposition; and we think that appellant's contention that this instruction is, in effect, a direction to the jury to find the defendant guilty is without merit.

"Numerous objections are made with reference to other instructions of the trial court. It can serve no useful purpose to consider, specifically, each of these. The instructions as a whole must be read together, and after such reading we are convinced that no error prejudicial to the defendant was made. Under the instructions, taken as a whole, his rights were fully protected. The simple fact is that the jury believed the story of the boy and did not believe the story of the defendant. There is no other direct evidence upon the charge. We do not think it can be said that the evidence was such that reasonable men could not have reached the conclusion arrived at in this case.

[8] "It is further urged by the appellant that error was committed in selecting the jury in this case, and that the trial court should have required the district attorney to exercise his peremptory challenge before the defendant was called upon to exercise his challenge. The district attorney was permitted to pass his peremptory challenge on several occasions, and after passing his challenge more than five times was permitted to exercise one peremptory challenge. Appellant contends that this is a violation of section 1088, Penal Code, which provides that 'first the people and then the defendant shall take a peremptory challenge.' Section 1404 of the Penal Code provides that 'neither a departure from the form or mode prescribed by this Code in respect to any pleading or proceeding, nor any error or mistake therein, renders it invalid, unless it has actually prejudiced the defendant, or tended to his prejudice, in respect to a substantial right.' If an error in procedure was committed by this practice of the trial court, we fail to see how such an error tended to the prejudice of the defendant, and certainly there is no showing made of any actual prejudice suffered by him therefrom.

"Furthermore, it appears from the record that defendant exercised only nine of his peremptory challenges, thus leaving one unexercised. The state exercised only one such challenge. The record shows that after these challenges were exercised the attorney for the defendant stated, 'We are satisfied,' whereupon the district attorney stated, 'So are we.' It appears, therefore, that the defendant had an additional challenge unexercised which he did not desire to use because the jury as constituted was satisfactory to him. Under such circumstances, he cannot complain here of any irregularity, if irregularity there was, in allowing his peremptory challenge to the people. It was held in Baird v. Duane, 1 Cal. Unrep. 492, that error in refusing to allow a challenge for cause is not prejudicial if the party, although forced thereby to use a peremptory challenge, has a peremptory challenge to spare when the jury is completed. It was held in the case of People v. Schafer, 161 Cal. 573, 119 Pac. 920, that the disallowance of a challenge for cause on the ground of actual bias, interposed to a juror who was subsequently peremptorily challenged, will not be reviewed on appeal for error, where the record, while it shows that the defendant exhausted his ten peremptory challenges, including the one used on such juror, fails to show that he had occasion or desire to use an additional peremptory challenge, or that each and all of the 12 jurors finally accepted and sworn were not entirely satisfactory to him. The reason for the rule announced in the last-cited case, and the full discussion of the subject therein, apply with equal force in the present case. The defendant having expressly stated that the jury was satisfactory to him, and having one of his peremptory challenges unexercised at the time the jury was accepted, his objection here is without merit.

"We find no errors in the record which would warrant a reversal of this judgment under all the facts in evidence, and the same is affirmed."

GREAT WESTERN POWER CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 9758.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 5, 1921.)

Master and servant — 373—Employee's injury by fellow workmen wrestling held not one "arising out of employment" within Compensation Act.

Where a workman in the performance of his duties passed over a platform when two fellow workmen engaged in a friendly wrestling match accidentally fell on him and broke his leg, such injury did not arise out of his employment within Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917; no claim being made that the wrestling was habitual, or that the employer had any knowledge of the horseplay, or that it had any other characteristic which would make it a risk of the employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

In Bank.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by E. S. Holbrook against the Great Western Power Company of California, Award allowed by the Industrial Accident Commission, and defendant brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Guy C. Earl and W. H. Spaulding, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari on a petition by the Great Western Power Company of California, a corporation, to review the action of the respondent Industrial Accident Commission allowing an award against petitioner in favor of respondent E. L. Holbrook for injuries received by him while employed by petitioner.

Respondent Holbrook was employed by petitioner in the capacity of pumpman at Bel-don, Cal. While in the performance of his duties, he was walking from the toolhouse to a shaft or tunnel in which he was working. On his way to the shaft he passed over a board platform on which two fellow workmen were engaged in a friendly wrestling match. The scuffling was not caused by any dispute or altercation over the work or over anything connected with the employment, and respondent was not participating in it. The wrestlers accidentally fell on him and broke his left leg. He was incapacitated for two months, and applied to the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act. A hearing was had by that body, and it was found the respondent sustained injury occurring in the course of and arising out of his employment, and that he was entitled to a benefit of $160.69. Petitioner applied for a rehearing before the Industrial Accident Commission, which was denied. This petition followed.

Petitioner contends:

That "said Commission in rendering said decision and entering said award acted without and in excess of its powers, and that the order and decision are unreasonable, and that the findings of fact of the said Commission in said proceeding do not support the order, decision, or award here sought to be reviewed."

It insists that—

"In the case at bar there are absolutely no facts or circumstances to take this case out of the general rule uniformly followed both in England and in the United States that injuries resulting from 'horseplay' among employees, whether the injured party is a participant or not, do not 'arise out of the employment.'"

In support of this position are cited Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164; Fishing v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 690, 158 Pac. 215.

Respondents assert:

"We frankly concede that the decision of the Commission is inconsistent with the ruling of this court in Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury et al., 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164, and Fishing v. Industrial Accident Commission, 172 Cal. 690, 158 Pac. 215, both cases being decided the same day. In view of the fact that these cases were early decisions upon the question of horseplay rendered in 1916, and before the doctrine was well established in other states, and that since that time the leading states upon the doctrine have taken the opposite view, so we take the liberty of urging upon the court a reconsideration of the views therein expressed;" that, "where an employee is attending properly to his own work without diversion for purposes of horseplay, and is injured by the frolicking act of another employee, such injury, except in exceptional cases, may be said to arise out of the employment for the reason that the danger of ordinary frolicking by employees is a danger incident to every business which brings employees together in numbers;" and that "hazards due to the usual propensities of workmen being brought together in numbers for the purpose of employment should be the hazards insured against both to protect the individual and the community."

In support of this position respondents cite authorities from other jurisdictions decided since the above-mentioned cases. Petitioner, however, asserts that—

"These last-mentioned cases have been cited with approval in a very large number of decisions from the highest courts of many of the states of the land. In the decisions referred to by respondents herein, which do not follow the foregoing cases, the court has had great labor to create and point out circumstances differentiating the cases from these two leading cases."

The Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 834) provides:

"Liability for the compensation provided by this act, in lieu of any other liability, whatsoever to any person, shall, without regard to negligence, exist against an employer for any injury sustained by his employees arising out of and in the course of the employment.
* * *

Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, supra, is a case where an employee, who was particularly susceptible to tickling, while in the course of his employment was going downstairs when he was tickled in the ribs by another employee. As a result he fell down the stairs, sustaining injury. The court held he was not entitled to compensation, saying:

"The accidents arising out of the employment of the person injured are those in which it is possible to trace the injury to the nature of the employee's work or to the risks to which the employer's business exposes the employee. The accident must be one resulting from a risk reasonably incident to the employment. * * * In the matter at bar the employment of Flint exposed him to no greater danger from being tickled by a fellow servant than would a guest in the hotel of his employer have been so exposed."

In Fishing v. Pillsbury, supra, an employee, about 17 years of age, pointed a trick camera at another employee and caused a spring to be ejected from it. The spring struck the other in the eye, injuring him. The court held he was not entitled to compensation, on the authority of Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, supra.

Respondents rely chiefly upon two cases which follow the rule they ask us to adopt. One of these is Leonbruno v. Champlain Silk Mills, 229 N. Y. 470, 128 N. E. 711, 13 A. L. R. 522. In that case an employee, while engaged in the performance of his duties, was struck in the eye by an apple thrown by a fellow servant at another. The court, in upholding the award, said:

"Whatever men and boys will do, when gathered together in such surroundings, at all events, if it is something reasonably to be expected, was one of the perils of his service."

Another authority is Willis v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 78 Okl. 216, 190 Pac. 92, in which case an employee was, with several others warming himself by an open fire during an interval in his work, and was injured because of the explosion of a piece of dynamite which a fellow employee threw into the fire to see if it would explode. It was declared:

"We think the correct rule is, and so hold in these cases, that, if a workman is an active participant in what has been denominated 'horseplay,' he is not entitled to compensation, but if, while going about his duties, he is the victim of another's prank, to which he is not in the least a party, he should not be denied compensation."

An authority similar to these is Verschleiser v. Stern, 229 N. Y. 192, 128 N. E. 126.

The other cases cited by respondents do not fully support the rule contended for by them. While in some of them compensation was awarded for injuries resulting from skylarking, in the cases where such compensation has been awarded special circumstances have appeared which made the skylarking peculiarly one of the risks of the employment. In other cases the compensation was awarded for injuries received by employees as the result of altercations or quarrels, but in each of those cases the controversy had its origin in some misunderstanding or incident connected with the work. These cases decide that, while ordinarily compensation will not be allowed where injuries are caused by skylarking or are the result of a dispute between employees, yet an injury may be so caused and still be held to arise out of the employment. Thus, in the case of In re Loper, 64 Ind. App. 571, 116 N. E. 324, an employee, while going about his duties, was injured by another's sportive use of an air compressor. The injured employee was not participating in the horseplay. The evidence showed the compressor was habitually used in this way. The court declared:

"We are not dealing here with a sporadic, occasional, or unanticipated use of the air hose in play. * * * The employer, with knowledge of the facts, permitted such practice to continue. It was within his power to have prohibited it. By failing to do so, it became an element of the conditions under which the employee was required to work."

A similar case was State v. District Court, 140 Minn. 75, 167 N. W. 283, L. R. A. 1918E, 502. There an employee was struck in the eye by a sash pin thrown by a fellow employee at another, not the injured workman. The injured employee was not engaging in the horseplay. It was customary for the employees to throw things at each other, and it was found that the employer knew or should have known of the custom. The court said:

"The rule is well enough settled that, where workmen step aside from their employment and engage in horseplay or practical joking, or so engage while continuing their work, and accidental injury results, and in general where one in sport or mischief does some act resulting in injury to a fellow worker, the injury is not one arising out of the employment within the meaning of compensation acts. [Citing cases.] Here we conceive the situation to be different. Filas was exposed by his employment to the risk of injury from the throwing of sash pins in sport and mischief. He did not himself engage in the sport. His employer did not stop it. The risk continued. The accident was the natural result of the missile throwing proclivities of some of Filas' fellow workers and was a risk of the work as it was conducted."

In Mueller v. Klingman (Ind. App.) 125 N. E. 464, also cited by respondent, the deceased employee and a fellow employee were working together. The fellow worker became angered at a remark made by deceased concerning the doing of the work, and threw a hammer at him, striking him in the head. The injury inflicted caused his death. The court held that the injury arose out of the employment, basing the decision on Pekin Cooperage Co. v. Industrial Commission, 285 Ill. 31, 120 N. E. 530, and quoting from that case as follows:

"Where men are working together at the same work, disagreements may be expected to arise about the work, the manner of doing it, as to the use of tools, interference with one another, and many other details which may be trifling or important. Infirmary of temper, or worse, may be expected, and occasionally blows and fighting. When the disagreement arises out of the employer's work in which two men are engaged, and as a result of it one injures the other, it may be inferred that the injury arose out of the employment."

Of the other cases cited by respondent, Stuart v. Kansas City, 103 Kan. 307, 563, 171 Pac. 913, Marchiatello v. Lynch Realty Co., 94 Conn. 260, 108 Atl. 799, and Colucci v. Edison Portland Cement Company, 93 N. J. Law, 332, 108 Atl. 313, are similar to In re Loper, supra, and State v. District Court, supra. The others resemble Mueller v. Klingman, supra, and were decided on the theory that injury resulted from an altercation concerning the work. These cases are Heitz v. Rupert, 218 N. Y. 148, 112 N. E. 750, L. R. A. 1917A, 344, American Steel Foundries v. Melinik (Ind. App.) 126 N. E. 33, Polar Ice & Fuel Co. v. Mulray, 67 Ind. App. 270, 119 N. E. 149, and Pekin Cooperage Co. v. Industrial Commission, supra. Another case, Stasmos v. Industrial Commission, 80 Okl. 221, 195 Pac. 762, although decided on the authority of Leonbruno v. Champlain Silk Mills, supra, was clearly a case where the injury was caused by an altercation concerning the employment, inasmuch as the employee was injured as the result of an altercation with his foreman over which of two lifts he should use in leaving the shaft in which he was working, the mine having been shut down suddenly and the employees ordered to the surface. The English cases of Thom v. Sinclair [1917] App. Cas. 127, and Dennis v. White and Company [1917] App. Cas. 479, contain valuable discussion of the phrase "arising out of the employment," but the facts are dissimilar, and they do not assist in a decision of the case at bar.

While the authorities cited above from New York and Oklahoma lay down the rule contended for by respondents, we are not prepared to concede that they represent the general trend of authority on the subject. We do not think, therefore, that these authorities would justify us in overruling the settled law of this state as laid down in Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, supra, and Fishing v. Pillsbury, supra, approved in the late case of Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company v. Industrial Accident Commission, 201 Pac. 920, on the subject of injuries received by an employee through horseplay. It cannot be held that all injuries so received in the course of the employment arise out of the employment. It may be remarked that the recent case of General Accident, Fire & Life Insurance Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, 200 Pac. 419, is in harmony with the rule expressed in Mueller v. Klingman, supra, and the similar cases. In that case the injured employee was repairing a tire in a garage a short distance from where his employer and a stranger became engaged in a quarrel over the purchase of gasoline by the latter. The employer shot at the stranger, and the bullet glanced and struck the injured employee, who had not participated in the quarrel. The question presented in that case was whether the injury arose out of the employment. Mr. Justice Shurtleff, in writing the opinion of the court, said:

"In the present case the injury is largely, if not wholly, traceable to the acts of the employer. The controversy in which it was received arose out of an incident which concerned his business, namely, an application to purchase gasoline. That it ultimately resulted in a personal difference or that the accident was an unusual one, not likely to occur, does not deprive it of its business character or establish that it did not arise out of the employment. * * * What are termed the 'horseplay' cases, and the rule in them announced, have no application here. The injury sustained by Shrout was not due to skylarking or a frolic, but was received in the course of a series of incidents which had their initiative in a business transaction of his employer and while the latter was actively and justifiably engaged in defending his business."

In the case at bar it is not claimed or shown that the scuffling was habitual, that the employer had any knowledge of the horseplay, or that it had any other characteristic which would make it a risk of the employment. The injury was an unfortunate accident which had no connection with the employment, and did not arise out of it. The employer should not be held liable.

The award is annulled.

SARGENT v. ULLSPERGER.
(Civ. 3448.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 27, 1921.)

Brokers ⇨ 56(3)—Negotiations before employment of broker held to preclude recovery of commissions.

Though plaintiff broker suggested to defendant that a third person might be willing to trade other property for that listed by defendant with plaintiff for a sale for cash, and also suggested to such third person that defendant might make the trade, plaintiff was not entitled to a commission where the trade was actually consummated between defendant and such third person, where the latter and defendant had negotiated for such a trade before plaintiff was employed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by L. P. Sargent against Anton Ullsperger. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Patrick J. Cooney and J. T. Reed, both of Calexico, for appellant.

E. R. Simon, of El Centro, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. On July 24, 1918, the defendant executed and delivered to the plaintiff an agreement in the terms following:

"L. P. Sargent, El Centro, Calif.: In consideration of $1.00, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged. You are authorized to sell for me the following described property and if sold by you I agree to pay you a commission of 5 per cent. on any deal I may accept for the same. Said commission to be paid out of the first money received on sale. You are hereby authorized to contract sale for me as shown herein. Price $21,600. Terms $7,400.00 down and balance ——. I will give possession when sold 191—. List for 90 days and thereafter until notified in writing of the withdrawal from the market. I will exchange for ———subject to my approval."

Here followed a description of defendant's property and the signature of defendant.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover a commission claimed to have been earned by performance of the foregoing contract, in that the plaintiff procured and brought about an exchange of properties between the defendant and one John Zenos, wherein and whereby defendant transferred to Zenos the property described in said agreement and in consideration thereof received from Zenos other property of the alleged value of $21,600. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, except that the value of the property received by defendant from Zenos was fixed at $12,000, and the commission allowed to plaintiff was based on that valuation instead of the valuation stated in the complaint.

Defendant contends that the contract, under the circumstances surrounding its execution, was limited to sale only, and did not authorize the broker to make or effect an exchange. It is not necessary to discuss this question, which no doubt is debatable. Assuming that the contract did authorize an exchange, and that defendant agreed to pay a commission on any exchange procured by appellant of defendant's property, nevertheless we are of the opinion that the service contracted for was not rendered by plaintiff.

To entitle an agent to recover commissions, the fact must be established that the efforts of the agent were the procuring cause of the sale or exchange, and that through his agency the parties to the transaction of sale or exchange were brought into communication with each other, although those parties themselves negotiated the transaction. Briggs v. Hall, 24 Cal. App. 586, 141 Pac. 1067; Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 117 Pac. 575; Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 Pac. 642; Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 155, 158, 99 Pac. 867, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328; Roth v. Thomson, 40 Cal. App. 208, 215, 180 Pac. 656.

It was found by the court that on the 5th day of August, 1918, the plaintiff informed Zenos that he had listed for sale or exchange the said real property of the defendant, and suggested and proposed to Zenos that he trade his property (being the property afterwards exchanged with defendant) to the defendant for the described real property of the defendant; that the plaintiff then and there informed Zenos that defendant was the owner of the described real property and stated that he believed that the defendant would trade his said property for the real property of Zenos; "that thereafter, and a few days following, the said plaintiff informed the said Anton Ullsperger, the defendant, that he had proposed to the said John Zenos that the defendant Anton Ullsperger would trade the real property hereinafter described to the said John Zenos for the real property owned by the said John Zenos;" that thereafter the defendant and Zenos proceeded to deal together and consummated an exchange of their said properties. These findings give a chronological order of events, but they do not declare that the two principals in the trade were introduced or brought together, or that the transaction between them was initiated by reason of anything said or done by appellant. It appears by the uncontradicted testimony of defendant and his son, John Ullsperger, and of John Zenos, that during several months before defendant listed his property with the plaintiff, the defendant and John Zenos, in numerous interviews, had been discussing an exchange of those properties. Zenos was seeking to acquire defendant's property by exchange, but Ullsperger was trying to make a sale. It was not by reason of the plaintiff's efforts that they continued their negotiations and made the exchange.

The answer of the defendant squarely raised the issue by alleging that the plaintiff had nothing whatever to do with the bringing about or the consummation of said exchange of properties, and that said exchange was entirely arrived at and completed by said Zenos and defendant only. The findings do not cover this issue except in the manner hereinabove stated. Perhaps they are sufficient under the rule that findings are to be construed favorably, in support of a judgment. But if so, these findings are not sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is reversed.

In broker's action for commission, a finding that "defendants" procured purchaser will be considered a clerical error on appeal, where shown to be such by other statements in the findings, and where there is no doubt under the evidence but that the brokers procured the purchaser.

2. Appeal and error ⇨204(3)—Plaintiffs could not complain of parol evidence not objected to.

Brokers seeking to hold administratrix personally liable on contract, signed individually, on court's refusal to approve sale by administratrix to purchaser procured by brokers, could not complain of parol testimony that administratrix signed contract in her representative capacity, where such evidence was received without question and was given in contradiction of testimony given by brokers themselves.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨97—Administratrix who signed brokerage contract individually did not waive statute relieving her from personal liability on court's refusal to confirm sale.

Where administratrix signed brokerage contract for sale of intestate's land, individually and not as administratrix, but signed receipt on purchaser's deposit in her capacity as administratrix, she was not personally liable to brokers for commission on court's refusal to approve sale, not having waived protection of Code Civ. Proc. § 1559.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by C. L. Caine and E. F. Loescher, doing business under the firm name and style of Caine & Loescher, against Mrs. W. A. Polkinghorn, also known as Alice E. Polkinghorn. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

N. Lindsay South, of Fresno, and Hugh M. Bole, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

L. M. Chapman and Ward Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action to recover upon an alleged contract to pay a commission to the plaintiffs as agents for the sale of real property. The defendant, against whom personally the plaintiffs seek to obtain judgment, was administratrix of the estate of W. A. Polkinghorn, deceased, to which estate the land belonged. Under date August 7, 1919, the defendant signed an agreement authorizing the plaintiffs to sell the land for the sum of $20,000, or any less amount thereafter authorized by her, on terms therein stated, and agreed that if the plaintiffs should sell such property, or be instrumental in selling the same, she would pay them 5 per cent. commission on the selling price. Defendant signed the contract individually, without any indication of her representative capacity. The contract contained no reference to the fact that the land was property of the estate. Nevertheless, the court found that at the time of signing said contract the plaintiffs were informed by defendant that the property belonged to the estate of W. A. Polkinghorn, deceased, and knew that she was administratrix thereof; that prior to the execution of the agreement of date October 29, 1919, next hereafter mentioned, and before the plaintiffs had secured and presented a purchaser of the property, the plaintiffs were informed by the defendant that the sale thereof must be confirmed by the court, and that she was offering the property for sale as administratrix of said estate. This finding is supported by the testimony of the defendant, introduced without objection. In fact, the first oral evidence on these matters was that of Mr. Caine, and was presented on behalf of the plaintiffs. Mr. Caine testified that on August 7 Mrs. Polkinghorn stated that the land was her property and did not mention an estate. Mrs. Polkinghorn, on the contrary, testified that she told them that she was administratrix, and was selling the property in order to close the estate.

On October 29, 1919, plaintiffs received from one Otto Loescher the sum of $1,000 as deposit and partial payment on sale to him of said land for the full purchase price of $19,000, remainder to be paid upon execution of deed, together with abstract or certificate of title "showing title in said property to be in the said owner." The owner was not named in this receipt, but the defendant signed an acceptance thereof, wherein she further stated that she agreed to pay the plaintiffs $1,000 "as their commission for negotiating said sale, to be paid from the first money received on the purchase price." Her signature to this acceptance was "Alice E. Polkinghorn, Adm."

At that time the defendant told the plaintiffs that it was necessary for her to get an order from the court and that she would go right ahead with it. Before anything further was done, the administratrix received from another party a bid of $20,000 for this property, which she accepted and reported to the court for confirmation. When the matter came before the court, Otto Loescher appeared and made an offer to the court in the sum of $22,000, which by order of the court was accepted, and the land officially sold to him for that sum. In the proceedings before the court no order was made for the allowance or payment of any agency commission.

[1, 2] The findings in this action state that the "defendants" procured Otto Loescher to make said agreement of October 29th. Other statements in the findings indicate that this was a clerical error and that the court intended to find that this was done by the plaintiffs. Under the evidence there is no doubt that the plaintiffs did procure Loescher to make that agreement. Assuming this to be the fact, we have to consider whether or not the judgment should be affirmed. Section 1559, Code of Civil Procedure, as then in force, read as follows:

"Any executor or administrator may enter into a contract with any bona fide real estate agent to secure a purchaser for any real property belonging to an estate, which contract shall provide for payment to such agent out of the proceeds of sale to any purchaser secured by him of a commission, the amount of which must be fixed and allowed by the court upon confirmation of the sale. If a sale to a purchaser obtained by such agent is returned to the court for confirmation and said sale be confirmed to such purchaser, such contract shall be binding and valid as against the estate for the amount so fixed and allowed by the court. By the execution of any such contract no personal liability shall attach to the executor or administrator, and no liability of any kind shall be incurred by the estate unless an actual sale is made and confirmed."

In view of these provisions of the Code, it is clear that the defendant did not become personally liable to pay commissions to the plaintiffs, unless the words of the contract, together with the attendant circumstances, established beyond successful denial that the administratrix intended to waive the benefit of the protection thus afforded to her by the statute, and intended to and did contract to become personally liable to the plaintiffs for commissions on the sale if made through their instrumentality. It is contended by appellants that she did make such an agreement and that the defendant should not have been permitted to show by parol evidence contrary to the terms of the contract as written that personal responsibility of the defendant was not intended. But, as we have seen, that evidence was received without objection, and was given in contradiction of testimony given by the plaintiffs. Therefore appellants cannot now be heard to say that the court erred in receiving such evidence. In addition to the testimony of the defendant, we have the further fact that in the agreement of October 29th, when the deposit was made by Otto Loescher, the plaintiffs took the signature of the defendant with words of addition showing that she was administratrix. This agreement differed from the written agreement of August 7th in three particulars—viz., in changing the proposed sale price, in the form of signature of the defendant, and in the measure of compensation to be received by the plaintiffs.

[3] Under the facts thus proved, the defendant is entitled to claim the benefit of the provisions of the Code, hereinbefore quoted, to the effect that no personal liability shall attach to an administrator upon a contract entered into by the administrator, to pay an agent's commission for securing a purchaser for property belonging to the estate.

In Hay v. McDonald, 33 Cal. App. 572, 165 Pac. 1030, this court reviewed the authorities bearing upon the subject of liability upon a contract made by an agent in his own name, and held that for the purpose of establishing the liability of the principal where an agent contracts in terms not fully expressing his representative capacity, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was understood by the parties that another person was intended to be bound. But it was further stated that—

"While parol evidence in such a case as this is competent, it is not competent for the purpose of exonerating the signer from personal liability, but is competent for the purpose of extending the liability to other parties for whom the signer may have intended to contract and for whom he had authority to contract."

A rehearing in that case was denied by the Supreme Court. It must be admitted, however, that that decision, as quoted, must be limited in its application, or else it will not be consistent with some prior expressions of opinion by the Supreme Court. We have in mind the case of Bean v. Pioneer Mining Co., et al., 66 Cal. 451, 6 Pac. 86, 56 Am. Rep. 106, wherein the action was upon a promissory note signed "Pioneer Mining Company, John E. Mason, Sup't.," and it was sought to charge the defendant Mason personally. The court held that where the contract bears on its face no suggestion of agency, parol evidence is not competent for the purpose of exonerating the signer from personal liability if the other party to the instrument chooses to hold him personally liable, "unless there was evidence that the signer was duly authorized to contract for the corporation, and that credit was actually given to the corporation alone." The court further said:

"Even if it could be said that there were no indications suggestive of agency on the face of the note herein sued, evidence was admissible tending to prove that the consideration for the note was received by the Pioneer Company, and the credit extended to the company alone. The absence of proof of the other circumstance—his actual power to act for the corporation—would not render Mason personally liable, under the decisions in this state. If it was known to the payee that the note was given by Mason as superintendent of the company, and in recognition of an indebtedness of the company, Mason is not bound on the note, even if he had no power to execute the instrument for the company. Blanchard v. Kaul, 44 Cal. 440; Lander v. Castro, 43 Cal. 497; Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 568."

In the present action it must be conceded that the defendant had authority to sell the land, subject only to the approval of the court; likewise, under the section of the Code hereinabove quoted, she had authority to employ an agent and to agree to pay a commission, the amount of which, however, must be fixed and allowed by the court. Since the Code section further exempted the executrix from personal liability on such contract, that provision of the Code must be read into the contract in connection with the evidence that the plaintiffs knew that they were dealing with an administratrix. Since it does not appear from the evidence, or the findings of the court, that the conduct of the defendant in contracting with the plaintiffs was other than the ordinary conduct of an administrator in dealing with the property of an estate, our conclusion is that personal liability of the defendant has not been established.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Quieting title $\S$ 44(4)—Findings for plaintiff held unsupported.

Evidence in suit to quiet title to real estate standing in the name of defendant's intestate held not to support findings that deceased had no interest in the property, that plaintiff and deceased had agreed that the equity in other property, standing in plaintiff's name and traded for the property in suit, should be the property of plaintiff alone, and that deceased had put no more than $300 of his money into the property so traded.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 173(2)—Claim of fraud not pleaded and asserted for first time on appeal, not available.

A claim of fraud, not pleaded and asserted for the first time in respondent's brief, is not open to consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by E. E. Buell against R. L. Buell, as administratrix of E. S. Buell, deceased, and individually. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Everts, Ewing & Wild and J. R. Fitch, all of Fresno, for appellants.

L. N. Barber and W. N. Gilliam, both of Fresno, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff commenced this action to quiet title to an undivided one-third interest in a certain piece of real property and improvements situated in the city of Reedley, the title standing in the name of E. S. Buell, the deceased husband of defendant. The theory of the complaint was that the property was purchased by the transfer to the vendors of plaintiff's equity in a contract for the purchase of a certain piece of property located in Columbia Colony No. 2, which contract stood in the name of plaintiff, and was assigned to the vendors of the property in suit at the request of the deceased. The value of the plaintiff's equity in the contract was $2,800, and the value of the property in suit was about $4,000. The defendant, who was sued both as administratrix of her husband's estate and as an individual, alleged in her answer that the contract for the Columbia Colony property was acquired by the transfer of property belonging to her deceased husband, which was taken in the name of plaintiff at the request of deceased solely for the purpose of protecting and securing plaintiff for the repayment to her of a loan of $1,250, money borrowed by the deceased. This indebtedness was evidenced by a promissory note in the sum of $1,250, executed by defendant and her deceased husband, and dated February 26, 1917. Prior to the filing of the amended complaint upon which the suit is based plaintiff presented her claim, based upon this note, to the defendant as administratrix of said estate, and the same was duly approved. The trial court found that on December 20, 1918, the plaintiff, as purchaser, entered into a contract for the purchase of the Columbia Colony property, agreeing to pay the sum of $8,000 therefor; that in pursuance of said contract the sum of $2,800 was paid to the vendors thereof by plaintiff; that neither the deceased nor his estate had any right, title, or interest therein or thereto; that on the 27th day of February, 1919, the deceased at the request of plaintiff negotiated the transfer of her equity in said contract for an undivided one-third interest in the Reedley property, and against the will of defendant and without her knowledge obtained from the vendors thereof title to said property in the name of said deceased; that the deceased paid to the vendors thereof the sum of $2,800, received by them as first payment under the said contract of purchase, but that the same was so paid for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, and under and in pursuance of an agreement between plaintiff and deceased that the property so purchased should be her property, and that the said sum was so paid for the purpose of effecting a settlement between plaintiff and deceased. The court also found that the property so conveyed by deceased to the vendors of the Columbia Colony property was obtained by him through a series of exchanges for which the original consideration was property acquired from plaintiff and the sum of $300 of the funds of said deceased. Judgment was entered upon the findings, decreeing that plaintiff was the owner of the property in suit, that the defendant was barred from asserting or claiming any title or interest therein, that a deed thereof be executed, conveying the property to plaintiff, and that the defendant be required to account to plaintiff for the rents and profits received from said property from the date of the transfer to the date of said deed. Defendant appealed from the judgment, basing her attack upon the ground that the findings of fact are not supported by the evidence.

The portions of the findings which are made the basis of appellant's attack are that the estate of deceased has no right, title, or interest in the property in suit; that the contract for the purchase of the Columbia Colony property was taken in the name of plaintiff in pursuance of an agreement between plaintiff and the deceased that the property purchased should be her property, and that the property conveyed to the vendors thereof, by deceased as consideration for the equity which plaintiff received from that contract was obtained by deceased through a series of exchanges into which deceased put $300 of his own funds.

Counsel for respondent has made no effort to sustain the findings by citation of evidence supporting them, and as the appeal has been taken under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, a complete examination of the typewritten transcript has been made necessary. From this examination it appears that each one of the findings under attack is unsupported by the evidence.

The story of the case as disclosed by the evidence, which is not conflicting, is that in the year 1908 respondent acquired a piece of property in the county of Fresno with an original investment of $900. This was exchanged for other property through the efforts of deceased, and through a series of exchanges respondent acquired what is known as the Jensen property and the property referred to as her home site. Through the exchange of the Jensen property respondent acquired the piece of property designated as the Le Grand property. About this time an agreement was drawn between respondent and deceased whereby he was given an interest in the Le Grand property or in the stock and farming implements thereon, but this agreement was canceled, and respondent entered into a contract disposing of the Le Grand property and taking in exchange therefor a piece of property in Maricopa and $6,000 on the contract of purchase, while the son obtained an interest in a rooming house in Fresno, some 40 acres of land in Texas, a lot in Seattle, and two lots in what is designated the Robinson tract. Respondent testified that at the time of this exchange she knew that deceased had acquired the rooming house and the Texas property, but that she did not know about the lots in Seattle or in the Robinson tract. Though the contract drawn by respondent and deceased recognized an interest of deceased in the Le Grand property of the value of $4,000, the value of what was then conveyed to him has not been shown. Respondent testified that the lot in Seattle was worth about $50, and it appears from the abstract included in the transcript that the Robinson deal was merely a contract of sale, with an equity of about $150. The burden of respondent's argument is that the deceased, being the son of respondent and her confidential agent, had thus obtained an unfair advantage over her, and that the Le Grand transaction was a fraud upon her, and from this it is argued that all the subsequent transactions were tainted with fraud, and that all property thereafter acquired by the son was acquired and held by him in trust for his mother. This is merely mentioned in passing, and will be the subject of further discussion.

Returning to the story of the case, it appears that after this exchange was made (on February 16, 1916), the son continued to act for his mother in other exchanges through which she acquired a large amount of property; that at the same time he was making exchanges on his own behalf, some of which grew out of the property which he acquired in the Le Grand deal. These transactions were carried on until the death of the son on March 10, 1919. On March 21, 1918, respondent conveyed to deceased a piece of property designated as Long Bros. addition. She testified that this deed was made at the request of deceased solely for the purpose of enabling him to make an easy transfer, and with the understanding that he would deed to her the property procured in exchange therefor. Other testimony was given that it was in the nature of a settlement of a long-standing dispute which the son had with his mother as to their respective interests. However, the son taking this property and other property which he had acquired from the Le Grand exchanges, and an automobile which he owned in his own right, made various exchanges until he acquired in his own name all the property which was transferred to the vendors of the Columbia Colony property for their equity in the contract of purchase thereof. This contract, as has been said, was taken in the name of respondent; but that her son had some interest therein cannot be denied, and, in fact, this was expressly admitted by the mother on numerous occasions, both before and after his death, as well as when a witness upon the stand. Before this action was commenced she frequently stated that the Columbia Colony property, which was in her name, was owned by her son, but that she held the title for the purpose of securing payment of her promissory note. In this connection respondent testified as follows:

"Well, the only thing I ever did say was that if the property [at Reedley, the property in suit], was in my name, that I would take out what was coming to me for interest and principal and settle the boy's affair all up, and then I would divide the rest of the money between the two children. I thought the little boy, as it was his father's estate, that he was getting from me, that he ought to have his share as well as the little girl."

And again:

"Q. You stated you wanted to see the two children of your son get equal shares in his estate, did you not? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you recognized that he had an estate at that time? A. The estate—it was mine, but when he took this land over I told him if he never returned it that that would be all he would get of my estate, and I didn't intend to take any of it to myself; I intended to divide it equally, what was over after paying his debts, to divide it equally between the two children. Q. You didn't think or want to take any of this property as your own? A. Nothing only what he owed me."

And further:

"Q. Didn't care about any of it for yourself at all? A. No, sir; I had told him it should go to his children and nothing else, he should get no more from the estate."

In explanation of this testimony it should be added that the deceased had a son by a former marriage and a daughter by his second wife, who is the appellant in this case. After separation from his first wife the son was adopted outside of the family, and immediately after the death of deceased respondent made inquiries as to the right of that child to participate in the estate of her son, and when advised that by reason of the adoption he could not participate, she then, for the first time, asserted that the property here in suit was in fact her property, and insisted upon the right to sell it, take from the proceeds thereof the amount of her claim of $1,250, and divide the remainder thereof equally between the two grandchildren. On numerous occasions before this suit was filed she admitted that her interest in the property was to the extent of her loan only, and that she desired the remainder to be equally divided between these grandchildren, and it appears from the entire record that this desire was the real cause of this litigation.

[1] From a full examination of the entire record it appears that there is no evidence to support the finding that the deceased had no interest in the property; that there was any agreement between deceased and respondent that the equity in the Columbia Colony property should be the property of respondent alone, or that deceased did not put more than $300 of his funds into the property thus taken in the name of his mother.

[2] As to the claim of fraud or breach of trust, which respondent asserts in her brief for the first time, it is sufficient to say that neither were pleaded nor proved. The claim is based upon the transactions which grew out of the exchange of the Le Grand property on February 16, 1916, full knowledge of which respondent testified she received within a month thereafter. If, therefore, fraud had been pleaded, it is reasonable to assume that the appellant would have interposed the plea of the statute of limitations. However, not having pleaded it, it is not open to consideration at this time.

Judgment reversed.

1. Railroads ⚡308—Violation of ordinance requiring flagman negligence.

Railroad was guilty of negligence where it violated a city ordinance requiring flagman at crossing, and burden was on it to explain absence of flagman at time of accident.

2. Railroads ⚡335(5) — Contributory negligence proximately causing injury bars recovery.

One injured at a railroad crossing cannot recover though the railroad was negligent, if his own contributory negligence was the proximate cause of the accident.

3. Railroads ⚡329—Auto truck driver, knowing danger, must use reasonable care.

An auto truck driver, knowing that cars are being shunted over a net of tracks crossing the street, is bound to use reasonable care in crossing, and is not absolved from such care by the railroad's negligence in not having its flagman in place, as required by ordinance, and in not giving the signals required by Civ. Code, § 486.

4. Railroads ⚡350(6)—Negligence in shunting cars question of fact.

Whether it was negligence to shunt cars over tracks at a crossing in a certain manner was a question of fact for the court, sitting as a jury, to determine.

5. Railroads — 350(13)—Negligence of truck driver held question of fact.

L. L. Cory, of Fresno, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action for damages caused by a freight car of the defendant running into and damaging an auto truck belonging to the plaintiff. The case was tried by the court without a jury. It found that the accident was caused solely and alone by the contributory negligence and want of care of the driver of the truck; that he carelessly and negligently attempted to cross the tracks without looking or listening for approaching cars, which were in plain view, and that if he had looked he would and could have seen the approaching cars in ample time to have stopped the truck and prevented the accident. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which this appeal is taken.

The facts are not disputed. The accident happened at a point where some 16 main line and side tracks of the defendant railroad company cross Eldorado street in the city of Fresno. By ordinance of the city the railroad was required to keep a flagman at this crossing, but at the time of the accident the flagman was absent from his place of duty. In the evening of the 10th of May, 1919, a loaded auto truck belonging to the plaintiff was driven by one Jack Walton along Eldorado street, going east. He reached the railroad crossing, noticed the absence of the flagman, but drove slowly across several tracks, looking, as he testified, in all directions. When he had reached and was on or about the sixth track from the west, he saw some freight cars being shunted, or kicked, in a southerly direction along several of the railroad tracks immediately in front of him. On seeing these cars he stopped his truck in order that they might pass. Five other cars had been shunted down the track upon which Walton stopped, by the locomotive, which was some 500 feet away from and to Walton's left. These cars moved slowly, at the rate of about three or four miles an hour, and bore down directly on the truck. Walton testified that he did not notice their approach until they were within about 40 feet of him, when his attention was called to them by a passer-by. When he saw the approaching cars Walton attempted to move his truck from off the track in front of them, but in his hurry and excitement he killed his engine, and, to save himself from injury, leaped from the truck, which was demolished by the collision.

There was no brakeman or other person upon the cars as they neared the place where Walton's truck stood. No bell was rung or whistle sounded to give warning of their approach. A switchman of the defendant had dropped off the train of cars which was being switched for the purpose of protecting the Eldorado street crossing. He saw Walton about 200 feet away, and signaled to him and called to him to stop. Walton stopped his auto truck in front of the approaching cars at a point where there was nothing to obstruct his view, and the moving cars were in plain sight. Walton himself said in a statement taken down immediately after the occurrence that if he had looked north along the railroad tracks he would have seen the cars coming, and the accident might have been avoided, but that he was watching the cars approaching in front and to his left, and for this reason he kept the truck going, as everything seemed clear ahead of him. At the trial he testified that he must have seen the cars on the track on which the automobile was standing; that the cars were undoubtedly there; and that he evidently saw them, but he did not know, until they were pointed out by the passer-by, that they were moving.

[1-3] Plaintiff lays great stress upon the fact that the flagman was not at his usual post at the time of the accident. The ordinance of the city required the defendant to keep a flagman at the crossing. None was there, and no explanation or reason was given by the defendant to account for his absence. The failure of the defendant to perform the duty imposed upon it by the ordinance was negligence of itself. But the fact that the usual precautions were omitted, and that the defendant was negligent, does not require a reversal of the judgment if the other circumstances indicate, as a matter of law, that from the most favorable view of the facts the trial court must have concluded that the negligence of the driver, Walton, was the proximate cause of the injury. Chrissinger v. Southern Pacific Co., 169 Cal. 619, 620, 149 Pac. 175. Walton was familiar with the crossing. He knew the tracks were there, and that cars were being shunted over the network of tracks and across Eldorado street at that particular moment. He was therefore bound to use reasonable care, and was not absolved from such care by the negligence of the defendant in not having the flagman in his place at that moment. Davis v. California Street Cable Co., 105 Cal. 131, 138, 38 Pac. 647.

The plaintiff places some reliance on the alleged violation by the defendant of section 486 of the Civil Code, which provides that the bell of a locomotive must be rung, or its whistle sounded (except in cities), at a distance of at least 80 rods from the place where the railroad crosses any street, and be kept ringing, or sounding, until the locomotive has crossed the same. But in such cases, as in the matter of the violation of the city ordinance, the situation is governed by the principles of law we have just stated.

[4] Whether it was negligence or not for the servants of the railroad company to shunt the cars over the various tracks at the crossing of Eldorado street in the manner in which they did was a question of fact for the court to determine, sitting as it did without a jury. Dunne v. Hines, 195 Pac. 276; Carraher v. S. F. Bridge Co., 81 Cal. 98, 102, 22 Pac. 480. The attending circumstances in Chung Sing v. Southern Pacific Co., 59 Cal. Dec. 439, render the holding in that case on that point inapplicable here.

[5] The question of contributory negligence of the driver, Walton, was properly submitted to the trial court. Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 Pac. 513. With all the facts and circumstances before it, and with the nearby scene of the accident placed clearly in its view, it has determined that Walton was guilty of contributory negligence which proximately caused the accident. The case is not one in which that conclusion may be rejected by the appellate court.

The judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [6] In the statement in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal that "the fact that the usual precautions were omitted, and that the defendant was negligent, does not require a reversal of the judgment if the other circumstances indicate, as a matter of law, that from the most favorable view of the facts the trial court must have concluded that the negligence of the driver, Walton, was the proximate cause of the injury," the phrase "as a matter of law" should have been omitted. It implies that a finding of contributory negligence must be sustained on appeal unless the facts proven establish such negligence beyond controversy and "as a matter of law." The true rule is that such finding must be sustained if there is substantial evidence to support it, and that is so, even where there is also substantial evidence to contradict it; a mere conflict of evidence not being sufficient on appeal to overthrow a finding of the court. This appears from other passages in the opinion, and the insertion of the above-quoted phrase at that place was doubtless an inadvertence.

The petition for a rehearing in this court is denied.

Code, §§ 1530, 1531, as there was neither a substitution of a new obligation nor a waiver of the original obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Novation.]

2. Contracts ⇨295(1)—Where checks were to be delivered to contractor when defects were remedied, substantial compliance was sufficient.

Where by agreement with a contractor defendant deposited checks for the amount due the contractor with a third person, to be delivered when certain defects were remedied, a substantial compliance with the conditions upon which the checks were to be delivered was sufficient.

3. Accord and satisfaction ⇨1—Deposit of checks for delivery to contractor when defects remedied not an "accord and satisfaction."

Where by agreement with a contractor defendant deposited checks with a third person, to be delivered to the contractor when certain defects in the work were remedied, and the checks were for the amount claimed by the contractor, and were subsequently returned to defendant by the depository, there was no accord and satisfaction under Civ. Code, § 1521, defining accord, and section 1523, defining satisfaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; W. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by Hermann Hallensleben against the Heine Piano Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Werner V. Olschewski, of San Francisco, for appellant.

G. R. Perkins, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a money judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The parties had entered into a written contract by which the plaintiff undertook to perform certain work in connection with the installation of the elevators in a building being erected by the defendant. The plaintiff, as he claimed, completed the work and had received certain payments thereon, leaving a balance due of $385.77. There were also due him two small items of $7 and $4.50 for extra work. The defendant refused to pay these sums until the plaintiff had remedied certain claimed defects in the work, but on condition that he do so offered to deposit with a third party certified checks for the several amounts claimed by the plaintiff, to be turned over to him upon such compliance. The plaintiff agreed to the course suggested. Thereupon the defendant wrote and delivered to the Pacific Elevator & Equipment Company the following letter:

"April 22, 1920.

"Gentlemen: We inclose you herewith three checks for the sum of $397.27, payable to Herman Hallensleben. Will you please upon the following conditions being performed deliver said checks to Herman Hallensleben and require him to sign a receipt which is also inclosed herewith:

"Conditions.

"[Here follow seven specifications of defects claimed to exist in plaintiff's work.]

"(8) Upon said work being properly done and done in a good workmanlike manner, and upon said work being done to the satisfaction of Shea & Lofquist, architects for said building, and upon the same being pronounced as properly done by the Pacific Elevator & Equipment Company. * * *

"If Mr. Hallensleben does not perform the conditions herein set forth you are to return the hereinbefore mentioned checks to the Heine Piano Company without delay."

Thereafter the plaintiff, having, as he claimed, complied with the conditions of this letter, demanded of the Pacific Elevator & Equipment Company that it deliver said checks to him; but the additional work not being entirely satisfactory to the persons named under condition numbered 8 of said writing, the said company refused such demand, and returned the certified checks to the defendant.

Upon the trial the court found that the plaintiff had, with one trifling exception, fulfilled the so-called conditions to the letter, and rendered its judgment in plaintiff's favor for the aggregate amount of said certified checks, less the sum of $10, which latter sum it found to be the reasonable cost of bringing the work to the desired state of perfection.

[1] In support of its appeal the defendant contends first that the letter of April 22, 1920, written by it to the Pacific Elevator & Equipment Company, to the terms of which the plaintiff had orally agreed, constitutes a novation of the original contract between the parties, and that it was error on the part of the trial court to found its judgment upon the original contract, if in fact it did so.

With this contention we are not able to agree. Novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one; and such substitution must be with intent to extinguish the old obligation. Civ. Code, §§ 1530, 1531; Young v. Benton, 21 Cal. App. 382, 131 Pac. 1051; 29 Cyc. 1130. The evidence in this case contains nothing to show that the plaintiff ever agreed to waive the defendant's original obligation to him. Indeed, it is quite plain that he regarded the deposit by the defendant with the Pacific Elevator & Equipment Company of the three certified checks as the method adopted by it for the discharge of that obligation; and it is also plain from the evidence that the plaintiff's oral agreement to remedy the defects in his work claimed by the defendant to exist was simply for the purpose of securing payment of the amount claimed by him to be due under his original contract.

We think also there was no substitution of a new obligation for an existing one. The defendant's obligation under the original agreement was to pay to the plaintiff $397.27 upon the completion of the work specified in its contract, including the trifling amount of extra work, and this is precisely what it purported to do by its written instructions to its depository. Nor was the plaintiff's obligation changed, since the so-called conditions referred merely to matters which the defendant itself claimed were defects in the performance of the written contract between the parties. The essentials of a novation are entirely lacking in the present transaction.

[2] It is also contended by the appellant in the same connection that the evidence shows that the plaintiff did not comply with the conditions of the letter of April 22, 1920, so as to entitle him to be paid the amount of the certified checks. The court, as we have seen, found a substantial compliance, which finding is abundantly supported by the evidence. A substantial compliance was sufficient. Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 556, 150 Pac. 769; Rischard v. Miller, 182 Cal. 351, 188 Pac. 50; Collins v. Ramish, 182 Cal. 360, 188 Pac. 550.

The appellant's next contention that, having deposited the certified checks, it had done all that it was required to do, and hence that it was not a proper party defendant, depends upon the establishment of the appellant's first proposition, which having fallen, this must fall with it.

[3] Finally the appellant urges that the letter of April, 1920, written by it to the Pacific Elevator & Equipment Company outlining the conditions under which the certified checks were to be delivered to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff's verbal acquiescence in those conditions, constituted an accord and satisfaction.

We think this contention even wider of the mark than that of novation.

"An accord is an agreement to accept in extinction of an obligation something different from or less than that to which the person agreeing to accept is entitled." Civ. Code, § 1521.

And satisfaction is the acceptance by the creditor of the consideration specified in the accord. Civ. Code, § 1523. Here there was no agreement by the plaintiff to accept anything different or less than the amount claimed to be due to him; and the element of satisfaction is entirely lacking, since the certified checks were not turned over to the plaintiff, but were returned by the deposi- tary to the defendant.

We find no merit in the appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

54 Cal. App. 423

In re JONES. (Cr. 840.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division I, California. Oct. 3, 1921.)

1. Habeas corpus ☞ 85(2)—Evidence held insufficient to show conspiracy to have prisoner brought illegally from Mexico to United States.

In habeas corpus proceeding pending extradition of petitioner following his arrest for felony committed in other state, after deportation from Mexico, in which petitioner claimed that he had not been found within the state in view of illegal deportation, evidence that United States officials presented proof to Mexican officials that person living in Mexico had been convicted of a felony in the United States and was a fugitive from justice at the time of his entry into Mexico, without requesting Mexican officials to illegally deport such person, held insufficient to justify a finding that United States officials conspired with Mexican officials to have such person illegally brought from Mexico to the United States.

2. Extradition ☞ 28½—Prisoner arrested immediately after illegal deportation from Mexico not "found within this state" within statutes and federal Constitution.

If person convicted of felony in another state who had escaped and was living in Mexico was brought into California pursuant to an unlawful conspiracy between United States officials and Mexican officials to have him brought into the United States without compliance with Mexican law relating to deportation, and was arrested immediately after being placed across boundary, he was not "found within this state," within the statutes and the federal Constitution relating to extradition.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Within the State.]

3. Extradition ☞ 28½—Prisoner arrested immediately after being placed across Mexican boundary "found within this state," regardless of irregularities of foreign officials in deportation.

Person convicted of felony in other state arrested in this state immediately after being placed across Mexican boundary line by Mexican officials with authority to deport him, after having escaped into Mexico, was "found within this state" within provisions of the statute and the federal Constitution relating to extradition, regardless of irregularities committed by Mexican officials in deporting him, in the absence of conspiracy between United States officials and Mexican officials to have him illegally brought into United States from Mexico.

4. Evidence ☞ 81—Mexican authority assumed to have had authority to deport fugitive from justice.

In habeas corpus proceeding pending extradition in which petitioner claimed to have been illegally deported from Mexico, into which he had escaped after conviction of a felony in the United States, within three years prior to deportation, it will be assumed, in the absence of evidence as to the law of Mexico, that the Mexican authorities had authority to deport him, in view of Immigration Law (U. S. Comp. St. § 4242 et seq.).

Application for writ of habeas corpus by Xenophon Jones against the Sheriff of San Diego County. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Dana R. Weller, of Los Angeles, and Sample & Harden, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Lawler & Degnan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Petitioner herein is held in custody as a fugitive from justice. Upon the demand of the Governor of the State of Oklahoma, the Governor of California has issued his warrant of rendition and the state officer of Oklahoma is ready to execute the process. There is no dispute as to the preliminary facts involved, nor any question as to the regularity in form and substance of the warrant issued by the Governor of California, except that it is insisted that petitioner was not, at the time of the issuance of said warrant, within the state of California, and that his presence herein was fraudulently and forcibly obtained without his consent. Petitioner was convicted of the crime of manslaughter in the state of Oklahoma and, without satisfying the judgment rendered upon his conviction, fled from that state and went to Tia Juana, in the republic of Mexico. He continued to reside at the place mentioned until officers of the Mexican government arrested him and forcibly placed him across the line and to a place within the state of California. An officer of the immigration department and another (Gershon) attached to the Department of Justice of the United States then took charge of petitioner, kept him under arrest, and he shortly was received into the custody of respondent here. It appears that one of the military officers in command and on duty at the international line informed Gershon that he had been called upon by the Mexican immigration officials to assist in the deportation of petitioner, and that he had ordered the arrest of petitioner and would deport him the same evening from Mexicali. The Mexican immigration office at Tia Juana, several days in advance of the day when petitioner was placed across the international boundary line, advised the witness Hanna, who was the United States immigration official to whom we have referred, that petitioner was to be deported from Mexico. Petitioner was in fact placed under arrest by Mexican soldiers, and taken with his automobile to a point some miles outside the town of Mexicali. The two United States officials mentioned, by agreement, were waiting across the line and petitioner was delivered by the Mexican soldiers over a bridge and upon United States territory. There was no interval of freedom allowed him from custody, for he was immediately taken under arrest to a nearby California town and placed in jail. He protested both to the Mexican soldiers against being transported from the country and to the American officials against being subjected to arrest by them. The evidence further showed that some time prior to the deportation of petitioner from Mexico an officer from the state of Oklahoma had exhibited to Gershon, the department of justice agent, a warrant and proof of the fact that Jones had been convicted of manslaughter in Oklahoma and was wanted there as a fugitive from justice. Gershon had exhibited this documentary evidence to Mexican officials at Tia Juana. There was no evidence that any request was made by Gershon or the Oklahoma officer that the Mexican officials should deport petitioner or illegally or in any wise cause him to be placed across the boundary line so that he might be subjected to arrest in the United States.

[1, 2] Petitioner's contention is that there was an unlawful conspiracy entered into between the officers of the separate governments with the purpose of causing him to be kidnapped and illegally brought within the United States. Under such a state of facts, he insists that he could not be deemed to have been "found within this state," as that term is used both in the federal Constitution and the statute of California. Assuming that the facts sufficiently show the case contended for, we would readily agree with the conclusion drawn. However, we think that the evidence does not justify a finding of an unlawful conspiracy formed and executed with the purpose of bringing petitioner within the limits of the United States. So far as appears, the federal officers went no further than to present to Mexican officials proof of the fact that at the time of petitioner's entry into Mexico he was a fugitive from justice, having been convicted of a felony. The evidence fell short of showing in the least particular or degree any importunities or solicitations on the part of the American officials to induce the Mexican authorities to commit any improper act in the case of this petitioner.

[3] Passing for a moment the question argued as to the authority of the Mexican officials to deport petitioner, we are quite clear that, assuming that such authority existed, the moment petitioner reached American soil he became subject to the extradition law as a fugitive from justice, and as having been "found" within the state of California. It is earnestly contended that the officials of Mexico acted without authority in ejecting petitioner from their territory.

[4] As the law of Mexico governing such matters was not produced or shown in evidence, petitioner relies upon the presumption that that law will be deemed to be the same as that of the United States. He contends that there is no authority under that law to deport a person except upon due warrant issued and hearing had. He admitted that under the law of this country convicts may be excluded and also deported within three years from date of their entry into the country. Immigration Law, Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d Ed.) vol. 3, p. 637; U. S. Comp. St. § 4242 et seq. We must assume then that ample authority existed, for the cause shown, to support an order that petitioner be deported from Mexico. For ought that appears, an order and warrant in due form may have been made authorizing the action taken, notwithstanding that petitioner says that none was exhibited to him. He further testified that he was allowed no hearing, and that may be conceded to be the fact, for want of any contradicting evidence. The matters of which he complains, as to the course of conduct on the part of Mexican officials, amount to irregularities in the administration of the law of Mexico and the question as to whether the acts of the Mexican officials, in placing the person of petitioner outside the confines of their country, were sanctioned by that law, we think must be considered as immaterial here. Instances are not wanting, and a number are cited in text-books on extradition, where, outside of treaty obligations and in the absence of them, foreign governments have acceded to a simple request made upon them to deliver up or return to the requesting government persons charged with heinous crimes committed within the jurisdiction of the last-mentioned governments. The proposition is fully established by the authorities that in such cases, and assuming that the acts of the surrendering governments were irregular under their own law and procedure, the person surrendered could not question the regularity of such acts in the courts of the country having jurisdiction of the crime committed and to which such person may have been returned. This rule has been extended far enough to cover cases where citizens of the United States have by artifice caused a person who has fled from our jurisdiction to cross the line and come within reach of state process. The law so established is in emphasis of the doctrine that there is given to no fugitive from justice the right to claim an asylum in a foreign country. In the case of Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. Ct. 225, 30 L. Ed. 421, this law is given full exposition, and we here cite, as pertinent to the questions just discussed, the further decisions: Ex parte Brown (D. C.) 28 Fed. 653; Ex parte Wilson, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 281, 140 S. W. 98, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243.

As already stated, had it appeared that the agent representing the state of Oklahoma had gone into Mexican territory, seized the petitioner, and brought him into the state of California, we would then conclude that a warrant of rendition issued by the Governor of this state would be inoperative, because the condition of the law that such warrant may be issued only where a fugitive is "found" within the state would not be satisfied. We have already determined that the evidence did not establish such a state of facts. The power under which petitioner was removed from Mexican territory was that of Mexican officials claiming to act under the right of the immigration laws of that country. Whether they did in fact act regularly under such laws remains to be questioned only by that government. When petitioner was delivered upon California soil he was then subject to arrest as a fugitive from justice, and a warrant of rendition issued by the Governor of California became operative and effective for the purpose of authorizing the Oklahoma officer to remove him from the state.

The writ is discharged, and petitioner remanded to the custody in which he was at the time of the return made herein.

EPHRAIM et ux. v. OAKLAND TITLE INS. & GUARANTY CO. (Civ. 3806.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept 27, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1921.)

1. Escrows ⇐10—When depositary recorded deeds and sent purchaser's check to vendor, transaction could not be reopened because of doubt as to title.

Where a grantor deposited a deed with a title insurance company for delivery to the grantee on payment of the price and the grantee deposited a check to be paid to the grantor when the company could guarantee the title, and the company recorded the deeds and sent the check to the grantor, there was a delivery of the deed, and the transaction was closed, and it was too late to reopen it by stopping payment on the check because of a doubt as to the grantor's title or because a third person subsequently commenced suit to quiet her title.

2. Escrows ⇐10—Proof of recording held sufficient proof of delivery to sustain verdict.

Proof that a title insurance company, with which a deed and check for the purchase price had been deposited, placed the deed of record as agent for the purchaser, established the delivery of the deed so as to support a verdict for the grantor in a suit to recover the price after payment on the check had been stopped in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, providing that the jury need not decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses as against a presumption, there being a presumption of delivery when the deed is executed, acknowledged, and recorded.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1066—Instruction as to execution of deed saying nothing of delivery harmless where there was no issue as to delivery.

In a grantor's suit to compel payment of the price by defendant with which it had been left by the grantee, an instruction that, if the deed to the grantor from a third person was duly signed or acknowledged, it vested title when thereafter recorded, though ignoring the necessity of a delivery, was not misleading, and did not affect defendants' substantial rights where the only issue was as to execution, and not concerning delivery.

4. Deeds 194(2)—Possession by grantee sufficient to establish delivery in absence of contradictory evidence.

The possession of a deed by the grantee is some evidence of its delivery, and sufficient in the absence of any contradictory evidence to establish it.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by W. K. Ephraim and wife against The Oakland Title Insurance & Guaranty Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Wilson & Wilson, R. Porter Ashe, and Arnold C. Lackenbach, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $1,800.

In the latter part of May, 1919, the plaintiff, Mrs. A. F. Ephraim, authorized one S. M. Sample to sell the parcel of land described in the complaint for the sum of $1,800, Sample's compensation to be 5 per cent. of said amount. Said agent sold said land to Lionel Wachs at the price thus fixed, who directed that the title thereto be placed in the name of Milton Mazor. Accordingly Mrs. Ephraim executed a deed to Mazor, and on May 26, 1919, she and the purchaser visited the office of the defendant, Oakland Title Insurance & Guaranty Company, and gave instructions as to the completion of the transaction, which took the common form of the deposit of the deed in escrow to be delivered to the grantee upon payment of the purchase price. At this time Mrs. Ephraim produced an unrecorded deed to the property to herself from Marie Uhl, dated November 22, 1918. Apparently the plaintiff made a satisfactory explanation to the secretary and manager of the title company, Ira Abraham, as to why her deed had not been recorded. In any event she deposited the two deeds with the defendant, receiving from it a receipt which provided that the deed from Mrs. Ephraim to Mazor was to be delivered to Mazor upon payment of $1,800, less $95, the commission payable to the agent. On the following day Wachs notified Sample that he had decided to take the title in his own name, instead of in the name of his friend Mazor. Accordingly a deed conveying the property to Wachs was executed by Mazor. On May 28th this deed was sent by Wachs to the title company, together with a check for $1,800, with instructions to pay the amount thereof to the plaintiff, A. F. Ephraim, when the title company could issue its policy showing record title to the lot in himself. On the afternoon of the same day the title company filed for record all three deeds, and handed Mrs. Ephraim a check for $1,705, and to Sample a check for $95.

Shortly thereafter Mrs. Ephraim telephoned to the defendant's secretary requesting him to return to her when recorded, and to no one else, the deed from Marie Uhl to herself. He replied that the transaction was closed, that she had no interest in the deed nor in anything except the money, check for which had been given to her. This communication aroused the suspicion of Mr. Abraham, and he requested Mrs. Ephraim not to cash the check, but to call at the office of the title company the following morning. He stopped payment of both checks and directed the county recorder not to let the deeds out of his possession. The next morning, at a meeting in the office of the title company which was attended by Marie Uhl, the plaintiff's purported grantor, she declared that she had not conveyed the property to Mrs. Ephraim, and about a week later commenced an action against Mrs. Ephraim and others to quiet title to the lot, and to have her alleged deed declared void. A lis pendens was immediately recorded. Thereupon the plaintiffs commenced this action against the title company, and Marie Uhl, alleging in their complaint, in part, the facts above narrated as to the deposit in escrow of the deeds, the receipt by the title company of the purchase price of the property for her use and benefit, and its refusal to pay over said money. The defendants filed separate answers, in both of which it is alleged that the plaintiff, intending to cheat and defraud Milton Mazor, falsely and fraudulently represented that she was the owner of the lot of land described in the pleadings, whereas said lot was the property of Marie Uhl, who had not executed any conveyance thereof to the plaintiff, A. F. Ephraim, and consequently said plaintiff was not entitled to receive the money lodged with the title company by the purchaser of said lot.

[1] Under the issues thus framed the principal question before the trial court was whether or not Marie Uhl had in fact executed this deed to the plaintiff, A. F. Ephraim. The jury found affirmatively upon this question, and we are of the opinion that the evidence abundantly supports the verdict of the jury. Indeed, the sufficiency of the evidence upon this point is not attacked, the only serious contention made upon this appeal being that there is no evidence of a delivery of the plaintiff's deed to her grantee, or his successor—the actual purchaser, Wachs. The instructions of Mrs. Ephraim, the grantor, were that her deed should be delivered upon receipt from the purchaser of $1,800.

The instructions to the title company given by the purchaser were that the $1,800 should be paid over to Mrs. Ephraim when that company could issue its policy of title insurance guaranteeing title to stand in Wachs. When the depository recorded the deeds and sent its check for the purchase price of the lot to the grantor, the transaction was concluded, and similarly, when it was in receipt of the purchase money, and placed the deeds upon the record, there was in effect a delivery of the plaintiff's deed to her grantee, and the title company was in a position to insure the record title as being in Wachs. It was then too late, upon the suspicion of the secretary of the company being aroused as to the genuineness of the title in Mrs. Ephraim, to prevent the consummation of the transaction, for, as stated by that gentleman, it was already closed. Nor does it appear that Wachs desired to rescind the purchase; and the title company, acting for Wachs, refused upon demand to return to Mrs. Ephraim the deeds or to pay her the purchase price. It is true, as claimed by the defendants, that the action commenced by Marie Uhl cast a cloud upon the title to the lot, but this was after the delivery of the deed to Wachs and after the plaintiff was entitled to receive the purchase money, and hence too late to be available to the title company as a defense to this action if, as was determined by the jury, the deed from Uhl to Ephraim was valid.

[2] Proof that the title company, as the agent of the purchaser, placed the deeds of record, sufficiently established the delivery of the plaintiff's deed to Wachs or his nominee. A presumption of delivery arises where a deed is shown to have been executed, acknowledged, and recorded. In 8 R. C. L. § 66, p. 1004, speaking of the effect of a recording of a deed, it is said:

"Likewise, the fact that a deed is on record is prima facie evidence of delivery, or, as otherwise stated, warrants a presumption of delivery and acceptance, so that whoever makes assertion to the contrary has the burden of proving it. Moreover, since recording takes the place of the solemn ceremonies accompanying delivery of seisin at common law, it has been called evidence of delivery of the most cogent character, requiring the countervailing proof to be clear and persuasive."

And in section 67 of the same work, at page 1006, the author says:

"Delivery of the deed by the grantor, with the grantee's consent, to the proper officer, with the intention that thereby it shall pass the title, constitutes an effective delivery, the officer being deemed in such case the grantee's agent, as where a corrected deed was delivered to the register for record by the grantor to whom the original deed had been returned by the grantee for correction, the officer's possession after recording being regarded as that of the grantee."

While there was other evidence tending to show a delivery of the deed, this presumption alone was sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2; Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, 91 Pac. 616; Keating v. Morrissey, 6 Cal. App. 163, 91 Pac. 677.

[3, 4] Defendant company complains of one of the instructions to the jury, which was to the effect that, if the deed to the plaintiff was duly signed or duly acknowledged by Marie Uhl, when it was thereafter recorded it vested title to the property in the plaintiff, A. F. Ephraim, pointing out that this instruction completely ignores the necessity of a delivery of the deed. This instruction, it must be admitted, would have been highly prejudicial to the defendant if there had been any question before the jury as to such delivery. In fact, there was not, the issue, so far as the evidence is concerned, being confined to the due execution of that instrument. The possession of the deed by the plaintiff was some evidence of its delivery, and was sufficient in the absence of any contradictory evidence to establish it. The instruction complained of, therefore, while erroneous in form, did not mislead the jury or affect the substantial rights of the defendants.

Judgment affirmed.

NAPA UNION HIGH SCHOOL DIST. OF NAPA COUNTY v. BOARD OF SUPER-VISORS et al. (Civ. 2353.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 24, 1921.)

1. Mandamus ☞7—Not writ of right, but of discretion.

The writ of mandamus is not a writ of right granted as of course, but is allowed only in the sound discretion of the court, not to be exercised unless some just or useful purpose is subserved.

2. Mandamus ☞3(9), 172—Equitable action to prevent sale of school bonds, and not defense to mandamus to compel issuance, held proper remedy to raise all issues affecting validity of bonds.

Since it is the duty of the board of supervisors of a high school district to issue bonds on a regular return on an election therefor, the scope of inquiry on mandamus to compel the issuance of the bonds by the board is limited to the regularity of the returns; hence parties seeking to question the validity of the election for reasons not appearing from the record should proceed by an equitable action to prevent sale of the bonds, wherein all issues that may affect the integrity of the declared result may be tried.

3. Schools and school districts ☞97(4)—High school board must issue bonds if election returns are regular on their face.

Under Pol. Code, § 1746, it is the duty of the Board of Supervisors of a high school district to issue bonds therefor if the returns of the election for that purpose, as certified to them, are regular on their face.

4. Schools and school districts ☞97(4)—Notice of election on bond issue need not state time of payment of interest.

The statutes relative to elections for issuance of bonds of high school districts do not require that the proposition as printed on the ballots should show the times for payment of interest, whether annual or semiannual, though such fact should appear in the notices of election to be posted and published.

5. Schools and school districts ☞97(4)—High school board properly required officers in election on bond issue to complete returns.

The action of the high school board in requiring the officers of election on the question of issuance of bonds to complete their returns held proper, this being authorized by Pol. Code, § 1281a, applicable to high school elections.

Application by the Napa Union High School District of Napa County for mandamus against the Board of Supervisors and others. Writ granted.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for petitioners.

Henry C. Gesford, of Napa, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. An application was made in the first instance to this court for a writ of mandate to require respondents to issue the bonds of said high school district in the sum of $300,000, "for the purpose of purchasing a suitable high school lot, building thereon a new high school building, supplying said high school building with furniture and necessary apparatus, and improving the high school grounds." In response to the alternative writ respondents have filed herein a demurrer to the petition, and an answer in which is challenged on various grounds the legality of the bond election, and in further justification of their course in declining to issue said bonds respondents allege that they were advised by the district attorney of said county to sustain the objection to any action on their part made by certain taxpayers who appeared before them, and "to proceed no further in the matter of said high school bonds at that time." In support of this last allegation, they attach a transcript of the notes taken by the official reporter, from which we quote the suggestion of the district attorney to the supervisors as follows:

"We have no desire to issue bonds that are illegal, or which were not legally voted upon.

We believe the election was legal, and, in order to get quick determination, I have a plan to suggest. We want the case decided, and if it is perfectly agreeable to you now to indicate how the board of trustees of the Napa school district and myself feel about this proposition, I will say that it will be perfectly agreeable to us if the board of supervisors will sustain Judge Gesford's objection, and refuse to pass or issue the bonds. We are not consenting now that the election was held in an illegal manner, but just simply suggesting this as a simple way of expediting matters. Then I will mandamus the board, and the District Court of Appeal or the Supreme Court will compel the issuance of these bonds and will pass upon the validity of these proceedings. By that method I can get the matter quickly disposed of."

This was agreed to, and by consent the board of supervisors sustained the objection and declined to proceed further. By reason of this agreement we might be justified in refusing the writ, as the courts will not ordinarily hear a party when he asks to have undone an act which he advised to be done. We are satisfied, however that the parties acted in good faith with a laudable desire to have the validity of the bond election determined as speedily and economically as possible, and we are not disposed to dismiss them without considering other points made in the briefs.

[1] It is conceded that the writ of mandamus is not a writ of right, granted as of course, but is allowed only in the sound discretion of the court. This discretion will never be exercised in favor of a party unless some just or useful purpose will be answered thereby, and it must not only serve some just and useful purpose, but it must be necessary to secure the ends of justice. Many decisions in support of the foregoing propositions are cited by respondents, but the question is hardly open to dispute.

[2, 3] With this general statement of the rule, indeed, the authorities are practically unanimous, but it is sometimes difficult to determine the scope of the proper inquiry as to the regularity of the proceedings which are sought to be reviewed in the application for the writ. However, in a case like this, the duty of the supervisors being purely ministerial, if the returns of the high school board are regular and no vital infirmity appears upon the face of the proceedings, the bonds must be issued, and the party who desires to question the validity of the election for reasons which do not appear from the record must seek his remedy in an equitable action to prevent the sale of the bonds, wherein all issues that may affect the integrity of the declared result may be tried and determined. Gibson v. Board of Supervisors, 80 Cal. 359, 22 Pac. 225. If the inquiry of the board of supervisors can extend no farther than we have indicated, and it thereby appears to be their duty to issue the bonds, it necessarily follows that the court's inquiry upon an application for a writ to compel them to proceed must be confined to the same limits; that is, to an inspection of the record. Otherwise, the court might determine that it is not the duty of the board to do what the law plainly requires of them. Necessarily the board exercises some discretion, and their judgment is called into play in the determination of whether the prior proceedings have been regular, but, properly speaking, that does not involve a judicial function. The particular record upon which the action of the supervisors is based is the certificate of the high school board, and when that is presented to them in proper form, "thereupon said board of supervisors shall be and it is hereby authorized and directed to issue the bonds of such high school district." Section 1746, Pol. Code. The duty of the supervisors is similar to that of a canvassing board, and it is well settled that the latter is bound by the returns. 15 Cyc. 379, 381, 384, 386, 387; 9 R. C. L. 1110-1113; 20 C. J. 200. It is sufficient to quote from the first of these as follows:

"County canvassers have the quasi judicial power to determine whether the papers transmitted to them are genuine election returns, signed by the duly appointed officers in the various precincts; but beyond this their duties are purely ministerial, involving simply the labor of counting the votes returned to them and determining the number of votes received by each candidate or proposition. They are governed by the returns made by the inspectors of the several precincts as to the number of votes cast and for whom cast, and if these returns be in due form they have not the power to go behind them and ascertain the qualification of voters or otherwise to inquire into the regularity of the election. They must simply add together the votes of the several precincts cast for each candidate as the same are shown in the certified returns and declare the result. * * * And if they attempt to travel beyond the limit of their ministerial duties, and enter upon a judicial investigation of the regularity of the election, they may be compelled by mandamus to canvass the returns as they have them before them."

It is further stated by these authorities that, if the canvassers neglect or refuse to canvass the returns sent to them, mandamus will lie to compel them to do so, but that upon an application for a writ of mandate the court is not authorized to go beyond the returns and consider questions touching the legality of the election. A multitude of cases could be cited to the same effect, but we refer only to Leary v. Jones, 51 Colo. 185, 116 Pac. 130, and Pacheco v. Beck, 52 Cal. 3. In the former the subject received careful consideration by the Supreme Court of Colorado. Therein pertinent comment is made as to State ex rel. v. Stevens, 23 Kan. 456, 33 Am. Rep. 175, upon which respondents relied. In the Kansas Case, indeed, the invalidity of the election appeared upon the face of the returns, since it was a matter of common knowledge that "a monstrous fraud had been perpetrated" in the return of a total vote of 2,947, when there were only about 800 legal voters in the county.

In the Pacheco Case, supra, the writ was directed to the secretary of state to compel him to estimate the votes given for members of Congress, as shown in the records of the counties transmitted to him by the clerks, and to issue a certificate to the person having the highest number of votes. Therein it was said:

"The law does not vest him with authority to inquire whether the board of supervisors correctly canvassed the returns from the several precincts, or whether the record correctly states the result of the canvass, as made or declared, or whether the record was properly made up; nor to investigate any question relating to the proceedings which were had prior to the making of the certified abstract. That document, being in the form prescribed by law, is the only one upon which he is required or authorized to act in his official capacity in estimating the vote of the district."

We conclude that in this proceeding the questions of fraud and illegal voting that are presented by the answer of respondents cannot be considered, and that our attention must be limited to those matters that appear upon the face of the returns.

[4] It is claimed that, within this limitation, we should hold that the election was invalid, for the reason "that the proposition as printed on the ballot does not show that the interest was to be paid semiannually." The argument is that thereby the voter may have been misled into thinking that the interest was not to be paid until the maturity of the bonds, and hence would be more inclined to vote for them. We do not attach such importance to this circumstance. It is only a summary of the provisions, as is customary, that was printed on the ballot, and the voters are presumed to have understood the practice in that respect. The law does not require the time for the payment of the interest to be printed upon the ballot, but it does provide that it shall appear in the notices of the election to be posted and published. The law was observed in giving such notices, and we must assume that the voters were apprised of their contents. It appears, also, that this detail appeared in the resolution calling the election. The case of Hollywood Union High School District v. Keyes, 12 Cal. App. 172, 107 Pac. 129, is not in point, as therein the time of payment was not stated in the notice, as is required by section 1745 of the Political Code.

This objection, as suggested by petitioner, should not prevail unless unavoidable, for the reason that it would invalidate millions of dollars worth of bonds that have been sold in the various counties of the state. However, we do not consider the objection as serious, although, manifestly, it would be the better practice to publish on the ballot the time of payment of the interest.

[5] Likewise, we see no particular merit in the objection to the action of the high school board in requiring the election offices to complete their returns. This was authorized by section 1281a of the Political Code, which is applicable to high school elections. Bernardo v. Rue, 26 Cal. App. 108, 146 Pac. 79. Respondents are apparently in error in the statement that—

"The tally list and poll list of every precinct in the high school district was changed, corrected and reauthenticated."

The petition shows:

"Said election officers thereupon made and signed amended certificates to the poll lists and amended certificates to the tally list of the returns of said election in their respective precincts already filed by them with the board, thereby correcting and completing their returns and the authentication thereof so as to truly show the votes that were cast in their respective precincts at such election for and against each proposition voted upon thereat."

We think, also, that the record shows a sufficient compliance by the high school board with the law requiring them to cause an entry in their minutes of the fact that two-thirds of the votes were cast in favor of the bonds and to certify to the board of supervisors "all the proceedings had in the premises." Section 1746, Pol. Code.

Indeed, without further specification we may state that by an inspection of the record we discover nothing to justify the supervisors in declining to issue the bonds.

We may add that it seems to us that none of the special defenses set up in the answer possesses substantial merit except the allegations of fraud and illegal voting contained in the seventh, eighth, and ninth counts. In other words, the other objections do not appear material. Still, we do not desire to foreclose inquiry as to any of them in a proper proceeding.

As far as any delay is concerned in the final determination of the merits of the controversy, it would probably be as great if the issues were tried in this proceeding as in the usual and regular course. As we view the matter, it would be of no advantage for Mr. Graves, a taxpayer, to intervene herein. He will have an opportunity to be heard if a proper suit is brought to test the validity of the election.

We think the demurrer to the petition should be overruled, the demurrer to the answer sustained, and a peremptory writ issue requiring the supervisors to issue said bonds. It is so ordered.

CADY v. SANFORD. (Civ. 3670.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 16, 1921.)

Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 622—Transcript is not overdue before notice of denial of new trial.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 650, allowing 10 days after notice of denial of new trial to settle exceptions taken at the trial, and rule 2 of the Rules of the Supreme and District Courts of Appeal, providing that the time for filing a transcript shall not begin to run until the bill of exceptions has been filed or the time has expired for such proceeding, an appeal cannot be dismissed for failure to file the transcript, where the record shows that the only bill of exceptions filed was that relating to proceedings on a motion to vacate judgment, and that no notice of the denial of new trial was in the clerk's office.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by William H. Cady against G. A. Sanford. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Henry T. Gage and Ingall W. Bull, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. E. Kirk, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that no printed transcript of the record, nor any transcript prepared under the provisions of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, was filed within the time required by law. Our records show that no printed transcript of the record has ever been filed. A certificate of the clerk of the trial court shows, among other things, that a notice of appeal from the judgment was filed in time, the form or contents of the notice, however, not being disclosed; that a bill of exceptions was settled and filed, that a motion for a new trial was denied on April 7, 1921, and that no steps have been taken to procure a transcript under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. A supplemental certificate of the clerk, procured to be filed by appellant, shows that the bill of exceptions mentioned in the earlier certificate was not a bill of the exceptions taken during the trial of the cause, but a bill of exceptions on an order denying a motion to vacate judgment. The supplemental certificate also shows that there is on file in the office of the clerk of the trial court no notice of the ruling denying the motion for a new trial.

Section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a party may have settled, within 10 days after notice of decision denying his motion for a new trial, exceptions taken at a trial. Rule 2 of the Rules of the Supreme Court (176 Pac. vii) and of the District Courts of Appeal provides that if a proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions which may be used in support of an appeal is pending, or may still be instituted, the time for filing a transcript shall not begin to run until the bill has been filed, or the time in which a proceeding for a bill may be instituted has expired, or such proceeding, if instituted, has been dismissed by the trial court. The supplemental certificate of the clerk of the trial court brings the present case directly within these provisions of section 650 and of rule 2. The time within which a proceeding for a bill of exceptions may be instituted has not yet expired, nor, perforce, has the time for the filing of the transcript.

Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF LELAND STANFORD, JR., UNIVERSITY v. MILLER et al. (Civ. 2308.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Aug. 26, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Oct. 24, 1921.)

1. Boundaries ☞37(5)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding of establishment by mutual agreement.

In action to quiet title to land, where defendants claimed to a fence 660 feet west of the true boundary, which fence had been acquiesced in as the boundary for 40 years, evidence held to sustain a finding that the boundary claimed by defendant was established by mutual agreement.

2. Boundaries ☞46(1)—Doctrine of agreed boundary held not to mean that inference of agreement as to boundary from acquiescence does not support added inference that it was based on questioned boundary.

The doctrine of an agreed boundary line and its valid effect on coterminous owners rests on the fact that there is believed by the parties to be an uncertainty as to the location of the true line, but this does not mean that the inference of an agreement arising from acquiescence does not support the added inference that the inferred agreement was based on a questioned boundary.

3. Boundaries ☞46(3)—Agreed boundary inures to benefit of subsequent owners.

An agreed boundary line inured to the benefit of subsequent owners, regardless of whether or not they purchased with the understanding that the fence on such line marked the true boundary.

Action by the Board of Trustees of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University against W. H. Miller and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wilson & Wilson, of San Francisco, and McCoy & Gans, of Red Bluff, for appellant.

Guy R. Kennedy, of Chico, and George F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The defendants were given judgment quieting their title to 39.85 acres of land in Butte county, and the plaintiff appeals.

[1] The plaintiff holds the record title to the southeast quarter of section 23, and the defendants have the record title to 150 acres of land in the southwest quarter of section 24 in the same township, including all of the west half thereof. The land in dispute is approximately the east half of the east half of said southeast quarter. The trial court found in favor of the defendants on the issues of adverse possession and agreed boundary. Since the defendants have paid taxes in accordance with their record title only, it is conceded that the finding in favor of adverse possession cannot stand unless that of an agreed boundary is upheld. The question, therefore, is whether there is evidence to support the finding that the predecessors in title of the parties established such boundary line by mutual agreement. There is no direct evidence of such an agreement, and the question must, therefore, be determined from the conduct of the respective owners of the lands, viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

It appears that the plaintiff's lands, as well as those of the defendants, originally were a part of the Bosquejo rancho. When this rancho was subdivided does not appear. As early as 1876 Wm. Howard and P. B. Fox had acquired the south half of section 24, and in the year 1881 Leland Stanford acquired some 4000 acres of the rancho, including the southeast quarter of section 23; that quarter being in the extreme southerly end of the tract.

The court found that about the year 1878 the predecessors in interest of the parties, being uncertain as to the boundary line between their respective lands, mutually agreed upon the location thereof, constructed a substantial fence upon such agreed line, and that the respective owners of said parcels of land have ever since jointly maintained and repaired such fence, and recognized it as marking the true boundary line between their lands. The evidence shows without conflict that the fence stood in its present location as early as 1886, and that it then had the appearance of being 10 or 12 years old; that as far back as any witness knew the plaintiff and its predecessors have occupied the lands to the west of the fence, and the defendants and their grantors those to the east; that many years ago the latter cleared the lands on the east side up to the fence, and have thereafter cultivated the same, at one time having about half of the disputed strip in alfalfa; and that they have never been disturbed in their possession and use of such lands, nor have their rights thereto been questioned prior to the commencement of this action. At all times the respective parcels of land have been assessed, and the owners thereof have paid taxes thereon according to their record titles. In the year 1904 the plaintiff made a written lease to Geo. W. and Chas. Dicus, grantors of defendants, of the southeast quarter of section 23, and therein recited that the lands leased contained 100 acres, more or less. This lease was renewed from year to year up to 1913. The actual area west of the line claimed by the defendants is about 112 acres. A growth of timber covers the lands to the west of the fence, and such lands have at all times been used for pasture. By actual survey it was ascertained that the fence is 10 chains west of the section line as established by the original survey of the rancho.

Is acquiescence for 40 years, under the circumstances stated, sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the court? The evidence is not so conclusive in its nature as to compel the trial court to find in favor of an agreed boundary. The fact that the line alleged to have been established by agreement is 660 feet west of the surveyed section line is a strong circumstance against the defendants' claim. In the absence of that circumstance the evidence would seem to be conclusive in favor of the defendants. Whether that circumstance is sufficient to overcome the justifiable inference from long acquiescence under other circumstances shown involves the weighing of conflicting evidence, a function exclusively of the trial court, and is not a question of law within the province of the court of appeal.

"An agreement fixing a boundary line need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be inferred from conduct, and especially from long acquiescence." 9 C. J. 232; 5 Cyc. 933.

The "agreement must be express or implied from the acts of the parties and acquiesced in for the period fixed by the statute of limitations." Wheatley v. San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co., 169 Cal. 514, 147 Pac. 138.

"A presumption that an agreement formerly was made as to the location of a boundary line may arise from the fact that one or both of the adjoining owners have definitely defined such line by erecting a fence or other monument on it, and that both have treated the same as fixing the boundary between them for such length of time that neither ought to be allowed to deny the correctness of its location." 4 R. C. L. 129.

[2] Appellant urges that there is no proof that there ever was any uncertainty as to the location of the true boundary line. There is no direct evidence to that effect, but, as stated, the facts found to exist justify the inference that the adjoining owners had agreed upon the location of the boundary. This inference is of a valid agreement, and necessarily implies that there was an uncertainty as to the true line. "The doctrine of an agreed boundary line and its binding effects upon the coterminous owners rests fundamentally upon the fact that there is, or is believed by all parties to be, an uncertainty as to the location of the true line. * * * This does not mean that the inference of an agreement arising from acquiescence does not support the added inference that the inferred agreement was based on a questioned boundary. The primary inference is of a valid pre-existing agreement, and to be valid that agreement must have been based on a doubtful boundary line." Clapp v. Churchill, 164 Cal. 745, 130 Pac. 1062.

It is contended that the court erred in the admission in evidence of the lease referred to. While not entitled to great weight the recital of the lease as to the acreage embraced within the southeast quarter of section 23 is inconsistent with appellant's present claim of title, and the instrument was admissible as a declaration against interest.

[3] It is argued that there is no evidence to support the finding that the defendants purchased with the understanding that the fence marked the true boundary. The finding, however, is not necessary to the conclusion reached. The defendants acquired title in the year 1914. If the boundary line was established by agreement as found by the court, that agreement inured to the benefit of the defendants. Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 477, 95 Pac. 888.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

JENSEN et al. v. FISH et al. (Civ. 3964.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 23, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002—General verdict for injury on highway sustained by evidence and special verdicts.

In action for personal injury caused by defendants' bus forcing plaintiffs' Ford off the highway, a general verdict for plaintiff will not be disturbed where the evidence was conflicting, and the general verdict is supported by special verdicts.

2. Trial ⇨359(1)—General verdict sustained by some of the answers to special issues upheld.

A general verdict sustained by answers to two special issues must stand, though answer to another special issue is not sustained by evidence.

3. Highways ⇨176—Mistake in judgment in emergency not contributory negligence.

In an action for injury caused by defendants' bus forcing plaintiffs' car off the highway, plaintiff cannot be charged with contributory negligence in that his action at the time of the collision was such that a careful calculation afterward would show that he could have avoided the collision.

4. Highways ⇨184(4) — Instructions as to probative elements of negligence pleaded in general terms are not erroneous.

In action for injury, the complaint charging that defendants so negligently drove their bus that it forced plaintiffs' car off the highway, instructions regarding the duty of the driver of a vehicle to give suitable signals when about to pass another and regarding the legal rate of speed at the time and place of the accident were not error, since they concerned the probative elements of the negligence charged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Action by Alma A. Jensen and another against Fred W. Fish and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Dunn, White & Aiken, of Oakland, for appellants.

T. J. Ledwich and Peter J. Crosby, both of Oakland, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs, as husband and wife, brought an action against the defendants to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff wife in an automobile accident. The plaintiffs recovered a judgment, and the defendants have appealed under the new method.

In the charging part of their complaint, the plaintiffs aver that at the time of the accident they were traveling in a Ford sedan in the public road leading from San Jose to Oakland; that the defendants were operating a certain automobile bus; that at the time of the accident the defendants so carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully drove, operated, and ran said automobile bus that said bus collided with and struck the Ford sedan, and forced, crowded, and knocked it and the occupants thereof off the road. In support of their pleading evidence was introduced by the plaintiffs to the effect that the defendants' bus approached from the rear at a speed estimated by different witnesses at from 30 to 37 miles an hour; that the driver gave no signal of warning; that on meeting up with the Ford sedan the driver of the bus turned to the left, and, when immediately ahead of the Ford sedan, swerved the bus to the right at an angle estimated at from 60 to 70 degrees, and that the Ford sedan, although at that time traveling with its left wheels on the roadbed proper and its right wheels on the right-hand shoulder, swerved still more to the right and later turned over in a ditch on the right-hand side.

[1, 2] The jury returned a general verdict and certain special verdicts. The general verdict was in favor of the plaintiffs, and the special verdicts were as follows: (1) The defendants' stage did not actually strike and knock plaintiffs' automobile from the highway; (2) it did strike or come in contact with the plaintiffs' car; (3) it did force plaintiffs' automobile off the highway; and (4) it did crowd plaintiffs' automobile off the highway. In their first point the appellants strenuously insist that the automobile bus did not touch the Ford sedan. However, there was evidence both ways, and the jury, in its special verdict No. 2, found against the defendants on that issue. There was such a reasonable conflict in the testimony that we are not at all inclined to take the view that this case, in this respect, does not fall within the rule so often repeated that appellate courts have no right to disturb the verdict of the jury when the evidence is conflicting. Furthermore, if we should hold that the second special verdict is not sustained by the evidence, nevertheless the judgment must stand, for it is supported by the general verdict, and special verdicts 3 and 4.

[3] The appellants contend that the driver of plaintiffs' automobile was guilty of contributory negligence. This contention rests on the argument that the driver of the Ford sedan did not use the very best of judgment at the time he saw the automobile bus attempting to cross in front of him. The Supreme Court said, in Karr v. Parks, 40 Cal. 188, 193:

"* * * It would be absurd to hold that even an adult person, in time of imminent danger, is negligent, unless he takes every precaution that a careful calculation afterward will show he might have taken."

That case was recently cited with approval in Shupe v. Rodolph (Sup.) 197 Pac. 57. Moreover, looking at the record at this time, many months after the accident, we are unable to see that the driver of the Ford sedan did anything he should not have done, or omitted to do anything he should have done.

[4] The trial court gave an instruction to the jury regarding the duty of the driver of the vehicle to give a suitable and audible signal when he is about to pass another vehicle on the public highway. It also gave an instruction regarding the rate of speed which was legal at the time and place of the accident. It is conceded that both instructions were, in the abstract, correct statements of law; however, it is contended that the subject of each of the instructions was not involved in the issues made by the pleadings. In passing it may be said that much evidence was introduced at the time of the trial on both subjects by both parties, without any objection. The record does not show whether the instructions in question were tendered by the plaintiff or by the defendant, or were given by the court of its own motion. The appellants claim that the complaint, which we quoted above, charges specific negligence, and that it does not charge excessive speed or failure to give a signal. This contention may be conceded, and yet the contention does not lead to the conclusion which the appellants contend for. Whatever else may be charged in the complaint, it is patent that the complaint charges that the defendants so negligently drove their bus that it forced the Ford sedan off the highway. The probative elements of that negligent act are, among other things, the size, the speed, the want of signal, and the close proximity in which the bus attempted to pass at an angle of 60 or 70 degrees across the path of the Ford sedan. Instructions on each and every one of these probative elements were pertinent to the rights and liabilities of the litigants. There was no error in giving either of the instructions.

We find no error whatsoever in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Points that "court erred in overruling defendant's objection," followed by a reference to the transcript without argument or citation in support of the points, and that the court erred in the refusal to give instructions, followed by reference to the transcript for the text of the requested instructions, with citation of cases, but without statement as to what principle or rule the cases enunciate, will not be considered.

2. Criminal law §1130(5)—Points not supported by argument not considered.

Points, though fully stated, will not be considered, where not supported by the slightest argument.

3. Criminal law §1172(2)—Instruction, giving insufficient definition of a confession, held harmless in view of the evidence.

Instruction, giving incomplete definition of what constitutes a confession, held harmless in view of defendant's plain and direct statement in written confession that he committed the crime.

4. Criminal law §822(4)—Instruction as to confession of defendant held not misleading.

In prosecution for forgery, instruction as to defendant's confession held not to lead jurors to think that the court had passed upon the question of the free and voluntary character of the confession, in view of instructions as a whole.

5. Criminal law §736(2)—Court required to pass on voluntary character of confession in first instance to determine whether it is admissible.

It is the duty of the trial court to determine in the first instance whether a confession was free and voluntarily made as a basis for a determination of the question of its admissibility in evidence.

6. Forgery §42—Evidence that person who had name similar to that forged was not a resident of particular town held admissible.

In prosecution for forgery, testimony of residents of small town, of which person whose name defendant was alleged to have forged was represented to be a resident, as to whether there was such person in such town, held admissible to show fictitious character of name alleged to have been forged.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of forgery. Joseph L. Thing and Charles E. Thing conducted a mercantile business under the name of Thing Bros., in the little town of Tecate, part of which place is in San Diego county and part in the republic of Mexico. On account of the lack of banking facilities in the village, it was the custom of Thing Bros. to issue their checks on a San Diego bank to the people of the place in exchange for cash, the paper then being used in the transaction of business with the outside world. The checks were always drawn by the brothers themselves, one being accustomed to write them by hand, while the other used a typewriter for the purpose. The typewritten paper was drawn from a red and a black ribbon, each of the colors being used, invariably, on a certain and definite portion of each check. Appellant procured one of these typewritten checks in the sum of $5, through a third person, paying that amount for it. Next, through a conductor on the railroad running from Tecate to San Diego, he procured both a black and a red typewriter ribbon from the latter place, and also a pad of blank checks upon the bank on which Thing Bros. were accustomed to draw their paper. Appellant then wrote a letter, purporting to be signed by one E. E. Snyder, to another bank in San Diego, inclosing two checks and asking the bank to make collection of them. The checks were, respectively, for the sums of $1,010 and $992, were drawn on the bank with which Thing Bros. did business, were payable to E. E. Snyder, were signed "Thing Bros., by J. L. Thing," and were typewritten in two colors, in exact accord with the custom followed by Joseph L. Thing, the brother whose practice it was to draw the typewritten paper issued by the firm. The bank was instructed, after collecting the proceeds of the checks, to send $1,700 in currency to the alleged Snyder at Tecate by the railway conductor above mentioned. It was stated in the letter that the money was to be used for the purpose of paying Snyder's men. The remaining $302 was directed to be deposited in the bank to which the letter was addressed, in the name of Snyder. The currency was sent to Tecate, not by the conductor, however, but by registered mail, and was delivered to appellant, who receipted for it in Snyder's name, by himself as agent. The balance of the proceeds of the two checks, $302, was placed on deposit in the bank as directed, and $300 of it was later withdrawn on a check bearing the signature of the alleged Snyder, but the money was, as before, delivered to appellant as Snyder's agent. It was shown at the trial that neither of the two checks sent to the San Diego bank was signed by either of the brothers Thing, and appellant made written confession that the signature was appended to each of them by him. No such person as E. E. Snyder appeared at the trial, and several witnesses from Tecate testified that they knew of no such person. Some days after procuring the original check for $5 from Thing Bros., which paper the prosecution, of course, claims appellant used as an exemplar, he endeavored to sell it to one Blanco for $4, but Blanco did not buy it. This check must have been finally destroyed, as it was never presented for payment. The charge against appellant was for forging the check for $1,010.

[1] Appellant makes at least eight points upon rulings during the trial, each of them stated in this manner, "The court erred in overruling defendant's objection," followed by a reference to the transcript. Not only, in each instance, does counsel fail to state the question to which objection is made, or the objection itself, but none of the points is argued and no authority is cited in support of any of them. Such a casual presentation of points, if followed up, would impose upon us a labor which is within the peculiar province of counsel, and which does not come within the range of our duty. We are not called upon to consider points so presented. Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 108 Pac. 278.

In more than a half dozen instances appellant charges error in the refusal of the trial court to give instructions, contenting himself with a reference to the transcript for the text of the requested instructions, and citing cases in each place without giving us any information as to what principle or rule the cases enunciate. Points so presented will not be considered. In a case in which counsel referred to instructions in a similar manner and cited sections of the Code by number in support of his claim that they should have been given, the Supreme Court said:

"If counsel will not take the time to point out the particular instruction or instructions upon which he predicates error, and the law which he invokes, we will not do so." People v. Chutnacut, 141 Cal. 682, 75 Pac. 340.

[2] There are other questions which are stated in appellant's brief by mere reference to the transcript, without attempt to acquaint us with their nature by anything whatever shown upon the face of the brief; and there are still others which, even though they are more fully stated, are not supported by the slightest argument. Under the authorities already cited, we are bound to consider none of these.

[3] It is contended that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that a "confession, in criminal law, is a voluntary declaration made by a person who has committed a crime, to another one." This definition is, indeed, fragmentary and incomplete, but it does not appear to us that its presentation to the jury could have prejudiced appellant. In his written confession, after acknowledging the authorship of the letter to the San Diego bank with which the two checks were inclosed, appellant says:

"I also forged the signature of Thing Brothers, by J. L. Thing, to the two checks mentioned in said letter, aggregating 2002."

With this plain and direct statement before the jury, it made little difference whether any instruction was given upon the meaning of the word "confession." It must have been obvious to them, without definition from the court, that a positive confession of the commission of the crime, not to be misunderstood by an intelligent mind, was before them. Appellant could have suffered no substantial injury from the instruction given.

[4] The next claim made by appellant is that the trial court erred in stating to the jury that the court had passed upon the question of the free and voluntary character of the confession of appellant. In order that this point may be intelligently considered, it is necessary to set forth the entire instruction to the jury concerning the confession, as it is in that instruction that the alleged erroneous statement occurs. The instruction follows:

"You are further instructed that part of the evidence relied upon in this case by the prosecution is what is termed a confession, or what is claimed by the prosecution to be a confession by the defendant, and a confession, in criminal law, is a voluntary declaration made by a person who has committed a crime, to another one, and the law of this state requires that before the confession may be admitted in evidence and considered by you that it be a free and voluntary confession; that is, that it be not induced by either a promise of reward or by a threat, or by any duress. It must be, in other words, what is stated, a free and voluntary statement on his part, before that confession is admitted in evidence in this case and brought to your attention and permitted to examine it. The court has passed upon that question, and has ruled that the confession is evidence by reason of the fact that it was free and voluntarily made, and that it is legally admissible and legally and properly to be considered by you. Therefore, if you after having heard the evidence in the case and believe that there is a conflict of evidence as to whether or not that confession was freely and voluntarily made, you have the right and privilege of passing upon that question of fact yourselves, as to whether or not it was freely and voluntarily made, and to reject the confession from your consideration if you believe that it was not freely or voluntarily made; or, perhaps stating it more correctly, unless you do believe beyond a reasonable doubt that it was freely and voluntarily made."

It is to be observed that in the course of the instruction the court remarked that—

"The court has passed upon that question, and has ruled that the confession is evidence by reason of the fact that it was free [sic] and voluntarily made, and that it is legally admissible and legally and properly to be considered by you."

It is this statement that appellant assails as objectionable. While it were better that the condemned matter had not been included in the instruction, it does not appear to us that its use operated to the prejudice of appellant, considering it in connection with what followed it. The statement itself, while it did contain the assertion that the court had passed upon the question, was softened by the expressions to the effect that the court "has ruled that the confession is evidence," "that it is legally admissible," and that it is "legally and properly to be considered" by the jury. Following these statements, immediately, the jury was told:

"Therefore, if * * * you believe that there is a conflict of evidence as to whether or not that confession was freely and voluntarily made, you have the right and privilege of passing on that question of fact yourselves, as to whether or not it was freely and voluntarily made, and to reject the confession from your consideration * * * unless you * * * believe beyond a reasonable doubt that it was freely and voluntarily made."

[5] In the last analysis, and considering the entire instruction together, it appears to us that it amounts to nothing more than a statement that the court had passed upon the question only for the purpose of determining whether the confession was admissible in evidence, that it had been admitted, and that the members of the jury, as judges of the facts, were finally to pass upon the question whether it was freely and voluntarily made. Thus understood, the instruction was proper, for it is the duty of a trial court to consider, in the first instance, whether a confession was freely and voluntarily made, as a basis for a determination of the question of its admissibility in evidence. People v. Jim Ti, 32 Cal. 60; People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 376, 59 Pac. 772.

[6] Several of the witnesses at the trial were asked by the prosecution whether they knew such a person as E. E. Snyder, and in each instance the question was met by an objection, which was overruled. It is contended that these rulings were erroneous. While a forger, naturally, might employ the name of a known person in the commission of the crime of which he is guilty, in the manner in which Snyder's name was used here, there is, perhaps, a greater likelihood that he will employ a fictitious name. At any rate, the fact that one charged with the crime has used a fictitious name in his work would be a circumstance to be considered, in connection with others, in determining his guilt or innocence. The question whether Snyder was known as an actual person was addressed to three residents of Tecate, which the evidence shows was a very small place.

Under these circumstances the question was entirely proper.

[7] On account of the great number of errors claimed by appellant to have been committed by the trial court, principally, however, in the very general manner upon which we have passed comment, we have made examination of the entire cause, including the evidence. Const. art. 6, § 4½. From such examination we are abundantly satisfied that if any error was committed by the trial court, which we are far from deciding, such error has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Judgment affirmed.

ROBERTS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(Civ. 3926.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 24, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error 977(3)—Order granting new trial reversed only where discretion abused.

Only when the discretion of the trial court has been abused will the appellate court reverse an order granting a new trial.

2. Appeal and error 854(6)—Order granting new trial, general in its terms, affirmed if properly granted on any of grounds assigned.

Where the motion for new trial was based on all the statutory grounds, and the order granting the new trial was made before the amendment of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 141) to section 657 of Code Civ. Proc., and was general in its terms, it must be affirmed if it could properly have been granted on any of the grounds assigned.

3. New trial 65—If the court was not satisfied with the verdict, its duty was to grant motion for new trial.

If the trial court was not satisfied with the verdict, it was its duty to grant the motion for a new trial.

4. Negligence 136(26)—Contributory negligence for jury.

Question of contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury, except in those cases in which, judged in light of common knowledge and experience, there is a standard of prudence to which all persons similarly situated must conform, and in these cases failure to reach that standard is contributory negligence as a matter of law.

5. Appeal and error 1015(2)—On conflicting evidence or when the question of probative force of the evidence arises, grant of new trial is not reviewable.

Where there is appreciable conflict in the evidence or where the question as to probative force or evidentiary value of the testimony arises, the action of the trial court in granting a new trial is not reviewable on appeal.

6. Appeal and error 933(1)—Presumption is in favor of correctness of an order granting a new trial.

In considering the question of the correctness of an order granting a new trial, the presumption on appeal is in favor of the order.

7. Appeal and error 933(4)—Presumed that new trial was granted because verdict was against the weight of the evidence.

In an action for causing the death of a brakeman, an experienced railroad man, who placed himself between two cars while they were in motion, in view of conduct of deceased, on an appeal from an order granting a new trial, it will be assumed that the trial court was satisfied that the verdict was contrary to the weight of the evidence.

8. Appeal and error 977(3)—Grant of new trial not set aside where case shows a reasonable or debatable justification for it.

Where the case shows a reasonable, or even a fairly debatable justification, for the action taken, an order of the trial court granting a motion for a new trial will not be set aside on appeal.

9. Railroads 262—Not liable for injury by defective car under control of connecting road.

A railway company delivering a defective freight car to a connecting carrier, which accepts it with knowledge of the defect, is not liable to employees of the connecting carrier for injuries caused by the defect.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Geno P. Roberts against the Southern Pacific Company and another. From an order granting a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco (C. A. Linn, of Napa, of counsel), for appellant.

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the death of his son, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. He now appeals from the order granting the defendant a new trial, after verdict and judgment in his favor.

Plaintiff's decedent, his son, William Reilly Roberts, was a switchman in the employ of the California State Belt Railway, which is operated along the San Francisco water front, receiving freight cars from various transportation companies for delivery to the piers and docks. It is connected with the tracks of the respondent at a point known as the King street transfer. On the evening of October 9, 1914, two cars were placed on the transfer track by employees of the respondent. One of these cars was in bad order. The drawhead and everything pertaining to the coupling was missing. This car was fastened to another by means of a chain wound around its axle, and connected with the drawhead of the other car with from 2½ to 3 feet of slack between the two cars. Later in the day these cars were taken off the transfer track by the belt line railway, with full knowledge of their defective condition, to be delivered at pier 32. On the afternoon of the next day the two cars, still chained together, were placed at the end of a train, to be redelivered by the belt line to the respondent. While being thus transported, the car with the defective coupler was derailed, but after running off the track for about 250 feet, it re-railed itself. Roberts, the deceased, who was then acting as a switchman on the belt line, gave the engineer a signal to stop the train while he went to investigate the trouble, and to remove an amount of debris which had collected on the axle of the car while running derailed. When the train stopped the absence of the coupling permitted the two end cars to come together. Roberts then gave the engineer a signal to back the train in order to separate the cars and enable him to look underneath them and discover the cause of the accident. As the train backed and the cars separated, he leaned forward and placed his head between the two cars. With the backing of the train, the rear car, which was the one with the defective coupler, continued to back until it took up the slack in the chain, when it suddenly rebounded, the two cars coming together, crushing Roberts' skull and causing his death. The absence of the coupling was a defect which was readily noticeable. It was known to the employees of the belt line, and its foreman told Roberts two cars were in bad order. Roberts, himself, was an experienced railroad man.

On these facts the case went to the jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $5,000. Defendants moved for a new trial, which was granted. From the order granting the motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

The appellant takes the position that the order granting the motion for a new trial must be reversed upon two grounds. His first contention is that the evidence so conclusively establishes that the plaintiff's intestate was not guilty of any contributory negligence, as to preclude the court from setting aside the verdict upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support its finding to that effect. He next contends that the respondent was guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, in delivering the cars with the defective coupling to the belt line railway, and that that negligence proximately caused the death of Roberts, and was not excused by the act of the belt line company in accepting the cars with notice of their faulty condition.

[1, 2] The rule is well settled by a long line of decisions in this state that the granting or refusing of a new trial is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court, and it is only when this discretion has been abused that the appellate court will reverse the order. Merralls v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 19, 22, 186 Pac. 778. In the instant case the motion was based on all the statutory grounds, and the order granting the new trial, made before the amendment of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 141) to section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is general in its terms. It must therefore be affirmed if it could properly have been granted on any of the grounds assigned. Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 508, 123 Pac. 288.

[3-8] Disposing of appellant's first contention, we think we may safely assume that the question of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the jury that the decedent, Roberts, was free from contributory negligence, had much to do with the trial court's action in granting the motion for a new trial. No motion for a nonsuit was made, and the question of the contributory negligence of the decedent was submitted to the jury. But if the trial court was not satisfied with the verdict, it was its duty to grant the motion for a new trial. Marr v. Whistler, 193 Pac. 519; Condee v. Gyger, 126 Cal. 546, 547, 59 Pac. 26. True it is that the question of contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury, under proper instructions, and not one of law, save in those cases in which, judged in the light of common knowledge and experience, there is a standard of prudence to which all persons similarly situated must conform. In such cases failure to reach that standard is contributory negligence as a matter of law. Williams v. Pacific Electric Co., 177 Cal. 235, 238, 170 Pac. 423. If there be any appreciable conflict in the evidence, the action of the trial court in granting a new trial is not open to review. Even in those cases where there may not appear to be a conflict in the evidence, and where all the proofs seem to be favorable to one or the other of the parties litigant, the question as to the probative force, or evidentiary value of the testimony, is one the determination of which is with the trial court in a proceeding on a motion for a new trial, where, as here, one of the grounds is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. Otten v. Spreckles, 24 Cal. App. 251, 257, 141 Pac. 224. In considering the question of the correctness of an order granting a new trial, the presumption on appeal is in favor of the order and against the verdict. Marr v. Whistler, supra. In the light of the wide discretion permitted to the trial court in such matters, and in view of the conduct of the decedent, an experienced railroad man, in placing himself between the two cars as he did, we must assume that the trial court was satisfied that the verdict of the jury rendered in favor of the plaintiff was contrary to the weight of the evidence. Shilling v. Dodge, 22 Cal. App. 517, 518, 135 Pac. 299. Where the court, in the exercise of its wide discretion, has granted a new trial, and the case shows a reasonable, or even a fairly debatable justification under the law, for the action taken, the order will not be set aside on appeal. Preluzsky v. Rittigstein, 196 Pac. 917.

[9] For another reason the order granting a new trial in this case must be affirmed. On of the defenses sought to be established by the respondent was that it had given notice to the belt line railway that the car was in a defective condition, and that the respondent proposed to repair it before delivery, but that with knowledge of these facts the belt line, desiring haste in the matter so that the ship for which the contents of the car were destined might be loaded without delay, directed and accepted the delivery of the car in its known defective condition. The trial court would not permit the introduction of any evidence in support of this defense. It also refused to give an instruction requested by the respondent in keeping with its proposed separate defense, but did instruct the jury to the effect that the respondent was guilty of negligence in delivering the defective car to the belt line railway, and that such negligence could not be justified or excused by showing that the connecting line was equally or more careless in the premises. This action of the trial court was error.

The appellant seeks to recover in this action upon the theory that the injury and death of Roberts was the natural and probable consequence of the delivery by the respondent of the defective car to the belt line and such a consequence as should have been foreseen in the light of the attendant circumstances; and, further, that the delivery of such defective car was the primary and proximate cause of Roberts' death. The trial court accepted this view, and confined the issues strictly within the lines of appellant's contention, as indicated by the rulings just referred to. There are cases holding, as contended by the appellant, that where there is an arrangement between the connecting roads for the interchange of cars, it is the duty of each, on transferring the car to the other, to see that it is in a safe and suitable condition for the use for which it is intended, which duty extends not only to the receiving company as such, but to its employees who are to handle the car, and such employees may recover from the company delivering the car for injuries due to its defective condition, notwithstanding the company employing them was also negligent in regard to inspecting and receiving the car.

An examination of these decisions, however, discloses that some of them were directly overruled by the same court in later decisions, and others may be distinguished to the extent that they have little or no application here. They are in conflict with the weight of authority.

What seems to be the generally accepted doctrine—contrary to that contended for by the appellant—is well established by a number of leading cases. Lellis v. Michigan Central Railway, 124 Mich. 37, 82 N. W. 828, 70 L. R. A. 598; Glynn v. Central Ry. Co., 175 Mass. 510, 56 N. E. 698, 78 Am. St. Rep. 507. The Supreme Court of Missouri had occasion to consider the precise question we have now before us, both before and after the rendition of the two decisions last cited. In its first opinion in the case it held exactly as appellant would have us hold. See Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Merrill, 61 Kan. 671, 675, 60 Pac. 819, which is one of the decisions given as authority by the author of the work relied on by this appellant. But upon rehearing (65 Kan. 436, 70 Pac. 358, 59 L. R. A. 711, 93 Am. St. Rep. 287) the court said:

"We are now fully convinced that the doctrine announced in our former decision on the subject in hand runs counter to an unbroken current of authorities, and fails to stand the test of reason."

It then proceeded to make a critical examination of the cases cited by it in its former opinion to sustain the view then taken by it, and showed that they were to be distinguished from the case at its bar. Some of the cases there reviewed and distinguished are relied upon by the appellant here. After such full and comprehensive study of the question, the court reached and laid down the rule that a railway company which delivers a defective freight car to a connecting line is not liable in damages to an employee of the latter, who is injured after the car has been inspected by the company receiving it. The loss of control over the car, and over the servants having it in charge, relieves the furnishing company from responsibility to the employees of the receiving company. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Merrill, 65 Kan. 436, 70 Pac. 358, 59 L. R. A. 711, 93 Am. St. Rep. 287. The basis of the decision seems so sound, and the reasoning so clear, that we think it useless to attempt to go over the same ground here, but refer to it as a complete answer to appellant's contention. It, and the others cases cited above, have been followed or quoted approvingly in McCallion v. Missouri Pacific Ry., 74 Kan. 785, 88 Pac. 50; Schneider v. Little Co., 184 Mich. 315, 151 N. W. 587, 589; Luck Const. Co. v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 200 Mo. App. 450, 452, 207 S. W. 840, 841; McNamara v. Boston & M. R. R. Co., 202 Mass. 491, 500, 89 N. E. 131, 135; Continental Fruit Express v. Leas, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 584, 110 S. W. 129, 132; West Jersey & S. R. Co. v. Cochran

(C. C. A.) 266 Fed. 609, 611. Under the rule laid down in these cases, it seems clear that the plaintiff would have no cause of action against the respondent railway company under the facts attempted to be shown by it in its separate defense, which was ruled out by the trial court. The defective condition of the car was neither secret nor hidden. We think, therefore, the causal connection between the act of the respondent and the injury to plaintiff's intestate was severed by the interposition of an independent agency, the belt line railway, if the facts urged by respondent in its separate defense were proved. Several of the cases above cited so hold. See particularly Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Merrill, supra, and McCallion v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., supra.

The order granting the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

LEVIN et al. v. SAROFF et al. (Civ. 3922.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 22, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1921.)

1. Landlord and tenant §24(1)—Essentials of valid lease stated.

It is only essential to the creation of a valid lease that it contain a definite agreement as to the extent and boundary of the property leased, a definite and agreed term, a definite and agreed price of rental, and the time and manner of payment.

2. Landlord and tenant §22(2)—Whether instrument is lease or agreement to make lease is largely question of intention.

Whether an instrument is a present lease or an agreement to execute a lease in future is largely a question of the intention of the parties.

3. Contracts §32—Agreement on essential facts is binding contract, though formal contract is to be prepared.

Where parties have agreed upon all essential facts, there is a binding contract, notwithstanding the fact that a more formal contract is to be prepared and signed later.

4. Landlord and tenant §22(1)—Agreement to make lease is binding, notwithstanding intent to make formal lease, and may be relied upon when party will not execute lease.

Where an agreement to make a lease contained all the essentials of a valid lease, the mere fact that a written lease was in contemplation did not relieve either party from responsibility on the contract already made, and, when the lessor refused to execute a lease according to the contract, the lessee had a right to fall back on the written propositions as originally made, and the absence of the formal agreement was immaterial.

5. Landlord and tenant §22(1)—Failure of agreement to specify city and state did not render it unenforceable where lessee had taken possession.

An agreement for a lease was not too vague and uncertain to be enforced because of the failure to specify the city and state in which the property was located, where the agreement had been acted upon and the lessee had gone into possession, so that there could be no dispute about the location of the property.

6. Landlord and tenant §22(3)—Refusal to execute lease containing provisions not in agreement not violation of agreement.

An agreement to make a lease was not violated by the lessee by his refusal to execute a lease submitted by the lessor containing provisions not in the agreement, and such refusal gave the lessor no right to rescind and cancel the agreement, to change the tenancy to one from month to month, or to increase the rent.

7. Appeal and error §158(2)—Payment of judgment to prevent execution sale does not prevent appeal.

Where defendant, on a hearing in supplementary proceedings, to save his property from a forced sale under execution, and on the assurance of his attorney that he could recover his money in the event of a reversal, satisfied the money judgment against him, the payment was not voluntary so as to prevent an appeal by him.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Joseph Levin and others, doing business as M. Levin & Sons, against M. Saroff and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Marcus D. Wolff and A. H. Crook, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edgar C. Levey, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment against them in an action of unlawful detainer.

The plaintiffs' predecessor in interest made and executed the following contract with the defendant Saroff:

"This agreement made and entered into this 29th day of October, 1919, between M. Saroff, the party of the first part, and M. Levin & Sons, the parties of the second part, witnesseth:

"That whereas the parties of the second part are the owners of the certain buildings located on the north side of Folsom street between Sixth and Seventh streets, formerly occupied by them as 'junk dealers' and whereas the party of the first part is desirous of leasing said premises, it is hereby agreed as follows:

"The party of the first part agrees to lease said premises for a term of five (5) years at a monthly rental of $250.00 and further agrees to pay the first four months' rent of said lease in advance.

"The party of the second part agrees to lease said premises to the party of the first part for the said term of five (5) years at the said monthly rental of $250.00, and further agrees that the said party of the first part has the option of releasing said property for an additional term of five years at the same monthly rental.

"The party of the second part further agrees to whitewash the entire interior of both the brick and corrugated iron buildings; inclose with sheet metal, or other material, the lower portion of the corrugated iron buildings; place openings for windows and doors where requested by said party of the first part; also to place windows in the second story of said corrugated iron building where requested by the party of the first part; also to place two toilets on second floor and 1 toilet on third floor of the brick building; the ground floor of the corrugated iron building to have cement floor with wood covering; 1 sink to be placed in second and third floors of brick building.

"It is further agreed and understood that the party of the second part will keep roof in repair and should corrugated iron rust said party of the second part will repair same, put elevator in condition that will be passed by the elevator inspector and do any and all work required by the board of health, board of public works, or other authorities, in connection with building; but not with business of the party of the first part.

"It is further agreed and understood that the lot facing Russ St., running back to building will be included in the lease and any improvements placed thereon by said party of the first part will be removed at the termination of the lease.

"Said party of the first part is permitted to sublet any portion or all of said buildings for any purpose excepting the same shall not be leased for a junk business.

"Rent to commence fifteen (15) days after buildings are repaired and ready for occupancy. Party of the second part will notify party of the first part when buildings are ready for occupancy.

"Party of the first part agrees to pay for all water, gas or electricity used in said buildings during the term of said lease or any extension thereof.

"Party of the second part reserves right to remove wagon scales at any time during lease and party of second part agrees to keep same in good order. Party of the first part agrees to keep in order and maintain buildings and elevator in repair during entire term of lease."

In accordance with this agreement, the plaintiffs made the repairs and alterations required thereby, and the defendant Saroff took possession of the premises and paid four months' rent in advance to the plaintiffs. The other defendant is a subtenant of Saroff. The defendants continued to occupy the premises, and Saroff paid rent therefor, in advance, at the rate of $250 a month from about January 1, 1920, until July of the same year. During this period of time, the parties had some negotiations for the execution of a more formal lease in accordance with the terms of the agreement above quoted. The plaintiffs insisted upon defendant Saroff signing a formal lease embodying terms and conditions not contained in the more informal agreement, and which would not have been implied by law. Among such terms was one to the effect that the lessee waived his right to make repairs under the provisions of section 1942, Civil Code; that the premises should be sublet only to a responsible person; that the lessor is entitled to enter the premises personally or by representative for the purpose of viewing the same or of making alterations thereon; that the lessee will save the lessor harmless from any liability whatsoever by reason of any damage occurring to himself, his employees, servants or any person or persons in or about the said property from any cause or act whatsoever; that any increase in insurance rates upon the building due to the character of the lessee's business should be borne by the lessee. Also the lease submitted for defendant to sign did not contain a provision granting him an option to renew the lease for an additional five-year period. In compliance with this portion of the informal agreement, plaintiffs tendered to defendant a separate writing stating that such option was granted to the defendant, provided that written notice of his intention to avail himself of the option be given by registered letter duly mailed 90 days prior to the date of the expiration of said lease.

Defendant Saroff refused to sign this lease submitted to him by the plaintiffs, insisting that it did not conform to his agreement. On July 19, 1920, plaintiffs notified the said defendant that because of his refusal to execute the lease submitted to him by plaintiffs' attorney, the agreement of October 29, 1919, herein set out, was rescinded and canceled, and that his tenancy would thereafter be considered as one from month to month. On July 29, 1920, by written notice the monthly rental of said premises was raised to $500, commencing September 1, 1920. Defendant Saroff disregarded these notices, and on September 1, 1920, offered to pay to plaintiffs the rental of $250 reserved in his agreement. This offer was refused. On September 2, 1920, plaintiffs served notice upon defendant to pay the rent within three days or vacate the premises. Upon his failure to comply therewith, this action was brought to recover possession of the premises and to recover rental at the rate of $500 a month from September 1, 1920. Plaintiffs recovered judgment for $1,500, representing rental for three months at $500 a month, and for possession of the premises.

[1-4] Plaintiffs' theory of the case is that the agreement herein set out was an agreement to make a lease in the future and not a lease. It appears to us that the agreement contains all the essentials of a valid lease. To create a valid lease, but few points of mutual agreement are necessary: First, there must be a definite agreement as to the extent and boundary of the property leased; second, a definite and agreed term; and, third, a definite and agreed price of rental, and the time and manner of payment. These appear to be the only essentials. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, p. 170, § 137a; Cochrane v. Justice Min. Co., 16 Colo. 415, 26 Pac. 780; Boston Clothing Co. v. Solberg, 28 Wash. 262, 68 Pac. 715. However, plaintiffs' contention is based upon testimony of an understanding between the parties that they were later to execute a more formal contract. Whether an instrument is a lease in presenti or an agreement to execute a lease in future is largely a question of the intention of the parties. Jackson v. Kisselbrook, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 336, 6 Am. Dec. 341; Pac. Imp. Co. v. Jones, 164 Cal. 260, 128 Pac. 404. Nevertheless, where the parties have agreed upon all essential facts there is a binding contract, notwithstanding the fact that a more formal contract is to be prepared and signed later. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, supra; Marcus v. Collins Bldg. & Const. Co., 27 Misc. Rep. 784. 57 N. Y. Supp. 737. The mere fact that a written lease was in contemplation does not relieve either of the contracting parties from the responsibility of a contract which was already expressed in writing. When one party refuses to execute the lease according to the contract thus made, the other has a right to fall back on the written propositions as originally made, and the absence of the formal agreement contemplated is not material. Post v. Davis, 7 Kan. App. 217, 52 Pac. 903; Bonnewell v. Jenkins, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 70, 74. The evidence discloses that this is precisely what was done in the present case. The parties acted upon the agreement of October 29, 1919; the plaintiffs surrendering possession and making the repairs called for thereby, and the defendants taking possession and paying four months' rent in advance and the subsequent rent in advance each month as provided in the agreement. Later, the plaintiffs asked the defendant to execute a formal lease. He stated that he was willing to do so if plaintiffs would repair the elevator as provided in the agreement. This was done, and the negotiations regarding the formal lease were commenced. When the plaintiffs would not furnish a lease in accordance with the written agreement, the defendant submitted to them a lease of the premises drawn by his attorney, which contained all the provisions of the informal agreement and also most of the additional provisions embodied in the lease submitted by the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs, however, rejected this lease, and the defendant then took the position that he would stand upon the agreement in writing which he had, and that such agreement was sufficient. He continued to offer to perform what was required of him thereunder.

In the case of Cheney v. Newberry & Co., 67 Cal. 125, 7 Pac. 444, it is said:

"The entry under the written contract for a lease for a stated term and at a stated rent, and the payment and receipt of the rent, constituted a valid lease between the parties for the term and at the rental specified. * * * Neither party could subsequently cancel the contract without the consent of the other."

The situation in the present case is well stated in the language of Pacific Improvement Co. v. Jones, 164 Cal. 260 at page 264, 128 Pac. 404 at page 406, where it is said:

"Moreover, while the testimony tends to prove that the parties contemplated substituting for this instrument a more formal lease, nevertheless the execution of the document, as shown by the uncontradicted testimony, * * * was intended to conclude the lease between the parties, so that Mr. Jones could take immediate possession of the property, the contemplated execution of the formal lease being deemed a matter of mere convenience."

[5] Respondents argue that the agreement for a lease is too vague and uncertain to be specifically performed or to constitute an agreement of the parties. This is urged because the agreement does not specify the city and state in which the property is located. This precise objection has been considered in the case of Boston Clothing Co. v. Solberg, supra, and at page 716 of the opinion (68 Pac.) the point is decided adversely to the contention of respondents. In the present case the agreement has been acted upon and the defendant has gone into the possession of the property and there can be no dispute about the location of the property involved.

[6] We reach the conclusion, therefore, that the defendant was not violating the written agreement between the parties when he refused to execute the lease submitted to him by the plaintiffs which contained other provisions. An agreement to execute a lease for a given period at a stated rental, payable in specific installments, is not broken by a refusal to execute a lease which imposes terms and conditions not imposed by law and of which no mention was made in the instrument. 24 Cyc. 899; Sanders v. Pottlitzer Co., 144 N. Y. 209, 39 N. E. 75, 29 L. R. A. 431, 43 Am. St. Rep. 757. It is clear, then, that the plaintiffs had no right to rescind and cancel the agreement under which the defendant was holding the premises; that such agreement was in full force and effect until superseded by a formal writing in accordance therewith. The notices served by plaintiffs changing the tenancy to one from month to month and increasing the rent from $250 to $500 a month were unavailing and gave to plaintiffs no new rights, and the judgment in their favor for the added rental and for the possession of the premises was erroneous.

[7] One further matter requires a brief discussion. The record before us shows that the money judgment has been paid and satisfied. Respondents sought to avail themselves of this fact upon a motion to dismiss this appeal upon the ground that the judgment had been satisfied. Upon the hearing of the motion in this court a showing was made by respondents that appellants had voluntarily surrendered up possession of the premises. Whether the portion of the judgment relating to the possession of the premises was voluntarily complied with by appellants or not does not concern us here, because we are of the opinion that as to the money judgment, the payment and satisfaction thereof by the appellant Saroff was not such a one as to deprive him of his right of appeal with reference to that item, at least. Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 24, 52 Pac. 40; Warner Bros. v. Freud, 131 Cal. 646, 63 Pac. 1017, 82 Am. St. Rep. 400. The showing made by appellants in resisting the motion to dismiss the appeal was to the effect that after the entry of the judgment herein, supplementary proceedings were had and an order of examination issued. Upon the hearing thereof, Saroff appeared in court. In his desire to save his property from a forced sale under execution and upon the assurance by his attorney that he could recover his money in the event of a reversal of the judgment upon appeal, Saroff then and there satisfied the money judgment. Such a payment is not a voluntary payment and will not militate against appellant's privilege to have his rights determined upon appeal (Warner Bros. v. Freud, supra), and this court so determined in denying the respondents' motion to dismiss the appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

In re CATE. (Civ. 3660.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Sept. 29, 1921.)

Attorney and client ⚡61—Attorney disbarred for serious violation of law not reinstated after lapse of only three years.

An attorney, disbarred for serious misconduct in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 5, relative to the commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, held not to be reinstated after being deprived of his license for only three years, though the application was supported by testimonials of numerous persons to his conduct and present good character.

Original application by Clyde E. Cate, a disbarred attorney, for reinstatement. Petition denied.

Vincent B. Vaughan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. R. Crump, of Los Angeles, for Los Angeles Bar Ass'n.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner, an attorney at law, licensed to practice in the state of California, was disbarred by judgment entered in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles on the 27th day of May, 1918. The offenses of which he was found guilty were of the character described in subdivision 5 of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He now applies for reinstatement, claiming that he is now and for a long time has been repentant for the wrongs committed by him, and has lived an upright life since the time of his disbarment. The application is supported by the request of numerous persons who attest his good conduct and their confidence in his present good character. Without depreciating the value of these testimonials and without intimating that petitioner may not be reinstated at some future time, the court is satisfied that this petition should not be granted. The misconduct of the petitioner on account of which he has been disbarred was of a very serious nature. And we do not agree with the opinion of his friends that he has been sufficiently punished for his acts of wrongdoing merely by being deprived of his license for a period of only three years.

The petition is denied.

MUNRO et al. v. WHITLOW et al.
(Civ. 3966.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 5, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 1, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ⚡704(2), 758(2)—Finding deemed sufficient when not questioned in brief and evidence bearing thereon not printed.

A finding of the trial court as to the validity of a tax deed will be deemed sufficient, though attacked in the oral argument, where the point was not raised in the briefs, and none of the evidence bearing on that phase of the case had been printed or referred to by appellants.

2. Trial ⚡37—Defendants held to have waived derangement of title from paramount source.

In ejectment against defendants claiming under a tax deed, where a deed under which plaintiffs had peaceful and uninterrupted possession for over 12 years was admitted in evidence without objection after plaintiffs' counsel had asked defendants' counsel if he would insist on deraignment of title, plaintiffs were entitled to assume that the point was waived.

3. Life estates — 8—Tenant holds adversely to others than remaindermen.

One claiming only a life estate and recognizing the claim of the remainderman makes such a claim of ownership as will support title by prescription as against all other parties.

4. Taxation — 796(1) — In ejectment with cross-complaint to quiet title, plaintiffs' attack on tax deed not collateral.

Where defendants, in an action of ejectment by answer and cross-complaint, set up title under a tax deed, and prayed that their title be quieted, and offered the deed in evidence, plaintiffs' attack on the validity of the deed was direct and not collateral.

5. Appeal and error — 704(2)—Record held not to show error in finding that tax deed was void.

Under Pol. Code, § 3786, providing that tax deeds are primary evidence of certain facts, and section 3787, providing that they are conclusive evidence of all other proceedings from the assessment to the execution of the deed, no error is shown in the court's finding that a tax deed was void, where it is not shown in the record on what grounds it was attacked.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Action of ejectment by Barbara California Munro, a minor, by Roy J. Young, guardian of her estate, and another, against M. W. Whitlow and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Milton Shepardson, of San Francisco, and L. A. Kottlinger, of Oakland, for appellants. Elston, Clark & Nichols, of Berkeley, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued in ejectment to recover possession of certain real property situated in the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda. The complaint was in the ordinary form, alleging that the plaintiffs were the owners by title in fee simple absolute; that, on or about July 22, 1919, the defendants wrongfully and without right entered into the possession and occupancy of said premises and excluded plaintiffs therefrom; and that the value of the use and occupation thereof was $75 a month. Prayer followed that plaintiffs be put in possession, and that they recover the value of the use and occupation from the date of the ouster.

Defendants answered jointly, denying the allegations of the complaint, and in a separate answer alleged that defendant George Biaggi purchased the property from the state at a public tax sale held on July 10, 1919; that the sale followed the failure to pay the taxes assessed thereon for the year 1913; that on July 17, 1919, he obtained a deed thereto from the tax collector, and ever since has been the owner in fee simple and in the possession of the premises; and that plaintiffs claim some interest or estate therein adverse to said defendant. Prayer followed for a decree adjudging said defendant to be the owner in fee of the property, adjudging that plaintiffs have no estate or interest therein, and for general relief. At the opening of the trial it was stipulated that all the allegations of the answer be deemed denied, and the trial proceeded on the issues so framed.

The pleadings present a cause in ejectment on the part of plaintiffs, a denial and a separate answer in the nature of a cross-complaint to quiet title on the part of defendants, and a trial of these mixed issues of law and equity without objection from either party. The trial court found that the tax deed upon which defendants relied was void on account of various irregularities in the tax proceedings, and gave judgment for plaintiffs, decreeing that plaintiff Maud May Munro was the owner of a life estate in the property; that plaintiff Barbara California Munro was the owner of a remainder interest subject only to said life estate; and that defendants have no right, title, or interest therein. The equities of the case were adjusted by awarding to defendant George Biaggi the sum paid into court by plaintiffs representing the amount of his outlay as a result of the tax sale.

The appeal is prosecuted under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. The issues are plainly stated in appellants' opening brief to be:

"First. That the respondents wholly failed to show a record title chaining back to a paramount source, and hence they failed to prove a fee-simple title. Second. That respondents wholly failed to show a prior actual possession of the premises, under a claim of ownership in fee; that any possession without such a claim is not presumptive evidence of title. Third. That if the evidence had been sufficient to show in plaintiffs either a record title, or a prior actual possession taken under a claim of ownership, such title or possession of respondents, and all outstanding title to the property was, on July 10, 1919, sold and conveyed by the state of California, through the tax collector of Alameda county, to George Biaggi, an appellant here."

[1] In the oral argument appellants assailed the finding of the trial court upon the issue of the validity of the tax deed, but, as this point was not raised in the briefs, and as none of the evidence bearing upon that phase of the case has been printed or referred to by appellants, this court is not required to consider the point further than to say that, in a record so presented, the finding of the trial court will be deemed sufficient.

[2] As to the first point urged by appellants, it is sufficient to say that respondents showed a record title by deed from Mrs. M. J. Woolley, dated June 9, 1905, and recorded January 24, 1907, immediately after Mrs. Woolley's death. They then showed peaceful and uninterrupted possession of the premises for over 12 years, accompanied by the payment of all taxes assessed thereon for more than 5 years. The deed was received in evidence without objection, after counsel for respondents had asked appellants' counsel if he would insist upon his showing the deraignment of title. If appellants had objected to the admission of the deed when it was finally offered in evidence, respondents would have had ample opportunity to make this proof. As they made no objection, respondents were entitled to assume that the point was waived. Thus, if the proof had been attempted and had showed no title in the respondents as of the date of the tax levy, such proof would have defeated the claim here asserted by the appellants as well as the respondents. If the proof had been otherwise, it would have benefited the appellants as well as the respondents.

[3] As to the second point urged by appellants, the record shows that Maud May Munro was the owner of a life estate, and her coplaintiff was the owner of the remainder. Cases are cited to the effect that actual possession cannot ripen into prescriptive title unless the possession was taken under a "claim of ownership." From these it is argued that the mother could not obtain any title through possession unless possession was "taken under a claim of ownership in fee simple absolute, against all the world." Putting it in another way the contention is that as Maud May Munro claimed a life estate only and took possession under the deed, thus recognizing the remainder interest of her daughter, she did not obtain any title at all through possession. Appellants have cited no authority directly in point, and in view of what has been said regarding the proof of title by deed, the question is not of sufficient importance to require original research by the court. It is a question which would not arise frequently because the claimant of a life estate would naturally claim under some paper title—such as by will or deed—and the matter of possession would be immaterial. But in the absence of authority we would not hold that such a claimant could not obtain good title by adverse possession if some technical defect appeared in the paper title. Though, strictly speaking, the claimant of a life estate does not hold or claim the fee, he does "claim ownership" to the extent of the life interest. When possession is taken under such a claim of ownership with the recognition of the claim of the remainderman and with his consent, there does not seem to be any sound reason why such possession may not ripen into title by prescription as against all others.

[4, 5] Appellants' argument on their third point is that respondents could not impeach the tax deed they offered in evidence—they could not collaterally assail it—that the tax deed was not void on its face, and it conveyed the absolute title to the property. The answer is that appellants themselves put this tax deed in issue by their answer and cross-complaint, and prayed judgment quieting the title based on the deed. They offered the deed in evidence as a part of the respondents' case, and the attack which respondents made was therefore direct and not collateral. The deed to Biaggi and nothing more is printed in appellants' brief. We are not even informed upon what grounds it was attacked. It is argued that it is conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings from the assessment up to the execution of the deed, and section 3787, Political Code, is cited as authority. But this section refers to all "other" proceedings. Bernhard v. Wall, 194 Pac. 1040, 1045. If the grounds of attack related to the proceedings mentioned in section 3786, then, under that section, the deed was but prima facie evidence of the regularity of such proceedings. Upon the record as presented we find no error.

Judgment affirmed.

HERSPRING v. UNITED CANNERIES CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 3766.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 30, 1921.)

1. Account stated $\S$ 6(2)—Failure to reply to letter stating amount of claim held not an admission of correctness in view of answer to prior letter.

Defendant's silence by failure to answer plaintiff's letter, stating the amount of his claim and asking for remittance, was not an admission of the correctness of the account, rendering it an account stated, where only a few days before defendant, in answering plaintiff's prior letter, asking a check for a balance claimed, had emphatically and at length refused any further remittance and claimed that it had been wronged.

2. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 44(3)—Oral contract of employment for 10 years void as not to be performed in year.

An oral contract of employment for 10 years is, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1624, subd. 1, invalid, as an agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by Joseph Herspring against the United Canneries Company of California. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Peck, Bunker & Cole, of San Francisco, and Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Roscoe D. Jones, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover moneys alleged to be due and owing to him. The defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint which the plaintiff answered, and the judgment of the trial court was rendered in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff on the issues made by the plaintiff's complaint, and in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff on the issues made by the cross-complaint. From that judgment the plaintiff has appealed, bringing up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

On the 17th day of February, 1917, a contract in writing was made which is as follows:

"We the undersigned, hereby authorize Mr. Jos. Herspring, of San Francisco, to secure for us signed contracts for peaches and apricots from growers and at such points as we may direct, under the following conditions: All contracts to be on blanks furnished by us, a copy to be given the grower and the original to be turned over to us. Prices to be such as we authorize from time to time as market conditions warrant. Specifications as we direct. When fruit is offered for delivery under these contracts at shipping points, it shall be inspected by said Jos. Herspring, and such fruit as conforms to contract specifications shall be accepted and weigh slip issued therefor by him. He shall also supervise the loading into cars in first-class workmanlike manner. He shall also superintend the distribution of empty boxes, taking grower's receipts therefor on suitable blanks furnished by us. For faithful performance of the above obligations we agree to pay the said Jos. Herspring, at the end of the 1917 season when all deliveries have been made, the sum of one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) for each ton of 2,000 pounds net fruit delivered on all such contracts secured by him, in full payment and satisfaction for his services.

"United Canneries Company of California,
"By A. C. Harvey, Prest."

The parties entered upon the performance of the contract, and during the same month in which the same was made the plaintiff, being out in the field engaged in negotiating contracts, called up the defendant on the telephone and said, "Mr. Harvey, I can get a lot of peaches up here on seven and ten year contracts; you only want me to buy now for one year. I can get these contracts," and as the plaintiff testified, Mr. Harvey replied, "All right, Herspring; go ahead and take them." Thereafter, during 1917, the plaintiff proceeded to negotiate contracts and to perform the contract of employment in other respects. At the end of the year a settlement was had, and nothing is claimed in this case as for the year 1917. During the following season certain services were rendered and an accounting was attempted, but no settlement was agreed upon. On December 6, 1918, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant asking for a check for a balance claimed. On December 11, 1918, the defendant wrote the plaintiff a long letter full of acerbity, and refused to make any further remittance, claiming that the defendant had been wronged. On December 16, 1918, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant stating the amount of his claim and again asking for a further remittance. This action was commenced January 28, 1919.

[1] On these facts the plaintiff claims, among other things, that an account was stated. However, we think that the facts show a decided disagreement as to the account instead of showing an agreement as to an account. Owing to the very heated language used in the letter of the defendant under date of December 6th, it is clear that the defendant was not called upon to answer the letter written later by the plaintiff. Such silence on his part, under such circumstances, was not an admission as to the correctness of the later letter. The trial court found against the plaintiff on this issue, and this court is not at liberty to disturb that finding.

We understand the plaintiff to claim that the oral conversation quoted above prolonged the term of the hiring of the plaintiff through the year 1918. Assuming, solely for the purpose of stating the point, that such was the fact, then it became the duty of the plaintiff during the year 1918 to perform the written contract in all its terms, for none of them had been eliminated, according to the plaintiff's own wording of the oral conversation; but the proof introduced was all to the effect that during the year 1918 the plaintiff did not inspect before shipping but a very small portion of the fruit offered for shipping. The same remark applies to the supervision of the loading into cars, and also to the superintending of the distribution of empty boxes. If, therefore, the oral conversation be treated as extending the terms of the contract, it is patent that the plaintiff may not recover because he did not perform those things provided in the contract for him to do and perform.

However, the plaintiff does not rely solely on the oral conversation above mentioned, but he relies also on another conversation. In June, 1918, Mr. Harvey, the president of the defendant corporation, went to Sacramento and had a conversation with the plaintiff. That conversation had a double aspect. In one aspect it was with regard to the interests of the growers, and that subject-matter is not at all involved in this case. In another aspect it involved the relations of the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff testified that he said to Mr. Harvey:

"I do not want to go on with you any further unless our business relations are going to be smoother. Now, I expect you to pay me for the life of my contract. * * * How about it?"

And he said:

"That is all right, Herspring; you go ahead and everything will go smooth with us this year."

The plaintiff further testified:

"He (meaning Mr. Harvey) came back and said, 'I want you to go out and see if you can buy me 400 tons of free peaches. I want some Lovells and Muirs.'"

At this point it may be stated that the peaches were purchased and paid for, and this action does not involve that element. Looking at the other portions of the oral conversation, the utmost that can be said is that it continued the employment of 1917, according to the terms of the above writing, through the year 1918, without any other alteration. So treating it, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for the same reasons stated above with reference to the conversation which occurred in February, 1917. Furthermore, if we run together and combine the conversation of February, 1917, with the conversation of June, 1918, we reach the same conclusion.

[2] But the plaintiff's cause of action has yet another theory. He contends that the oral understanding between himself and the defendant as above recited had the legal effect to continue him in the employment of the defendant year after year—to obtain compensation for services rendered by him. In other words, the plaintiff's contention is that he was employed orally for the term extending from 1917 to a date ten years thereafter, namely, the term corresponding with the term of years existing between the producer and the canner. If such was the contract, it violated section 1624, subd. 1, of the Civil Code. Again, the language used in the oral contract will not sustain such a broad claim. And, even though the language used by the parties would sustain such a claim, still the plaintiff may not recover, for, as shown above, he has not performed the contract on his part.

Before dismissing this portion of the case, it may be said that the plaintiff contends that those portions of the contract which the plaintiff did not perform were waived by the defendant. The evidence does not sustain the plaintiff in that position. It does not appear that plaintiff's nonperformance was known to the defendant until the action was commenced.

From what has been said above, it follows that the plaintiff was not entitled to make any charge against the defendant for fruit purchased in 1917, but received out of the crop of 1918. Passing to the fruit which was purchased in 1918 and delivered in that year, the plaintiff was entitled to receive $1,099.53. The parties did not seriously disagree as to this item. The whole of that sum has been paid. Indeed, the defendant paid to the plaintiff $2,000, which included $900.47 more than the plaintiff was entitled to. For that item the trial court gave judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, and in so doing it committed no error.

The plaintiff sought to be reimbursed for expenditures for telephone service. Such payments were not made "at the special instance and request of the defendant." If claimed as on an account stated, the same was neither pleaded nor proved.

Much of the time of the trial court was taken up with the introduction of evidence concerning the item of damage alleged to have accrued in favor of the defendant by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to properly perform his contract. That damage was estimated by the trial court in the sum of $401.38; but no judgment was rendered against the plaintiff on that item. The defendant has not appealed. It is not necessary, therefore, for us to dwell on that subject.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re BANGLE et al.

HUTTON et al. v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO.

(Civ. 3483.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 30, 1921.)

1. Records $\S$ 9(10½)—Decree of registration subject to restrictions held not to preserve lien.

A provision in a deed that the sum which the grantee agreed to pay for maintenance of improvements should be a lien upon the land until paid is a lien within the definition in Civ. Code, § 2872, created by the contract of the parties within section 2881, and was not covered by a decree registering the title subject to the exceptions, reservations, and conditions contained in the deed of conveyance, but omitting reference to the liens in such deed.

2. Records $\S$ 9(10½)—Decree of registration should declare amount of lien not barred.

Where a deed made the amount the grantees were to pay for maintenance of public improvements a lien upon the property, the failure of the grantor to enforce such payments did not waive its right thereto in the future, and a decree registering the title affected by the deed should specify that it was subject to the lien and fix the amount due thereon which was not barred by limitations.

3. Deeds ⚡166—Protection of mortgagee from forfeiture for violation of restriction is valid.

A clause in a deed containing a number of restrictive provisions the violation of which would defeat the title of the grantee, which clause exempted from the forfeiture the lien of any mortgage or deed of trust made in good faith, was valid.

4. Records ⚡9(10½)—Registration referring to restrictions in deed not in chain of title is erroneous.

A decree of registration of title which stated that the title was subject to the conditions and restrictions in a deed recorded on a specified book and page was erroneous where the deed recorded on that book and page was not in the chain of title registered.

5. Records ⚡9(12)—Findings and decree as to deed, containing restrictions cannot be changed.

On appeal from a decree registering title to real estate, findings and decree with reference to the deed containing the conditions and restrictions to which the title was subject cannot be corrected so as to make it refer to a deed which was within the chain of title.

6. Deeds ⚡150—Restrictions on sale of intoxicating liquors is valid.

A provision in a deed prohibiting the use of the premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors and providing that on breach of such condition the premises should revert to the grantor is not void.

7. Records ⚡9(12)—Where registration decree referred to wrong deed, restrictions in other deed present abstract questions.

On appeal from decree registering title which erroneously stated the title to be subject to conditions and restrictions in a deed not in the chain of title, the validity of other conditions and restrictions in a deed in the chain of title will not be determined, since questions with reference thereto are abstract and may be properly decided after remand of the case.

8. Records ⚡9(10½)—Registration should specify valid restrictions not merely refer to deeds.

Decree of registration of title should specify the conditions and restrictions subject to which the title is held where the deeds imposing such conditions and restrictions are confusing and ambiguous, and some of the restrictions are no longer in force, though a reference to the deed might otherwise be sufficient, since the object of the registration is to simplify the title.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

In the matter of the petition of Paul Monroe Bangle and others against the Title Insurance & Trust Company for registration of title to real property. From so much of the judgment as registered the title of Charles Newton Hutton and others, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Charles H. Brock and Edmund W. Pugh, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. M. Hartwick, of Van Nuys, and John G. Mott, Albert M. Cross, Albert Lee Stephens, and I. B. Dockweiler, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

James W. Bell, of Los Angeles, amicus curiae.

SHAW, J. This proceeding was instituted by the owners of certain lots and parcels of land to have title thereto registered in accordance with the provisions of the law known as the Torrens Land Title Act (St. 1915, p. 1932), adopted by the people of the state at the general election held on November 3, 1914.

The lots in question constituted a part of a large tract of land subdivided and conveyed by the owner, Title Insurance & Trust Company, which, as defendant, and claiming that its rights reserved in the grants so executed by it are not protected by the decree rendered, has appealed therefrom in so far as it applies to certain of the lots described in the petition, to wit:

Lot 14, block 45, of tract 1200, city of Los Angeles, as per map recorded in Book 19 of Maps, page 35, title to which was vested in Charles Newton Hutton and his wife, Grace Iliff Hutton, which is herein designated as No. 1.

Lots 8, 10, 11, and 12, block 20, of tract 1200, city of Los Angeles, as per map recorded in Book 19 of Maps, at page 35, title to which was vested in Samuel Andrus as community property, herein designated as No. 2.

Lot 9, block 20, of tract 1200, Van Nuys district, city of Los Angeles, as per map recorded in Book 19 of Maps, page 35, title to which was by the decree declared to be in Adolph John Boulanger and Lillian Maude Boulanger, as joint tenants, herein designated as No. 3.

Lot 348 of tract 1000, in the city of Los Angeles, as per map recorded in Book 19 of Maps, pages 1 to 34, herein designated as No. 4.

As to the Hutton lot, description of which we have designated as No. 1, the applicants alleged that the deed from appellant, Title Insurance & Trust Company, to the grantor of petitioners, contained certain restrictions and reservations which were not conditions of the conveyance and had been abandoned and were void, which provisions they asked to have canceled. This allegation was denied in the answer of defendant, and the question presented on the appeal is whether the language of the decree, to wit, "exceptions, reservations, and conditions contained in deed recorded in Book 5018, page 203, of Deeds," to which as declared by the decree, the land was subject, is sufficiently broad to include all of the valid and existing covenants, exceptions, reservations, restrictions, conditions, and liens contained in the deed executed by defendant to one Agnes H. Brown, whose title and interest in the lot was by the administratrix of her estate conveyed to applicants. The "deed recorded in Book 5018, page 203, of Deeds" was dated May 22, 1912, and among other provisions contained therein was a covenant on the part of the grantee to pay the grantor $5 per year for each lot described in the conveyance, which sum, with like payments to be contributed by other lot owners in the district, should constitute a fund devoted to the care, maintenance, and replanting of street trees, repair and upkeep of street curbs and sidewalks, and to otherwise keeping up and beautifying the district as far as possible with the fund derived from such source. It was further provided in the deed that the obligation to make such payments should terminate whenever said lot should be permanently occupied, and in any case at the expiration of ten years from January 1, 1911, or, at the option of the grantor, at any time after four years from January 1, 1911, followed by an express provision that "the above sum agreed to be paid shall be and remain a lien upon the land hereby conveyed until paid."

[1] By section 2872, Civil Code, a lien is defined as "a charge imposed in some mode other than by a transfer in trust upon specific property, by which it is made security for the performance of the act." It is created by contract of the parties, or by operation of law. Section 2881, Civ. Code. By acceptance of a deed the grantees not only promised to pay the $5 per lot, but by contract in the language quoted created a lien upon the property as security for its payment. We may readily concede, as claimed by respondents, that the covenant cannot be construed as a restriction, condition subsequent, or exception the compliance or noncompliance with which could work a forfeiture of the estate. As in other cases of lien, the remedy of the lienor upon nonperformance of the covenant would be an action of foreclosure. Since the deed containing the covenant imposing the charge upon the lot was recorded, subsequent purchasers of the land must be held to have taken title upon constructive notice of the fact that the lien not only existed, but that, subject to permanent occupancy or bar of the statute of limitations, it would continue until the sum agreed to be paid was liquidated. Van Loben Sels v. Bunnell, 120 Cal. 680, 53 Pac. 266; Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 22 Pac. 53, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112.

[2] While it appears that appellant has not enforced the collection of said sums, no waiver of the provision on its part is shown, nor any action had the effect of which would, as to the whole obligation, terminate or extinguish the lien; and, since by the covenant the property was made the subject of a lien to secure the payment of $5 per year, the decree, in the absence of any showing by respondent, should in express terms, as provided in section 15 of the act, have established the amount thereof not barred by limitation and declared the same to be a lien and incumbrance upon the land, subject to which it should have been ordered registered.

What is said upon this point is likewise applicable to the lots designated herein as No. 2, title to which is vested in Samuel Andrus, and the lot designated as No. 3, title to which is vested in the Boulangers, as to each of which lots the grantees thereof covenanted to pay $5 per annum, and wherein, as in the Hutton case, it was stipulated that until paid such sums should, subject to the conditions therein expressed, constitute a charge and lien upon the lot or lots so conveyed.

[3] In application No. 2 the deed conveying the lots to Samuel Andrus contained a number of restrictive provisions for the violation of which it was agreed the title of the grantee should cease and revert to the appellant as grantor, and subject to some of which provisions title to the lots was registered in the name of Andrus. The deed also contained a provision, designated "I," that a breach of any or either of said conditions, or any re-entry by reason of the breach thereof, should not defeat or render invalid the lien of any mortgage or deed of trust made in good faith for value as to said land and the improvements thereon. The purpose of this provision clearly expressed was to protect innocent parties, as holders of liens based upon mortgages or deeds of trust, from the penalties imposed upon owners of the property for breach of the conditions. That, in addition to the restrictions subject to which the lots were ordered registered, the decree should also have ordered the registration of the property subject to the covenants and provisions designated "I" in the deed, appears to admit of no question, and respondent offers no argument in justification of the action of the court in declaring the same inoperative and of no effect.

[4] It appears that title to lot 9 in block 20, herein designated as No. 3, was registered in the name of Adolph John Boulanger, to whom title was conveyed by Samuel Andrus, who acquired the property under a deed from appellant, which deed was recorded in Books of Deeds, No. 6194, at page 44. This deed contained a number of conditions, restrictions, and reservations, but, instead of registering the lot subject thereto, the title was by the decree ordered to be registered in the name of Boulanger, subject to "exceptions and reservations as contained in deed recorded in Book 6081, page 307, of Deeds," which deed, it is conceded by both parties, is not in the chain of title for the reason, as stated, the title of applicant was under another and different deed recorded in Book 6194, at page 44, to which reference was made by the court in properly ordering registration subject to the provisions contained therein under which it was agreed the title should, in case of the vending of intoxicating liquors upon the lot, be forfeited. In thus registering the title subject to the conditions, exceptions, and reservations contained in a deed which was no part of the chain of title and under which Boulanger made no claim to the property, and in the absence of any evidence to warrant it, the court erred.

[5] As we understand counsel for appellant, his objection to the decree, in so far as it applies to lot 348, tract 1000, which we have designated No. 4, is that, while the decree declared title to the lot was subject to "forfeiture of title if intoxicating liquors are vended thereon, as set forth in deed recorded in Book 4351, page 313, of Deeds," such deed is not in the chain of title, and there is no evidence whatever tending to show that the title was conveyed subject to the provisions contained therein. These facts are conceded by respondent, who suggests, however, that the court correct the error by inserting in lieu of the deed so referred to the words "deed recorded in Book 6081, page 307." For obvious reasons, the court has no power to make such change in the findings and decree. The deed under which the applicant for registration held title to the lot was recorded in Book 6081, at page 307, and, subject to the exceptions and reservations contained therein, title to the lot was ordered to be registered in the name of Adolph John Boulanger and Lillian Maude Boulanger, as joint tenants; it being declared, however, that conditions and restrictions numbered 2 in said deed are void.

[6] The conditions in No. 2 of said deed contained a provisions that "no part of said premises shall ever at any time be used for the purpose of buying, selling, or handling intoxicating liquors," and that for the breach of such condition the premises should revert to the grantor, its successors and assigns. We perceive no reason why the court should have declared the provision void, and respondent has offered none. He suggests, however, that the reference made in the decree to condition No. 2, which the court declared void, should in fact have referred to another and different provision which the court intended by the decree to declare void. While this deed provided that a breach of the conditions should cause the premises to revert to the grantor, it further provided that such provision should not defeat or render invalid the lien of any mortgage or deed of trust made in good faith for value as to said land and the improvements thereon. What is said upon this point as to application No. 2 herein is likewise applicable to lot 348 in tract 1000.

[7] Appellant also insists that the registration of the title to lot 9, block 20, No. 3, hereinbefore referred to, should have been made subject to certain rights of way for the erection, construction, and operation of pole lines, conduits, and pipe lines for the transmission of electric energy and for telephone and telegraph lines and gas mains, of a width of four feet, and also subject to the reservation of all minerals, oils, natural gas, etc. (not for the purpose of mining the same by the grantor in the deed, but to prevent the exploration or use of said land for the discovery and production of such commodities), as well as other rights of way reserved from the operation of the deed, and all mentioned in deed recorded in Book 6081, page 307. Since, however, any action of the court in regard to title to this property was, as hereinbefore stated, based upon the erroneous reference to a deed other than that under which the applicant claimed title, we do not feel called upon to discuss or determine an abstract question not before the court and as to which upon a retrial a decision may be rendered in accordance with the law applicable thereto.

[8] Counsel for respondent very properly suggests that the deeds under consideration "are well calculated to confuse, and the brief of appellant has not served to any great extent to clarify the confusion." We fully concur in this statement, and may add that what is said concerning appellant's brief is equally applicable to that of respondent. The petition for registration contained the application of a number of owners claiming property under different deeds, which deeds, while being of great length and containing many provisions relating to reservations, liens, restrictions, and exceptions, and while in some respects containing like provisions, were nevertheless different in wording. Each of them was made the basis of a distinct application for registration of title to the lot therein referred to. The decree presented is in terms ambiguous and uncertain in meaning. No doubt some of the liens for the annual payment of $5 against the lots are barred by the statute of limitations. Some of the restrictions have expired by limitation. Some of the provisions binding upon owners do not apply to innocent mortgagees and holders of liens under deeds of trust. Since the purpose of the proceeding is, so far as possible, to simplify the title and eliminate questions that no longer affect it, the decree should in plain, explicit, and unmistakable terms set forth the conclusion of the court thereon. While under the act reference may be had to records of deeds, nevertheless, as to a title which, as here, under the deeds is limited and qualified by so many covenants contained therein, the purpose contemplated would be far better subserved if the decree in specific language set forth the conditions, restrictions, reservations, and liens to which the court found the title to be subject, rather than by reference. We are fully cognizant that in discussing the case, in the absence of material aid from counsel, we may have omitted questions involved in the jumbled record presented. However this may be, we are clearly of the opinion that the judgment appealed from should, for the reasons given, be reversed.

The judgments, in so far as they affect the lots in question, are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

KELLIHER v. FITZGERALD et al.
(Civ. 2188.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 5, 1921. Rehearing Denied Nov. 4, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 1, 1921.)

1. Pleading ⚡19—Complaint, alleging damage to property, held not reversible for ambiguity.

In an action for abatement of nuisance, injunction, and damages, a complaint, alleging that as a result of washing, cutting, and silting of plaintiff's lands they have become, are, and will be more expensive to plow, harrow, sow, crop and harvest, and thereby their economical use has been diminished and damaged to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $1,000, is not so ambiguous as to justify reversal.

2. Waters and water courses ⚡179(4)—Evidence of sources, character, and extent of injuries of damage to land held sufficient to support a verdict.

In an action for abatement of nuisance, injunction, and damages, testimony as to the sources, character, and extent of the injuries to land and as to amount of damages held sufficient to support a verdict for damages.

3. Trial ⚡395(5)—Finding of court held to be on material issues.

In an action for abatement of nuisance, injunction, and damages, where the complaint alleged the existence of certain depressions called swales, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, which was denied in the answer, the finding of the court that the evidence was sufficient to support the allegations of the complaint as to the existence of the swales is a sufficient finding on material issues.

4. Waters and water courses ⚡179(6)—Finding that water flowed from lands to other lands held equivalent to a finding that the first lands were higher.

A finding that surface waters under normal conditions flowed from the lands of defendant across the lands of plaintiff is a finding of ultimate fact, and is equivalent to a finding that defendants' land is higher than plaintiff's land.

5. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Finding of trial court is conclusive as to point where evidence is in conflict.

The appellate court is bound by the finding of the trial court as to points concerning which the evidence is in conflict.

6. Judgment ⚡255—No special evidence necessary to support judgment that defendants in action to abate nuisance shall fill in an excavation.

In an action for abatement of nuisance, injunction, and damages, no special item of evidence is needed to support the judgment that the defendant shall fill an excavation, since when the court found that the nuisance had been created by the act of defendants, it followed as conclusion that plaintiff was entitled to have it abated.

7. Waters and water courses ⚡179(6)—Finding that water did not affect course of drainway held not contrary to a finding that increased overflow damaged farm land.

In an action for abatement of nuisance, injunction, and damages, where the chief injury resulted from the water overflowing over the farming land, and washing, cutting, and otherwise injuring the same, the finding that the water did not widen, deepen, or change the course of a drainway, as alleged by plaintiff, is not contrary to a finding that the increased flow caused by the nuisance damaged his farm land.

8. Waters and water courses ⚡179(6)—Judgment, directing defendant to maintain waterway at a certain depth, held erroneous.

In an action for abatement of nuisance, injunction, and damages, a judgment, directing the defendants to maintain a waterway across plaintiff's land, so that it would not have dimensions exceeding certain specified width and depth, since it makes defendants responsible for damage by natural causes or third person, is erroneous.

On Petition for Rehearing.

9. Appeal and error ⚡931(1)—Findings of trial court are, if possible, to be reconciled so as to support the judgment.

On appeal, findings of the trial court must, if possible, be reconciled so as to support the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Suit by D. E. Kelliher against Nora Fitzgerald and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Newton Rutherford, of Stockton, and Hatton & Scott, of Modesto, for appellants.

A. H. Ashley, of Stockton, and Griffin, Carlson & Boone, of Modesto, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The court granted a rehearing of this case mainly for the purpose of further considering the claim of the appellants that the findings are hopelessly conflicting. It is earnestly insisted that finding 5 conflicts with finding 6 and other findings. We have given the matter mature consideration, and we are satisfied as the result of such examination that there is no conflict whatever between them. It is clear to us that finding 5 relates to one matter and finding 6 to another.

To understand this point fully it must be recalled that the respondent urges two causes of action in his complaint. They are not stated in separate counts, but they are quite distinct. They are:

First. That the flood waters are so diverted by the embankments of which he complains that they are thrown in volume into a drainway upon and across the premises of the respondent, and that they have washed and deepened this drainway to such an extent that he cannot plow and harrow across it as he was accustomed to do. The following quotation from paragraph 25 of the respondent's complaint will make this plain:

"That upon plaintiff's said lands adjoining said Fitzgeralds there is no marked depression or swale and, with the exception of said above drainway, the same were, prior to said flooding thereof, practically level for approximately a mile or more west of said boundary or division line; that said unusual surface waters so in the spring of 1918 forced thereon and thereover by said acts of said Fitzgeralds flowed over said portion of said section 1 until they reached said drainway in the westerly portion of said triangle; that such waters then followed substantially the said course of said drainway, and so frequently and irregularly cut, washed, deepened, widened, or changed the same and so carried the soil therefrom throughout most of its entire length that it is and was thereafter and will hereafter be impossible or imprudent to plow or drill the said lands through which said drainway meandered, except by plowing on either side of said enlarged and deepened drainway," etc.

The issue tendered by this allegation is met and covered by finding 5. It will be noted that the court found against the respondent as to this cause of action, and in so doing it employed the language found in that finding.

The second and principal cause of action stated by respondent relates to the injury inflicted by flood waters in spreading out upon and over his farming lands and destroying the crops growing thereon.

The court determined this issue in favor of the respondent, and awarded damages and preventive relief. It awarded, also, certain mandatory relief, which will be noticed further along.

We find no ground for reversing the judgment. On the contrary, we adhere to the views expressed in the opinion filed herein on the former hearing as prepared by Judge Prewett, presiding justice pro tem., and we hereby adopt the same as the opinion of the court. Correcting a trifling typographical mispision, said opinion is in the following words:

"Action for abatement of nuisance, injunction, and damages. It is averred that the alleged nuisance consists of embankments and excavations constructed in the years 1916 and 1917, and since maintained by the defendants, thereby causing the surface waters to flow in increased volume from lands of the defendants to the adjoining lands of the plaintiff to his damage in the sum of $11,500. The answer traverses all the allegations of the complaint. The plaintiff had judgment abating the nuisance, prohibiting its future maintenance and relief by way of damages in the sum of $200. The evidence in the case is unusually voluminous, and is emphatically contradictory on every contested point. The evidence, together with the briefs and other papers, fills about 1,700 pages. In addition, about 30 photographs and several maps accompany the transcript.

"The defendants appeal from the judgment and assign various alleged errors, some of which invite only a passing notice. The pleadings are unusually lengthy. In fact, they leave nothing to be desired in the way of prolixity of detail. The complaint, reduced to its lowest terms, is simply an allegation that the defendants, by the construction and maintenance of two embankments and the excavation of a ravine beyond its normal dimensions, have thereby caused the surface waters to flow across and injure the lands of the plaintiff, instead of flowing, as they would under normal conditions, across the lands belonging to themselves. The various assigned errors may be summarized as follows:

"(1) Overruling the demurrer to the complaint; (2) contradictory findings; (3) no evidence of damages to the amount of $200; (4) error in admitting proof of damages; (5) failure to find on material issues; (6) finding No. 4 not supported by evidence; (7) a portion of the judgment unsupported by evidence.

[1] "The only point urged on demurrer is that the complaint is ambiguous and uncertain as to a certain allegation which reads as follows: 'That as a result of said washing, cutting, and silting of plaintiff's said lands, same have become, are, and will be more expensive to plow, harrow, sow, crop, and harvest, and thereby their economical use has been diminished and damaged to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $1,000.' We think this allegation is not so obnoxious to the rule requiring certainty and freedom from ambiguity as to justify a reversal.

"The point as to contradictory findings will be passed until we shall have noticed the other ground urged by defendants.

[2] "It is insisted that there is no evidence of the injury on account of which the court allowed $200 by way of damages, and no evidence as to the amount of injury wrought. But the testimony of the plaintiff given under objection by the defendants is quite full upon this point.

"He stated the sources, character, and extent of the injuries and gave an estimate of his damages at $1,000. The point is not well taken. The fourth ground is practically a repetition of the third, and is answered by what is said with reference to that point.

[3] "In the fifth ground, it is claimed that the court failed to find on material issues. The complaint alleged the existence of certain depressions on the ground designated as swales, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. This was denied in the answer. Assuming for the moment that this is a material issue upon which the court was required to find, it will be seen that the court did find as follows: 'That the evidence is insufficient to support the allegations of plaintiff's complaint as to the existence of swale No. 1, swale No. 2 and swale No. 3.' This is sufficient, especially as to a probative fact like this.

"In the sixth point, the court is asked to reverse the judgment on the ground that finding No. 4 is not supported by the evidence. This finding purports to give the maximum dimensions of the waterway in question, and it is claimed that there is no evidence upon this point. But in this position, counsel are in error. A vast amount of testimony throughout the trial dealt, in one way and another, with this waterway and its depth, width, meanderings, and general course. It would be unprofitable and needless to undertake to quote it in detail.

[4] "In the same connection it is claimed that the court failed to find that the lands of the appellants are higher in elevation than those of the respondent. But the court did find that the surface waters, under normal conditions, flow from the lands of the appellants upon and across the lands of the respondent, and it must be conceded that even in the locality in question water under normal conditions flows down hill. Besides, the respective elevations are probative facts. The ultimate fact is the flow of the water.

[5] "As to all these points the evidence is by no means all one way, and this court is bound by the finding of the trial court. We find no fault with his conclusions. On the contrary, they appear to be fully supported by the record.

[6] "It is urged that a portion of the judgment is not supported by the evidence. The portion thus excepted to provides that the excavation made by the defendants, be 'by said defendants, at their own cost and expense, forthwith filled in, repaired and corrected,' etc. No especial item of evidence is needed to support such a provision. When the court found upon sufficient evidence, that the nuisance had been created by the act of the defendants, it followed as a conclusion therefrom that the plaintiff was entitled to have the nuisance abated. The provision objected to is proper.

[7] "There remains for consideration only the second point. This requires a little more extended notice. It is claimed that finding numbered 5 is contradictory of other findings, and especially of finding numbered 6. Finding 5 is in the following words:

"(5) 'That the quantity of water so thrown upon and flowing over said lands of plaintiff (which quantity, but for said excavations, embankments, etc., would have flowed upon and over said 249.67 acres of defendants), did not frequently, irregularly, or at all appreciably up to the present time cut, wash, deepen, widen, or change the said course or the drainway across any of said lands of plaintiff and carry soil therefrom throughout much of its entire length of said two miles; that said channel, unless corrected, will result in the more rapid passage of said waters and in the increase of the water flowing upon and across plaintiff's lands.'

"(6) That said excavation, said construction of said embankments, etc., was done by defendants without right and without plaintiff's consent and against his will; that as a result of said washing and said cutting of plaintiff's lands in March, 1918, the same became, are, and will be more expensive to plow, harrow, sow, crop, and harvest; that thereby their economical use has been and is diminished and damaged in the sum of $200. That the said work by the said defendants on said 249.67 acres has resulted and will result in throwing more water on plaintiff's lands than otherwise has or would naturally have flowed to or come upon the same; that said water so thrown upon plaintiff's lands has done damage to plaintiff's lands, and has damaged the economical value or use thereof.'

"It will be seen that finding 5 relates to one matter and finding 6 to quite another. The former finds that the waters unlawfully thrown upon the lands of the plaintiff 'did not * * * cut, wash, deepen, widen, or change said course or the drainway across any of said plaintiff's lands,' etc. The apparent meaning of this is that the waters did not enlarge the drainway, thereby committing little or no injury. The chief injury would have resulted, and did result, from spreading the waters out over the farming land and washing, cutting, and otherwise injuring the same. Finding 5, while infelicitous, is not contradictory of the other findings.

[8] "It is urged that a portion of the judgment is erroneous, in that it directs the defendants to 'maintain' the waterway so as not to have dimensions exceeding a certain specified width and depth. This provision should be stricken out. Elsewhere in the judgment it is provided that the defendants be 'forever enjoined and restrained from deepening or widening said waterway.' While they are properly restrained from deepening or widening the waterway, they should not be commanded to maintain it as against the operation of natural conditions for which they are not responsible. Floods, the acts of third parties, or other causes might, without the fault of the defendants, operate to widen or deepen it."

The last point discussed in the foregoing opinion demands a little further attention at our hands. In its judgment, the trial court decreed that the appellants "maintain" the excavation at its reduced dimensions. This mandate appears to extend through all future time, and it imposes a hardship upon appellants which they should not be compelled to bear. They are, of course, responsible for their own injurious acts, and the court has properly restrained them from a repetition or continuance of them; but upon no principle of equity should they be compelled to anticipate or correct the effect of agencies or causes over which they have no control. They are restrained from widening or deepening the excavation, and thus far the judgment is proper. But natural causes, such as floods, long-continued storms, cloudbursts, and other natural agencies, may widen or deepen the excavation; or it may be done by third persons without the consent or co-operation of the appellants. The respondent asks us to refrain from excising these mandatory parts from the judgment. We cannot accede to this view. It is presumed that the respondent was awarded the proper sum as damages for all injuries actually inflicted, or which must inevitably ensue. For any other injuries that may be inflicted in the future, he must depend upon his preventive relief or upon such other action as may be available to him.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the following words: "And that the same be by defendants, at their own cost and expense, so maintained as not to have dimensions exceeding those above mentioned and provided for," and also the following words: "And maintain" as last used in said judgment. As thus modified, the judgment is affirmed, the respondent to recover his costs of this appeal.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In response to appellants' petition for rehearing we may state that there is an inaccuracy in the following italicized portion of our opinion:

"The second and principal cause of action stated by respondent relates to the injury inflicted by flood waters in spreading out upon and over his farming lands and destroying the crops growing thereon."

The damage was not to growing crops, but it was caused by the additional expense that would be incurred in cultivating the land and harvesting a future crop. There was some evidence to support the finding in that respect.

[9] As to the supposed conflict between findings 5 and 6 we must remember that, if possible, findings are to be reconciled so as to support the judgment. While the expression in finding 6, "said washing and said cutting," standing alone, might be construed as referring to the "drainway" mentioned in finding 5, yet when the entire finding, No. 6, is read in connection with finding No. 7, it is not difficult to determine that it was intended to embrace the damage caused by the overflow of the flood waters.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

John J. Greeley and Theodore A. Bell, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial upon conviction of forgery.

The defendant was charged with having forged the name "L. Corvina" as an indorsement upon a pay check of the California Packing Corporation purporting to have been issued on the 19th day of April, 1919, to L. Corvina in the sum of $21.55. The information also charged the defendant with having uttered and passed the alleged forged instrument, but there was no evidence to support this portion of the charge, and the court so instructed the jury. Thus the only issue finally submitted to them was as to whether or not the defendant forged the above-mentioned indorsement.

The defendant at the time of the alleged forgery was employed as a timekeeper of the North Beach plant of said California Packing Corporation. There was also employed at the same time and place Ella Calpestri as bookkeeper, and one Guiseppe Rinaudo as assistant timekeeper; and the evidence tended to show that the forgery was the result of a conspiracy among these three persons to defraud said corporation. It appears that they placed upon the company's pay roll fictitious names, issued pay checks in the names of such fictitious persons, which they indorsed and cashed, dividing among them the money thus obtained. One of these checks was indorsed in the name of L. Corvina, a mythical employee.

During the trial, and notwithstanding that the defendant offered to stipulate that whoever wrote the said indorsement did so with intent to defraud the purported maker of the check, the court, against the objection of the defendant, admitted in evidence a number of other checks payable to fictitious persons issued about the same time as the one forming the basis of the charge, and indorsed by the defendant. The appellant contends that it was error to admit evidence of these other forgeries for the reason that under the circumstances of this case they came within none of the exceptions to the settled rule that in a prosecution for a particular offense evidence of other independent offenses is irrelevant. On the other hand, the prosecution argues that the questioned evidence falls within two of the established exceptions to the general rule stated, namely, to show intent, and also to show a common scheme or plan embracing two or more unlawful acts so related that proof of one tends to establish the other.

We think the evidence was admissible under either or both of these exceptions.

There are cases where proof of the commission of the act charged implies indubitably criminal intent. In such cases it is generally held that evidence of wrongful intent is inadmissible. 8 R. C. L. § 200, p. 206; 1 Jones on Ev. § 143. In certain other classes of offenses the criminal intent is not necessarily inferable from the mere commission of the act charged, so that the prosecution is compelled to resort to other proof to establish such intent. Frequently this proof takes the form of evidence of other similar acts, which rebuts the inference of mistake or inadvertence. In the case at bar the defense was a general denial; and one of the facts essential to be established in order to warrant a conviction was the felonious intent with which the indorsement was made. For this purpose evidence of other similar offenses committed about the same time was admissible to establish the criminal intent. Sykes v. State, 112 Tenn. 572, 82 S. W. 185, 105 Am. St. Rep. 972.

In the case of People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193, the court said:

"There are cases in which the intent may be inferred from the nature of the act. There are others where wilful intent or guilty knowledge must be proved before a conviction can be had. Familiar illustrations of the latter rule are to be found in cases of passing counterfeit money, forgery, receiving stolen property, and obtaining money under false pretenses. An innocent man may, in a single instance, pass a counterfeit coin or bill. Therefore intent is of the essence of the crime, and previous offenses of a similar character by the same person may be proved to show intent. [Citing cases.] So in a case where the defendant is charged with having received stolen property guilty knowledge is the gravamen of the offense, and scienter may be proven by other previous similar acts. [Citing cases.] In cases of alleged forgery of checks, etc., evidence is admissible to show that at or near the same time that the instrument described in the indictment was forged or uttered the defendant had passed, or had in his possession, similar forged instruments, as it tends to prove intent."

In the class of cases referred to as constituting an exception to the general rule evidence is admitted to show guilty knowledge, or intent of the defendant, and especially so where there is a question whether the act was accidental or intentional, since the fact that the act formed part of a series of similar occurrences in each of which the defendant was concerned is relevant as characterizing the act. State v. Brady, 100 Iowa, 191, 69 N. W. 290, 36 L. R. A. 693, 62 Am. St. Rep. 560. Likewise in trials for arson or embezzlement evidence of other contemporaneous acts of a similar character were held admissible to show intent, or to rebut the defense of accident or mistake. Knights v. State, 58 Neb. 225, 78 N. E. 508, 76 Am. St. Rep. 78; U. S. v. Russell (D. C.) 19 Fed. 591. So also in forgery cases. People v. Bird, 124 Cal. 32, 56 Pac. 639; People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 Pac. 600; State v. Minton, 116 Mo. 605, 22 S. W. 808.

[1] The evidence of the other forgeries, then, was pertinent and relevant unless, as claimed by the defendant, his admission that whoever wrote the signature on the back of the pleaded check did so with felonious intent precluded the prosecution from the right to introduce such evidence. It is said to have been substantially so held in some courts. We have no doubt, however, that the evidence being admissible the prosecution could either accept the admission or introduce its proof, as it deemed advisable. The right of the prosecution to introduce evidence to show intent could not be limited by any admission of the defendant. 8 R. C. L. § 200, p. 207. With the court in Higgins v. State, 157 Ind. 57, 60 N. E. 685, we say:

"We do not think that the admission of any competent evidence can be rendered erroneous by statements or admissions of the accused made to the court and jury during the trial."

But we think that the evidence was also clearly admissible to show a common plan or system. Evidence of other similar crimes is competent which tends to show a plan or design, and that the act charged was the result of the plan. Such evidence is competent to prove the offense charged.

"Where the very doing of the act charged is in issue and is to be evidenced, one of the essential facts admissible is the person's plan or design to do the act. This plan or design itself may be evidenced by his conduct, and such conduct may consist of other similar acts so connected as to indicate a common purpose including in its scope the act charged. There is a decided difference between this use" and the one to show intent; "for there the object is merely to give a complexion to an act conceded or proved, i. e., to negative innocent intent, while here the object is to evidence a prior general plan, scheme or design, which in its turn is to evidence the doing of the act so planned." 1 Greenleaf on Ev. 72; Wigmore on Ev. § 304; People v. Ciulla, 187 Pac. 46.

Here the other forgeries were contemporaneous with the one charged in that they were committed about the same time, in the same manner, and against the same person; and the evidence of them was admissible for the purpose of showing that the offense charged was a part of a scheme to defraud the California Packing Corporation.

In State v. Marshall, 77 Vt. 262, 59 Atl. 916, evidence of fraudulently obtaining an additional sum of money from the same person subsequent to the one concerned in the charge, both acts being in pursuance of the same scheme to obtain money by falsely impersonating another, was admissible because such evidence tended to lessen the probability of defendant being innocent of the crime charged.

In Trimble v. State, 66 Tex. Cr. R. 207, 145 S. W. 929, evidence of the "salting" by defendant of another mine involved in another transaction between the same parties was admissible to assist in making out the guilt of the defendant by a chain of circumstances connected with the act charged.

On a trial for forgery evidence of other forgeries by defendant is admissible on the issue of intent or to show system. Taylor v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 101, 81 S. W. 933.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [2] The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the district court of appeal of the first appellate district, division one, is denied for the reason that evidence objected to of the commission of similar offenses by defendant was clearly admissible on the ground stated by the district court of appeal that such evidence tended to prove such similarity of plan or system in committing the other acts as to indicate that the offense charged was likewise the act of this defendant, but we express no opinion on the other ground for its admission stated by the district court of appeal.

54 Cal. App. 428

BELLONE v. KLEINAU. (Civ. 3376.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 4, 1921.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨48(1)—Complaint by lessee to rescind surrender of lease held to state cause of action for value of fruit.

In a suit by a lessee induced to surrender the premises by a false representation that they had been sold, complaint held to state a cause of action for the value of fruit taken by the lessor on the theory that he had repudiated and rescinded the surrender of the premises.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨48(2)—Tenant induced to surrender premises by misrepresentation entitled to recover the property and crop of fruit or its value.

Where a lessee, induced to surrender the premises by a false representation that they had been sold, repudiated and rescinded the transaction, he was entitled to recover the premises and the fruit growing thereon, and where the fruit had been sold by the lessor to an innocent purchaser to recover its value, notwithstanding the general rule that a defrauded party cannot both rescind and recover damages.

3. Appeal and error ⇨994(3)—Credibility of witnesses and truth of testimony is for trial judge, unless record demonstrates falsity.

The credibility of the witnesses and the apparent inconsistencies between their testimony and the admitted facts ordinarily fall within the exclusive province of the trial judge, and his findings may not be reversed unless the record demonstrates that in the very nature of things the testimony of a witness cannot be true.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇨48(1)—Evidence held to support findings that one inducing surrender of lease and selling crop was landlord's agent.

In an action by a lessee induced to surrender the premises by a false representation that they had been sold, evidence held to support findings that a real estate agent making such representation, and, after the surrender of the premises, selling the fruit thereon, was the landlord's agent and had authority from her.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨48(1/2)—Representation inducing surrender of lease held false, and lessor charged with knowledge of falsity.

Where a lease provided for termination upon payment of liquidated damages in case of a sale of the premises, a representation by the landlord's agent that the premises had been sold was false, and the landlord was charged with knowledge of its falsity where she had never accepted the prospective purchaser's terms, but had insisted upon different terms.

6. Evidence ⇨241(1)—Evidence of representations by agent admissible where there was evidence of agency and authority.

In an action by a tenant, induced to surrender the premises by the false representation of the landlord's agent that they had been sold, evidence as to statements of the agent was admissible, where his agency and authority were shown by other evidence.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇨48(1/2)—Lessee, attempting to rescind surrender of premises, held to have made sufficient offer to restore everything received.

Where a lease provided for termination in case of a sale of the premises on payment of liquidated damages, and, in such case released the lessee from liability for rent, and the lessee was induced to surrender the premises by a false representation that they had been sold, and thereafter attempted to repudiate such surrender, a letter written the lessor, expressing his willingness and ability to return the liquidated damages and the rent, to which the landlord would be entitled on repudiation of the transaction, was a sufficient offer to restore everything received under such transaction.

8. Appeal and error ⇨205—Error in exclusion of evidence as to conversation not shown when no attempt made to show nature of conversation.

Error in the exclusion of a question as to whether a witness had any other conversation with a certain person was not affirmatively made to appear, where there was no attempt to show the nature of the conversation that defendant expected to prove by the witness.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1032(1)—Judgment not reversed unless prejudicial error affirmatively shown.

A judgment will not be reversed unless prejudicial error be shown affirmatively.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Sam Bellone against Lena Kleinau. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. W. Pendleton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred W. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, who owns a small ranch in Los Angeles county, leased the property to plaintiff for the term of nine months, commencing February 1, 1919. Plaintiff, as the lessee, immediately entered into possession, and remained on the land until May 28, 1919, when, by reason of the false representation of defendant's agent, he was induced to surrender possession of the ranch and of the fruit crops growing thereon. The lease contains the following clauses:

"The party of the second part [the lessee, who is the plaintiff in this action] agrees to pay to the party of the first part [the lessor, who is the defendant here] the sum of $500 [as rent] on the first day of June, 1919, provided, however, that the said party of the first part [the lessor] reserves unto herself the right to dispose of said property at any time prior to said first day of June, 1919, and in the event that the property is so sold and in the further event that the purchaser shall require possession of said property prior to the said first day of June, 1919, then, in that event, the party of the second part [the lessee] agrees to deliver possession of said premises to the said purchaser, after receiving from the said party of the first part [the lessor] the sum of $250 as liquidation damages for his work and labor on said premises; and in said event said second party [the lessee] is hereby relieved from the payment of the $500 hereinabove specified. Should the premises not be sold, then the crops raised on said premises shall be the sole property of said party of the second part."

Some time prior to June 1, 1919, defendant instructed one Peckham, a real estate agent, to sell the property for $8,250, $2,250 to be paid in cash at the date of sale, and the balance, $6,000, within four years. Thereafter, and on or about May 16, 1919, Peckham received from one Erickson an offer to purchase the property for said sum of $8,250: Erickson paid Peckham $100 down, and offered to pay the balance as follows: $650 in cash as and when the sale was consummated, $1,500 to be allowed for the fruit on the ranch, and the balance, $6,000, to be paid in six years. Peckham, whose authority to sell was oral, communicated to defendant the terms of Erickson's offer. She, however, refused to accept the offer, insisting that the balance of $6,000 be paid in four, not six, years. The result is that there never was any unconditional acceptance of any unconditional offer, and therefore no consummated agreement to sell. This notwithstanding, Peckham, on or about May 28, 1919—while the negotiations with Erickson were pending and when it appeared that a sale of the property might be consummated—told plaintiff that the property had been sold, and induced him to accept the $250 which, in her lease of the premises, defendant had agreed should be paid to plaintiff in the event that the property should be sold prior to June 1, 1919. At the same time, plaintiff signed and delivered to Peckham a written assignment of his interest in the lease. When this assignment was delivered by plaintiff to Peckham, it did not contain the name of any assignee. Subsequently Peckham filled in his own name as the assignee. At about this time Peckham obtained from defendant a similar assignment of her interest in the lease. It is a fair inference that plaintiff and defendant each supposed that Peckham was procuring these assignments for the benefit of Erickson, who then appeared to be a prospective purchaser of the property, and that they were executed in the belief that thus delivery of possession to Erickson would be insured. Thereafter, on May 28, 1919, Peckham sold the fruit on the property to one Mastripolito for the sum of $1,500. Later, defendant accepted a part of the proceeds of this sale, paid to her by Peckham pursuant to a previous understanding. Mastripolito appears to have been a bona fide purchaser of the fruit.

About June 4, 1919, plaintiff discovered that defendant had not accepted Erickson's offer to purchase the ranch, and that the property had not been sold. Accordingly, on July 5, 1919, he caused to be delivered to defendant a letter in which, after stating his readiness to return to defendant the $250 that he had received from her agent, Peckham, and to pay the rent of $500, which, under the terms of the lease, became due on June 1, 1919, he demanded repossession of the leased property, and that there be delivered to him the fruit on the ranch, or, in the event that it had been sold, the amount that defendant had received for it. Defendant disregarded this letter, and shortly thereafter this action was commenced. The lower court found the value of the fruit to be the amount for which it had been sold to Mastripolito, namely, $1,500, and gave plaintiff judgment for $750, being the amount of the proceeds of the sale of the fruit less the $250 and the $500 that respectively, became due to defendant from plaintiff upon the latter's rescission of the transaction whereby he had been induced to surrender his lease. From this judgment defendant appeals.

Appellant contends: (1) That the amended complaint—hereafter referred to simply as the complaint—does not state a cause of action; (2) that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain certain of the findings; and (3) that the court erred in the admission and likewise in the rejection of certain items of evidence.

[1] We think the complaint states a cause of action for the relief prayed—the recovery of a money judgment. After setting forth a copy of the written lease whereby defendant, as the lessor, had leased the ranch to plaintiff, as the lessee, the complaint proceeds to allege, in substance, that plaintiff, upon the execution of the lease, took possession thereunder and complied with the conditions thereof; that on May 28, 1919, defendant and her agent represented to plaintiff that the property had been sold and that the purchaser required possession prior to June 1, 1919; that thereupon defendant tendered plaintiff $250, according to the terms of that clause in the lease which we have quoted above; that, relying upon defendant's said representation, plaintiff accepted from the former the $250, relinquished possession of the leased premises, and assigned his lease to defendant and her agent; that, in truth and in fact, the property had not been sold, and defendant's representation that it had been was false, as defendant well knew; that as soon as plaintiff discovered that the property had not been sold, he demanded of defendant and her agent repossession of the premises and the fruit growing thereon, and, at the same time, tendered to defendant and her agent the $250 that had been paid to him and also the $500 rental which the lease required to be paid on June 1, 1919, in the event that the property should not be sold prior to that date; that, though the property was not sold prior to June 1, 1919, plaintiff and her agent have taken possession thereof; that defendant refuses to deliver to plaintiff possession of the premises and the fruit; that defendant and her agent "have sold from said premises the fruit growing thereon which belonged to said plaintiff," the value whereof is $2,500; and that by reason thereof plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $1,750, being the value of the fruit sold by defendant and her agent, namely, $2,500, less the $250 that was paid to plaintiff when he surrendered possession and the $500 that became due from him on June 1, 1919, as the agreed rental. Wherefore plaintiff prayed judgment for $1,750.

Appellant erroneously assumes that this action is one sounding in tort, and that respondent in suing to recover damages for the deceit practiced upon him. So assuming, she attacks the complaint upon the ground that, though a defrauded party may elect either to rescind the fraudulent transaction and recover what he may have been induced to surrender or to affirm it and claim damages, he cannot do both. Appellant's claim, to state it in her counsel's language, is that the complaint "undertakes to state a cause of action bottomed upon both rescission and damages." There is no merit in this contention. The complaint clearly proceeds upon the theory that the transaction that involved the relinquishment of possession by plaintiff and the acceptance by him of the agreed $250 was repudiated and rescinded by him upon his discovering the falsity of the representation that the property had been sold prior to June 1, 1919. All the facts necessary to show that plaintiff had repudiated and rescinded that transaction are set forth in the complaint. And he is suing for the monetary equivalent of the fruit which defendant had put out of her power to restore. He is suing for that equivalent, not as damages, but as a substitute for the fruit itself.

Plaintiff places much reliance upon the decision of our Supreme Court in Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58

Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667, where it is held that if the fraudulent transaction—in that case a contract of settlement or compromise—be rescinded or repudiated, an action sounding in tort to recover damages for the deceit cannot be maintained. The gist of that decision is substantially this: If the defrauded party has elected to stand upon and affirm the fraudulent transaction, then he may recover damages in an action of tort based upon the deceit, his damages being compensation for whatever loss he may have sustained by reason of having been induced to accept something of less value than that for which he had bargained. But if, instead of standing upon and affirming the transaction, the defrauded party has elected to repudiate the whole fraudulent transaction and thus entitle himself to be restored to the status quo, he can recover that which he may have transferred to the defrauding party upon making to the latter a proper offer to restore anything of value which he may have received. The defrauded party may not, however, recover the property or thing of value that he was induced to transfer to the defrauding party, and, in addition, damages occasioned by the deceit.

[2] The complaint in the instant case does not do violence to the principles announced in the Westerfeld Case. The facts alleged in the complaint show that plaintiff elected to repudiate and rescind, and that he has repudiated and rescinded the fraudulent transaction which resulted in his loss of possession of the leased land and the fruit growing thereon. Having thus repudiated that transaction, plaintiff became entitled to recover all the property that he had been induced to relinquish—the land and the fruit. But the complaint discloses that a valuable part of the relinquished property, the fruit, had been sold by defendant to an innocent purchaser before the action was commenced, thus revealing the fact that defendant has put it out of her power to make restitution of the fruit itself. Such being the case, plaintiff, still basing his right to relief upon his rescission and repudiation of the fraudulent transaction, is entitled to recover from defendant the money for which the fruit was sold, less the amounts due from him to defendant, namely, the $250 that was paid to him by defendant's agent when he was induced to surrender the leased property, and the $500 rental that would have become due from him to defendant on June 1, 1919, had he not surrendered the leased property to defendant's agent. Any money judgment that might be given upon the cause of action alleged in the complaint would be given, not in affirmance of the fraudulent transaction, but for the monetary equivalent of fruit which, as between plaintiff and defendant, belonged to the former when plaintiff rescinded the fraudulent transaction. Such monetary equivalent is recoverable, not as damages, but as a substitute for the fruit that defendant is unable to restore. In support of our conclusion that the complaint states a cause of action and that it warrants the relief that was granted, reference may be had to the following cases—if, indeed, any authority be necessary to sustain so plain a proposition: Sprinkle v. Wellborn, 140 N. C. 163, 52 S. E. 666, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 111 Am. St. Rep. 827, and Valentine v. Richards, 59 Hun, 619, 13 N. Y. Supp. 417, Valentine v. Richardt, affirmed in 126 N. Y. 272, 27 N. E. 255.

[3] It is earnestly urged that the evidence is insufficient to justify certain of the findings. This contention is based largely upon matters going to the credibility of the witnesses and to apparent inconsistencies between the statements of certain witnesses and the admitted facts. Such questions ordinarily fall within the exclusive province of the trial judge, and we may not reverse his findings unless the record demonstrates that in the very nature of things the testimony of a witness cannot be true. We have no such case here. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth the testimony in extenso or to consider in detail all of the matters as to which it is claimed the evidence is insufficient. It will suffice to consider those upon which appellant chiefly relies.

[4] It is urged that there is nothing in the evidence to show that defendant represented to plaintiff that the property had been sold. The claim is that the evidence does not show that defendant's agent, Peckham, was authorized to represent to plaintiff that the property had been sold, and that the purchaser required possession. Defendant testified that she "gave Peckham the ranch to sell; that he had the right to sell it." He had previously acted for defendant in other matters. The evidence as a whole warranted the inference that defendant had verbally authorized Peckham to do whatever might be necessary to sell the property, on terms satisfactory to her, and to put the purchaser in possession if he should succeed in selling the property on satisfactory terms. It also is a fair inference from the evidence, considered in its entirety, that defendant left to her son, as well as to Peckham, all matters connected with the sale of the ranch. She and her son testified that the son, prior to June 1, 1919, presumably with defendant's knowledge and consent and as her representative, told plaintiff over the telephone that the property had been sold, that the purchaser required possession, and that Peckham would pay plaintiff the $250 which, by the terms of the lease, was to be paid to him in the event that the leased property should be sold before the 1st of June. It sufficiently appears, therefore, from defendant's own testimony, that through her authorized agents, Peckham and her son, she notified plaintiff that the property had been sold, and that possession would be required by the purchaser.

[5] The evidence shows beyond all cavil the falsity of the representation that the property had been sold. There never was any meeting of the minds of defendant and the prospective purchaser, Erickson, respecting terms of sale. Erickson offered to pay the balance of $6,000 in six years; defendant insisted upon that balance being paid in four years; the two never did come to an agreement; and Erickson's offer to purchase on the terms proposed by him never was unconditionally accepted. Therefore there never was a sale of the premises. Defendant is charged with knowledge that the property was not sold and that the representation that it had been was false. In the very nature of things, she must be deemed to have known whether or not she had sold her own property.

It is claimed that the evidence shows that Peckham, when he sold the fruit, was acting in his own behalf, or as Erickson's agent, and not for or on behalf of defendant. Upon this issue there was a sharp conflict in the evidence. There was, however, testimony sufficient to sustain the finding that defendant sold the fruit through Peckham as her agent. The receipt that was given by Peckham to Erickson for the $100 deposited by the latter when he made his offer to purchase shows, as we interpret it, that one of the terms of the proposed sale was that Erickson would allow $1,500 for the fruit. Peckham testified that Erickson's proposed terms of purchase were immediately communicated by him to defendant, who, therefore, must have known that it was proposed to sell the fruit for $1,500. Indeed, Peckham testified that he told defendant that, in order to complete the deal, he would have to sell the fruit to make to Erickson the $1,500 that the latter agreed to allow therefor. Asked why he had filled in his own name in the blank space that had been left for the name of the assignee in the written assignment of plaintiff's interest in the lease, Peckham replied:

"Because I was—I had—it was to give a bill of sale of that fruit. I was to handle the sale of the fruit. It was just a question. I had to sell the fruit for $1,500 in order to put this sale through, and she [defendant] told me to go on and sell the fruit."

After Peckham sold the fruit he divided the proceeds with defendant pursuant to an agreement which, he testified, he had theretofore made with her. Appellant makes much of the fact that, after she and plaintiff had assigned to Peckham their respective interests in the lease, Peckham, according to testimony given by defendant and her witnesses, asserted the right under these written assignments to sell the fruit as his own. But Peckham testified:

"When I bought this lease, or took this lease from Mr. Bellone [meaning Bellone's assignment of his interest in the lease], I absolutely was acting merely for Mrs. Kleinau."

The learned trial judge, as was his privilege, evidently believed this testimony. It was sufficient for the purpose, and we, therefore, may not reverse the finding. Without further citation from the record, let it suffice to say that the evidence fully warranted the trial judge in his conclusions upon the facts in issue. Only the apparent earnestness of counsel has induced us to give more attention to this point than it deserves in view of the rule so thoroughly established by our decisions that a reviewing court may not set aside a finding if there is any substantial evidence to support it.

[6] Appellant was not prejudiced by the court's rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence. Plaintiff, over defendant's objection, was permitted to testify that, defendant not being present, Peckham told him on May 28, 1919, that the premises had been sold, and that the purchaser had demanded possession. As we already have shown, Peckham's agency and his authority to represent defendant in all matters pertaining to the sale of the premises, including delivery of possession to the purchaser, should the latter require it, was sufficiently shown by other evidence in the case. It was proper, therefore, to permit Peckham to testify to what he, as defendant's agent, told plaintiff respecting the sale of the ranch and the necessity for surrendering possession to the supposed purchaser.

[7] The court did not err in admitting in evidence the letter of July 5, 1919, from plaintiff's attorney to defendant—the letter demanding that defendant deliver to plaintiff the fruit, or pay to him the amount for which she had sold it. The claim seems to be that this letter was not a sufficient offer to restore to defendant everything of value that plaintiff had received from her under the transaction whereby he had been trapped into surrendering possession of the leased property on the supposition that it had been sold to Erickson prior to June 1, 1919. In the first place, we doubt if, under the circumstances of this case, it was necessary to offer to restore to defendant the two amounts which, on a rescission of the fraudulent transaction, should be credited to her, namely, the $250 and the $500, respectively. The $1,500 that defendant and her agent received from the sale of the fruit—fruit to which plaintiff would have been entitled had it not been sold—exceeded the aggregate of the two sums which, on plaintiff's election to repudiate the fraudulent transaction and to affirm the lease contract, would be due from him to defendant. Defendant, therefore, would be required to account to plaintiff for a greater sum than the amount that was due from him to her. But this notwithstanding, and assuming, for the purposes of this decision, that under the circumstances an offer to restore to defendant everything of value was necessary, it was not necessary that the language of the tender should conform to technical niceties. The letter of July 5, 1919, expressed plaintiff's willingness and ability to return the two sums—the $250 and the $500—to which defendant would be entitled upon plaintiff's repudiation of the transaction that resulted in the surrender by him of the leased premises. That was all that was required. Mitchell v. Moore, 24 Iowa, 394, 9 C. J. 1213.

[8, 9] Complaint is made that the court erred in sustaining an objection to a question propounded to defendant's daughter when called as a witness for the defendant. That witness, after having detailed a conversation that she had had with Peckham, was asked, "Was there any other conversation that you had with Mr. Peckham at his office?" The court sustained an objection to this question. Defendant made no attempt to show the nature of the conversation that she expected to prove by this witness, and we, therefore, cannot say that it has affirmatively been made to appear that the court erred. A judgment will not be reversed unless prejudicial error be shown affirmatively. There are other objections as trivial and unimportant as those to which we have adverted. No purpose would be subserved by a more extended reference thereto. Suffice it to say that we find no reversible error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

(54 Cal. App. 378)

PEOPLE v. STERLING. (Cr. 993.) (District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 27, 1921.) Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge. Louis Sterling was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed. Edmond H. Lomasney, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was charged with killing his wife. He was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and his punishment was fixed at imprisonment in the state's prison for life. From a judgment entered on the verdict he has appealed. The matter comes before this court on an order to show cause why the judgment should not be affirmed for lack of prosecution of the appeal. Ordinarily in such matters we would not consider the record further than to determine whether or not due diligence had been exercised in perfecting the appeal. Owing to the nature of the charge and the gravity of the sentence imposed on the defendant, however, we have gone further than is usual in such cases, and have permitted appellant on this hearing to advance reasons why the judgment against him should be modified. After consideration we find no error in the record which substantially affects the rights of the defendant. This narrows the issues presented by this appeal to the principal point urged by the defendant in support of his motion, which is that the evidence fails to show that the homicide was premeditated, and therefore is insufficient to support the verdict of murder in the first degree. There is evidence in the record, however, which, if believed by the jury, as undoubtedly it was, is sufficient to support its findings. The motion to modify the judgment is denied. The judgment and order are affirmed.

JOHNSTONE v. PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION CO.
(S. F. 9333.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 8, 1921.)

1. Theaters and shows ☞6—Complaint against exposition company for personal injury from negligence of concessionaire held to state cause of action.

A complaint alleging that defendant exposition company invited crowds to purchase tickets and enter its fair grounds, thereby assuming the duty of providing safe thoroughfares as far as possible by ordinary care, that plaintiff purchased a ticket and entered, and that defendant had negligently granted a concession of operating motor vehicles on its thoroughfares, and that the concessionaire permitted visitors to operate electrically propelled vehicles, and defendant negligently allowed the vehicle company to conduct its concession, negligently permitting it to allow visitors unskilled in the operation of vehicles to operate them among the pedestrians without providing a suitable pathway for them, rendering the thoroughfares dangerous, and that without negligence on plaintiff's part one of the vehicles ran into her, stated a cause of action.

2. Theaters and shows ☞6—Exposition company held liable for act of concessionaire.

That injuries to a guest at a fair were inflicted by negligence of a concessionaire, and not by the proprietor, would not relieve the latter of responsibility.

3. Theaters and shows ☞6—Rule as to non-liability of bailor held not to apply to exposition company granting concessions to run vehicles.

The rule that the bailor of vehicles is not ordinarily liable for a resulting injury by the bailee to a third person, a stranger, is not applicable to an exposition company granting to a concessionaire the privilege of letting vehicles to be run along the thoroughfares of the exposition.

4. Theaters and shows ☞6—Whether vehicles of concessionaire were dangerous to pedestrians held for jury.

Whether the vehicles let to the pedestrians of an exposition company to use on the thoroughfares of the company were of a dangerous character to let to unskilled persons, was a question for the jury under allegations to that effect.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Nellie Johnstone against the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Company. From the judgment of the superior court, plaintiff appealed. On hearing in bank after judgment in the District Court of Appeal, affirming the judgment of the superior court. Judgment of superior court reversed.

Wm. M. Cannon, J. L. Taugher, and Kingsley Cannon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Myrick & Deering and James Walter Scott, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant, sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries.

Appellant was a visitor at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition on April 17, 1915. She had purchased a ticket entitling her to admission, and was inside the grounds. Another visitor, operating an electric carriage rented from a concessionaire, ran into appellant and inflicted the injuries complained of.

The complaint contained two counts or alleged causes of action. The material allegations of the first were that respondent invited crowds to purchase tickets and enter the grounds and thoroughfares of the exposition, and thereby assumed the duty of providing safe thoroughfares as far as possible by the exercise of ordinary care; that in response to respondent's invitation, appellant purchased a ticket and entered the grounds, thereby becoming an invited guest of respondent; that within the grounds were certain thoroughfares used by visitors for travelling on foot; that these thoroughfares were generally crowded and visitors were permitted there by respondent; that prior to the date of the injury complained of, respondent had negligently granted to the Miniature Motor Vehicle Company the concession of operating its motor vehicles upon the thoroughfares mentioned; that the vehicle company permitted visitors to operate electrically propelled vehicles upon the thoroughfares; that respondent negligently allowed the vehicle company to conduct its concession, negligently permitted it to allow visitors unskilled in the operation of the vehicles to operate them among the pedestrians without providing a suitable pathway for them; that by these acts the thoroughfares were rendered highly dangerous to the pedestrians, and that respondent failed to provide safe thoroughfares for its invitees; that on April 17, 1915, without any negligence on her part, one of the Miniature motor vehicles ran into appellant while she was within the exposition grounds; that serious injuries were inflicted on her, whereby she sustained damages in the sum of $102,714.55.

The second count or cause of action alleged similar facts concerning the relation of invitor and invitee between the parties, and the circumstances of the accident; that respondent made the Miniature Motor Vehicle company its agent for the purpose of transporting visitors by means of electrically propelled vehicles; that the vehicles were dangerous appliances when placed in the hands of persons unskilled in their management; that respondent and its agent, the vehicle company, were aware of this; that on April 17, 1915, the vehicle company negligently intrusted one of the vehicles to a visitor who was unskilled in its management, without inquiring as to his competency to operate it upon the thoroughfares mentioned; that because of the driver's ignorance of the proper operation of the vehicle and lack of skill as to its proper management, and because of the negligence of respondent in putting the driver in charge of the vehicle without instructing him concerning its operation, the driver was unable to stop the vehicle; and that because of such negligence he ran into appellant, causing the injuries.

Respondent demurred to the complaint on the ground that neither the complaint nor either count stated a cause of action, and that it was uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible in some nineteen particulars. Only the first of these—that it does not state a cause of action—is urged on this appeal.

Appellant asserts:

"It is well established that there are but three elements necessary to sustain an action for personal injuries: (1) The existence of a duty on the part of defendant to protect plaintiff from the injuries complained of; (2) the failure of defendant to perform that duty; and (3) an injury to the plaintiff from such breach of duty by the defendant. When these elements are brought together they unitedly constitute actionable negligence. [Citing cases.] It is respectfully submitted that the first count of plaintiff's complaint clearly and unambiguously alleged all of these requisite elements," and that "the second cause of action likewise sufficiently alleged defendant's duty, its breach thereof, and an injury to plaintiff proximately caused thereby."

Respondent's position is thus stated:

"To summarize, this defendant and respondent is charged with negligence in two particulars: First, that it failed to provide separate paths for vehicles and pedestrians; second, that its concessionaire intrusted one of its chair cars or 'electrically propelled' vehicles to a guest without inquiring into his competency, and that generally as a result of failing to provide separate passageways, and as a result of its concessionaire's failure to make proper inquiry into the qualifications of the guest, the defendant and respondent company was liable for the damages that ensued," that "nowhere in the decisions of our courts, or in the brief of our opponent, can there be found the slightest precedent that might justify a ruling that an exposition company must, as a matter of law, maintain separate paths for pedestrians and vehicles," and that "the authorities are uniform in holding that one who leases a vehicle to another is not responsible for the latter's negligent act."

In Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 1410, it is said:

"(1) The first requisite in establishing negligence is to show the existence of the duty which it is supposed has not been performed. * * * 2. The duty being pointed out, the failure to observe it is to be shown; in other words, the existence of negligence."

In Thornton v. Maine State Agricultural Society, 97 Me. 108, 53 Atl. 979, 94 Am. St. Rep. 488, plaintiff's intestate was a visitor at a fair conducted by defendant, and was standing on a railroad platform immediately outside the inclosing fence. He was killed by a bullet from a shooting gallery operated as a concession inside the fair grounds by one White. Deceased's widow sued under a statute which allowed recovery of damages for the death of a person caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another. The court held:

"It is too well settled to need the citation of authorities that, if the owner or occupier of land either directly or by implication induces persons to come upon his premises, he thereby assumes an obligation to see that such premises are in a reasonably safe condition, so that the persons there by his invitation may not be injured by them or in their use for the purpose for which the invitation was extended.

"Therefore, having invited the public to its fair, it was the duty of the defendant to use reasonable care to keep its grounds and the usual approaches to them, so far as the approaches were under its control, in a safe condition—safe for all who were invited. It was its duty to use reasonable care that there should be no traps or pitfalls into which the invited might fall, and that there should be no dangerous plays or sports or exhibitions by which the invited might be injured. * * * The defendant would not be relieved from this duty by leasing portions of its grounds to the proprietors of shows and attractions, and becoming their landlord. As between it and the invited public, the duty still remained of using reasonable care to see that all of the exhibition grounds were safe. It was its duty so to do both in the original letting of space, and in the subsequent inspection and supervision of the show thus permitted to given its exhibition, or of the shooting gallery thus permitted to operate as a part of the fair."

In Whyte v. Idora Park Co., 29 Cal. App. 342, 155 Pac. 1018, the question was presented whether the amusement company was liable for an injury received by an invitee while patronizing a concession. The claim was made that the concessionaire was an independent contractor, and that therefore the amusement company was not liable. The court said:

"There are some cases which support this theory advanced by the appellant; but we think the weight of authority sustains the proposition that one conducting a place of amusement will not be relieved from liability for injury to a patron merely because it was caused by the negligence of a concessioner or his employee."

In the same case the court quoted the following from Stickel v. Riverview Sharpshooters' Park Co., 250 Ill. 452, 95 N. E. 445, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 659:

"While there are some decisions to the contrary, the greater weight of authority is that the owner will not be relieved from responsibility because the exhibition is provided and conducted by the concessioner, provided it is of a character that would probably cause injury unless due precautions are taken to guard against it; and this duty applies not to construction alone, but to management and operation where the device is of a character likely to produce injury unless due care is observed in its operation."

Selinas v. Vermont State Agricultural Society, 60 Vt. 249, 15 Atl. 117, 6 Am. St. Rep. 114, was a case where a visitor at a fair was injured by being hit in the leg by a mallet used by another visitor in testing his strength on a striking machine which was operated as a concession. The court said:

"As the defendants were holding a public exhibition in this park, and inviting visitors thereto, it was their duty to render it a reasonably safe place for all persons who might lawfully be there in attendance. * * * Whether it [the machine] was dangerous or not depended upon its construction, and the manner in which it was used. These were questions of fact, or at least mixed questions of law and fact, which could not properly have been decided by the court."

In Schmidt v. Bauer, 80 Cal. 565, 22 Pac. 256, 5 L. R. A. 580, the injured party entered a saloon conducted by the defendant, and, mistaking one door for another, fell into a cellar, as a result of which he was injured. We quote:

"The appellant also contends that the court below erred in overruling his demurrer to the complaint. We think the complaint was sufficient. It alleges that the plaintiff was at the place where the accident occurred to do business with and at the invitation of the defendant. This was sufficient to show the duty on the part of the defendant, as between the parties, of keeping the premises in safe condition."

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that, in the light of these authorities, the complaint alleged facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Even if it be true, as respondent insists, that there was no duty, as matter of law, resting upon it to provide separate thoroughfares for vehicles and pedestrians, there was a duty imposed upon respondent to use ordinary care to keep its grounds, including the thoroughfares, in a safe condition for its invitees, and the complaint alleged that respondent was under this duty. The complaint does not limit the violation of the duty to the failure to provide separate thoroughfares for pedestrians and electric cars. The granting of the concession, the granting of permission to operate it, the granting of permission to the vehicle company to operate its cars, and the granting of permission to it to allow persons unskilled in the operation of the cars to operate them upon the grounds among the pedestrians are all alleged to constitute negligence. As was held in Whyte v. Idora Park Co., supra, and the other cases we have quoted, the fact that the injury was inflicted by a concessionaire, and not by the proprietor, would not relieve the latter of responsibility for the negligent acts which resulted in the injury, and, as was declared in Thornton v. Maine State Agricultural Society, supra, it was the company's duty to use reasonable care "both in the original letting of space, and in the subsequent inspection and supervision" of the concession. It requires no citation of authority to support the proposition that whether or not acts were committed which would constitute a breach of duty was a question of fact for the jury. It thus appears that facts sufficient to state a cause of action were alleged.

[3] In support of respondent's contention that it is not liable in any event for appellant's injuries, for the reason that it was a bailor of an electric car, many authorities are cited to the effect that a bailor of a machine is not liable for injuries caused through its use by a bailee. However, these authorities are not in point for the reason that they relate to the ordinary case of bailment of a machine with a resulting injury to a third person, a stranger. In this case it was alleged that the bailor was under the duty to use ordinary care to protect appellant from injury. It may well have been, and it was so alleged in the complaint, that the mere fact of giving the machine to the bailee for operation among pedestrians was an act of negligence and a breach of the duty.

[4] It was further alleged that the cars were dangerous appliances when in the hands of one unskilled in their management; that respondent and the vehicle company knew this; that respondent negligently intrusted one of them to an unskilled person; and that by reason of his ignorance the accident in question resulted. With these allegations, whether or not the car was a dangerous machine became a question for the jury to decide. Selinas v. Vermont State Agricultural Society, supra. If it were found to be a dangerous machine, respondent would be liable, for in Long v. John Breuner Co., 36 Cal. App. 630, 634, 172 Pac. 1132, 1133, the court declared to be correct instructions by the trial court to the effect that—

"The defendant being engaged in conducting a merchandise store which it invited the public to patronize, the duty rested upon it to keep the entrances and passageways to and from the premises as so occupied and used by it in a safe condition; * * * that 'if you find that said entrance or passageway (the entrance or passageway where the plaintiff here was injured) was in an unsafe or dangerous condition, and that such condition was the proximate cause of said injuries to plaintiff, defendant is liable therefor if its managers, officers, or agents knew of such alleged unsafe or dangerous condition, or if, as careful and prudent men, they should have known it, provided that plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care.'"

This conclusion also disposes of respondent's contention that, "so long as the exposition company might lawfully allow automobiles and other vehicles to enter its grounds and be driven therein, it must follow that the negligence of the driver of such vehicle cannot be imputed to it unless some relation of principal and agent be shown"; for, if it were shown that respondent knew of such alleged dangerous character of the car, he would be liable for injury resulting to appellant, an invitee, from its operation.

The complaint having alleged that a duty was owing to appellant by respondent, that there was a breach thereof, and that the injury was the result of this negligence, it was sufficient.

Judgment reversed.

BALTHASAR et al. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (L. A. 6563-6565.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 7, 1921.)

1. Statutes $\S$ 233—Under rule that general words will not include government, certain sections of Motor Vehicle Act held not applicable to fire or police apparatus.

Under the rule that general words of a statute will not be construed to include the government or its agencies so as to impair sovereign power, unless expressly included by name or unless that construction be clear and indisputable, the general rules of the road imposing restrictions as to speed and the turning of corners contained in Motor Vehicle Act 1917, $\S$ 20g and 22a, do not apply to fire or police apparatus.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 705(1)—Right of way of fire apparatus dependent on due regard to safety of public only so far as due regard affects persons required to yield.

Motor Vehicle Act 1917, $\S$ 20m, and the ordinance of Pasadena make right of way of fire apparatus over other vehicles dependent on "due regard to the safety of the public" only so far as such "due regard" affects the person required to yield the right of way; notice to such person and a reasonable opportunity to yield being necessary to charge him with the obligation.

3. Street railroads $\S$ 118(8)—Instructions on right of way of fire truck over tracks held sufficient.

Instructions in action against street railway company for injury to employees on fire truck from collision between truck and street car held to sufficiently condition the truck's right of way on due regard of its driver to the safety of those in the car.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis M. Myers, Judge.

Consolidated action by O. B. Balthasar and another against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and E. E. Morris, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James H. Howard and Rhodes & Howard, all of Los Angeles, and F. C. Dunham, of Pasadena, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. On the 8th day of February, 1919, a collision occurred between a motor-truck belonging to the fire department of the city of Pasadena responding to a fire alarm from North Fair Oaks avenue and an electric railway train operated by the defendant corporation. The motortruck was moving east on Bellefontaine street, which terminated in Fair Oaks avenue, and turned north on Fair Oaks avenue without passing to the south of the intersection of the medial lines of Bellefontaine and Fair Oaks avenue, colliding with a south-bound train of the defendant, before the turn was completed. Charles Carlson and O. B. Balthasar were riding on the rear running board of the motortruck. The former was killed and the latter injured as a result of the collision. The city of Pasadena, having paid an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission for the injuries of Balthasar and the death of Carlson, brought suits on behalf of Balthasar and the widow of Carlson to recover the damages sustained by them, respectively, and on its own behalf to recover damages sustained by reason of the injury to the motortruck. These three cases were consolidated for trial, and verdicts were rendered in favor of the plaintiffs in each case. The defendant railway company appeals from the judgment upon said verdicts. It is conceded by the appellant that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the jury's verdict holding the defendant company negligent in the operation of its cars at an excessive speed, but contends that the plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence, and that the court erroneously instructed the jury on that subject. These contentions require consideration of the meaning and effect of the ordinance of the city of Pasadena relating to the right of way for fire apparatus responding to a fire call and to the provisions of the state Motor Vehicle Act upon that subject. Appellant claims that the driver of the motor vehicle violated the law in two respects: First, in cutting a corner in violation of section 20 (g) of the Motor Vehicle Act (Statutes 1917, p. 382); and second, in driving at a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour in approaching Fair Oaks avenue, and in approaching the railroad tracks of the defendant company, in violation, it is claimed, of section 22 (a) of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1917 (Statutes 1917, pp. 382, 404), supra. The provisions of the statute relied upon by the appellant are as follows:

"Sec. 20 (g). All vehicles approaching an intersection of a public highway, with the intention of turning thereat, * * * in turning to the left shall run beyond the center of such intersection, passing to the right thereof, before turning such vehicle toward the left. For the purposes of this subdivision the 'center of such intersection' shall be held to mean the meeting point of the medial lines of the two highways traversed by the vehicle making the turn."

"(m). Police patrol wagons, police ambulances, fire patrols, fire engines and fire apparatus in all cases while being operated as such, shall have right of way with due regard to the safety of the public; but this provision shall not protect the driver or operator of any such vehicle or his employer or principal from the consequence of the arbitrary exercise of this right or for injuries willfully inflicted."

"Sec. 22 (a). * * * Provided, further, that no person shall operate or drive a motor vehicle or other vehicle on any public highway at a greater rate of speed than fifteen miles an hour in approaching any steam, electric or other railway crossing at grade, or in approaching or traversing an intersecting highway, or crossing or intersection of highways, or in approaching or going around corners or curves in the highway, when in any of the foregoing cases the operator's or chauffeur's view of the road or railway traffic is obstructed, but anything to the contrary herein notwithstanding, no person shall operate or drive a motor vehicle or other vehicle on any public highway at a greater rate of speed than fifteen miles an hour in traversing any steam, electric or other railway crossing at grade; * * *"

The provisions of the ordinance (No. 1346) of the city of Pasadena involved in a consideration of the questions herein are as follows:

"Sec. 32. The officers and firemen of the fire department and their apparatus of all kinds, when going to or on duty at, or returning from a fire, and all ambulances, whether of public or private character, and all other vehicles, when employed in carrying sick or injured persons to hospitals or other places for relief or treatment, and the officers and policemen and vehicles of the police department shall have the right of way over all other persons and vehicles on any street, and through any procession, except over vehicles carrying the United States mail.

"Sec. 33. It shall be unlawful for the driver of any vehicle or the motorman of any street car in or upon any street in the city of Pasadena, or for any person standing or walking in any such street, to fail, refuse or neglect to allow the right of way to any officer or fireman, or apparatus of the fire department, when the same is going to or on duty at, or returning from a fire, or to any ambulance, whether of public or private character, or to any other vehicle, when such vehicle is employed in carrying a sick or injured person to a hospital or other place for relief or treatment.

"Sec. 34. Upon the approach of any apparatus of the fire department or any police patrol wagon, or any ambulance, the driver of any vehicle or street car, in or upon any street shall immediately stop such vehicle as near as possible to the right hand curb of such street, and it shall be unlawful for any such driver to cause or permit such vehicle to be moved until such apparatus, police patrol wagon or ambulance shall have passed such vehicle."

[4] The first question for consideration is whether the general restrictions as to speed and turning of corners applicable to vehicular traffic contained in the Motor Vehicle Act apply to fire apparatus responding to a fire alarm. Such apparatus is operated by the municipality in the exercise of its governmental functions.

It must be conceded that the language of the Motor Vehicle Act in fixing speed limits, and regulating the use of public streets, is broad enough to apply to a motor fire truck responding to a fire alarm. But a familiar and fundamental rule of construction requires that this general language shall not be construed to apply to the government or its agencies unless expressly included by name. The general rule is stated by Blackstone as follows:

"I shall only further remark that the king is not bound by any act of Parliament unless he be named therein by special and particular words. The most general words that can be devised (any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, etc.) affect him not in the least, if they may tend to restrain or diminish any of his rights or interests." Blackstone's Commentaries, book 1, p. 261.

Chancellor Kent states the rule as follows:

"It is likewise a general rule, in the interpretation of statutes limiting rights and interests, not to construe them to embrace the sovereign power or government, unless the same be expressly named therein, or intended by necessary implication." Kent's Commentaries, p. 460.

Associate Justice Story of the Supreme Court of the United States, sitting in the First circuit in the case of U. S. v. Samuel Hoar, 2 Mason, 311, Fed. Cas. No. 15,373, stated the rule as follows:

"Now, I think, it may be laid down as a safe proposition, that no statute of limitations has been held to apply to actions brought by the Crown, unless there has been an express provision including it. For it is said, that, where a statute is general, and thereby any prerogative, right, title, or interest is divested or taken from the king, in such case the king shall not be bound, unless the statute is made by express words to extend to him. * * * And though this is sometimes called a prerogative right, it is in fact nothing more than a reservation, or exception, introduced for the public benefit, and equally applicable to all governments. * * *

"But, independently of any doctrine founded on the notion of prerogative, the same construction of statutes of this sort ought to prevail, founded upon the legislative intention. Where the government is not expressly or by necessary implication included, it ought to be clear from the nature of the mischiefs to be redressed, or the language used, that the government itself was in contemplation of the Legislature, before a court of law would be authorized to put such an interpretation upon any statute. In general, acts of the Legislature are meant to regulate and direct the acts and rights of citizens; and in most cases the reasoning applicable to them applies with very different, and often contrary force to the government itself. It appears to me, therefore, to be a safe rule founded in the principles of the common law that the general words of a statute ought not to include the government, or affect its rights, unless that construction be clear and indisputable upon the text of the act. * * *

This rule has been frequently applied in this state. Most recently in the case of Irlarry v. City of San Diego, 189 Pac. 1041, wherein it is held that a debt due from a municipality cannot be garnisheed in a suit by a private party, even though the debt was incurred by the city acting in its proprietary capacity, and in Engebretson v. City of San Diego, 197 Pac. 651, following San Francisco, etc., v. City and County of San Francisco, 131 Cal. 356, 63 Pac. 665, holding that general provisions in regard to interest do not apply to municipalities, and in Slayden v. O'Dea, 182 Cal. 500, 505, 189 Pac. 1066. In Berton v. All Persons, 176 Cal. 610, 616, 617, 170 Pac. 151, it was held that the general language of the McEnerney Act does not apply to a city, although, a judgment in such a case is expressly made "binding on the whole world." The language of that case is so appropriate to the discussion that we quote the following therefrom:

"It is apparent, therefore, that the binding and conclusive force of the earlier judgment as against the city and county of San Francisco must come, if it exists at all, from the fact that a judgment under the McEnerney Act, valid on its face, is a judgment in rem and so 'binding on the whole world,' unless and until set aside under familiar equitable principles.

"That the judgment here offered is valid upon its face cannot be disputed. As little may it be questioned but that such a judgment is conclusive upon all private rights and so is conclusive against all the rights of private persons, individuals, associations, and corporations whether in the judgment named or unnamed. Thus beyond question this previous judgment was binding upon all the private litigants in the present action.

"It is to be considered, however, what may be its binding force and effect upon the state itself and upon the state's public agencies and mandatories such as for some purposes municipal corporations always are. In brief, our inquiry is: What was the effect of this previous judgment upon the city and county of San Francisco present and objecting to its introduction as an estoppel against its own claim? Law is a rule of conduct dictated by the superior, the state, for the conduct and control of its people. It is only by its own grace that the state ever becomes subject to the operation of its own laws, and while in later governmental development the state frequently makes declaration that it will submit its own rights to determination in its own or other courts, yet, as such declarations are always in the nature of impairments of the sovereign power, this submission of the state is never inferred in favor of the private litigant, but must be found either actually expressed in an act or by fair intentment and interpretation to belong in the act. It is unnecessary to cite illustrations of this. They are too familiar. Suffice it to refer to the fact that title by adverse possession as against the state can only be secured under such permissive law. The Mechanic's Lien Law of universality in its operation does not apply to the land and buildings of the state.

"A reading of the McEnerney Act discloses not only a failure by the state to declare itself bound by decrees so obtained, but makes manifest that the statute was dealing only with the private rights of private persons. Giving to 'persons' its broad and indubitable meaning, the statute was dealing with the private rights of individuals, associations, copartnerships, and corporations other than public agencies acting in their public capacity. A sovereign state is not a person."

Indeed, the rule has been so frequently applied in this state that we refrain from further comment on the cases, reference to which we now make. Whittaker v. County of Tuolumne, 96 Cal. 100, 30 Pac. 1016; Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. County of Sacramento, 134 Cal. 477, 480, 66 Pac. 668; Ruperich v. Baehr, 142 Cal. 190, 192, 75 Pac. 782; People v. San Joaquin Valley, etc., Association, 151 Cal. 797, 806, 91 Pac. 740, and cases cited therein; People v. Cal. Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 592, 138 Pac. 79; Westinghouse Electric Co. v. Chambers, 169 Cal. 131, 139, 145 Pac. 1025. This rule applicable to the interpretation of statutes is broad enough to cover municipal employees. As was aptly said in Ruperich v. Baehr, supra, concerning the garnishment of salaries of employees:

"The state and its subordinate bodies perform their governmental functions through their officers and employees elected or appointed for that purpose. Therefore any process of law which would tend to embarrass such officers or employees while in office, and hinder or distract them in the discharge of official duty, would injuriously affect the capacity of the state to perform its functions as much as, if not more than, the annoyance of having its funds subjected to garnishee process."

It follows that the general rules of the road relating to speed and to the turning of corners contained in the Motor Vehicle Act do not apply to fire or police apparatus. We have only to consider the utter absurdity of requiring peace officers to observe the arbitrary speed limits fixed by the Motor Vehicle Act when pursuing criminals, who may be fleeing in high-power cars at twice the legal limit, to make manifest that the Legislature did not have in view such a limitation on peace officers. And it is equally clear that they did not contemplate retarding the speed of fire apparatus in going to a fire.

The Court of Appeals of New York, in Farley v. Mayor, etc., 152 N. Y. 222, 46 N. E. 506, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, held that the general language of section 1932 of the Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, c. 410, p. 470), prohibiting "any person" from driving any horse through any street "within the city of New York with greater speed than at the rate of five miles per hour" did not apply to fire apparatus going to a fire. The court merely observed that—

"It is manifest that section 1932 of the Consolidation Act can have no application to the speed at which engines or hose carts connected with the fire department shall be driven when going to a fire. * * * Section 1932 was intended to regulate the speed of horses traveling on the streets and using them for the ordinary purposes of travel, and from the nature of the exigency cannot apply to the speed of vehicles of the fire department on their way to fires."

See, also, Oklahoma Ry. Co. v. Thomas, 63 Okl. 219, 164 Pac. 120, L. R. A. 1917E, 405.

In some cases it has been held that either an implied exception must be read into local ordinances regulating speed in favor of the fire department or that the ordinance must be declared to that extent unreasonable and void. State v. Sheppard, 64 Minn. 287, 67 N. W. 62, 36 L. R. A. 305; City of Kansas City v. McDonald, 60 Kan. 481, 57 Pac. 123, 45 L. R. A. 429. For the reasons above stated it is clear that the exception is implied, and that it is unnecessary to rely upon the doctrine that unreasonable ordinances are void, and that these cases, in so far as they so hold, support our conclusion as to the proper construction of our Motor Vehicle Act.

There is nothing in the cases cited by appellant opposed to our view as to the proper construction of our statute. These cases are People v. Little, 86 Mich. 125, 48 N. W. 693, a case involving the right of way of a private ambulance; Knox v. North Jersey St. Ry. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 347, 57 Atl. 423, 1 Ann. Cas. 164, involving the application of the common law to a collision with fire apparatus; Woods v. Public Service Co., 84 N. J. Law, 171, 85 Atl. 1016, involving the effect of a statute giving a right of way to fire apparatus; Morse v. Sweeney, 15 Ill. App. 486, involving the construction of an ordinance expressly applying to fire apparatus; Greenwood v. Phila., W. & Balt. R. R. Co., 124 Pa.

572, 17 Atl. 188, 3 L. R. A. 44, 10 Am. St. Rep. 614, involving a collision between a railway train at a railroad crossing and a fire engine; Garrity v. Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 112 Mich. 369, 70 N. W. 1018, 37 L. R. A. 529, involving a consideration of the duty of a driver of a fire truck having the right of way by ordinance in approaching and crossing a street car track, and Birmingham Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Baker, 126 Ala. 135, 28 South. 87, to the same effect; also Indianapolis T. & T. Co. v. Hensley (Ind.) 105 N. E. 474, and Coles v. N. O. Ry. & Lt. Co., 133 La. 915, 63 South. 401, relating to right of way at crossings of street cars and street intersections.

[2] Raving concluded that the speed limit and rules as to turning at corners do not apply to fire apparatus responding to an alarm, the next question is as to the effect of the statute and ordinance granting a right of way. It is evident that these provisions, under our view, are inserted to direct and control the operators of other vehicles upon the highway. At common law it is said no right of way was granted to fire apparatus (Knox v. N. J. St. Ry. Co., 70 N. J. Law, 347, 57 Atl. 423, 1 Ann. Cas. 164); hence the necessity of statutory rules requiring the yielding of such right of way, and such provisions are to be construed in the light of this situation.

Before further considering this subject, it should be stated that the trial court instructed the jury that the driver of the fire truck was required to exercise reasonable care. The instructions on this subject are quite as favorable as the defendant was entitled to. Instructions 23, 24, 25, and 29 were given at the request of the defendant, as follows:

"(23) Due regard to the safety of the public, required of those operating a fire truck on the public streets, means the exercise of reasonable care by them for the public safety. If the truck be driven at a higher speed than is lawful, or in a manner that is unusual to vehicles, such as cutting the corner, or on the left-hand side of the street, such unusual conduct must be accompanied by a commensurate degree of care on the part of those engaged in propelling the truck so that at all times due regard may be had to the public safety. If unusual or extraordinary care is thus reasonably necessary, it must be given; and the omission thereof will constitute negligence.

"(24) The law requires that any person operating or driving a motor vehicle (and this includes a fire truck) on the public highways shall operate or drive same in a careful and prudent manner, and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and that no person shall operate or drive such motor vehicle on a public highway at such rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person, or the safety of any property. A violation of this law would constitute negligence.

"(25) No right of way exists in case of fire patrols, fire engines, or fire apparatus while being operated as such, which is superior to due regard for the safety of the public; their right of way in operation on public streets must be exercised with due regard to the public safety. This means as much the safety of that portion of the public in street cars or electric cars as that portion of the public otherwise lawfully on or using the streets."

"(29) Defendant's motorman, in operating its car, was required to use only the care and caution which an ordinarily prudent and careful man would have exercised under similar circumstances, and if you find from the evidence that said motorman used such care and caution, then you cannot find defendant railway company negligent in respect to anything done by the said motorman."

These instructions certainly made the plaintiffs' right of way dependent upon a "due regard to the safety of the public."

It is evident that the right of way of fire apparatus over other vehicles is dependent upon "due regard to the safety of the public" only in so far as such "due regard" affects the person required to yield the right of way. Notice to the person required to yield the right of way is essential, and a reasonable opportunity to stop or otherwise yield the right of way necessary in order to charge a person with the obligation fixed by law to give precedence to the fire apparatus. This seems to have been the view of the trial court, for it instructed the jury as follows:

"(5) If you believe from the evidence that the motorman of defendant's car failed, refused, and neglected to allow the right of way to apparatus of the fire department of the city of Pasadena, when said fire apparatus was going to a fire, and that such motorman knew, or in the exercise of ordinary prudence should have known of the approach of such fire apparatus, in time to have allowed said right of way, and that by reason of such failure, refusal, and neglect to allow said right of way and as a proximate result thereof one of the plaintiffs was struck, injured, or killed or suffered property damages without negligence on his or its part contributing to such injury, death, or damage, then you will find for that plaintiff." (Italics ours.)

[3] The appellant complains that its instruction No. 35, defining the ordinary care required of the occupants of the fire truck, was modified by the court by adding the portion in italics as follows:

"Under all the circumstances of the case including the circumstances above mentioned and including also the circumstance that they were entitled by law to the right of way."

Appellant's point is that the right of way is contingent upon the exercise of due care on the part of the driver of the fire truck. This instruction, as modified, taken in connection with instruction 25, above quoted, is as favorable as defendant was entitled to.

It should be stated that no question is raised in the briefs as to the relative authority of the state and city over the control of fire apparatus in the public streets of a chartered city (Ex parte Daniels, 192 Pac. 442), and hence we have not discussed that question.

Appellant, in its reply brief, calls attention to the amendment of the Motor Vehicle Act by the Legislature of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 218), whereby the Legislature declares that the right of way therein accorded shall not be "construed as permitting the violation by the operators of any such vehicles of any of the provisions of section twenty-two of this act," etc., and suggests that this points to the proper construction of the law in force in 1917. We cannot agree with this contention.

Under this view of the law and the facts, it is unnecessary to discuss appellant's points, based upon the claim that the defense of contributory negligence is available against the city, even if not so available against the injured persons.

Judgment affirmed.

LEHNER v. McLENNAN et al. (Civ. 3396.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Oct. 7, 1921.)

1. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 35—Conclusions held surplusage to be disregarded.

Where plaintiff, seeking to recover for fumigation of defendant's orchard, pleaded under the common counts, a statement that defendant agreed to pay for the work and labor "upon a specific contract," if stating a conclusion as to the contract, was surplusage which might be disregarded.

2. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 205(2)—Allegations as to indebtedness on contract held not subject to general demurrer as pleading conclusions.

A complainant, seeking to recover for fumigation of defendant's orchard, which pleaded the common counts with an allegation that defendant agreed to pay for plaintiff's work and labor "upon a specific contract," was not subject to general demurrer as pleading a conclusion.

3. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1050(1)—Error in admitting evidence held harmless, in view of similar evidence admitted without objection.

In an action for fumigating defendant's orchard in which defendant claimed damages to the orchard, any error in permitting a witness to be asked whether as far as he observed the men were using care and doing the job efficiently was not prejudicial, where the same witness had been allowed, without objection, to answer whether in his judgment the work was done in a careful and prudent manner.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Action by Oscar Lehner against Sue A. McLennan and another. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William H. Wylie and A. J. Morganstern, both of San Diego, for appellants.

L. N. Turrentine, of Escondido, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Plaintiff sued defendants upon a contract for the fumigation of their orchard. Defendants cross-complained for damages to their trees and fruit because of the alleged negligence of plaintiff in his performance of the agreement to fumigate. Judgment went for plaintiff upon both controversies, and defendants appeal.

Appellants' first contention is that the complaint is insufficient, as tested by the demurrer which was interposed to it and which was overruled. The text of the complaint is:

"That within the two years last past, and on or about October 7, 1918, the defendant Sue A. McLennan became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $316.50 for work and labor performed at her special instance and request, and materials furnished with said work and labor, and that said defendant Sue A. McLennan expressly agreed to pay said sum of $316.50 for said work and labor upon a specific contract to do said work and labor, at said agreed price."

The demurrer to this pleading was both general and special, the specific grounds being that the complaint is uncertain and ambiguous, in that the terms of the alleged contract cannot be ascertained from it.

[1, 2] In making their point appellants direct attention to the allegation that defendant Sue A. McLennan agreed to pay for respondent's work and labor "upon a specific contract." They contend that this averment states but a conclusion of law, and that it makes the assailed pleading obnoxious to the demurrer. Up to the point where the language mentioned is used, the complaint is a fair example of pleading under the common counts, and the clause to which objection is taken may be regarded, very properly, as surplusage. Even, however, if it were not so viewed, it does not render the complaint demurrable on special grounds as stating a conclusion of law, for the common counts, as ordinarily couched, present in their entirety nothing more than a succession of conclusions. After stating the well-settled rule that a "common count" is not subject to general demurrer, the Supreme Court said, in Pike v. Zadig, 171 Cal. 273, 152 Pac. 923:

"There have been intimations in this court that such a pleading, although not obnoxious to general demurrer, might fall before a special demurrer on the ground of uncertainty. We think, however, that there is no force in this suggestion. If there be any objection to the common count, it is that the pleading states conclusions of law instead of setting forth the facts upon which the plaintiff relies. The real ground of objection, therefore, is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. But, as we have seen, this objection is not maintainable."

See, also, Camp v. Boyd, 41 Cal. App. 83, 182 Pac. 60. The demurrer was correctly overruled.

Appellants' next point is that the evidence was insufficient to support the trial court's finding as to the amount due respondent; but, without reciting any considerable portion of it, we are satisfied that the evidence on the question was ample. It is enough to say that, in addition to the witnesses called for respondent, appellant Sue A. McLennan herself testified that the only reason she failed to pay respondent's claim was because of the alleged injuries to her trees. From this statement and from others made by her it is evident that there was no doubt in her mind as to the correctness of the amount of respondent's bill.

Under the claim for damages made in their cross-complaint appellants contend that respondent was in exclusive control of the orchard while the work of fumigation was going on, and that therefore the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to the case. Respondent disputes this contention, but he insists, also, that if the controversy is to be governed by that rule he still is not liable to appellants. We find it necessary to concern ourselves only with this latter point. As defining the rule res ipsa loquitur appellants refer to Duran v. Yellow Aster Min. Co., 40 Cal. App. 633, 181 Pac. 395, and to Bourguignon v. Peninsular Ry. Co., 40 Cal. App. 689, 181 Pac. 669. In the opinion in the first of these cases it is said that—

"When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence in the absence of explanation by the defendant that the accident arose from a want of care."

Taking this statement as our guide, and considering, as well, what is decided in the second case cited by appellant, we have no doubt that the evidence adduced by the cross-defendant was of such a character that the trial court might very well have concluded that the damage to appellants' trees, if there was any such damage, was sufficiently explained. The men who did the work testified as to the proper technique in the performance of such services, and as to the manner in which this particular job was done by them, as did also their manager. Several experts testified, too, that damages of the nature claimed by appellants to have been caused their orchard will often occur where a fumigating job is conducted in the best possible manner, and that there is no satisfactory way of accounting for damages resulting in such cases. We are convinced that the trial court was amply justified in finding that the damage to appellants' trees, if any, was not occasioned by the negligence of respondent.

[3] One of the expert witnesses was asked, "As far as you observed, were all these men using good care and doing the job in an efficient manner?" Upon objection the court ruled that the question was proper to be addressed to an expert, and it is contended that the ruling was erroneous. If it be admitted, which we do not decide, that the court was in error in this ruling, the action was not prejudicial. Before the question to which exception was taken was put to him, the same expert witness had been allowed, without objection, to answer this question: "In your judgment was it [the fumigation] done in a careful and prudent manner?"

WORKS, J. This is an action to quiet title. Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiffs.

Appellant, appearing in her own behalf, presents a brief which, although most excellent in the language employed in its composition, makes no point raising even a momentary doubt whether the judgment should be affirmed. In fact, after stating that she "has not sufficient funds to bear the expense of employment of skilled counsel"—a situation which naturally enlists our great sympathy—appellant says that "this brief must therefore make its appeal more in the nature of a human document than by an exposition of legal talent." We cannot aid appellant, sympathize with her unfortunate situation as deeply as we may. A judgment of a trial court must stand as a finality unless it be made to appear by the party prosecuting an appeal from it that some error has occurred in the proceedings leading to its rendition.

PEOPLE v. GAYS. (Cr. 766.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 6, 1921.)

1. Homicide ⇨296—Evidence warranting refusal of instruction that officers arresting defendant had no probable cause to believe he had committed felony.

On a trial for the murder of a deputy marshal, attempting to arrest defendant when found in an unlighted automobile shortly after a burglary had been committed, evidence held to warrant the court in refusing to charge that, as matter of law, the marshal had no probable cause to believe, nor reasonable ground for suspicion, that a felony had been committed by defendant, within Pen. Code, § 836, subd. 3, relative to arrests without warrant.

2. Homicide ⇨296—Evidence of statements of deceased, received without objection, properly considered in passing on propriety of requested instruction.

On a trial for the murder of a deputy marshal attempting to arrest defendant, where the marshal's statements to his superior officer and a constable, while in the immediate discharge of his duty as an officer in the investigation of a burglary and search for an automobile which had been seen on the street without lights, were admitted without objection, the court could consider them in passing on a requested instruction that, as matter of law, the officers had no reasonable ground to believe, etc., that defendant had committed a felony.

3. Criminal law ⇨475—Opinion of surgeon as to position of deceased and defendant when shot fired properly excluded because jury could determine such question.

Where the county autopsy surgeon, besides testifying concerning the course of a bullet, in technical language, illustrated its course, and there was much other evidence from which the jury could have determined the relative positions of defendant and deceased when the shot was fired, the opinion of another surgeon as to their position in order to cause a wound of the character described by the autopsy surgeon was properly excluded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Dominico Gays, alias Dominico Gaiys, was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest M. Torchia, of Los Angeles, and Charles Matthews, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of murder in the first degree, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The victim of appellant was a deputy marshal of Burbank. That officer informed his superior, the marshal, at about 12 o'clock at night, that he had seen a large automobile running through the streets of the little town without lights. This was at a time when the officers were on the lookout for the perpetrators of a burglary, a place of business in the town recently having been entered. The deceased, acting under instructions from his superior, enlisted the aid of a constable in his search for the car, and the two finally located it and came up to it. According to the graphic story of the constable, who was himself severely wounded in the affray which followed, some conversation took place between the officers and the occupants of the car, during which the latter were commanded to put up their hands; whereupon the deputy went toward appellant, who was seated in the rear of the car, remarking, "Here is the man I want, right here." He then stepped on the running board of the car, pulled down appellant's left hand, and handcuffed it. With his disengaged hand, and by means of a weapon taken from some hiding place in the car, appellant then shot the deputy marshal to death.

[1,2] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that—

"The evidence shows as a matter of law that the officers had not probable cause to believe, nor reasonable ground for suspicion, that a felony had been committed by the defendant."

In presenting this instruction to the trial court we assume, although counsel do not quite say so in their brief, that it was the defendant's theory, having the alleged burglary in mind, that the officers had no right to arrest defendant without a warrant, unless they had reasonable cause for believing that he had committed a felony. Pen. Code, § 836, subd. 3. Following this premise counsel must also believe—their brief, however, not disclosing such a view—that the degree of appellant's crime was lessened, or that he was altogether guiltless of crime, if the officers were engaged in an attempt, at the time of the shooting, to encompass his arrest unlawfully. Passing this latter point as being unnecessary to decide we take up the question whether the facts developed at the trial were such that it became the duty of the court to instruct the jury in accordance with defendant's request. Counsel contend that there is nothing in the record tending to show that the officers had reasonable cause to believe, nor reasonable ground for suspicion, that appellant had committed a felony, and that, perforce, the court was bound to give the requested instruction. But counsel's statement as to the condition of the record cannot be justified. The evidence shows that a burglary had been committed in Burbank shortly before the shooting of the deputy marshal, although the time elapsing between the two events does not appear; that at the time of the shooting the deputy and the constable were engaged in an endeavor to apprehend the burglars, the deputy having pursued that labor alone for some time previously; that the deputy had reported to the marshal and had told the constable that a car was being driven about the town without lights; that the car in which appellant was when the arrest was attempted had no lights when first seen by the constable, and that, in effect, that car answered the description of the car mentioned by the deputy in his report to his superior and in what he told the constable; that the deputy said to the constable that the men in the car had been following him for about three hours, and had been keeping track of him, and that he had once tried to stop the car, but that it had driven on; that, just before the car was finally overhauled and the arrest attempted, the constable saw appellant out of the car, standing at a street intersection, and that he started to run when he saw the constable approaching; that the constable then called out to the deputy, "Their watchman is on the next corner"; that before attempting to arrest appellant the deputy exclaimed, "Here is the man I want, right here;" that at the time of the attempted arrest, and probably during the entire period through which the car and its occupants were under observation by him, the deputy wore on the outside of his coat a gold-plated police badge, the identical object being exhibited to the trial court; that he carried a police billy in his hand, and that therefore the occupants of the car knew, while they were "keeping track of him," and when they refused to stop at his summons, that they were dealing with a peace officer; and that appellant's assault upon the deputy followed immediately upon the attempted arrest of the former; that it was relentless, bloodthirsty, and murderous, and of a character not likely to have been resorted to except under a fear of serious consequences to follow upon the arrest.

Under these circumstances we are convinced that the court was justified in refusing to give the requested instruction. It will be observed that, in the above statement of the evidence bearing on this question, we have referred several times to matters which were communicated by the deputy to his superior and to the constable. The lips of the deputy were sealed in death simultaneously with his attempt to arrest appellant, and it can never be known what particular reason he had, beyond what the foregoing recital discloses, for believing that the occupants of the car, and appellant particularly, were guilty of the burglary. Up to the time when he called upon the constable to assist him, he was endeavoring alone to unravel that mystery, and what he had discovered no man may know. Notwithstanding the fact that his statements were not made under oath, they were made in and about the immediate discharge of his duty as an officer; they are in the record without objection, and the court may well have considered them in passing upon the requested instruction. If, however, this position were not warranted, there is yet enough in the record to justify the court's action. The fact that appellant ran when seen at the street intersection by the constable, the fact that he knew he was dealing with peace officers, the character of his attack upon the deputy, and the fact that the constable himself was seriously wounded either by appellant or by another member of his party, probably the latter—all these speak volumes upon the question we now consider. The court committed no error in refusing the instruction.

In passing upon this point we have not found it necessary to determine whether the officers had the right to arrest appellant, seated, as he was, in the rear seat of the car, and not driving it, for an offense committed in their presence (Pen. Code, § 836, subd. 1), because of the fact that the car occupied by the men at the time was on a public highway without lights (State Motor Vehicle Act, as amended, section 13, Stats. 1919, p. 206, Deering's 1917-1919 Supp. to Gen. Laws, p. 1493; section 32, Stats. 1919, p. 225, Deering's Supp. p. 1512). The question naturally suggests itself.

[3] While on the witness stand for the prosecution the county autopsy surgeon testified to a result of his examination of the body of the deceased deputy marshal as follows:

"One bullet entered his back three inches below the right armpit and two inches internal to the external axillary line. This bullet penetrated the right lung, glanced upward at an angle of about 15 degrees, penetrating the superior vena cava of the left lung, struck the upper part of the chest cavity, and I found the bullet lying loose in the left pleural cavity."

As a part of appellant's defense, with a surgeon on the stand, the above answer of the autopsy surgeon was read to the witness, and he was asked:

"Now, Doctor, from that description of the wound, what is your opinion as to the different position—that is, the position of the person who was wounded and the person who fired the shot, what it must have been at the time in order to cause a wound of that character?"

The question was objected to on the ground that it was not a question for expert testimony. The objection was sustained, and the ruling is assigned as error. If the question was one proper to be addressed to an expert, a point concerning which we express no opinion, it was so merely because of the technical language of the autopsy surgeon, for, if the jury had before them a description of the course of the bullet in ordinary lay language, they could have determined from that description and from the other evidence in the case bearing on the subject—and there was much of it—what the relative positions of the two men were when the shot was fired. And they did have such a description from the autopsy surgeon himself on his cross-examination by appellant's counsel. On that examination he responded fully to this question:

"Now, Doctor, will you please illustrate by using Mr. Matthews as a subject, associated with me, * * * and illustrate just the course of those bullets; just the place where the bullets entered and where you found the bullets?"

The ruling of the court on the objection was therefore proper.

Three other points are made by appellant, but one of them is answered in what we have said concerning the question we have first considered above, and the other two do not merit a specific consideration.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CASANOVA. (Cr. 801.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 5, 1921.)

1. Perjury $\Leftrightarrow$ 33(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for perjury, in which it was charged that defendant committed perjury in testifying, while being prosecuted for maintaining a hotel for purposes of prostitution, that she never knew of any room in her hotel having been rented for immoral purposes, evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction.

2. Perjury $\Leftrightarrow$ 34(1)—Degree of proof required.

The evidence is sufficient, in prosecution for perjury, if there is testimony of one witness to facts that are absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, corroborated by circumstances which, of themselves and independently of such directly inculpatory evidence, tend with a reasonable degree of certitude to show that the accused is guilty as charged.

3. Grand jury $\hookrightarrow$ 41—Examination of foreman of grand jury for purpose of impeaching indictment held improper.

In prosecution for perjury, in which it was charged that defendant had committed perjury during her trial for maintaining an assignation hotel, refusal to require the foreman of the grand jury by which indictment against defendant had been returned to testify as to the close political relationship between himself and the sheriff, against whom defendant had brought an action for malicious prosecution, for the purpose of showing that the prosecution was the outgrowth of a desire to aid the sheriff in his malicious prosecution action, held not error.

4. Indictment and information $\hookrightarrow$ 10—Indictment final when no method for review is provided by statute.

An indictment is a record of the action of a judicial body, and such action is final when no appeal therefrom, nor other method for reviewing it, is provided by the statute.

5. Grand jury $\hookrightarrow$ 41—Indictment cannot be impeached during trial by grand juror.

An indictment found to be a true bill by the grand jury and presented in open court as such cannot be impeached during the trial by a grand juror.

6. Perjury $\hookrightarrow$ 32(2)—Record in defendant's action against sheriff for malicious prosecution not admissible to show motive for prosecution for perjury.

In prosecution for perjury, the record in defendant's action against the sheriff for malicious prosecution was not admissible to show that the motive back of the prosecution for perjury was to aid the sheriff in defending the suit for malicious prosecution.

7. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 363(1)—Indictment cannot be impeached by showing of improper motive for its finding and presentment.

A party may show by proper evidence the hostility, bias, or interest of any witness called to testify against him; but an indictment cannot be impeached by showing an alleged improper motive for its finding and presentment.

8. Perjury $\hookrightarrow$ 32(8)—Testimony that defendant did not know hotel was used for immoral purposes before she was charged with maintaining disorderly house inadmissible.

In prosecution for perjury, in which it was charged that defendant had committed perjury by testifying, in prosecution for maintaining a hotel for immoral purposes, that she did not know that the hotel was being so used, testimony that witness had used hotel for such purpose with witness who had testified for the state, and that such witness for state had told witness that she did not want defendant to know of her immoral conduct at the hotel, held inadmissible, where matters so testified to occurred more than three months prior to the time when defendant was alleged to have maintained a disorderly house.

9. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 344(2)—Specific acts of immorality inadmissible to impeach witness.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, a witness can be impeached by testimony as to her immoral character, but not by specific acts.

10. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 347—One cannot be impeached by failure to testify as to certain facts before grand jury, in absence of showing that he was examined with reference thereto.

A witness cannot be impeached by his failure to have testified to certain facts before the grand jury, in the absence of a showing that he was examined as to such facts, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.

11. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 814(17)—Evidence held to warrant instruction on circumstantial evidence.

In prosecution for perjury, where it was claimed that no dependence was placed on circumstantial evidence warranting instruction thereon, evidence held to warrant giving of such instruction.

12. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 829(1)—Refusal of instructions covered by others given not error.

Refusal to give instructions covered by the given instructions was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Juanita Casanova was convicted of perjury. From a judgment of conviction, and an order denying a motion for new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Morganstern, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, of Los Angeles, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction upon an indictment charging her with perjury and from an order denying her a new trial. The perjury is alleged to have been committed by her in the course of her testimony on the trial of a criminal action wherein she was charged with maintaining a disorderly house for the purposes of assignation and prostitution.

At all the times mentioned herein defendant kept and maintained a hotel in the city of San Diego known as the New Mexico Hotel. On December 20, 1920, by a criminal complaint filed in the justice's court of the city of San Diego, it was charged that the defendant there, who is likewise the defendant and appellant here, did, on or about December 18, 1920, keep, conduct, and maintain said New Mexico Hotel for the purposes of assignation and prostitution, and did then and there rent a room therein, knowing that it was to be used for the purposes of assignation and prostitution. On the trial of that charge the defendant, after having been duly sworn as a witness, testified that she did not know of any room in her hotel ever being rented for immoral purposes or for purposes of assignation or immoral conduct. She was acquitted of the charge so referred against her in the justice's court, and shortly thereafter the grand jury for San Diego county indicted her for perjury, of which she was convicted. Hence this appeal.

It is contended that the evidence is not sufficient, in that the charge of perjury is not made out by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and the necessary corroboration required by the statute. Pen. Code, § 1103a. Two witnesses, Juan Garcia and Jennie Garcia, husband and wife, testified for the people. Jennie Garcia testified in substance as follows:

My husband and I occupied room 7 in the New Mexico Hotel for a week, commencing December 11, 1920. Mrs. Casanova, the defendant, was running the hotel. On the night of December 11, 1920, Mrs. Casanova told me that room 9 in the hotel was a room "just for the girls." One evening during the week that my husband and I were there, I heard Mrs. Casanova call Mrs. Lucille Roderiquez, who lived in a house near by. Mrs. Casanova told Mrs. Roderiquez to come over; that she had a man waiting there for her. Mrs. Roderiquez came over and went to room 9. A man went in the room with Mrs. Roderiquez. I did not notice how long they stayed. On another occasion during that week I saw Mrs. Roderiquez with another man in bed in room 9. On another occasion during the week between December 11th and 18th Mrs. Casanova "told me about what she had that room for, and that was that she had a room for the girls, and that she had that fixed up for the girls; if the policeman walked up, that she had the back door all ready, if the policeman was coming there to get the girls; that she had everything fixed up so the girls could go to the back way." She told me the room was "for the girls to do business in." She also said to me that the charge for the men doing business with the women there was $2, and that she was to have 50 cents out of the $2. Whenever the girls forgot to give her the 50 cents, she came and collected it; she would call the girls and say, "Why, listen, you owe me those 50 cents." During the time I was in the hotel, between December 11th and December 18th. I saw different men go into room 9 with Lucille Roderiquez. I don't remember how many, but different men, colored people, Mexicans, Americans, and Indians. While I was there I saw as many men visit the Rogers woman as I saw visit Mrs. Roderiquez. I saw the Rogers women with men in room 9. Mrs. Casanova told me that that room was used by these two women.

Juan Garcia, the husband of the former witness, testified in substance as follows:

While myself and wife were at the New Mexico Hotel during the week from December 11th to December 18th, men would sometimes come and ask Mrs. Casanova for girls and she sent them to room 9. The girls used to charge $2. Sometimes the men asked Mrs. Casanova how much the girls charged, and she says $2. After I would hear this talk between the men and Mrs. Casanova, the men went to room 9, sometimes.

This witness also testified that upon one occasion during his stay at the New Mexico

Hotel he saw a man in bed with the Roderiquez woman in room 9.

[1, 2] We think it clear that the testimony of these two witnesses was sufficient. Though Jennie Garcia and her husband were not together upon any of the occasions when either of them saw or heard the particular occurrences to which each of them testified, it was not necessary, as counsel for appellant seems to assume, that each witness should have seen precisely the same acts of immorality or have heard the same identical admissions that defendant made respecting her knowledge of the use that prostitutes made of room 9 in her hotel. On her trial in the justice's court defendant testified that she never knew of any room in her hotel ever having been rented for an immoral purpose or for the purpose of assignation or immoral conduct. She, therefore, is guilty of perjury, if a room in her hotel was rented for such immoral purposes, and if she had knowledge thereof. If there be legal evidence sufficient to establish these two facts—the renting of a room for immoral purposes and defendant's knowledge thereof—the falsity of the testimony given by defendant on her trial before the justice of the peace is made out, and she is proved guilty of perjury. That there was such legal evidence, sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute, we have no doubt. The statute respecting the quantum of evidence necessary in perjury cases will be satisfied, if there be the testimony of one witness to facts that are absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, corroborated by circumstances which, of themselves and independently of such directly inculpatory evidence, tend, with a reasonable degree of certitude, to show that the accused is guilty as charged.

"Upon a trial for perjury, direct evidence is not limited to a denial in ipsissimis verbis of the testimony given by the defendant, but includes any positive testimony of a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by him at the former trial, or which is absolutely incompatible with his evidence, or physically inconsistent with the facts so testified to by him." People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 70, 87 Pac. 387.

See, also, People v. Parent, 139 Cal. 600, 73 Pac. 423, and People v. Hill, 36 Cal. App. 574, 172 Pac. 1114.

The testimony of Jennie Garcia was direct and positive that she saw the Roderiquez woman in bed with a man in room 9. She also saw different men Mexicans, Indians, and colored men go into room 9 with the Rogers woman, as well as with Lucille Roderiquez. She gave direct evidence as to what was said to her by defendant regarding these occurrences—what was said by defendant concerning the use made of room 9, the amount charged by these prostitutes, and defendant's share of the nefarious gains.

Such testimony, if true, directly established facts that are absolutely incompatible with the truth of defendant's testimony on her trial in the justice's court, to the effect that she never knew of any room in her hotel having been rented for immoral purposes. The facts testified to by Juan Garcia—that men would sometimes come and ask Mrs. Casanova for girls, that she would tell them what the girls charged, that she would send the men to room 9, that he saw men go to that room, and that once he saw a man in room 9 in bed with the Roderiquez woman—of themselves, without the aid of the inculpatory evidence given by Jennie Garcia, tended to show that a room in the hotel was rented for immoral purposes, and that defendant knew that it was so rented, thus corroborating his wife's testimony by sufficient corroborating circumstances—if, indeed, his evidence was not corroborative of his wife's by direct and positive testimony to the corpus delicti. The evidence for the prosecution was every whit as strong as that in People v. Parent, supra, and was clearly sufficient to justify the verdict.

[3-5] Following defendant's acquittal in the justice's court of the charge of maintaining a disorderly house, she brought an action against the sheriff for malicious prosecution. Thereafter this indictment for perjury was presented by the grand jury. On the trial of the present action counsel for defendant put the foreman of the grand jury on the witness stand and offered to prove that there was a close political relationship between the witness and the sheriff. The avowed object of this offer was to create the inference that the indictment was the outgrowth of a desire to aid the sheriff in his defense to the malicious prosecution action which defendant had brought against that official. Needless to say, this offer was promptly rejected. And though counsel was later permitted to propound to the witness one or two questions in line with his offer, the questions and answers were subsequently stricken out. In this the court did not err. An indictment is a record of the action of a judicial body, and such action is final, when no appeal therefrom, nor other method for reviewing it, is provided by statute. In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 634, 78 Pac. 24, 67 L. R. A. 406, 103 Am. St. Rep. 117, 1 Ann. Cas. 840; Brobeck v. Superior Court, 152 Cal. 289, 92 Pac. 646; People v. Panagoit, 25 Cal. App. 158, 143 Pac. 70. We know of no provision in the law of this state that permits a grand juror, during the trial of the case on its merits, thus to impeach an indictment that has been found to be a true bill by the grand jury and presented in open court as such. See note to United States v. Tallmadge, 20 Ann. Cas. p. 47 et seq.

[6, 7] Defendant assigns as error the court's refusal to permit her to introduce in evidence the record in her action against the sheriff for malicious prosecution. The avowed purpose of this offer was to show "the motive behind the prosecution." Though a party to an action may show, by proper evidence, the hostility, bias, or interest of any witness called to testify against him, it is too clear to require the citation of authority that an indictment cannot be impeached during the course of trial of the issues presented thereby by showing an alleged improper motive for its finding and presentment.

[8, 9] In the course of the cross-examination of the people's witness Jennie Garcia, she was asked by defendant's counsel if, at a place called Barrett Dam, she had not had sexual intercourse with each of four men, one of whom was J. De Torres. She answered in the negative. Later defendant put De Torres on the stand as a witness for the defense, and offered to prove by him and other witnesses that on September 4, 1920, he, in company with Jennie Garcia, drove from Barrett Dam to defendant's hotel in the city of San Diego, and that upon that occasion Jennie Garcia cautioned him not to tell defendant about her alleged conduct with men at Barrett Dam, because she lived at defendant's hotel when in the city of San Diego, and she did not want defendant to know what had been her relations with men. In its refusal to permit defendant's counsel to pursue this line of examination the court did not err. We are informed that the purpose of the offered testimony was to show the regard in which the witness Jennie Garcia held the defendant and her hotel, and that she cautioned these men not to speak to defendant about her actions with them, because she did not want defendant to know of her immoral conduct. This excuse for the offer notwithstanding, we are unable to find in the proposed testimony aught than an attempt to impeach the witness in a manner nor warranted by the rule of evidence codified in section 2051 of our Code of Civil Procedure. The Garcia woman's conduct some months prior to the week commencing December 11, 1920, when she and her husband lived at defendant's hotel, and her alleged statements respecting such prior conduct, made more than three months prior to the time when defendant is alleged to have maintained a disorderly house, can have no tendency to disprove her testimony as to what she heard and saw during the week commencing December 11, 1920, save as such prior conduct and statement may tend to impeach her by showing that she herself was a woman of loose morals. But a witness cannot be thus impeached. A witness may be expected to come to the stand prepared, if necessary, to defend his or her general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity, or to defend against a charge that he or she has been convicted of a felony; but no witness is expected to come to the witness stand prepared to meet any of the innumerable possible charges of specific wrongdoing which, though groundless, malice or self-interest might see fit to prefer.

[10] On the cross-examination of the people's witness Juan Garcia, the court sustained an objection to the introduction by defendant of the transcript of the witness' testimony before the grand jury. The announced purpose of this offer was to show that when he gave his testimony to the grand jurors, Garcia failed to state that he had seen a man in bed in room 9 with the Roderiquez woman. Our Code prescribes as one of the methods of discrediting a witness the following:

"A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but before this can be done the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he made such statements, and if so, allowed to explain them. If the statements be in writing, they must be shown to the witness before any question is put to him concerning them." Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.

The witness' omission to tell the grand jurors that he had seen a man in bed with the Roderiquez woman at defendant's hotel is not a discrepancy in his testimony at the trial, unless it clearly appears that his attention was specifically called to the matter in the grand jury room, and that he was there asked to testify concerning the very facts embraced in the questions propounded at the trial. Thus, in Commonwealth v. Hawkins, 3 Gray (Mass.) 463, the defendant being on trial charged with murder, his counsel sought to show by the depositions of certain adverse witnesses, taken before the coroner, that they had there omitted material facts to which they had testified at the trial, and insisted that the latter testimony was so important that the witnesses could not, consistently with the operation of an active memory and the promptings of a good conscience, have omitted such facts at the inquest and remembered them at the trial. But it was held that the mere omission to state a fact, or stating it less fully, before the coroner, was not sufficient to render the depositions admissible to impeach the witnesses upon that ground, unless their attention had been particularly called to such facts at the inquest. See, also, State v. Ogden, 39 Or. 195, 65 Pac. 449; State v. Gulliford, 76 Or. 231, 148 Pac. 876, and State v. Mosca, 90 Conn. 381, 97 Atl. 340. If inquiries were put to Juan Garcia in the grand jury room which had the effect of calling his attention to the question whether he had seen a man in bed with the Roderiquez woman, those inquiries, and the witness' answers thereto, should have been read to him on the witness stand. That is the only manner in which he could have been impeached, within the rule we have already stated. The fact that such questions and answers were or that they were not contained in the transcript of his testimony would not justify the offer of the entire document.

Criticism is made of an instruction admonishing the jury as to their duties. We cannot see wherein the court misdirected the jury. The charge, when considered as a whole, does not indicate any hostility on the part of the court towards the defendant. An instruction substantially identical in character is commented upon in People v. Wolff, 190 Pac. 22, and held not to be prejudicial.

[11] We can see no reason for concluding that the jury may have been misled by the instruction given in regard to circumstantial evidence. The point of the criticism is that a certain instruction, conceded to be a correct statement of the law as an abstract proposition, tended to mislead the jury because, in this case, so it is claimed, no dependence was placed upon circumstantial evidence. The objection is grounded upon an erroneous assumption. Much of the evidence adduced by the prosecution was circumstantial. For instance, the witness Juan Garcia testified that sometimes, after hearing a man ask defendant how much the girls charged, he would see the man go into room 9. This was circumstantial evidence of a very strong character, tending to show that, to defendant's knowledge, a room in her hotel was rented for immoral purposes.

[12] Complaint is made of the refusal of the court to give certain instructions requested by defendant. A comparison of these instructions with those given by the court discloses that the latter fully cover the substance of those requested. There was, therefore no necessity for repetition, and appellant was not prejudiced by the refusal to charge the jury in the language requested by her.

On the whole case, we see no ground for interfering with the judgment. An examination of the record shows that there was sufficient evidence to justify the verdict, and that defendant was accorded every substantial right by the learned judge of the trial court.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

54 Cal. App. 507

Ex parte CLARK. (Cr. 810.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 10, 1921.)

1. Perjury — 1, 9(1)—Testimony at examination under complaint alleging no offense does not constitute.

To sustain a charge of perjury, the false testimony must have been given in a judicial proceeding and have been material to a valid issue properly made therein, so that no charge of perjury can be based upon testimony given by accused at his preliminary examination where the complaint failed to charge a public offense.

2. Gaming — 88—Complaint for conducting poker game must allege playing for value.

Under Pen. Code, § 330, making it a misdemeanor to play or conduct certain enumerated games, including "stud horse poker," or any game played with cards for money or other representative of value, a complaint for playing or conducting one of the games enumerated must allege that the game was played for money or other representative of value in order to charge an offense.

Original application by George Clark for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the sheriff of Kings county, to secure the release of petitioner who was held in custody upon a charge of perjury. Petitioner discharged.

J. C. C. Russell, J. F. Pryor, and H. P. Brown, all of Hanford, for petitioner.

J. W. Ferguson, Dist. Atty., and William R. McKay, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Hanford, for respondent.

JAMES, J. By this proceeding petitioner seeks to be discharged from the custody of the sheriff of the county of Kings, by whom he is held under a commitment issued by a justice of the peace of said county. After proceedings had before the justice, defendant was held to answer to the superior court on a charge of perjury. Following the making of that order by the magistrate, the district attorney filed his information in the superior court. It is here claimed that the commitment was made without reasonable or probable cause. The record of the proceedings had and testimony taken before the justice of the peace on the preliminary examination of petitioner is made a part of the petition. We think that the contention of petitioner is well made and that he is entitled to be discharged from custody.

[1] It appears that the charge of perjury was based upon testimony given by petitioner in a criminal action wherein petitioner was charged with having conducted the game of "stud horse poker," which is prohibited by the terms of section 330, Penal Code. In the complaint for perjury it was charged that petitioner, having been called as a witness in his own behalf in the criminal action mentioned, falsely testified and stated under oath that he had not conducted or played in said game. In order that a charge of perjury be made out against the petitioner, it was necessary that the alleged false testimony had been given in a judicial proceeding, and that the same was material to a valid issue properly made therein. If the complaint in the gaming case failed to charge a public offense, as is asserted, then the testimony of petitioner would not amount to perjury as that crime is defined by the statute.

[2] The complaint in the gaming case in its charging part declared as follows:

"Said defendant did then and there willfully and unlawfully open up and conduct a gambling game, to wit, stud horse poker, in the town of Armona, county of Kings, state of California, in violation of section 330 of the Penal Code of the State of California."

In section 330 of the Penal Code it is made a misdemeanor for persons to deal, play, carry on, open, or conduct certain games enumerated by name, including "stud horse poker," after which and separated by a comma is the following:

"Or any banking or percentage game played with cards, dice or any device, for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value."

In order to constitute an offense under section 330, it is essential that it be alleged and proved that the game, whether described under any of the names specifically given in the section, or under the general term of "banking or percentage game," shall have been played "for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value." The purpose of the law is to prohibit games of the kind mentioned and described at which money or property, or the representative thereof, is lost or won. It cannot be assumed that it is impossible that any of the games specifically mentioned may not be played for amusement only and without the incident of money or property being wagered or bet thereat. The tenor of all the decisions that our attention has been referred to, or that we have been able to discover, indicates that this construction should be given to the statute. Ex parte Capanna, 187 Pac. 1077; People v. Sam Lung, 70 Cal. 515, 11 Pac. 673; People v. Carroll, 80 Cal. 154, 22 Pac. 129; People v. Ah Own, 85 Cal. 580, 24 Pac. 780. The complaint charging petitioner with the alleged crime of conducting the game of stud horse poker did not state facts sufficiently to constitute a public offense; neither did the complaint upon which the examination on the charge of perjury was had state a public offense, for the reason that it was deficient in its reference to the former complaint in the same particular as has been pointed out.

It is ordered that petitioner be discharged from the custody of the sheriff.

PEOPLE v. PEETE. (Cr. 782.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Sept. 26, 1921. As Modified Oct. 25, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1921.)

1. Criminal law —409—Jurors under no obligation to believe particular part of accused's unsworn declaration.

Jury, in considering unsworn declarations in statement made to prosecuting attorney, were under no obligation to believe any particular part thereof, but could consider the declaration as self-incriminatory in so far as its inconsistencies and chimerical statements constituted a self-woven web.

2. Criminal law —1159(3)—Finding of jury on conflicting evidence not disturbed on appeal.

Although evidence is conflicting, where it is not clear that verdict must have been rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, the examination of the record on appeal is only to determine whether legal evidence has been submitted sufficient to warrant a conviction; it being the peculiar and exclusive province of the jury to weigh the evidence and pass upon the credibility of the witnesses.

3. Homicide —253(2)—Circumstantial evidence may support conviction of first degree murder.

Where the evidence is entirely circumstantial and no claim of any mitigating circumstances, justification or excuse for the killing is advanced by the accused, the jury, from the nature of the wound inflicted, character of the weapon which nature of the wound indicates was used, from acts and conduct of the accused, and all the attendant and surrounding facts, may infer that deceased was unlawfully killed by the accused with malice aforethought as the result of a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, and, so inferring, may return a verdict of murder in the first degree.

4. Homicide —332(1)—Degree of crime exclusively for jury.

In a prosecution for murder the degree of the crime is exclusively for the jury, and their determination will not be disturbed when there is any evidence to support it.

5. Homicide —253(3)—Circumstantial evidence held to support inference that killing was unlawful, and with malice aforethought.

In a prosecution for first degree murder of one found buried in a closet in a cellar, circumstances disclosed by evidence held ample to support inference that the killing was unlawful, and that it was done with malice aforethought, and was willful, deliberate, and premeditated.

6. Homicide —236(1)—Evidence held to warrant finding that deceased was shot and not strangled.

In a prosecution for murder of man found buried in closet in cellar, evidence held to warrant finding that death was caused by a bullet from a pistol and not by strangulation.

7. Homicide —142(7)—Jurors may convict without adopting theory of state as to manner of killing.

Under an indictment for murder not stating the manner or means of death, prosecution could advance any reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death, and the jurors were free to adopt such theory as in their judgment was most in accord with reasonable interpretation of all the incriminatory circumstances in the case, and could convict on the theory that death was caused by strangulation, and not by shooting, as contended by the state.

8. Homicide —174(5)—Guilty agency inferred from possession of articles belonging to decedent.

Possession by the accused shortly after a homicidal death of articles known to have belonged to decedent, under circumstances that would justify an inference of larceny, is sufficient to establish the guilty agency of the accused, especially when coupled with false statements as to the whereabouts of the missing person.

9. Homicide —174(1)—Concealment of body badge of guilt.

It is one of the badges of guilt to attempt concealment of the act done, and where a homicide has been committed and the body is concealed, it is a legitimate inference therefrom that the person who concealed the body is connected with the crime as author or participant.

10. Homicide —229—Body may be identified by articles of clothing and personal belongings.

Where the body has been badly burned, mutilated, or decomposed, identity need not be proved by direct and positive evidence, but may be established in a homicide case by articles of clothing and other personal belongings found on or near the body, especially where the accused has made false statements in an attempt to account for the disappearance of the person in question.

11. Homicide —268, 332(5)—Identification of body of deceased a jury question, and where evidence conflicts determination is conclusive on appeal.

Where body of deceased is identified by clothing and articles found thereon, it rests exclusively with the jury in a homicide case to determine, from all the evidence, what weight to give such identifying circumstances, and if there is a conflict in the evidence their determination is conclusive upon the appellate court.

12. Criminal law ⚡404(3)—Revolver found in house where discovered held admissible in evidence.

In a prosecution for murder of a man found buried in closet in the basement of his house, where there was evidence that there was a hole in his neck which may have been made by a 32 or 38 caliber bullet, court properly admitted in evidence a holster and 32-caliber pistol containing one discharged cartridge shell, which was found in a closet in a room upstairs.

13. Criminal law ⚡404(3)—Remoteness of discovery of pistol near scene of killing from date of crime does not affect its admissibility.

Remoteness of time of discovery at scene of killing of pistol from date of homicide, committed in house which defendant had leased, and the fact that defendant was not in actual occupancy of the premises at the time of the discovery, or that there was a possibility that unknown persons may have visited the house in the meantime, goes to the probative force of the evidence, and does not affect the admissibility of the pistol in evidence.

14. Criminal law ⚡409—Witness properly permitted to read transcript of defendant's statements.

In a homicide case court did not err in permitting to be read to the jury a phonographic reporter's transcription of statements made by accused in the presence of district attorney and others, where the reporter testified that he took accurate shorthand notes of all that was said, and that his transcription thereof was correct.

15. Criminal law ⚡406(5)—Declarations of accused held admissible.

In a prosecution for homicide, statements made by accused in the presence of a deputy district attorney of suspicious circumstances which, if not explained satisfactorily, would naturally tend to point more or less conclusively to herself as the guilty agent, and which, when compared one with another and in connection with facts established by sworn witnesses, appeared to have been disingenuous fabrications made for the purpose of misleading or warding off suspicion, were admissible in evidence.

16. Criminal law ⚡406(5), 516—"Confession" and "admission" distinguished.

In a homicide case declarations of accused in presence of district attorney, reciting what accused claimed to be her own conduct after she met deceased, or facts surrounding his disappearance, containing no statement that she had done any wrongful or unlawful act, were only admissions and not a confession, a statement not constituting a confession where it only admits particular acts or circumstances which may or may not involve guilt, being dependent for such result upon other facts or circumstances.

[Ed. Note—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Admission; Confession.]

17. Criminal law ⚡409—Statement of accused held admissible as part of admission.

Statement by accused as to her relation with deceased, who was found buried in a closet in a cellar, was admissible in evidence, though the precise date of death was not shown, and some of the facts as detailed in the statement may have occurred before the homicide, the facts set forth in the statement being so interrelated that the statement was an entire and connected one, bearing upon the same subject-matter, or revolving around the tragedy as the central theme.

18. Criminal law ⚡409—Accusatory questions held admissible along with answers.

Accusatory questions, propounded to accused by district attorney in an examination while investigating a killing, held admissible in evidence along with declarations and answers made by the accused, the questions and answers constituting one entire connecting statement, being admissible for the purpose of showing the accused's reaction to the questions, or to show that the answers were not those of an innocent person.

19. Criminal law ⚡1169(12)—Admission in evidence of conversation with defendant held harmless.

Overruling of objection to relation by district attorney of conversation with accused, wherein such attorney expressed to defendant his sympathy over her predicament by stating that it was unfortunate that every one seemed to be against her, was harmless error.

20. Homicide ⚡305—Instruction on law of accomplice held warranted by evidence.

Where there was evidence to justify a finding that deceased had been murdered and to connect defendant as a guilty agent, court properly instructed upon the law of the accomplice as provided by Pen. Code, § 31, although there was no direct verdict as to the manner or the circumstances of the killing, in view of section 1127.

21. Criminal law ⚡814(2)—Positive testimony not required to justify instruction.

To justify an instruction on an issue raised by the evidence, positive testimony is not required; it being sufficient if the fact may reasonably be inferred from circumstances proved.

22. Criminal law ⚡829(21)—No error in refusing requested instruction that it was jury's duty to determine degree of crime in view of charge given.

Where the court in its general instruction clearly defined the two degrees of murder and told the jurors that it was left to them to determine the degree of the crime, except in those special cases which the Legislature has said shall be murder in the first degree, it was not error to refuse a requested charge, stating specifically that it was the duty of the jury to determine the degree if it found defendant guilty of murder, under Pen. Code, § 1157.

23. Criminal law ⚡144(14)—Assumed that jurors are fair and intelligent men requiring no instruction on obvious matters.

It must be assumed on appeal that jurors were fair and intelligent men and women, and that they required no admonition or instruction as to obvious matters and rudimentary principles of just and intelligent conduct on their part.

24. Criminal law ⚡829(1)—Requested instruction properly refused where covered by charge given.

It is not error to refuse to give a special instruction, in itself unobjectionable, if it already has been covered properly and sufficiently by other instructions comprehensive enough to embrace the whole law applicable to that branch of the case.

25. Criminal law ⚡564(3)—Venue may be established by circumstantial evidence.

The venue, like any other fact in a criminal case, may be established by circumstantial evidence.

26. Criminal law ⚡564(3)—Evidence held sufficient to establish venue in murder case.

Evidence that deceased was found buried in a closet, unexplained, was sufficient to justify the jury in concluding that the homicide was committed in the county where such house was situated.

27. Jury ⚡32(1)—Statute providing for alternate juror valid.

Pen. Code, § 1089, providing that alternate jurors may be drawn and sworn and be substituted for any regular juror dying or becoming sick during the trial, does not violate Bill of Rights, § 7, guaranteeing right of trial by jury as known to the common law.

28. Jury ⚡4—Must be composed of 12 persons at common law.

One of the essentials of the jury at common law is that it be composed of 12 persons, and that 12 persons, not more nor fewer, shall pass upon and determine the issues of fact.

29. Jury ⚡149—Discharged at common law where one juror becomes incapacitated.

At common law, where a juror became incapacitated by illness or death after the jury was impaneled and sworn in chief, the proper procedure was to discharge the entire panel and begin de novo by forming a new jury.

30. Jury ⚡10—Legislature has right to make reasonable regulation respecting trial by jury; "inviolable."

The word "inviolable," as used in the Bill of Rights, § 7, providing that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, connotes no more than freedom from substantial impairment, and the Legislature has a right to make any reasonable regulation or condition respecting the enjoyment of trial by jury, provided only that the essentials of a jury trial, as known to the common law, remain unchanged, and the essentials are number, impartiality, and unanimity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Inviolable.]

31. Statutes ⚡124(3)—Substance of alternate jury statute held expressed in title.

The substance of Pen. Code, § 1089, providing for an alternate juror to be substituted for juror becoming sick or dying, held sufficiently expressed in the title "an act relating * * * to alternate jurors" as against a contention that the words "alternate jurors" are unknown to the law, under Const. art. 4, § 24.

32. Statutes ⚡105(1)—Constitutional provision as to title liberally construed.

Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring the subject of an act to be expressed in the title, is liberally construed.

33. Statutes ⚡141(2)—Act not amended or repealed by act adding section within constitutional provision as to re-enacting and publishing the same at length; "amendment."

An act is not revised nor a section amended within the purview of Const. art. 4, § 24, by an act which adds a new Code section and does not purport to repeal or amend any of the sections of the Code to which it is added, an amendment by implication not being "amendment" within the meaning of such constitutional provision, and Pen. Code, § 1089, providing for an alternate juror for one sick or dying, is not unconstitutional as repealing section 1123 by implication.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Amend—Amendment.]

34. Statutes ⚡285—Not impeached by resort to journals of Legislature or extrinsic evidence.

The validity of a statute that has been duly verified, enrolled, approved, and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State cannot be impeached by a resort to the journals of the Legislature, or by extrinsic evidence of any character whatever, and it cannot be shown by such evidence that bill was not read three several days in each house, as provided by Const. art. 4, § 15.

35. Criminal law ⚡730(3)—No reversal by reason of improper questions by district attorney.

A conviction will not be reversed because district attorney asked improper questions, where it does not appear that he acted in bad faith, or for the purpose of raising a prejudice against the accused, and the court properly directed the jury to disregard the questions and their implications, and it not appearing that there was a miscarriage of justice.

36. Criminal law ⚡722(2)—District attorney cannot comment upon appearance of accused not testifying.

It was reprehensible and inexcusable for district attorney to comment upon the appearance of the accused while sitting as a prisoner before the bar and not tendering herself as a witness, saying, among other things, that an innocent woman facing such an ordeal could not sit in the courtroom without a tear.

37. Criminal law ☞1037(2)—Accused must object to improper remarks, and request instruction thereon.

Unless the accused objects to improper remarks of attorney and requests an instruction that the jury disregard them, the objectionable statements will not justify a reversal, unless the district attorney's conduct is so flagrantly and obviously prejudicial that neither a retraction nor a rebuke from the court can destroy its influence.

38. Criminal law ☞730(12)—Remarks of district attorney held not prejudicial in view of rebuke and retraction.

Comment by district attorney upon appearance of accused while sitting as a prisoner before the bar, not having tendered herself as a witness, saying, among other things that an innocent woman facing such an ordeal could not sit in the courtroom without a tear, was not so flagrantly and obviously prejudicial that neither a retraction nor a rebuke from the court could destroy its influence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Louise L. Peete was convicted of murder in the first degree and appeals. Affirmed.

Ford & Bodkin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, of Los Angeles, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, who was charged with the murder of Jacob Charles Denton, alleged to have occurred on or about June 2, 1920, in Los Angeles county, was convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to life imprisonment. She appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her a new trial.

Defendant did not take the witness stand in her own behalf. No eyewitness to the tragedy was produced. There was no direct evidence of the killing of Denton. Nor was there any direct evidence connecting the defendant with the homicide. The evidence tending to show that Denton had been murdered and defendant's connection therewith was wholly circumstantial. The record here is very voluminous, covering more than 2,000 pages. The following is a bare outline of a few of the outstanding features of the case, sufficient, however, for an understanding of the points presented for our consideration.

Denton, a man of considerable means, owned a somewhat pretentious residence in the city of Los Angeles, of which he seems to have been the sole occupant immediately preceding its lease to defendant, who, in the latter part of May, 1920, in response to an advertisement by Denton offering the home for rent, leased the premises of him and thereupon assumed possession. According to witnesses for the prosecution, Denton was last seen alive on June 1, 1920, from which date until August 25, 1920, when she left for Denver, Colo., after having rented the premises to a third party, defendant occupied the Denton home.

Hearing nothing of her uncle for some time following his disappearance about June 1, 1920, and being anxious about him, Mrs. Paul Aument, Denton's niece, on several occasions during the period that defendant was the occupant of the Denton home, made inquiries of the latter, asking her if she had heard from the uncle or knew aught of his whereabouts. Similar inquiries were also made by Mr. Aument, the niece's husband. In response to these inquiries defendant vouchsafed a number of plausible explanations to account for Denton's disappearance, all of a character calculated to quiet the anxieties of Denton's relatives.

On September 23, 1920, a Los Angeles attorney, employed by Denton's daughter, who then was residing in Phoenix, Ariz., began an investigation of Denton's disappearance. This attorney and a private detective whom he had employed to assist him made an examination of Denton's house in Los Angeles—the house that had been leased to defendant in the latter part of May. Upon examining the premises their attention was attracted to the door of a closet or crypt under the staircase in the basement. Two boards had been nailed across the face of the door and the nails driven in as though done by hammering in a clumsy manner. At the foot of the stairway was a pile of dirt. In front of the door stood a phonograph box containing bottles. Upon prying off the door they found in the closet a mound of earth about two feet high. On this mound were several pieces of stovepipe and pieces of board. Their removal disclosed a white canvas. This they proceeded to pull off. The canvas was stuffed around the mound in such a manner as to cover it completely. Underneath the canvas was a pile of dirt in the shape of a grave, about two feet in height, almost completely covering the floor of the small closet. Obtaining a shovel, the detective dug into the mound and uncovered a foot—a shoe. At this point it was decided to call in the police. In answer to the call two members of the Los Angeles police force appeared. They shoveled away the dirt, disclosing the body of a man wrapped in a quilt and tied about with rope. The rope was wrapped a number of times around the body and knotted, thus fastening the arms to the side. The body was clad in a shirt, a pair of trousers, and a pair of white shoes. At this point Paul Aument, the husband of Denton's niece, arrived on the scene, and identified a belt buckle connected with the belt around the body as one that had been worn by Denton. It bore the latter's initial, "D." He also identified as Denton's property a ring upon the dead man's hand, as well as a pair of cuff buttons found in the shirt. The remains were in an advanced stage of decomposition, and the features were unrecognizable. The body was that of a man weighing about 200 pounds. It was taken to an undertaking establishment, where an autopsy was held by Dr. Webb, who was then acting as deputy autopsy surgeon in the absence of Dr. Wagner, the autopsy surgeon of Los Angeles county.

Upon the return of Dr. Wagner, he and Dr. Webb held another autopsy at which X-ray photographs were taken. These disclosed some dark bodies in the region of the neck, indicating the presence of metallic substances. A dissection of the neck showed that one of the vertebrae had been broken, and that the broken particles of bone were lodged in the tissue. A small opening at the base of the skull was also found. The tissues were swollen. There was evidence that the vertebral artery had been ruptured and the spinal cord severed. This, according to the evidence given by witnesses for the prosecution—medical experts and others—was due to a bullet which had hit on the side of the vertebra and evidently had passed through. Such a gunshot wound, these medical witnesses testified, would cause instant death. Dr. Wagner testified that the aperture in the neck was about the size made by a 32 or 38 caliber bullet, and stated that in his opinion the cause of death was a gunshot wound through the neck. He further testified that it was impossible to tell how long the corpse had been in the grave where it was found in the basement of the Denton home. He said that there was a constriction around the body, apparently due to a belt, and another around the neck, which might have been caused by a rope. He admitted that there were certain conditions about the body that frequently are found in strangulation, and testified that at the coroner's inquest he had stated that strangulation was a possible cause of the death.

Following its removal to the undertaking establishment, the body and the clothing in which it was found were examined by Denton's relatives and others who had known him in his lifetime. On the body was a shirt on which was a private monogram consisting of the letters "J. C. D." Paul Aument identified the shirt as one that belonged to Denton, stating that the initials "J. C. D." had been made by a rubber stamp that had been in Denton's possession. The belt buckle found on the body and bearing the initial "D," the witness had seen many times on the person of Denton, to whom it had been given by his niece, Mrs. Aument. Paul Aument also identified the trousers worn by the deceased by a pin stripe running through the cloth. He also testified that he had many times seen on Denton's right hand the ring that was found on the body. This ring, he testified, had been enlarged and reconstructed partly with gold from the wedding ring of Denton's wife, and from Denton's mother's ring. The witness also identified the body by a gold tooth. A laundryman, who had taken the laundry from Denton's home, testified that the mark "H. J. H." on the shirt that was found on the body was the laundry mark that had been placed on the shirt for the purpose of identifying Denton's laundry. Other witnesses who had known Denton in his lifetime identified the body as that of their old-time friend.

Upon several occasions prior to the return of the indictment against her and prior to her formal arrest on the charge of murder, defendant made statements to the authorities respecting certain phases of the baffling mystery arising out of Denton's unaccountable disappearance. On one of these occasions, at a ranch in an adjoining county, on October 4, 1920, a deputy district attorney, in the presence of a shorthand reporter and others, propounded a number of questions to defendant respecting certain aspects of the case. These questions were freely answered by her. The questions and answers were taken down in shorthand by the phonographic reporter, who subsequently transcribed his notes, and his transcription was read to the jury. In her answers to these questions defendant stated facts which, when considered in connection with other evidence in the case, are of a gravely incriminating nature. Defendant objected to the introduction of the statement so made by her on October 4, 1920; and its receipt in evidence is now assigned as error. The statements or declarations made by defendant on these several occasions are replete with contradictions and fanciful excusatory explanations, evidently made in an attempt to establish her own innocence by diverting from herself the accusatory circumstances that pointed to her as the murderer of Denton.

[1] Appellant contends that because she stated in one of these declarations that she had seen Denton alive as late as July 24th, and because this statement as to the date when she last saw Denton was not directly contradicted, the jury was not warranted in finding that Denton died at an earlier date—at a date more in keeping with the prosecution's theory of the case. The jurors were under no obligation to believe any particular part of defendant's unsworn declaration. In so far as its inconsistencies and chimerical statements constituted a self-woven web in whose meshes she had inextricably entangled herself, the jury might consider her declaration as self-incriminatory; but they were under no obligation to accept any part of it as true.

[2] The evidence as to the date of the demise is conflicting. The evidence was, as we have stated, wholly circumstantial, and the date as fixed in the indictment, June 2, 1920, seems to accord more persuasively with the prosecution's theory of the case than would a later date. There are several circumstances in the case, not necessary to be enumerated, that point to June 2d as the date when the man whose body was found in the crypt in the basement of the Denton home met his death. If we find any evidence in the record from which a rational inference might be drawn that the decedent met his death at the time which accords with the prosecution's theory of the case, our inquiry as to that feature of the case can go no further. If the evidence which bears against the defendant, considered by itself and without regard to conflicting evidence, is sufficient to support the verdict, the question ceases to be one of law, and becomes one of fact upon which the decision of the jury is final and conclusive. We sit here in criminal cases solely for the correction of errors of law; and if there is any substantial evidence upon which the verdict may find meritorious support this court cannot, and will not, disturb the jury's determination, even under a claim that there is conflicting evidence which might have raised a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt. It is the peculiar and exclusive province of the jury to weigh the evidence and pass upon the credibility of the witnesses; and we cannot disturb their verdict on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence unless there is a total deficiency in the evidence or unless it preponderates so clearly against the verdict as to render it clear that the jury must have been under the influence of passion or prejudice. Where it is not clear that the verdict must have been rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, our examination of the record is only to determine whether legal evidence has been submitted sufficient to warrant a conviction; for the verdict of the jury is their declaration that it is this evidence which has been accepted. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 200, 201, 48 Pac. 75.

[3-5] One of the points made on this appeal is the broad, general contention that the evidence did not warrant the jury in returning a verdict of murder in the first degree. It is the general, if not universal, rule that where, as here, the evidence is entirely circumstantial, and no claim of any mitigating circumstances, justification, or excuse for the killing is advanced by the accused, the jury, from the nature of the wound inflicted, from the character of the weapon which the nature of the wound indicates was used, from the acts and conduct of the accused, and all the attendant and surrounding facts, may infer that the deceased was unlawfully killed by the accused, with malice aforethought, as the result of a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, and, so inferring, the jury, under such circumstances, may be warranted in returning a verdict of murder in the first degree. If a different rule prevailed, then, as was said in People v. Mahatch, 148 Cal. 203, 82 Pac. 779, "secret murders could rarely be punished by the infliction of the highest penalty." As is well said by an eminent author:

"Crimes, and especially those of the worst kinds, are naturally committed at chosen times, and in darkness and secrecy; and human tribunals must act upon such indications as the circumstances of the case present or admit, or society must be broken up. Nor is it very often that adequate evidence is not afforded by the attendant and surrounding facts to remove all mystery, and to afford such a reasonable degree of certainty as men are daily accustomed to regard as sufficient in the most important concerns of life; to expect more would be equally needless and absurd."

See State v. Dickson, 78 Mo. 447. The question of the degree of the crime is exclusively for the jury, and their determination will not be disturbed when there is any evidence to support it. People v. Machuca, 158 Cal. 64, 109 Pac. 886. We think that the circumstances disclosed by the evidence are ample to support the inference that the killing was unlawful, was done with malice aforethought, and was willful, deliberate, and premeditated.

Appellant urges two specific objections against the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. These are: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to establish that the death of the person whose body was found in the basement of the Denton home was caused by a gunshot wound; and (2) that the evidence is insufficient to show that the body was that of Jacob Charles Denton.

[6] In support of the first of these two points respecting the sufficiency of the evidence it is claimed that the evidence supports the theory that death was caused by strangulation, and not the theory that a bullet from a pistol was the cause of death. From these premises it is argued that the evidence demonstrates that a woman of defendant's apparent weight and strength could not strangle to death a man weighing 200 pounds, and, unaided and before rigor mortis had set in, drag the body from one of the floors of the Denton home to the basement, where it was found. Physicians called on behalf of defendant testified that, from conditions of the body as described by the prosecution's witnesses, it was their opinion that strangulation was the probable cause of death. Countervailing this testimony is the evidence given by the people's witness, Dr. Wagner, who gave it as his opinion, based on his personal observations of the body and X-ray photographs of the wound in the neck, that death was caused by a gunshot wound through the neck, from which death ensued practically instantaneously. A substantially similar opinion was given by Dr. Webb. It is true that when Dr. Webb held his first post-mortem examination he found conditions in the body which he then stated indicated that strangulation might have been the possible cause of death. This was before the second autopsy, that of October 20th, revealed a wound in the neck and the presence therein of metallic substances tending to show that a bullet had passed through the vertebral artery and severed the spinal cord. It is also true that Dr. Wagner, on his cross-examination, testified that he could not tell, from his inspection of the body, how long the deceased had been dead, nor whether the shot was fired before or after death. At most, these facts merely indicate that, following the discovery of what appeared to be a bullet wound, Dr. Webb abandoned any theory of strangulation, as the probable cause of death, in favor of what to him was the more reasonable theory of death by gunshot wound. And though Dr. Wagner admitted that he could not tell whether the shot was fired before or after death, he still was of the opinion, based on his own observations of the body and the X-ray photographs, that a gunshot wound was the cause of death. The jurors, who had all the facts and circumstances before them, were in a position to judge between the opposing theories advanced by the medical witnesses and to determine which was the more probable in view of all the conditions as explained to them by the witnesses in the case. So all we have is a conflict in the theories offered by the medical experts. Such being the case, we cannot sustain appellant's contention that the evidence was wholly insufficient in law to sustain the verdict.

[7-9] Moreover, even if strangulation were the cause of death, it would not necessarily follow that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the verdict of murder in the first degree. The indictment, following the form long approved in this state, does not state the manner or means of death. The prosecution, therefore, could advance any reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death, and the jurors were free to adopt such theory as in their judgment was most in accord with a reasonable interpretation of all the incriminatory circumstances in the case. That the person whose body was found in the basement of the Denton home was Denton himself was, as we shall presently show, sufficiently established by the circumstantial evidence brought before the jury for their consideration. That the deceased was murdered by some one under circumstances warranting an inference of malice, premeditation, and deliberation is, as we have said, an inference that is reasonably deducible from all the circumstances of the case. If strangulation was the means used to kill the deceased, it undoubtedly took some appreciable time to complete the atrocious deed after the victim had become helpless. If strangulation was the cause of death, the pressure, without doubt, was steady and continuous, and was applied with wicked and cool depravity. This fact, coupled with the inherent cruelty and barbarity of such means of causing another's death, would justify the jury in finding that the murderer, whoever he or she might be, had killed the deceased unlawfully and deliberately, with malice aforethought and premeditation. Wharton on Homicide, pp. 225-227. But it is claimed that, irrespective of any question as to the degree of the crime, if Denton, a large and powerful man, weighing about 200 pounds, was strangled to death, a woman of defendant's build and strength could not have been the perpetrator of the deed. This hypothesis is not so demonstrable as to preclude the jury from reaching a different conclusion. The fact that Denton was foully murdered by someone, with a willful, deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, was sufficiently established. The fact of defendant's guilty connection with that murder, no matter how it was accomplished, might well be inferred from all the circumstances of the case, particularly from the many inconsistencies and obvious fabrications found in the specious and fanciful extrajudicial explanations vouchsafed by her to explain certain peculiar phases of the case. That theft was her motive might well be inferred from many facts to which, so far, we have not deemed it necessary to allude. For example, there is the fact that, subsequent to Denton's disappearance, defendant took possession of his jewelry, some of which was disposed of by her. It has been held that possession by the accused, shortly after the homicidal death, of articles known to have belonged to the decedent, under circumstances that would justify the inference of larceny, is sufficient to establish the guilty agency of the accused, especially when coupled with his false statements as to the whereabouts of the missing person. State v. Barnes, 47 Or. 592, 85 Pac. 998, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181. As was said in Williams v. Commonwealth, 29 Pa. 102:

"If criminal offenses are to be punished, circumstances like these must be laid hold of to prove them."

Moreover, there was an abundance of circumstantial evidence sufficient to have warranted the jury in inferring that defendant, either alone or with the aid of some unidentified confederate or confederates, had concealed the body where it was found in the crypt under the cellar staircase. It is one of the badges of guilt to attempt concealment of the act done; and, where a homicide has been committed and the body is concealed, it is a legitimate inference therefrom that the person who concealed the body is connected with the crime as author or participator. State v. Dickson, supra. For these reasons it was not necessary that the jury should have adopted any particular theory as to how the deed was accomplished. To warrant the verdict it was not necessary that the prosecution should have proved, or that the jury should have believed, that a gunshot wound, and not strangulation, was the cause of death.

[10, 11] Just as little merit is there in the claim that the dead body was not identified as that of Denton. It is true that, when the corpse was found, the features were unrecognizable. But relatives and former acquaintances of Denton were able to, and did, identify the remains as those of Denton by the clothing found thereon, by a belt buckle, a ring, and cuff buttons, a gold-crowned tooth, by an old fracture of the upper third of the right arm, as well as by a general resemblance in the outlines of the face, disfigured though it was by putrefaction, and in the contour and weight of the body. This was sufficient to meet the most exacting requirements of the law, which does not demand direct or positive proof as to the identity of the body of a murdered man. Identity may be shown as effectively by inferences from facts and circumstances as from the positive testimony of witnesses. Where the body has been badly burned, mutilated, or decomposed, identity may be established, as it was here, by articles of clothing and other personal belongings found on or near the body, especially where, as in the instant case, the accused has made false statements in an attempt to account for the disappearance of the person in question. People v. Palmer, 109 N. Y. 110, 16 N. E. 529, 4 Am. St. Rep. 423; People v. Beckwith, 108 N. Y. 67, 15 N. E. 53; Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711; State v. Pepo, 23 Mont. 473, 59 Pac. 721; Hawkins v. State, 60 Neb. 380, 83 N. W. 198; State v. Dickson, supra; State v. Barnes, supra, and notes on page 181 et seq., 7 L. R. A. (N. S.); 21 Cyc. 887; Wharton on Homicide, p. 910. In People v. Palmer, supra, such evidence was held to be sufficient notwithstanding the testimony of witnesses that they had seen the person alleged to have been murdered after the date of the alleged murder, the court saying that such witnesses were "probably honest, but quite mistaken." So, also, in the Webster Case, 5 Cush. (Mass.)

295, there were five persons who honestly believed that they saw the deceased alive after he, in fact, had been killed. Where the body is identified by the clothing and articles found thereon, it rests exclusively with the jury to determine, from all the evidence, what weight to give such identifying circumstances; and if there is a conflict in the evidence, their determination is conclusive upon this court.

On September 24, 1920, on the top shelf of a closet in a room on the second floor of the Denton home, one of the detectives working on the case found a 32-caliber revolver in its holster. It will be recalled that, though Dr. Wagner was unable to state accurately the caliber of the bullet that caused the aperture in the neck of the deceased—probably on account of the decomposed condition of the body—he did testify that the wound was about the size made by a 32 or 38 caliber bullet. In the revolver found in the closet were five loaded cartridges and one empty shell. The closet in which the pistol was found was locked, being entered by the detective with a pass-key. Several dresses, hanging on hangers, were in the closet at the time. The pistol was identified by two witnesses, who said that it was Denton's revolver. The room in which it was found had been occupied by Denton prior to the lease of the premises to defendant. Following this lease, and until about the time when she left for Denver on the 25th of August, after having leased the premises to a third party, defendant occupied this room. On several occasions, in her statements to others, defendant claimed that on the night of June 2d or the morning of June 3d Denton had had a quarrel with a Spanish woman, who, the evidence tends to show, was a mythical personage invented by defendant to account for Denton's disappearance. In these statements defendant, it is evident, tried to create the impression that, in his quarrel with this supposititious individual, Denton had slightly wounded the "Spanish woman." On October 15th, in a conversation that defendant had with an investigator for the district attorney's office, she was asked with what weapon Denton had shot the "Spanish woman." Her reply was: "Well, you have got the gun, the gun that was taken out of the locker upstairs—or rather, the closet." She then went on to state that the bullet that had wounded the Spanish woman—a bullet from this pistol, according to her statement—subsequently was found by her in the sink of the bathtub upstairs. These replies have a tendency to show that defendant had knowledge of the presence of the revolver in the closet, and that one of the cartridges had been discharged.

[12] The revolver, its holster and the cartridges were admitted in evidence, over defendant's objection. This was not error. It was necessary for the prosecution to show, as accurately as the circumstances would permit, the means by which and the manner in which Jacob Charles Denton had come to his death.

"The relevancy of proffered proof in a criminal case depends upon whether or not it tends to sustain a legitimate hypothesis of the guilt of the defendant, and, generally speaking, an incidental fact is relative to the main fact in issue when, in accord with the ordinary course of events and common experience, the existence of the incidental fact, standing alone or when considered in connection with other established facts, tends in some degree to make the main fact in issue certain. It is not necessary that such incidental fact should bear directly upon the main fact in issue, for it will suffice as a pertinent piece of proof if it can be said to constitute a link, however small, in the chain of evidence, and tends thereby to establish the existence of the main fact in issue. [Citing authority.] Hence any fact is relevant evidence which naturally tends to show the means and method employed in the commission of a crime, and therefore it was proper in the present case to admit evidence of the identification of the cartridges picked up near the scene of, and shortly after, the explosion, and, having been so identified, they were rightfully admitted in evidence." People v. Billings, 34 Cal. App. 552, 553, 168 Pac. 396, 398.

Dr. Wagner, who gave it as his opinion that a gunshot wound was the cause of death, described to the jury the character and size of the aperture in the neck, saying that "it was about the size that is generally made by a 32 or 38 caliber bullet." The body was not before the jury. So the doctor, in the testimony just quoted, is describing the condition of the body at the time when he held the autopsy; he is describing, as accurately as his recollection will permit, the nature of the wound and the size and character of the aperture in the neck, and he says that the aperture was "about" the size that is generally made by a 32 or 38 caliber bullet. From all the facts as detailed to them by the physicians and by the lay witnesses respecting the nature of the wound that was found in the neck of the body, the jurors might well have drawn the inference that a bullet through the neck from a 32-caliber revolver was the cause of death. The nature of the wound in the neck, the particles of metal found therein, the presence of the 32-caliber revolver in the locked closet of the room that was occupied by the defendant at the time when it is probable that the murder was perpetrated, the fact that one cartridge in the revolver had been discharged, considered together and with the other circumstances in the case, had a direct tendency to show that the wound found in the neck of the body had been made by a bullet from this revolver that was found in the closet, thus tending to connect defendant with the perpetration of the homicide. In People v. Sampo, 17 Cal. App. 149, 118 Pac. 963, referring to the admission in evidence of a rock found at the place where the defendant had beaten the deceased, the court held that such evidence was properly admitted, not only because there was testimony that the defendant had used a rock in attacking the deceased, but also because this rock was admissible in evidence for the following reasons:

"Moreover, the doctors testified that the wound inflicted upon Pistone's head appeared to have been produced by some blunt instrument, and that it could have been caused by the use of the rock in question. Having been found at the very place where the beating occurred, with fresh blood stains thereon, and in view of the testimony of the physicians that the wound could have been made by means thereof, the rock itself constituted a pertinent circumstance, to be considered with the other evidence, in determining the question of the guilt of the accused."

See, also, People v. McDowell, 64 Cal. 467, 3 Pac. 124, where it was said that testimony that a slungshot was found in the possession of the defendant was admissible because it was evidence tending to show "that the wounds inflicted upon the person of deceased might have been caused by such an instrument." To the same effect are People v. Nakis, 193 Pac. 92, People v. Wilson, 23 Cal. App. 519, 138 Pac. 971; People v. Gilman, 185 Pac. 310, and People v. Carson, 192 Pac. 318.

[13] The inability of Dr. Wagner to say definitely whether the aperture in the neck was of the size made by a 32 or by a 38 caliber bullet, or whether the bullet was fired before or after death, is not a ground for the exclusion of the revolver. It was the province of the jury to determine from a due consideration of all the circumstances in the case (including the fact that a 32-caliber revolver with one cartridge discharged was found in Mrs. Peete's closet) whether the deceased came to his death from a revolver of that caliber fired by the defendant. Answering a somewhat similar objection urged by the defendant in People v. Sullivan, 129 Cal. 560, 62 Pac. 103, the court said:

"Notwithstanding the slight difference in weight in the bullet, under the circumstances it cannot be said that the jury were not justified in finding that it was the one shot from the gun borrowed by defendant, nor can it be said that the chain of circumstantial evidence was not sufficient to support the verdict of the jury. 'It is the peculiar province of the jury to weigh the evidence and decide upon the credibility of the witnesses; and it is not our practice to disturb verdicts on this ground unless there is either a total deficiency in the evidence or it preponderates so greatly against the verdict as to render it clear that the jury must have been under the influence of passion or prejudice.'"

Any objection that the time of the discovery of the pistol was too remote from the date of the crime, or that defendant was not in the actual occupancy of the premises at the time of the discovery, or that there was a possibility that unknown persons may have visited the house in the meantime, goes to the probative force of the evidence, but does not affect its admissibility. See People v. Nakis, supra, and People v. Carson, supra. The case of People v. Hill, 123 Cal. 571, 56 Pac. 443, relied upon by appellant's counsel, is altogether different from this. In that case a large club was admitted in evidence, and the Supreme Court in its opinion said:

"There was no evidence identifying the stick as the one with which the defendant struck the deceased, or in any way connecting the defendant with it."

In the instant case it was shown that the wound in the neck might be produced by a bullet from just such a revolver as that which, with one cartridge discharged, was found secreted in the closet of a room that defendant had occupied at the time when the murder presumably was committed. And defendant's statement to the investigator for the district attorney's office tends to show that she knew all about the pistol, where it had been secreted, and that one shot had been fired from it. The court properly overruled the objection to the introduction of this evidence.

[14] It was not error to permit to be read to the jury the phonographic reporter's transcription of the statements that defendant had made at the Glenn ranch on October 4, 1920, in the presence of the deputy district attorney and others. The reporter testified that he took accurate shorthand notes of all that was said, and that his transcription thereof was correct. The document shows that defendant, upon this occasion, made declarations respecting her movements from the time she first met Denton in the latter part of May, 1920, up to the time when the statement was made on October 4, 1920. The statement covers 102 pages of the record on this appeal. It is obvious, therefore, that no one could accurately remember all that was said by the defendant and her interrogator without having his recollection refreshed either by the shorthand notes of the questions and answers or by the transcription thereof. If, therefore, the statement made by the defendant upon this occasion is not so far within the scope of a "confession" as to be inadmissible until a proper foundation is laid by showing its voluntary character, it was not error to permit the witness to read the transcription of the shorthand notes. See People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 32, 50 Pac. 18, where the court says:

"That the witness, Hall, was permitted to read his transcription of the statement, taken down by him in shorthand, was not error. He had a right to refer to this to refresh his memory."

See, also, Estate of Moore, 180 Cal. 585, 182 Pac. 291, where it is said that, though there is some difference in the practice in the several jurisdictions of the country, the tendency of the courts "is toward liberality rather than strict technicality in the application of the rules with respect to the admission of this sort of evidence."

[15] Many of defendant's declarations, as set forth in the statement, are her explanations of suspicious circumstances which, if not explained satisfactorily, would naturally tend to point more or less conclusively to herself as the guilty agent, or one of the guilty agents, in the commission of the crime. Her declarations, when compared one with another, and particularly when considered in connection with the facts established by the sworn witnesses in the case, appear to have been disingenuous fabrications concocted to serve the purpose of a red herring drawn across defendant's trail to throw the authorities off the scent. At any rate, they are of such a character that the jury would be justified in drawing the inference that such was their purpose. We would not have it understood that the interpretations which we have put upon the several statements made by defendant from time to time are the only legitimate constructions of which they are susceptible. It is possible that they could be viewed in a more charitable light and characterized less harshly. But, when analyzed and compared with all the facts in the case, they are reasonably subject to the inference that they are but false fabrications made with the preconceived design to thwart the efforts of the officers to solve the mystery of Denton's disappearance. And since, to support the verdict, it is our duty to assume that the jury indulged every reasonable hypothesis and inference which may be deduced from the evidence, we are justified in characterizing defendant's several declarations and admissions in the manner that we have—that is, as false statements made for the purpose of misleading those who were endeavoring to solve the many puzzling problems attending the disappearance of Jacob Charles Denton. This being so, defendant's statements are brought within the rule that false declarations, made for the purpose of misleading or warding off suspicion, though not conclusive of guilt, may nevertheless strengthen the inference arising from other facts. Such false and fabricated statements are admissible on the same theory that evidence of flight and concealment is admissible to show a consciousness of guilt. People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 90, 74 Pac. 547.

[16] The prosecution made no attempt to lay any foundation for a "confession" before offering defendant's statement in evidence; it being the theory of the district attorney that the statement was not a "confession," but an "admission," and as such receivable without any prior evidence of its voluntary character. We think this theory is fully justified by the nature of the statement. In no part of defendant's recital of what she claimed to be her own conduct after she met Denton, or of what she claimed to be the facts surrounding the mystery of his disappearance, did she state or admit that she had done any wrongful or unlawful act in connection with the murder for which she subsequently was indicted. None of the facts admitted by her imported guilt or involved a crime—at least not any such crime as homicide. Her statement, which is a mass of evasions, equivocations, and attempted explanations to account for Denton's disappearance and to establish her own innocence, was intended to negative the idea that she participated in any manner in the disappearance or the killing of Denton. True, it contains admissions of facts which, when taken in connection with other proved facts in the case, are circumstances of a highly incriminating nature; but it is by no means a confession of guilt. There is a clear distinction between a "confession" and an "admission" or "declaration." And though an admission by a person charged with crime, stating or suggesting the inference that he committed the crime, is so far within the scope and purpose of a "confession" that it is not admissible until a foundation has been laid by showing that it was made voluntarily (State v. Novak, 109 Iowa, 717, 79 N. W. 465; State v. Nagle, 25 R. I. 105, 54 Atl. 1063, 105 Am. St. Rep. 864), still, to constitute an admission or declaration a "confession," it must in some way be an acknowledgment of guilt and be so intended. State v. Novak, supra. A mere admission or declaration by a defendant against his interest is not necessarily a confession; and this is true even though the admission is criminative. State v. Novak, supra. The Oregon Supreme Court has stated the distinction as follows:

"* * * The admission of a fact, or of a bundle of facts, from which guilt is directly deducible, or which within and of themselves import guilt, may be denominated a confession, but not so with the admission of a particular act or acts or circumstances which may or may not involve guilt, and which is dependent for such result upon other facts or circumstances to be established." State v. Porter, 32 Or. 135, 49 Pac. 964.

The distinction between a confession of guilt and a mere admission of a fact or facts not constituting guilt of the offense in question is clearly pointed out in People v. Clifton, 198 Pac. 1065, and is fully and learnedly considered in People v. Fowler, 178 Cal.

657, 664, 174 Pac. 892, and need not be further discussed here. Suffice it to say that, tested by the distinctions set forth in the above-cited authorities, defendant's statement of October 4, 1920, was an "admission" and not a "confession," and therefore was admissible without preliminary proof that it was made voluntarily. For it is the established rule that the admission of a fact, not in itself involving criminal intent, is not to be rejected as evidence without preliminary proof that it was made voluntarily merely because, when connected with other facts, it may tend to establish guilt. People v. Ammerman, supra; People v. Knowlton, 122 Cal. 357, 55 Pac. 141; People v. Jan John, 144 Cal. 286, 77 Pac. 950; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 339, 86 Pac. 671; People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 534, 111 Pac. 612.

[17] It is of no consequence that the precise date of the death was not shown before the statement was received in evidence, and that, therefore, some of the facts as detailed by defendant may have occurred before the homicide. She was interrogated about matters relating to Denton's disappearance and his supposed murder. The facts set forth in her answers all revolve around the tragedy as the central theme. They are the separate links in one claim. The unlawful killing of Denton by some one with malice aforethought was established by circumstantial evidence sufficient for that purpose. And it matters not that some of the facts detailed in defendant's statement may have occurred before the homicide. Not only are all the facts narrated by her parts of the one statement, but they are all so interrelated that the statement is an entire and connected one, bearing upon the same subject-matter, and therefore admissible. People v. Cahill, 193 N. Y. 232, 86 N. E. 39, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084. Taken together, defendant's declarations, as set forth in this statement, when considered in the light of the other proved facts in the case, have a tendency to connect her with the crime as the guilty agent, or as one of the guilty agents, if, indeed, she was aided and abetted by a confederate or confederates.

[18] There is no merit in the objection that the statement did not consist alone of declarations made by defendant, but was in part made up of accusatory questions propounded to her by the deputy district attorney. Not only do the questions and answers constitute one entire and connected statement relating to the same subject-matter, and for that reason, if for none other, receivable in evidence, but the questions were admissible for the further reason that they come within the universally recognized rule that any incriminatory statements made to an accused person, and his replies thereto, may be admitted in evidence, unless his replies are denials free from equivocation and deceit. The accusatory statements are not direct evidence, but are admissible in connection with the replies for the purpose of showing the accused's reaction to the questions, or that his answers were not those of an innocent man, or were such as to implicate him in the commission of the crime with which he is charged. People v. Bradley, 23 Cal. App. 44, 136 Pac. 955; Commonwealth v. Spiropoulos, 208 Mass. 71, 94 N. E. 451; 16 C. J., p. 634. See, also, People v. Ammerman, supra.

[19] What we have said respecting the admissibility of the long statement made by defendant at the Glenn ranch on October 4, 1920, is equally applicable to the admissibility of the conversation between defendant and Mr. Doran, the chief deputy district attorney, held at the latter's office on October 12, 1920. Moreover, there does not seem to have been any objection or motion to strike out the material and really damaging parts of this conversation. In the early part of Mr. Doran's testimony, defendant's counsel did, it is true, move to strike out that part of the conversation which was then being narrated by the witness, upon the ground that it is "incompetent" and does not "throw any light on the transaction which the jury is trying to determine." At the time this motion to strike was made, Mr. Doran was relating that part of the conversation in which he expressed to defendant his sympathy over her predicament, and in which he said that it was unfortunate that every one seemed to be against her. There does not appear to have been any ruling upon the motion to strike out this part of the witness's testimony. But even if a failure to grant this motion to strike out the particular part of the conversation to which the motion was directed were error, it was harmless error, since the part complained of was not of a damaging character. Beyond this motion to strike, the failure to rule upon which was at most but harmless error, we have, as already stated, been unable to find any objection to or motion to strike out Mr. Doran's testimony respecting his conversation with defendant on October 12, 1920.

[20, 21] Appellant complains that there is no evidence in the case authorizing the charge of the court upon the law applicable to an accomplice; that it was calculated to confuse and mislead the jury, and was therefore harmful and prejudicial. The instruction complained of is as follows:

"All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, are principals in any crime so committed. * * * For one person to abet another person in the commission of a criminal offense simply means to knowingly and with criminal intent aid, promote, encourage, or instigate, by act or counsel, or by both act and counsel, the commission of such criminal offense."

Conceding the correctness of the instruction as an abstract proposition of law, appellant insists that it is not applicable to the facts of the case or to any legitimate theory reasonably deducible from the established facts. It is claimed that the effect of the instruction was to advise the jury that, even though they believe that Denton met his death by strangulation, and that defendant, unaided, was not able to strangle a man of Denton's physique, still they could convict upon the theory that defendant had aided and abetted some person or persons who may have been the actual stranglers. The core of the objection lies in the assumption that there was no evidence to justify the inference that defendant aided or abetted any person or persons in the killing of Denton. We can see no force in the objection. There was no direct evidence as to the manner or circumstances of the killing. The evidence of the murder and of defendant's guilty agency rested entirely on circumstantial evidence. As we already have taken occasion to say, the prosecution was not bound to offer or support any particular theory as to the manner of the crime, but might properly contend that it was committed in any manner which the evidence showed reasonably possible. People v. Weber, supra. We already have shown that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the inference that the deceased was killed unlawfully, with malice aforethought, by a gunshot wound inflicted by the bullet from a pistol fired willfully and with a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill. But the inference that the murder was so accomplished was not the only legitimate inference. Physicians who gave evidence on behalf of the defense, basing their opinion upon the facts disclosed by the first autopsy conducted by Dr. Webb, testified that, in their opinion, death was caused, probably, though not necessarily, by strangulation. Here, therefore, were the bases for at least two legitimate theories as to the probable cause of death—the theory that death was caused by a gunshot wound and the theory that strangulation was the cause. That the body was Denton's was shown by circumstantial evidence of a convincing character. That Denton's death was not accidental nor self-inflicted with suicidal intent, but that he was killed unlawfully, with malice aforethought, willfully, and with a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, is amply disclosed by all the attendant circumstances—circumstances showing that whoever committed the deed did it with an abandoned and malignant heart. That this defendant was concerned in the commission of the crime as a guilty agent is also a legitimate inference supported by an accumulation of incriminating circumstances. Among the circumstances pointing to defendant as a guilty agent in the commission of the crime are the following: Her unlawful possession of some of Denton's personal property subsequent to his disappearance; her false claim that Denton had given her a bill of sale to his automobile; and the cashing by her of checks drawn in the name of Denton as the apparent drawer, but which, unless the jury chose to accept her specious explanation of the circumstances under which they were signed, were palpable forgeries. This, and much other similar evidence, pointed to theft as the probable motive. In addition to this evidence of motive, we have defendant's indubitable fabrications, made with the apparent purpose of explaining suspicious circumstances that pointed to her as the guilty person. There are also her many contradictory statements; her intimate knowledge of facts that only a person connected with the commission of the crime would be likely to know; her causing earth to be taken from the garden a short time after Denton's disappearance and placed in the cellar near where Denton's body was subsequently found under a shallow mound of earth. All these and many other facts too numerous to relate point circumstantially to defendant as a guilty agent in the commission of the crime. Whether she was the sole perpetrator of the deed or whether she had accomplices whom she aided and abetted was not disclosed by the evidence. But that she was a guilty agent, and therefore either the sole perpetrator of the crime or an aider and abettor of accomplices, was an inference legitimately deducible from all the incriminating circumstances, a few of which we have taken occasion to enumerate. This being so, it was proper to charge the jury, in the language of the Code (Pen. Code, § 31), that—

"All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised, and encouraged its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed."

By the provisions of section 1127 of the Penal Code it is made the duty of the court to charge the jury as to all matters of law necessary for their information. And since there was no direct evidence as to the manner or the circumstances of the killing, and since the evidence supports two theories as to the manner of the killing, either of which, if found correct, would justify a finding that Denton had been murdered, and since the evidence is sufficient to connect the defendant as a guilty agent in the commission of the crime irrespective of which of the two possible theories as to the manner of the killing be correct, it was proper to give an instruction based upon the theory that she aided and abetted in the commission of the murder. If strangulation was the manner whereby Denton was put to death, and if, as her counsel claim, defendant alone could not have strangled a man of Denton's size and weight, and if, nevertheless, she was, as the evidence tended to show, in some manner concerned with the commission of the crime as a guilty agent, it is a legitimate inference that she had accomplices whom she aided and abetted, though there be no direct evidence of that fact; and therefore it was proper to give the instruction. See People v. Wong Hing, 176 Cal. 699, 705, 169 Pac. 357; People v. Billings, supra, 34 Cal. App. 556, 557, 168 Pac. 396. To justify an instruction on an issue raised by the evidence positive testimony is not required. It is sufficient if the fact may reasonably be inferred from circumstances proved. See Turner v. State, 133 Ga. 808, 76 S. E. 349; Thompson v. State, 147 Ga. 745, 95 S. E. 292.

[22-24] The defense requested, and the court refused, an instruction as follows: "If you find the defendant guilty of murder, it will be your duty to determine the degree." The refusal to give this instruction is now assigned as error. By a general instruction on the subject of homicide, the court correctly defined and distinguished the two degrees of murder and manslaughter. This it did so clearly and completely that the jury must have understood what state of facts would constitute each of those offenses. In so charging the jury the court told them that there are two classes which the Legislature has taken upon itself the responsibility of saying shall be murder in the first degree—namely, where the killing is perpetrated by means of poison, etc., or is done in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate some one of the felonies mentioned in the Code; and after so instructing the jury, the court then told them that there is another and much larger class of cases included in the definition of murder in the first degree—viz. those cases where there is a willful, deliberate, and premeditated intent to kill, and that as to this class the Legislature leaves it to the jury to determine the degree of crime. This part of the instruction was couched in the following language:

"In this class [that is, where, not being perpetrated by means of poison, etc., or in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any of the felonies mentioned in the Code, the killing is, nevertheless, willful, deliberate, and premeditated] the Legislature leaves the jury to determine, from all the evidence before them the degree of the crime, but prescribes for the government of their deliberations the same test which has been used by itself in determining the degree of the other two classes, to wit, the deliberate and preconceived intent to kill."

It is provided by section 1157 of the Penal Code that—

"Whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty."

Because of this Code provision, it is claimed that the court, in compliance with defendant's special request, should have specifically instructed the jury that it is their "duty" to determine the degree if they find the defendant guilty of murder. Without doubt, the requested instruction was unobjectionable, and, perhaps, should not have been refused. But even so, we cannot see how defendant was injured by the refusal. As we have said, the court, in its general instruction upon the subject of homicide, clearly defined and distinguished the two degrees of murder, and told the jurors that it is left to them to determine, from all the evidence before them, the degree of the crime, save in those special cases which the Legislature has taken upon itself the responsibility of saying shall conclusively be deemed to be murder in the first degree. This being so, it was not necessary to specifically charge the jurors that, if they found the defendant guilty of murder, it would be their "duty" to determine the degree. It must be assumed that the jurors are fair and intelligent men and women, and that they require no special admonition or instruction as to obvious matters and rudimentary principles of just and intelligent conduct on their part. If, from the care and completeness with which the court, for the guidance of the jurors, defined and distinguished the degrees of murder, the jury did not understand that it was their "duty" to determine the degree of murder of which the defendant was guilty, in the event that they found her guilty of murder at all, then as was said in People v. Scott, 24 Cal. App. 449, 141 Pac. 949, "they were certainly lacking in an essential qualification for jury duty, that is, the possession 'of ordinary intelligence.'" The case falls within the well-established rule that it is not error to refuse to give a special instruction, in itself unobjectionable, if it already has been covered properly and sufficiently by other instructions comprehensive enough to embrace the whole law applicable to that branch of the case.

[25, 26] It is claimed that there was no proof of venue. It is argued that because the venue depends, not upon where the dead body may be found, but upon the place where the mortal wound was inflicted, it may not be inferred that the deceased was killed in Los Angeles county. The objection lacks merit. The venue, like any other fact in a criminal case, may be established by circumstantial evidence. And though no witness testified that Denton was murdered in Los Angeles county, the conviction being based entirely on circumstantial evidence, it is uncontradicted that the body was found in the city of Los Angeles, in the basement of the house that Denton had leased to defendant, many miles from the county line, covered with a mound of dirt, canvas and other articles, showing that the body had been placed there by some one. This evidence, unexplained, was sufficient to justify the jury in concluding that the homicide was committed in Los Angeles county. In Hawkins v. State, 60 Neb. 380, 83 N. W. 198, it was held that—

"Evidence of the finding of the body of the person alleged to have been murdered, in an old well which had been subsequently filled, situate in Frontier county, is sufficient, in the absence of other proof, to warrant the jury in concluding that the homicide was committed in that county."

To the same effect is People v. Kamaunu, 110 Cal. 609, 42 Pac. 1090. See, also, Whar-ton on Homicide, pp. 901, 902.

[27] It appearing to the trial court, after 12 jurors had been impaneled and sworn, that the trial was likely to be a protracted one, and that therefore the case is one calling for an "alternate jury," as provided by section 1089 of the Penal Code, the clerk was ordered to draw from the term trial jury box the name of an additional juror. Accordingly the name of one O'Dell was drawn. After being sworn on his voir dire to make true answers to questions respecting his qualifications, O'Dell was examined, passed for cause, accepted as the "alternate juror," and as such was duly sworn well and truly to try the matter in issue and a true verdict render according to the evidence. We are justified in assuming that this was, in substance, at least, the oath that was administered to O'Dell; for it is the form of oath prescribed by statute for the regular jurors (Code Civ. Proc. § 604), and section 1089 of the Penal Code provides that alternate jurors shall take the same oath as the jurors already selected. Having thus taken the same oath that had been taken by the 12 regular jurors, O'Dell, as such "alternate juror," attended at all times upon the trial of the cause in company with the other jurors, and was seated near, with equal power and facilities for seeing and hearing all the proceedings. Before the submission of the case, and about two weeks after O'Dell had thus been called and sworn as an "alternate juror," and after much evidence had been introduced, one of the regular jurors originally impaneled and sworn to try the matter in issue, Juror Rudd, became so ill that he was unable to continue the performance of his duties as a juror. Whereupon the court ordered that he be excused from further service, and that O'Dell, the "alternate juror," take Rudd's place in the jury box. Everything that was done in this connection is shown by the minutes, and seems to have been in strict accord with the provisions of section 1089. It is now claimed that that section is unconstitutional, in that it deprives a defendant of his right to a trial by jury as known to the common law. We do not think the contention is tenable.

Section 1089, added to the Penal Code by the act of March 28, 1895 (Stats. 1895, p. 279), provides that whenever, in the opinion of the judge of the trial court, the trial is likely to be a protracted one, the court, immediately after the jury is impaneled and sworn, may direct the calling of one or two additional jurors, to be known as "alternate jurors," who shall have the same qualifications as the regular jurors, be subject to the same examination and challenges, and who, after having taken the same oath as the other jurors, shall be seated near, with equal power and facilities for seeing and hearing the proceedings in the case, and shall attend at all times upon the trial in company with the other jurors. It is further provided by the section that if, before the final submission of the case, a juror shall die, or shall become so ill as to be unable to perform his duties, the court may order his discharge and draw the name of an "alternate," who shall then take his place in the jury box and be subject to the same regulations as though he had been selected as one of the original jurors.

Section 7 of article I of the Bill of Rights, contained in the Constitution of this state, provides:

"The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate."

The right of trial by jury, secured in England by Magna Charta and in this country by the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, a right which may not be waived in criminal cases amounting to felony, has always been regarded as sacred, and has ever been jealously guarded by the courts. The provision of our Bill of Rights that the right of trial by jury is to remain inviolate means that all the substantial incidents and consequences which pertain to the right of trial by jury at common law are beyond the reach of hostile legislation, and are preserved in their ancient, substantial extent as they existed at common law. The cardinal principle is that the essential features of trial by jury as known to the common law must be preserved and its benefits secured to all entitled to the right. People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 25 Pac. 481, 11 L. R. A. 75; State ex rel. v. Withrow, 133 Mo. 500, 34 S. W. 245, 36 S. W. 43; 16 R. C. L. 196. The word "inviolable," as used in the Bill of Rights, connotes no more than freedom from substantial impairment, and therefore the Legislature may make any reasonable regulation or condition respecting the mode of enjoying the right. Humphrey v. Eakeley, 72 N. J. Law, 424, 60 Atl. 1097, 5 Ann. Cas. 929; Conneau v. Geis, 73 Cal. 176, 14 Pac. 580, 2 Am. St. Rep. 785; People v. Nakis, supra; People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 48, 18 N. W. 555, 51 Am. Rep. 95; Lommen v. Minneapolis, etc., Co., 65 Minn. 196, 68 N. W. 53, 33 L. R. A. 437, 60 Am. St. Rep. 450. We are thus brought to consider whether our Code provision for calling "alternate jurors" impinges upon any of the substantial incidents and consequences pertaining to the common-law right of trial by jury.

[28] Without doubt, one of the essentials of a jury at common law is that it be composed of 12 persons, and that 12 persons, not more nor fewer, shall pass upon and determine the issues of fact. Jennings v. State, 134 Wis. 307, 114 N. W. 492, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862, and note; 16 R. C. L., p. 221; L. R. A. 1917a, p. 91 et seq., note to Minneapolis, etc., Co. v. Bombolis. Where the procedure provided by section 1089 is followed, the jury before whom the case is actually tried does not at any time consist of more or fewer than 12 persons. Prior to the substitution of the "alternate juror," the case is being tried before the original 12 jurors. Upon the death or discharge of the incapacitated juror and the subsequent substitution of the "alternate," who previously has been examined as to his qualifications, accepted and sworn well and truly to try the matter in issue, the case continues to be tried before 12 persons. Prior to the time when the "alternate juror" is substituted for the dead or incapacitated juror, the "alternate" though he has been chosen and qualified for the possible emergency, sits and listens to the evidence, but he does not during that period of his service sit as a "juror," within the strict literal meaning of the word. He does, however, from the very inception of the proceedings that begin with the introduction of the evidence, sit as one who has all the opportunities that are possessed by the regular jurors to see and hear the witnesses, and as one who is bound by the same oath that was taken by the others to "well and truly try the matter in issue, and a true verdict render according to the evidence."

[29] At common law, according to the established precedents, where a juror has become incapacitated by illness or death after the jury is impaneled and sworn in chief, the proper procedure appears to have been to discharge the entire panel and begin de novo by forming a new jury. Dennis v. State, 96 Miss. 96, 50 South. 499, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 36, and note; West v. State 42 Fla. 244, 28 South. 430; State v. Hazledahl, 2 N. D. 521, 52 N. W. 315, 16 L. R. A. 150. But though this seems to have been the established common-law procedure, the common-law right of trial by jury, as guaranteed by our Bill of Rights, is not impaired by legislation that provides for the discharge of the incapacitated juror only and the calling of a new juror to be sworn and impaneled in his place, the introduction of evidence then to be begun de novo without reswearing any of the remaining 11 jurors or providing for any challenge to them. State v. Davis, 31 W. Va. 390, 7 S. E. 24; West v. State, supra; State v. Hazledahl, supra. Such legislation, says the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals in State v. Davis, supra, "does not abridge the right of the citizen secured to him by the Constitution." The question, therefore, narrows down to this: If an incapacitated juror be discharged during the course of the trial, and an "alternate" impaneled in his place, is it an essential of the right of trial by jury, as guaranteed by our Bill of Rights, that the witnesses be resworn and give their testimony anew? That is, notwithstanding the "alternate" has seen and heard all the witnesses, is it, nevertheless, essential that, so far as the introduction of the evidence is concerned, the trial should be begun de novo?

[30] The Legislature, as we have seen, has the right to make any reasonable regulation or condition respecting the enjoyment of trial by jury, provided only that the essentials of a jury trial as known to the common law remain unchanged. "The essential and substantive attributes or elements of jury trial," says the Minnesota Supreme Court in Lommen v. Minneapolis, etc., Co., supra, "are and always have been number, impartiality, and unanimity." If these three essentials be preserved in all their ancient force and vigor, no reasonable procedural innovation that the Legislature may see fit to adopt will, generally speaking, affect the right guaranteed by the Constitution. These three essentials being completely secured and adequately guarded by suitable legislation, the right of trial by jury will remain "inviolable." Does our Code provision for "alternate jurors" affect any of these three essential attributes of trial by jury? If it does not, then we may confidently affirm that the section does not affect the inviolability of the right of trial by jury.

Clearly, the section does not affect the first of the three essential attributes of a jury trial—number. As we already have pointed out, the trial is by a jury of 12 in every essential particular. Twelve persons, neither more nor less, determine the issues of fact and render the verdict. The same 12 by whom the verdict is rendered have seen and heard, with equal opportunities, all the witnesses in the case, have received the same court instructions, and, under the same legal sanctions, have had imposed upon them the same obligation well and truly to try the matter in issue.

It seems clear that the section cannot affect the second essential of a jury trial—impartiality. The juror who, up to the time when he replaces the dead or incapacitated juror, has sat throughout the trial as an "alternate," hearing and seeing all of the witnesses, has been chosen as such alternate only after an examination as to his qualifications, subject to the same challenges as the other jurors, and upon his being selected as an alternate—i. e., before the introduction of any evidence whatever—he has taken the same oath that was taken by the other jurors—an oath well and truly to try the matter in issue and a true verdict render according to the evidence. Section 1089, Pen. Code, and section 604, Code Civ. Proc. We may not assume that an "alternate," merely because he is conscious that it is possible that he may never be required finally to decide the case as one of the 12 by whom the verdict is rendered, will violate his oath and pay less heed to the evidence than he would if he were impaneled as one of the regular jurors from the inception of the trial. On the contrary, we must assume that he will obey his oath, and that he will well and truly try the matter in issue, as he has sworn to do, just as he would if he were one of the original 12 jurors. Every safeguard that the law has thrown around the regular jurors to insure an impartial verdict, even to the extent of being kept in the custody of the sheriff during the trial, the alternate juror is surrounded with from the commencement to the end of the trial.

Nor can section 1089 affect the third of the three essentials of a jury trial, unanimity. The verdict still must be the unanimous verdict of the 12 jurors to whom the case is finally submitted, even though one of them, before taking the place of the incapacitated juror, sits as an "alternate."

To hold, under these circumstances, that a defendant is deprived of the right to a trial by a jury of 12 simply because one of the 12 by whom the verdict is rendered may, throughout a part of the trial, have sat and listened to the evidence as an "alternate" and not as a regular juror, would be to exalt mere form above substance. To so hold would be to leave untouched the vital springs of reality and grasp at the merest shadow of substance, forgetting that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Our conclusion on this branch of the case is that our Code provision for the selection of an "alternate juror," and, if need be, for his impanelment as one of the 12 to whom the case is finally to be submitted, does not impair any of the essential attributes of a trial by jury.

[31, 32] It next is claimed that the act whereby section 1089 was added to the Penal Code violates the constitutional requirement that "every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." Section 24, art. 4. The title of the act reads:

"An act to amend the Penal Code by adding a new section, to be known as section one thousand eighty-nine of the Penal Code of the state of California, relating to alternate jurors."

Appellant's argument is substantially this: The section relates to proceedings to be had when a juror becomes unable to perform his duties, and provides for the selection of a juror to take his place; the words "alternate jurors" are unknown to the law; therefore, so the argument runs, the words "alternate jurors" give no clue to the purpose of the act. We are unable to agree with this contention. One of the meanings that Webster gives to the word "alternate," used as a substantive, is:

"A substitute; one designated to take the place of another, if necessary, in performing some duty."

For example, in political conventions in the United States an "alternate" is "one authorized to take the place of another in his absence; a substitute." State v. Carroll, 160 Mo. 368, 60 S. W. 1087, quoting from the Century Dictionary. In the title to the act here in question the word "alternate," though employed as an adjective qualifying the word "jurors," is obviously used in the same sense as that above given when employed as a substantive. It is clear, therefore, that the title does express the subject of the act, viz. the substitution for a dead or incapacitated juror of one who has previously been designated to take his place, if necessary. The constitutional provision requiring the subject of an act to be expressed in the title has always been liberally construed. Our Supreme Court has said that this must be so, because the Constitution itself does not define the degree of particularity required, and the matter must therefore be left largely to judicial discretion. It has been said by the Supreme Court that if the title contains a reasonable intimation of the matters under legislative consideration, the public cannot complain (Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 638, 29 Pac. 251), and that it is not required that the title shall disclose the purpose and scope of the act, but it is sufficient if it intelligently refer the reader to the subject to which the act applies or which is affected by it. Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 150, 44 Pac. 915; 45 Pac. 1057. Under the construction thus given to this constitutional provision, it cannot be held that the title here in question does not state the subject of the act with a sufficient degree of particularity. See Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 488, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73.

[33] If it be true, as counsel assert, that section 1089 by implication amends or repeals section 1123 of the Penal Code, the section may not for that reason be held to be unconstitutional. Section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution declares that—

"No law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the act revised or section amended shall be re-enacted and published at length as revised or amended."

It is established by the decisions of this state that an act is not revised nor a section amended, within the purview of the above inhibition, by an act which adds a new Code section and does not purport to repeal or amend any of the sections of the Code to which it is added. An amendment by implication is in no proper sense of the word an "amendment" within the meaning of this constitutional provision. It is not within the evils aimed at by the inhibition. Hellman v. Shoulters, supra, 114 Cal. p. 152, 44 Pac. 915; 45 Pac. 1057; Deyoe v. Superior Court, supra; Matter of Coburn, 165 Cal. 202, 211, 131 Pac. 352.

[34] Equally devoid of merit is the contention that the act whereby section 1089 was added to the Penal Code is unconstitutional because, according to counsel's unsupported assertion, the bill was not read three several days in each house, as provided by section 15 of article 4 of the Constitution. The validity of a statute that has been duly verified, enrolled, approved, and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State cannot be impeached by a resort to the journals of the Legislature or by extrinsic evidence of any character whatever. People v. Camp, 183 Pac. 845, and cases there cited.

[35] Finally, it is urged by defendant that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct during his examination of certain witnesses and in the course of his argument to the jury; and this misconduct is now assigned as reversible error. On his examination of certain of the witnesses the district attorney asked several obviously improper questions. In each instance an objection was at once made and sustained, and the court promptly directed the jury to disregard the question and its implication. It does not appear that the district attorney contumaciously persisted in repeating any improper question after an objection made and a ruling thereon. There is nothing in the record indicating bad faith, or that the questions were asked for the wanton purpose of raising a prejudice against the defendant. It frequently happens that in the heat of a trial counsel ask improper questions. But judgments cannot be reversed for an inadvertence of this character, unless, from an examination of the record, we may be of the opinion that it has caused a miscarriage of justice. In view of the court's prompt rulings and instructions to disregard the questions, which it will be presumed were heeded by the jury, it cannot be said that defendant's cause suffered by reason of anything contained in these questions, however improper they may have been.

[36-38] In the course of his argument to the jury the district attorney, notwithstanding ing the defendant had not taken the stand as a witness in her own behalf, commented upon her appearance while sitting as a prisoner before the bar, saying, among other things, that an innocent woman, facing an ordeal such as defendant was then passing through, could not sit in the courtroom without a tear. This conduct was clearly reprehensible and inexcusable, and it was the duty of the court to have interposed for defendant's protection, as doubtless it would have done had its attention been specifically called to the remarks by timely objection. The district attorney's improper comments on defendant's appearance should, and, had timely objection been made, doubtless would, have met with prompt and effective rebuke. Defendant, who had not tendered herself as a witness in the case, was at the bar of justice, not voluntarily, but by compulsion; and the prosecutor went outside the circle of fair debate when he called attention to her demeanor while at the bar to which she had been haled by the strong arm of the law. Bessette v. State, 101 Ind. 85; Perez v. Territory, 12 Ariz. 16, 94 Pac. 1097. But it does not necessarily follow that this misconduct necessitates a reversal. The decisions of our Supreme Court hold that, unless the defendant objects to the improper remarks and requests an instruction that the jury disregard them, the objectionable statements will not justify a reversal unless the district attorney's misconduct is so flagrantly and obviously prejudicial that neither a retraction nor a rebuke from the court can destroy its influence. Had the court, in response to a seasonable objection, vigorously condemned the prosecutor's remarks, as doubtless it would had its attention been called to them by timely objection, we think that they would have left no prejudicial impression on the minds of the jury. The misconduct complained of in People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 523, 157 Pac. 599, was as flagrant as any shown here. Nevertheless, it was held in that case that it would be most unreasonable to assume that the jury could have been influenced to the prejudice of the defendant if the judge had stated his disapproval of the objectionable remarks. By prompt action, defendant's counsel might have obtained an effective antidote for the poison in the district attorney's improper reference to the accused's appearance. But he failed to act, and defendant is therefore not in a position to have her complaint now considered. People v. Nakis, supra; People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 154, 159, 65 Pac. 295; People v. Babcock, 160 Cal. 537, 544, 117 Pac. 549; People v. Wong Hing, supra.

For the same reason defendant cannot now be heard to complain of the district attorney's verbal assaults on defendant's counsel when criticizing the course pursued by the latter in his conduct of his client's case. Defendant, who, for financial reasons, was unable to employ counsel of her own choice, was represented throughout the trial by the public defender of Los Angeles county, a paid public officer of the county, holding an office of dignity and responsibility, and who seems to have represented defendant with fidelity and zeal, with marked ability and dignified endeavor. Though the remarks directed by the district attorney towards his fellow member of the bar and corepresentative of the public weal may have been a display of poor taste, we do not see how they possibly could have prejudiced the defendant. On the contrary, addressed to fair-minded jurors, they must have recoiled to the prosecution's dire discomfiture—if, indeed, they had any effect whatever. But, be this as it may, inasmuch as the court was not once, during the course of the argument to the jury, requested to instruct the jury to disregard the improper statements of the district attorney, and as such an admonition would, doubtless, have been sufficient to cure any effect the remarks might have produced, the claimed misconduct in the argument cannot be considered on this appeal.

The defendant was ably defended, every opportunity was given her to meet the evidence adduced by the prosecution in support of the charge, the verdict was justified by the evidence, and there is no prejudicial error appearing in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

IMPERIAL VALLEY CO. v. GLOBE GRAIN & MILLING CO. et al. (L. A. 6233.)(Supreme Court of California, Nov. 12, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 12, 1921.)1. Landlord and tenant — 326(1), 328(1)— Lessor held not to have lien on portion of crop.

Where lessees were to raise cotton and deliver to lessor one-fourth thereof as rental, such one-fourth merely measured in cotton the amount of the rental to be paid, and lessor had no title to such portion of the cotton or lien thereon.

2. Trover and conversion — 32(3)—Allegation of ownership held insufficient.

Recitals, in complaint for conversion of cotton, that defendant held warehouse receipts of lessee, including receipts for one-fourth of lessee's cotton owned by the plaintiff, etc., held not a sufficient allegation of ownership, nor to be so construed on appeal to reverse a judgment for the defendant, where directly contrary to direct and specific allegations of the complaint.

3. Appeal and error — 169—Matter not raised in trial court not considered.

A question cannot be considered on appeal which was not raised in the lower court.

4. Appeal and error — 1071(5)—Findings outside of issues tried, disregarded.

Findings of trial court outside of the issues raised by the pleadings and those actually submitted to and tried by the court will be disregarded on appeal.

5. Appeal and error — 931(7)—Presumption indulged in favor of judgment.

On appeal presumptions are indulged in favor of judgments and not against them, and it will be assumed that issues submitted to the trial court were decided in favor of prevailing party.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Imperial Valley Company against the Globe Grain & Milling Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and from an adverse judgment plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sloss, Ackerman & Bradley and Lloyd S. Ackerman, all of San Francisco, and Jas. W. Glassford, of El Centro, for appellant.

J. Stewart Ross and R. B. Whitelaw, both of El Centro (Hickcox, Crenshaw & Trude, of El Centro, of counsel), for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an action to recover $8,470.37 damages for the conversion of 94 bales of cotton. The plaintiff secured judgment against the defendants R. G. Erskine and C. Curtis for this amount sued for, less a payment of $1,499.80 made after the complaint was filed; but the judgment was in favor of the other defendants, Globe Grain & Milling Company, California Food Products Company, First National Bank of Calexico, and First National Bank of Los Angeles. Plaintiff appeals from that portion of the judgment in favor of the defendants upon the judgment roll containing a bill of exceptions in which the only specification of error is that the findings do not support the conclusions of law or the judgment. In appellant's briefs, however, the only portion of the judgment complained of is that in favor of the First National Bank of Los Angeles. Before stating the points relied upon by the parties, some additional facts should be stated.

[1] Plaintiff leased 1,000 acres of land in Lower California, Mexico, to defendants R. G. Erskine and C. Curtis. The lessees were to raise cotton upon the land, and upon harvesting and ginning the same, agreed to render and deliver to the plaintiff one-fourth of the crop as rental. The cotton crop so raised amounted to 378 bales, 94 bales of which plaintiff claims that defendants wrongfully converted to their own use. It is evident that plaintiff's rights must turn upon the question of whether or not it had title to or a lien upon this 94 bales of cotton. The respondent claims that the 94 bales of cotton merely measured in cotton the amount of the rental to be paid by the tenants to the landlord, for which indebtedness they are liable; but this agreement created no title in the landlord to the cotton grown upon the land. This position is correct and is conceded to be so by the appellant. Clarke v. Cobb, 121 Cal. 595, 54 Pac. 74; Holt Mfg. Co. v. Thornton, 136 Cal. 232, 68 Pac. 708.

[2] The complaint does not state a cause of action against the First National Bank of Los Angeles, for the reason that it fails to allege that plaintiff owned the 94 bales of cotton alleged to have been converted by the bank. This point is made for the first time in respondents' final brief, filed after argument. A summary of the allegations of the complaint upon that subject follows:

It is alleged that the cotton crop grown upon the leased land was delivered to the compress yard in Calexico, Cal., by C. Curtis, one of the tenants; that warehouse receipts were taken by him and pledged to the First National Bank of Los Angeles. It is alleged:

"That all of said warehouse receipts including the warehouse receipts for the one-fourth ($\frac{1}{4}$) of said cotton owned by the plaintiff herein, the title to which one-fourth ($\frac{1}{4}$) interest was transferred to the plaintiff herein by the said Erskine and Curtis as payment for rent of the said premises hereinbefore described, and that all of said warehouse receipts are now being held by the said defendant, First National Bank of Los Angeles, or by its agent, the First National Bank of Calexico, and held by them in escrow to satisfy a purported bill of sale and a chattel mortgage, said bill of sale and mortgage heretofore made and delivered by said Erskine and Curtis to the defendant California Food Products Company."

This parenthetical recital cannot take the place of a direct allegation of ownership, nor can it be so construed on appeal to reverse the judgment where the recital is directly contrary to the direct and specific allegations of the complaint. In that regard it is expressly alleged that, under the lease, Erskine and Curtis, the tenants, were to yield and pay as rental one-fourth of the cotton grown on the premises, and that the defendants have, notwithstanding demand therefor, failed, neglected and refused to deliver said one-fourth of said cotton or any part thereof to the plaintiff, and that 378 bales of cotton were grown upon said premises, "of which under the terms of the aforesaid lease the plaintiff is entitled to and should receive free of all charges to the plaintiff at the compress yard in the city of Calexico 94 bales; that the defendants herein unlawfully and in violation of the rights of the plaintiff converted to their own use the said 94 bales of cotton and sold the same, realizing therefrom the sum of $8,470.37," and further alleged that, though often requested, "the defendants, and each of them, have failed, neglected, and refused to pay the plaintiff the value of the share of the plaintiff of the cotton grown on said premises amounting to the sum of $8,470.37" (Italics ours.) The complaint is framed upon the theory that the tenants failed to deliver the cotton to the plaintiff as they had agreed to do and that the subsequent sale and appropriation of the proceeds was a conversion of the property. Under these allegations no cause of action is stated against the First National Bank of Los Angeles, because it is affirmatively alleged that it was holding warehouse receipts issued to one of the tenants entitled to its possession and delivered to the First National Bank as security for an indebtedness owing to the bank, and this the bank had a right to do. The only cause of action stated is against Erskine and Curtis for unpaid rent.

We will not dispose of the appeal wholly upon the ground that the complaint does not state a cause of action against the First National Bank of Los Angeles, because this point was not raised by respondent until its final brief, and no reply was filed thereto. However, the sufficiency of the complaint is involved in the points presented which we will now consider. For that purpose we will state additional facts.

The defendants answered the complaint, after a general demurrer interposed by the Globe Grain & Milling Company was overruled. The answer contained a denial of the allegations of the plaintiff relating to the lease and cotton crop. Among other things, it was denied that the cotton evidenced by the warehouse receipts was grown upon plaintiff's land or that plaintiff had any interest in or to the 94 bales of cotton. Affirmative allegations were made in the answer, to which we will presently refer, which, being quoted in the findings, have given rise to a misunderstanding as to the meaning and intent of the findings leading to a reversal of the judgment in favor of the bank by the District Court of Appeal, which court directed a judgment against the First National Bank of Los Angeles for the full amount claimed. Respondent claimed that this reversal was due to a misunderstanding of the record and, upon its petition, the case was transferred to this court for decision. It has since been argued and briefs filed, by the parties in addition to the petition for transfer and the answer thereto.

The District Court of Appeal reversed the judgment in favor of the First National Bank and ordered judgment against it upon the ground that the findings showed that the bank's claim had been fully paid and there remained in its hand sufficient of the proceeds of the cotton crop grown upon the land to pay the indebtedness due to the plaintiff. We will therefore first address ourselves to a consideration of that question.

The defendants' answer, after a denial of the allegations of the complaint, affirmatively alleges the facts concerning the pledging of the cotton by Erskine and Curtis to the First National Bank of Los Angeles. It alleges the loaning of money by the California Food Products Company to defendant Curtis upon the security of certain cotton, and that this company also advanced money to R. G. Erskine & Co. upon a chattel mortgage and bill of sale of cotton grown on other lands farmed by them, with a guaranty of such indebtedness by C. Curtis. That these obligations and securities were all transferred to the bank, and were all paid, and thereafter the First National Bank of Los Angeles advanced $21,000 to Erskine and Curtis, for which Curtis executed and delivered the collateral notes of Erskine and Curtis and did pledge to and deposit with the First National Bank of Los Angeles cotton represented by negotiable compress receipts as collateral security for the payment of the new liability created by said note, and that at the same time and under the same conditions and with the same understanding the defendant bank advanced $9,000 to R. G. Erskine & Co., and further alleges that "all of which said sums have since been paid by said C. Curtis."

The findings of the court follow word for word the affirmative allegations of the answer with reference to the $21,000 and the $9,000 loans, and recites, in the language of the answer, "all of which said sums have since been paid by said C. Curtis." From this answer it appeared that the defendants were contending, not only that the cotton had been hypothecated to the bank by C. Curtis for an indebtedness, but also admitting that said indebtedness had been fully paid. The answer does not state what became of the cotton, but it does deny any conversion of any interest of the plaintiff therein and denies that plaintiff had any interest therein. The findings in addition to covering and conforming to the affirmative allegations of the answer, contain the following statement concerning the disposition of the cotton not made an issue by either the complaint or the answer.

"6. The crop of cotton raised by the defendants Erskine and Curtis on the land of plaintiff under the aforesaid lease between said defendants and plaintiff was sold as aforesaid and the proceeds thereof paid on the indebtedness of Erskine and Curtis to the First National Bank of Los Angeles, leaving an excess, the amount of which was the sum of $10,434.58; that the rent due plaintiff under its lease with the defendants Erskine and Curtis was the sum of $8,470.37, of which amount $1,499 was paid by the defendants Erskine and Curtis, after all indebtedness to said First National Bank of Los Angeles was satisfied, leaving unpaid and due from the defendants Erskine and Curtis to plaintiff the sum of $6,971.37."

From this condition of the record and findings the Court of Appeal deduced the following conclusion:

"Neither the findings nor the evidence give any justification for the retention of plaintiff's money by the First National Bank of Los Angeles, and, in view of the findings of the trial court that the indebtedness of Erskine and Curtis and of R. G. Erskine & Co. was all paid to the bank and that the bank received from the proceeds of the sale of this property an excess over such indebtedness amounting to over $10,000, it is fair to assume that the bank still held that sum at the time of the trial, or that, in the absence of any reason for its failure to pay to plaintiff the amount due, any disposition which the bank made of the excess was illegal."

Thus the District Court of Appeal reached the conclusion that the bank had in its hands $10,000 belonging to Erskine and Curtis after the payment of all indebtedness due to it by them. We mention this because it now seems to be conceded by both parties that the real situation with reference to the $10,000 is this: That while it is true there was a surplus of $10,000 received from the cotton crop raised upon plaintiff's land, over and above the indebtedness of Erskine and Curtis to the First National Bank, that this balance, with the exception of $1,499 paid to the plaintiff, was applied by the bank to the indebtedness owing by R. G. Erskine & Co. and guaranteed by C. Curtis, and that it was the application of this amount that paid the $9,000 indebtedness of R. G. Erskine & Co., guaranteed by Curtis. In other words, the bank, instead of having $10,000 over and above all indebtedness due it had only $1,499, which has already been applied to the plaintiff's claim. Viewed in the light of this admission, a critical analysis of finding 6, above quoted, reveals that the finding is not inconsistent with the facts as now admitted. That finding was evidently for the purpose of fixing the liability of the defendants Erskine and Curtis and not of the bank.

Before considering the other contentions of the parties, it is proper to say that the District Court of Appeal was no doubt misled as to the facts by the statements and admissions in the briefs of the parties, and in view of the situation now developed, it is proper to call attention to some of the statements in those briefs. In appellant's opening brief, after reciting the advancement of the $21,000 and the $9,000, it is said:

"These loans were made on the additional security of a personal guaranty by C. Curtis, one of the tenants to whom appellant leased, and subsequently C. Curtis paid all of said notes and advances. Appellant's position at the trial was and now is that after Erskine & Curtis' debts had been paid there was a surplus of $10,434.58 out of which appellant was entitled to its rental or crop share, the value of which was $8,470.37; that of this amount $1,499 was paid and the respondent First National Bank of Los Angeles became and was indebted to appellant in the sum of $6,971.37." (Italics ours.)

It was further stated by appellant that there was no dispute on the facts, most of the evidence having been by way of stipulation and there having been no rebuttal by the defendants at the trial. Upon this statement the court was hardly to be expected to note that $9,000 of the $10,434.58 was applied to Curtis' pledge and that it was in this manner only that he paid "all of said notes and advances." The impression gained from this statement is that C. Curtis, from his own resources, had paid the amount of the loan made to him and to his principal, and that there still remained the amount of $10,434.58 in the bank's possession. Respondent did not clear up this uncertainty in his reply brief, but, on the contrary, stated:

"Respondents have only one issue with appellant in the statement of facts: There is no evidence nor finding of any partnership of Curtis and Erskine, nor of R. G. Erskine & Co."

Thus, the respondent apparently conceded that the defendant had in its possession $10,000, belonging to Erskine and Curtis which the plaintiff was justly entitled to apply to the indebtedness due it from Curtis and Erskine.

[3] The contentions of the parties in this court are therefore directed mainly to the question as to whether or not it was proper for the bank to apply the balance of the money received from the cotton grown on plaintiff's land to the indebtedness of R. G. Erskine & Co. guaranteed by C. Curtis, when authorized so to do by C. Curtis. In short, the question raised here is as to the authority of Curtis to pledge the interest of Erskine, as copartner or cotenant, in the cotton grown upon plaintiff's land. This question, which the appellant now seeks to have us determine, was not raised in the lower court and cannot be determined upon this appeal. The allegation of the plaintiff with reference to the lease was merely by way of derailing title to the cotton it claimed had been converted and showing that its claim for rent was unpaid. As already stated, it did not state a cause of action either for conversion or for rent against the defendant bank. A denial of these allegations by the defendant bank raised no material issue. The affirmative allegations of the answer were entirely unnecessary and offered no material issue. The apparent purpose of the respondent bank in the answer was to show good faith in that it had derived nothing from the sale of the cotton over the amount of its indebtedness. Later, a small excess of $1,499 was turned over to plaintiff. It is evident from the record in the trial court that the respondent bank never had its attention directed to the contention now made by the appellant. Its admission in its answer and by a stipulation and the finding based thereon prepared by the defendant clearly indicates that its attention was never directed in that court to the contention made here by appellant.

[4] Not only was there no issue upon the question as to the application of the balance due Erskine and Curtis to the guaranty of Curtis on the R. G. Erskine & Co. indebtedness, but the plaintiff objected to testimony along that line. The objection is as follows:

"Here plaintiff objected to any testimony regarding any negotiations between Clifton Curtis and the First National Bank of Los Angeles and R. G. Erskine & Co., upon the ground that plaintiff is not concerned with any negotiations had between those parties and upon the ground that said negotiations are incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and not within the issues made by the complaint, and upon the further ground that the only subject in controversy is whether or not the Imperial Valley Land Company is entitled to one-fourth of defendants' share of the cotton crop grown upon their land, which objection was overruled by the court and to which ruling plaintiff now excepts." (Italics ours.)

Although the objection was overruled, no evidence was offered with reference thereto other than the stipulation of facts literally conforming to the affirmative allegations of the answer subsequently quoted in the findings of fact by the court referred to above, and so far as the record shows, apart from the admissions of the parties in their briefs in this court, it is a matter of doubt as to whether the balance of $9,000 was paid upon the R. G. Erskine & Co.'s indebtedness. It cannot therefore be said that the right of Curtis to pledge the assets of his copartner or cotenant Erskine was either raised in the pleadings or by consent tried as an issue in the case. That the findings, so far as they tend to support a judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant First National Bank of Los Angeles, are outside of the issues raised by the pleadings and those actually submitted to and tried by the court, and therefore should be disregarded.

[5] On appeal, presumptions are indulged in favor of judgments, and not against them; but, if we assume that the issue of title to the 94 bales of cotton was in fact submitted to and decided by the trial court, its decision was against plaintiff on that issue. The respondent bank has contended throughout the progress of the case in the trial court and on appeal that plaintiff had failed to show any title to the cotton and hence could not recover damages for its conversion. In view of our conclusions, it is unnecessary to consider the effect of the negotiability of the warehouse receipts.

Judgment affirmed.

OBENCHAIN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Sac. 3337.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 14, 1921.)

Mandamus $\S$ 3(1)—Writ on direct application to Supreme Court denied, where petitioner had remedy in District Court of Appeal.

The remedy after denial in the District Court of Appeal of a petition for mandate to compel the superior court to dismiss and quash an indictment against the petitioner or to grant immediate trial is by way of petition to the Supreme Court within the 60 days allowed by the Constitution for an order vacating the judgment and directing a rehearing, so that a direct application for a writ of mandate will be denied.

In Bank.

Application by Madalynne C. Obenchain for writ of mandamus to the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, and Sydney N. Reeve, Judge, requiring the dismissal and quashing of an indictment. Writ denied.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, Charles E. Erbstein, of Chicago, Ill. (Ralph Obenchain, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner.

SHAW, C. J. The petition for a writ of mandate herein, directed to the superior court, Los Angeles county, to compel said court to dismiss and quash the indictment pending therein against petitioner or to grant her an immediate trial of said cause, is denied upon the ground that the remedy of the petitioner in this court, after denial of her petition for such mandate in the District Court of Appeal, is by way of petition to this court, within the 60 days allowed by the Constitution, for an order vacating the judgment of the District Court of Appeal and directing a rehearing of the case in this court.

In re CHEDA'S ESTATE. (S. F. 9998.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 8, 1921.)

Appeal and error ⇨77(1)—Order directing executors to transfer stock appealable.

An order made by the superior court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1597 et seq., directing executors to transfer and deliver to a third party certain shares of bank stock, based on a contract for the sale thereof, was a final judgment, and appealable under section 963, subd. 1, the proceeding being practically one in equity, not controlled by subdivision 3.

In Bank.

In the matter of the estate of S. H. Cheda, deceased. From an order directing delivery of certain stock, the executors appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Henry E. Greer and Thos. P. Boyd, both of San Rafael, for appellants.

Jos. K. Hawkins, of San Rafael, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Motion to dismiss appeal from order on ground that the same is not an appealable order.

The order was one made by the superior court under section 1597 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, directing the executors to transfer and deliver to a third party certain assets of the estate, being certain shares of bank stock. The application for the order and the order were based on a contract for the sale thereof alleged to have been made by the deceased.

The claim that the order is nonappealable is based on the fact that such an order is not specified as an appealable order in the statute specifying the probate judgments and orders from which an appeal may be taken. Subdivision 3, § 963, Code Civ. Proc. If the order here were exclusively a probate order, there would be much force in the claim. We are of opinion, however, that the proceeding authorized by section 1597 et seq. is in substance more than this, being practically a proceeding in equity terminating in a final judgment, having the full force and effect of a final judgment in an action for specific performance of a contract. As such we deem the order made therein a final judgment, appealable under subdivision 1 of section 963, Code of Civil Procedure.

It was for this reason that the motion to dismiss the appeal was denied from the bench.

STATE, by CHAMBERS, Controller, v. ROYAL CONSOL. MINING CO. et al. (Sac. 2892.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1921.)

1. Taxation ⇨647—Judgment against state claiming under invalid tax sale erroneous, in view of tax liens, in decreeing it had no interest or lien.

In view of the lien of taxes, not discharged till payment or a valid sale therefor (Pol. Code, §§ 3716, 3717, 3719), judgment against the state because of invalidity of tax sale under which it claims land is erroneous to the extent that it decrees that because of such invalidity the state has no interest in or lien on the property.

2. States ⇨191(1)—Consent necessary for cross-action for independent affirmative relief against state.

Without consent of the state there cannot be maintained against it a cross-action for independent affirmative relief, so defendant cannot have title quieted in him in action on behalf of the state for possession under tax deed; the general provisions of the law authorizing cross-complaints not giving such consent.

3. Constitutional law ⇨56—States ⇨200—Provision of Constitution as to jurisdiction of courts binding on state.

Const. art. 6, § 5, giving the superior court of the county in which land is located exclusive jurisdiction of action to quiet title to or for possession of it, is binding on the state, because dealing with its sovereign powers; so Pol. Code, § 3773, in terms, conferring on the superior court of a certain county, irrespective of location of land, jurisdiction of action on behalf of the state for possession of land sold to it for taxes, is invalid.

4. Venue ⇨5(3)—Where real question is title location of land determines venue, though action is for rents as well as land.

Where the real question is title, location of land determines venue of action, though it is not only for land, but for the rents and profits thereof.

5. Venue ⇨16½—Location of land governs where action is for possession thereof, though essentially one involving legality of tax.

Though action be essentially one involving legality of a tax, yet it being also one for po-session of land, jurisdiction is in the superior court of the county where the land is located.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by the State of California, by John S. Chambers, controller, against the Royal Consolidated Mining Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to dismiss.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Charles A. Snyder, W. A. Gett, of Sacramento (Downey & Downey, of Sacramento, of counsel), for appellant.

Alfred J. Harwood, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This action is brought by the controller of the state of California, acting under and by virtue of authority conferred upon him by section 3773 of the Political Code to secure the possession of, and the rents, issues, and profits derived from, certain mining properties described in the complaint. Plaintiff alleges that the state of California ever since July 12, 1910, has been the owner of the real property described in the complaint, "being the same land conveyed by Louis Cadematori, tax collector of Calaveras county, state of California, to the state of California, on the 12th day of July, 1910." The defendants deny that the state of California was the owner of said properties on the 12th day of July, 1910, or of any part thereof, and deny that the state of California is the owner of said real property, or any part thereof. They deny that the land or any part thereof was conveyed by Louis Cadematori, tax collector, to the state of California on July 12, 1910, or at any other time. Defendants further aver that the Royal Calaveras Mining Company is the owner in fee simple absolute of the property in question. Defendants pray judgment that plaintiff take nothing by the action, and that defendants have judgment for their costs of suit. The court found that the state of California was not the owner of the property and stated its conclusions of law, as follows:

"I. That the plaintiff is not the owner of the real property described in the complaint, or any part or portion thereof, and that plaintiff has no right, title, or interest in said real property.

"II. That the defendant Royal Calaveras Mining Company, a corporation, is the owner and seized in fee thereof, and is in possession and is entitled to the possession of the same and the whole thereof.

"III. That defendants are entitled to judgment and to their costs of suit."

In the judgment it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed:

"That the plaintiff is not the owner of the real property described in the complaint or any part or portion thereof, and that plaintiff has no right, title or interest in said real property. * * *

"That defendant Royal Calaveras Mining Company is the owner and seized in fee of said real property described in the complaint, and is in possession and is entitled to the possession of the same and the whole thereof."

Then follows the judgment for costs.

The adjudication is, in effect, a judgment quieting the title of the defendant to the property in question against all claims of the state of California of every nature and description.

[1] The judgment here is particularly objectionable by reason of the fact that under our system of taxation the liens for taxes imposed for the five years immediately succeeding the sale and prior to the execution of the deed do not result in a sale and remain liens on the property until payment or a valid sale from the state of California. For the years subsequent to the deed to the state the property is not assessed at all on the theory that the property then belongs to the state, but if the deed to the state is void the inchoate lien of the state for the taxes of succeeding years remains as a burden upon the property until discharged, and therefore a judgment against the state decreeing that the state has not interest in or lien upon the property in question because of defects in or the invalidity of the original tax sale to the state in 1905 is erroneous.

It is well settled that such relief will be denied to a property owner notwithstanding errors in the sale or in the assessment, if it can be ascertained from the assessment that the property owner is liable in justice and good morals to pay a tax thereon which has not been paid. Savings & Loan Society v. Burke, 151 Cal. 616, 91 Pac. 504. Under our system of taxation the lien therefor attaches on the first Monday in March of each year.

"Every tax has the effect of a judgment against the person, and every lien created by this title has the force and effect of an execution duly levied against all property of the delinquent; the judgment is not satisfied nor the lien removed until the taxes are paid or the property sold for the payment thereof." Section 3716, Pol. Code.

Taxes upon personal property and upon the improvements upon real property are also liens upon the real property. Sections 3717 and 3719, Pol. Code. The lien attaches and remains upon the real estate until payment or sale, notwithstanding defects in the assessment, and if the sale is for any reason void, it, of course, does not discharge the lien. If the judgment in this case had been confined to the right of possession of the plaintiff, which depends upon the validity of the tax sale relied upon, the court could have entered such a judgment without requiring the defendant to pay the taxes upon the property. But where, as here, the judgment goes further, and awards affirmative relief to the defendants, it is clearly erroneous, and must be reversed.

[2] The court by its judgment in effect treated the answer as a cross-complaint to quiet title, and quieted the title of the defendant against all claims of the state of California, although such relief was not expressly prayed for by the defendant. The state controller, under the provisions of section 3773 of the Political Code, represents the state for the purposes of requiring an accounting for rents and profits and securing possession of the real property, but he had no authority to represent the state as a defendant in a suit to quiet title, nor had the state authorized itself to be sued in an action to quiet title to determine the validity of liens for taxes or tax deeds issued to it. The defendant, of course, could resist the claims of the state controller made for possession and for an accounting of rents and profits on behalf of the state by any appropriate defense, including the defense of the invalidity of the tax deed (36 Cyc. 910, § 7a), but it could not convert the action brought by the state controller into one against the state for affirmative relief by an application for affirmative relief. The claim against the state could not be maintained in the absence of statutory authority (People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 256; People v. Miles, 56 Cal. 401; People v. Lee Chuck, 74 Cal. 32, 15 Pac. 322), either by complaint or by cross-complaint.

The rule is thus stated in 36 Cyc. 910:

"As a part of his defense defendant may maintain against the state a cross-bill or cross-complaint, provided it relates only to the subject-matter of plaintiff's suit and does not pray for original and independent relief; but he cannot maintain such cross-action for independent affirmative relief; nor can he, without clear statutory authority therefor, claim the benefit of a set-off or counterclaim against the state, constituting an independent cause of action, for this would contravene the rule that a state cannot be sued without its consent, although there is some authority to the contrary"—citing People v. Miles, supra.

The general provisions of the law authorizing cross-complaints do not give the consent of the state to such cross-complaint in an action brought by the state. People v. Miles, supra.

[3] For the reasons above given it will be necessary to reverse the judgment in this case. If the case were to go back for a new trial, it would be proper for us to consider the various points raised as to the validity of the tax deed upon which the plaintiff relies; but we were in doubt as to whether or not the superior court of the county of Sacramento had jurisdiction of this action, notwithstanding the express provisions of section 3773 of the Political Code purporting to grant such jurisdiction. The question is as to the jurisdiction of the superior court under the Constitution itself (article 6, § 5). By this section of the Constitution the superior court of the county in which the land is located is given exclusive jurisdiction of actions to quiet title to or for the possession of such real estate. As this action is clearly one for the possession of real estate, and as the question had not been presented by counsel, we called for argument as to the constitutionality of section 3773, Political Code, which expressly confers jurisdiction upon the superior court of Sacramento county, regardless of the location of the land.

The Attorney General claims that the superior court of Sacramento county has jurisdiction under the provisions of section 3773, Political Code, and that that section is constitutional for the reason that the state is not bound by the general words of the Constitution or statute unless expressly declared so to be, and hence is not bound in actions instituted by it to begin a suit in the superior court of the county where the land is located. He relies upon the rule declared and applied in Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451; Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 240, 241, 90 Pac. 936; City Street Imp. Co. v. Regents, 153 Cal. 776, 778, 780, 96 Pac. 801, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 451; Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 30, 39, 41, 116 Pac. 722; Miller v. Pillsbury, 164 Cal. 199, 201, 202, 204, 205, 128 Pac. 327, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 886; Witter v. Mission School Dist., 121 Cal. 351, 53 Pac. 905, 66 Am. St. Rep. 33. We have had occasion recently to consider the rule with reference to the applicability of laws of general nature to the state and its subdivisions, and a reference to those cases will be sufficient to show the general rule on the subject. See Balthasar v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 202 Pac. 37.

These cases, however, have no applicability to the facts in this case. The people of the state in forming its government, divided its sovereign powers into separate departments—the judicial, the legislative, and the executive. Article 3, § 1, Constitution of California. The people vested directly in the superior court of a county the exclusive jurisdiction to determine controversies over the possession of land and to quiet title thereto. Constitution, art. 6, § 5. If the people by the Constitution had simply directed the Legislature with reference to the establishment of jurisdiction of the several superior courts of the state to give such exclusive jurisdiction, it might be contended with some force that the general direction to the Legislature to vest jurisdiction over cases of certain types to certain superior courts did not apply to actions begun by the state itself. The situation, however, is altogether different. Where the Constitution itself has expressly defined and fixed the exclusive jurisdiction of its courts with reference to actions concerning the possession of real estate, the Legislature cannot, under its general power to legislate, infringe upon the jurisdictional limits established by the Constitution itself, by giving jurisdiction to the superior courts of Sacramento county which the Constitution confers upon the superior court of Calaveras county exclusively. In interpreting the constitutional provisions concerning the organization and jurisdiction of courts we are dealing with the sovereign powers of the state and vesting such sovereign powers in certain departments; hence there is no room for the application of the rule that the state is not affected in the exercise of its sovereign powers by the general language of statute or Constitution applicable to private citizens and alone apparently applicable to the state because of the comprehensive character of the terms used. Here the Constitution is expressly dealing with such sovereign powers. We are dealing as much with the sovereign power of the state in determining the limitation of the jurisdiction of the courts as we are in determining where the legislative power of the state is to be vested. The superior court of a county in exercising its jurisdiction is exercising the sovereign power of the state. Where the limitations of that power are fixed by the Constitution, the mere fact that the state Legislature has all the sovereign powers of legislation, except where restricted by the Constitution, does not authorize the Legislature by statute to vest jurisdiction in opposition to the express terms of the Constitution itself.

It may be conceded, as contended by the Attorney General, that where the government in the exercise of its sovereign power is attempting to use the process of court for the collection of taxes essential to its existence, such actions stand on an altogether different basis from the ordinary actions between citizens. It is recognized in People v. Central Pacific Railroad, 105 Cal. 576, 588, 38 Pac. 905, that special provisions as to procedure may be made by the Legislature in such cases. This concession, however, does not meet the situation with which we are confronted. The people by their Constitution have expressly limited the powers of the superior courts of the state so that no superior court has any right to try actions for the possession of real estate or the quieting title thereto, except such actions as involve real estate within the boundaries of the county, except upon transfer from the superior court of such county. If the Legislature in the exercise of its taxing power desires to avail itself of the courts for the purpose of the collection of taxes, it must act in accordance with the constitutional limitations placed upon the courts. We conclude from the foregoing that the statute in so far as it attempts to give jurisdiction to the superior court of Sacramento of actions for the possession of real estate located in other counties is unconstitutional and void.

[4] The Attorney General also contends that, as the complaint not only prayed for the possession of the land, but also for the rents, issues, and profits thereof theretofore accrued and for a receiver, the action is thus one for both personal relief as well as for possession of land, and hence the constitutional provision does not give exclusive jurisdiction over such an action to the superior court of the county in which the court is located. Upon this proposition the Attorney General relies upon Le Breton v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 27, 30, 4 Pac. 777, Wood v. Thompson, 5 Cal. App. 247, 248, 90 Pac. 38, and also upon cases interpreting section 392, Code of Civil Procedure, as to the jurisdiction of superior courts, such as Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356; Nason v. Feldhusen, 34 Cal. App. 789, 795, 168 Pac. 1162; Weyer v. Weyer, 40 Cal. App. 765, 182 Pac. 776; Warner v. Warner, 100 Cal. 11, 34 Pac. 523; Clark v. Brown, 83 Cal. 181, 23 Pac. 289; Peninsular, etc., Co. v. Pacific S. W. Co., 123 Cal. 696, 56 Pac. 604. On this point it is sufficient to say that the action, in so far as it relates to rents, issues, and profits, is essentially one to quiet title within the meaning of the Constitution, because the right thereto depends upon the issue of title and an adjudication of the right to rents is necessarily determinative of the right to the land itself. This principle was laid down in Fritts v. Camp, 94 Cal. 393, 29 Pac. 867. In that case the plaintiff owning land in Siskiyou county brought suit in Del Norte county to enjoin the defendant from depositing mining debris in Indian creek to the injury of plaintiff's land in Siskiyou county. The complaint alleged that the defendant claimed adversely an easement so to do. The plaintiff disputed the claim, and the court found that there was no easement. The court held that by reason of these issues the exclusive jurisdiction of the case was in Siskiyou county. In the case at bar plaintiff's claim to the rents, issues, and profits of the land is based upon a claim of title thereto, and the defendant resists on the ground that it has title. The court on this issue finds that the defendant has title, and that the plaintiff has no title, and bases its judgment upon this finding. The case of O'Meara v. Hables, 163 Cal. 240, 124 Pac. 1003, is not opposed to this view; that was a suit by a landlord for rents reserved in a lease, and it was held that neither the possession of nor right of possession to the land was a material issue in the case.

The action for rents and profits of land where the right to the title is involved is not a transitory action. The distinction between local and transitory actions is thus stated in 40 Cyc. 59, 63:

"The action must be brought where the land lies if these two things concur: (1) If the subject of inquiry is a right or interest in the land; and (2) if the judgment in the case will operate directly upon this right or interest." 40 Cyc. p. 59.

"When the determination of an estate or interest in land is not an incident in the determination of a cause for equitable relief in trust, fraud, or contract, but is itself the immediate question before the court, and may come within the immediate effect of its decree operating ex proprio vigore, then the venue is local. The real question in all these cases is as to the true nature of the action: Does it turn on the personal obligation or on the title? Does it take immediate effect in personam or upon the interest in the land? And the test here is found, not in any formal characteristic, but in the substantial nature of the action as shown in the pleading, and the kind of judgment which may be rendered." 40 Cyc. p. 63.

It is clear that the demand for rents, issues, and profits of the land in this case does not destroy the local character of the action for possession of the land, and that this case does not come within the purview of cases holding that where a transitory cause of action is properly joined with a local one, the local court does not have exclusive jurisdiction.

It must be concluded that section 3773, Political Code, in so far as it authorizes an action to be brought in Sacramento county for either the possession of lands or for the rents, issues, and profits thereof because of a tax deed to the state, where such lands are in other counties, is void, as a violation of the jurisdiction vested by the Constitution in the superior courts of the respective counties in which the land is located.

[5] It is contended that this action is essentially one "involving the legality of a tax" (article 6, § 5), and hence triable in any county, but if it be conceded to be such an action, it is also one for the possession of real estate and comes within the proviso in article 6, § 5, vesting exclusive jurisdiction in the superior court of the county in which the land is located.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court directed to dismiss the case without prejudice to the rights of the state to renew the action in Calaveras county.

JONES v. DE SHIELDS, Auditor of Tehama County. (Sac. 3233.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 10, 1921.)

1. Counties ⇨74(6)—Provision in Constitution cannot be read into a freeholders' county charter from which it was omitted.

The provision in Const. art. 11, § 7½, subd. 5, that a county freeholders' charter shall provide for fixing and regulation by boards of supervisors by ordinance of the appointment of deputies in the offices of the county, and for their compensation, cannot be read by implication into a charter from which it was omitted.

2. Counties ⇨74(6)—Deputy county clerk and recorder held not a special officer under the freeholders' charter.

Where a county freeholders' charter adopted in pursuance of Const. art. 11, § 7½, did not provide an office of deputy county clerk and recorder, although it fixed the salary of the chief deputy of the county clerk and recorder, the office of deputy county clerk and recorder is not thereby rendered a special one.

3. Counties ⇨74(6)—Freeholders' county charter held not to provide for appointment and compensation of deputy county clerks.

Where the chief deputy county clerk and recorder was not a special county office in a county governed by a freeholders' county charter, the appointment and compensation of the office are governed by Const. art. 11, § 7½, providing that the charter shall provide for the appointment and compensation of such officers by ordinance of the board of supervisors, and where the charter omitted such a provision, a clause contained in the charter fixing the salary of the chief deputy county clerk and recorder is inoperative, either as creating an office, prescribing the manner of appointment, or fixing the salary, and another clause of the charter denying to the board of supervisors the power to legislate concerning the appointment and compensation of assistants and deputies already provided for by the charter is unconstitutional.

4. Statutes ⇨64(4)—Freeholders' county charter not rendered invalid as a whole because omitting regulation of deputyships by board of supervisors.

A county freeholders' charter omitting a provision for the regulation of deputyships in county offices by ordinance of the county board of supervisors as required by Const. art. 11, § 7½, is not rendered invalid as a whole thereby.

5. Counties ⇨74(6)—General law held to apply to office of deputy county clerk in absence of provision in county freeholders' charter.

Under Const. art. 11, § 7½, providing that county freeholders' charter, upon being ratified by the Legislature, shall supersede all laws inconsistent with such charter relative to the matters provided in it, and that the general laws shall be superseded by the charter as to such matters for which it is competent to make provision in the charter, and for which the provision is made therein, where a county freeholders' charter failed to provide for the appointment and compensation of a deputy county clerk and recorder by the board of supervisors, as required by Const. art. 11, § 7½, the general law applies, and under Pol. Code, § 4266, a deputy county clerk appointed regularly under the provisions of section 4024 is entitled to a salary of $1,200 per year.

6. Officers ↵47—In appointment as chief deputy, there being no such office, the word "chief" is immaterial.

Where the instrument of appointment designated the appointee as chief deputy when the office was deputy, the word "chief" should be considered immaterial in considering the validity of his appointment. (Per Shaw, J.)

7. Counties ↵74(6)—Attempted provision in freeholders' charter for salary of chief deputy county clerk prevents setting of salary by county board of supervisors.

Where a county freeholders' charter attempted to provide for the salary of the chief deputy county clerk, a provision of the charter that the board of supervisors should appoint county and district officers other than elective officers, their assistants and deputies, and should provide by ordinance for the terms of office and compensation, cannot be construed to authorize the supervisors to provide compensation for the chief deputy county clerk. (Per Shaw, J.)

Application by Sutherland H. Jones for writ of mandate against George M. De Shields, as auditor of Tehama County. Writ to issue.

F. L. Butterway, of Red Bluff, for petitioner.

M. J. Cheatham, Dist. Atty., of Red Bluff, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate directed to respondent as auditor of Tehama county, commanding him to draw a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of petitioner's salary as chief deputy county clerk for the month of November, 1920.

The facts are not in dispute. Petitioner on April 5, 1920, was appointed by the county clerk of Tehama county to the position of chief deputy county clerk. The appointment was made in writing, which was filed in the office of the county clerk, and petitioner took the oath of office. From April 5 to December 1, 1920, petitioner performed the duties of the office and regularly on the 1st of each and every month drew his salary of $100 for the previous month. On the latter date respondent refused to draw his warrant for petitioner's salary for the month of November, and petitioner sued for a writ of mandate in the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District. The writ was issued. A petition for a hearing of the matter in this court was granted.

The county of Tehama adopted a freeholders' charter pursuant to section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution, which was subsequently ratified by the Legislature. Stats. 1917, p. 1877. The said section requires that charters adopted under it shall provide:

"5. For the fixing and regulation by boards of supervisors, by ordinance, of the appointment and number of assistants, deputies, clerks, attaches, and other persons to be employed, from time to time, in the several offices of the county, and for the prescribing and regulating by such boards of the powers, duties, qualifications and compensation of such persons, the times at which, and the terms for which they shall be appointed, and the manner of their appointment and removal."

It declares further that—

The charter "may provide as follows: For officers other than those required by the Constitution and laws of the state, or for the creation of any or all of such offices by boards of supervisors for the election or appointment of persons to fill such offices, for the manner of such appointment, for the times at which and the terms for which such persons shall be so elected or appointed, and for their compensation, or for the fixing of such compensation by boards of supervisors."

The Tehama county charter contains no provision for the fixing and regulation, by the board of supervisors, of the manner of appointment or removal, the number, or the compensation of deputy county clerks. In fact, deputies and assistants of elective officers are excepted from the list of such officers as are to be appointed by the supervisors. The charter does provide for a county clerk, who is to be elected, and who is to be ex officio recorder. It also provides that—

"Each county officer shall have the powers and perform the duties now or hereafter prescribed by general law as to such officer, except as otherwise provided by this charter, and shall have and perform such other powers and duties as are or shall be prescribed by this charter."

There is no provision that the county clerk or any other officer may appoint his deputies. The position of chief deputy county clerk is not expressly created, but in section 2 of article 4, concerning salaries, it is provided that the county clerk's "chief deputy shall receive one thousand two hundred dollars per annum." The board of supervisors has never created the position of chief deputy county clerk or provided compensation for such office.

Petitioner contends that it was the intention of the framers of the charter to make the office of chief deputy county clerk and recorder of Tehama county a special office, and that as such it would not be subject to change in any way except by a vote of the electors amending the charter; that section 4266 of the Political Code, providing salaries for officers of counties of the class within which Tehama county falls, has been superseded by the charter, and that therefore he is entitled to his salary under the charter provision, but that, if it be held that petitioner is not legally entitled to his salary under the charter, then section 4266 of the Political Code must be applied, and that he would be entitled to his salary for November, 1920, under that section.

Respondent asserts:

"Our claim is that, in attempting to fix or limit the salaries of deputies directly by the charter and by not making any provision for the board of supervisors to so fix such salaries, the framers of the charter exceeded their authority, and that so far as the charter purports to fix such salaries of deputies that portion of the charter is unconstitutional."

[1] Respondent further states that—

"Since subdivision 5 provides for the fixing and regulation by the supervisors by ordinance of the appointment and number of assistants, deputies, etc., and for their qualifications and compensation, and the Tehama county charter contains no provision for such method of prescribing the compensation of the deputies in the several offices of the county of Tehama, we claim that the board of supervisors would be authorized to make the provision by ordinance for the number of deputies, their qualifications and compensation by virtue of the Constitution itself which can be read into the charter the same as if it had been made a part thereof by the framers of the charter themselves."

We do not think the charter can be thus interpreted, for it is not to be assumed that it would have been adopted by the voters had the additional provision required by the Constitution been included. To add this provision would be to create a new and different charter.

[2] Petitioner's contention that he occupies a special office of deputy county clerk and recorder cannot be maintained. The charter does not create such an office, nor provide compensation therefor. It does fix the salary of the county clerk as county clerk and recorder, and does provide that "his chief deputy shall receive one thousand two hundred dollars per annum." It cannot be held that the charter by this provision has made petitioner's office a special one thereunder—one not within the mandate of the Constitution. In providing the salary the charter only has reference to the office as a deputyship in the office of the county clerk. As such it is one of the positions contemplated by section 7½, art. 11, of the Constitution, for that provision concerns the appointment and regulation of deputies generally, and does not except chief deputies.

[3] As pointed out, that section of the Constitution requires that a charter adopted pursuant thereto shall provide for the fixing and regulation by ordinance of the board of supervisors of the manner of appointment or removal, the number and the compensation of deputies. Petitioner's position being that of a deputyship in a county office, and such deputyship not being a special county office, it is to be governed by section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution so far as the manner of appointment and compensation are concerned. Therefore that portion of section 2 of article IV of the charter, prescribing the salary of the chief deputy, is inoperative, either as creating the office, prescribing the manner of appointment, or fixing the salary. Also section 9 of article II of the charter, in so far as it denies to the board of supervisors the power to legislate concerning the offices of assistants and deputies, is not in conformity with section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution, and is invalid. There is, therefore no provision in the charter of Tehama county for the appointment and compensation of deputy county clerks.

[4] It thus appears that the charter is not in conformity with the Constitution in this respect, inasmuch as it does not contain a provision which the Constitution declares is essential. The question has been suggested whether this failure to observe the constitutional requirement does not render the charter entirely inoperative. In Brooks v. Fischer, 79 Cal. 173, 177, 21 Pac. 652, 4 L. R. A. 429, the court, in discussing the charter of the city of Los Angeles, said:

"The further objection is that the charter, if properly adopted, must be held to be invalid, for the reason that it is in conflict with the general laws of the state.

"Under the provisions of the Constitution, the charter * * * must be 'consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this state.' It is contended by the petitioner that certain provisions of the charter are inconsistent with existing general laws, and particularly that it is in conflict with the general law with reference to the improvement of streets. It may be that certain of its provisions are inconsistent with present laws, and that so far it cannot be effective as against such laws, but this is a matter that it is unnecessary for us to determine. It is enough to say that the whole charter cannot be held to be invalid because of the fact that a few of its provisions may conflict with the general statutes now in force."

In Winter v. De Shields, 189 Pac. 703, it was contended that the same charter of Tehama county under consideration in the case at bar was unconstitutional as a whole. Among the reasons assigned was that sections 5, 9, 10, and 11 of article II of the charter contravened subsections 4 and 5 of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution. The court, holding the charter as a whole to be valid, declared:

"Without entering into an examination of the objections raised by the petitioner to the charter, it is sufficient to say that, even if these objections possessed merit, still they would not render the whole charter of the county null and void and would have no bearing upon the question of the validity of the provision of the charter which fixes the salary of the assessor at the sum of $2,000 per annum.

"The rule is well settled in California that, while a charter should be consistent with the Constitution of the state, the whole charter cannot be declared null and void because it may contain certain provisions that are inconsistent with the Constitution of the state at the time of its adoption."

It follows that the charter does not become totally invalid because it failed to provide for the regulation of deputyships by the board of supervisors.

[5] Respondent further states that—

"No provision having been made by the Tehama county charter for the payment of the salary of the deputy county clerk, it might be determined that he would be entitled to his salary under the provisions of section 4266 of the Political Code, which provides a salary of $1,200 per annum for a deputy county clerk."

Section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution provides:

That a charter upon its ratification by the Legislature "shall become the charter of such county and shall become the organic law thereof relative to the matters therein provided, * * * and shall supersede all laws inconsistent with such charter relative to the matters provided in such charter," and that "whenever any county has framed and adopted a charter, * * * the general laws * * * shall, as to such county, be superseded by said charter as to such matters for which, under this section it is competent to make provision in such charter, and for which provision is made therein, except as herein otherwise expressly provided." (Italics ours.)

These provisions contemplate that there may be a case where a charter will fail to provide for matters which it properly should cover, and the intention is clear that in such a situation the general law, which in such a case has not been superseded by the charter, shall govern. See Cline v. Lewis, 175 Cal. 316, 165 Pac. 915. Such a situation is presented here, and it follows that the general law on the subject of petitioner's appointment and compensation has not been superseded, but remains effective. The provision of the general law which is applicable to Tehama county in the absence of a charter provision is contained in section 4266 of the Political Code, which reads in part as follows:

"In counties of this class the county clerk may appoint a deputy, which office of deputy county clerk is hereby created, and said deputy shall receive as compensation for his services the sum of twelve hundred dollars per annum."

Section 4024 of the Political Code provides:

"Every county, township, or district officer, except a supervisor or judicial officer, may appoint as many deputies as may be necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Such appointment must be made in writing, and filed in the office of the county clerk; and until such appointment is so made and filed, and until such deputy shall have taken the oath of office, no one shall be or act as such deputy."

The petition in this case shows, as stated above, that the requirements of this section of the Code have been complied with; that petitioner's appointment was in writing; that it was filed in the office of the county clerk; and that he has taken the oath of office. Consequently he is entitled to receive his salary as deputy county clerk. However, he is to receive compensation under the provisions of section 4266 of the Political Code, and not by virtue of the charter of Tehama county.

For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that a peremptory writ of mandate issue out of this court, directed to respondent auditor of Tehama county, commanding him to draw his warrant upon the treasurer of said county for the sum of $100 in payment of petitioner's salary as chief deputy county clerk and recorder for the month of November, 1920.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur in the judgment.

SHAW, J. I concur in the judgment, but for reasons somewhat different from those set forth in the opinion of Mr. Justice LAW-LOR.

[6] The petitioner was appointed deputy county clerk of the county of Tehama by the clerk thereof. In the instrument of appointment he was named as "chief deputy." The word "chief," however, should be considered immaterial in considering the validity of his appointment as a deputy county clerk, if, as is contended, there is no office specifically designated as "chief deputy county clerk." He prays for a writ of mandate to compel the auditor to issue a warrant for his salary at the rate of $100 a month for services rendered as such deputy county clerk; the auditor having refused on demand to issue such warrant.

Tehama county is operated under a special charter framed and adopted in pursuance of section 7½, art. 11, of the Constitution. That section authorizes any county to frame a charter for its own government in the manner therein provided. It provides that, when such charter is duly framed and approved by the Legislature, it—

"shall become the charter of such county and shall become the organic law thereof relative to the matters therein provided * * * and shall supersede all laws inconsistent with such charter relative to the matters provided in such charter."

Subdivision 4 of the portion thereof declaring what it shall be competent to insert in such charters is as follows:

"For the powers and duties of the board of supervisors and all other county officers, for their removal and for the consolidation and segregation of county offices, and for the * * * filling of all vacancies occurring therein; provided, that the provisions of such charters relating to the powers and duties of boards of supervisors and all other county officers shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

This proviso is probably modified to some extent by a subsequent provision as follows:

"Whenever any county has framed and adopted a charter, and the same shall have been approved by the Legislature, as herein provided, the general laws adopted by the Legislature in pursuance of sections four and five of this article, shall, as to such county, be superseded by said charter as to matters for which, under this section it is competent to make provision in such charter, and for which provision is made therein, except as herein otherwise expressly provided."

Sections 4 and 5 of this article referred to in the last quotation are the sections which authorize the Legislature to establish a system of county governments and to provide by law for the appointment of the several county officers named in said section 5 and to prescribe their duties and regulate their compensation.

It will be seen from these provisions of section 7½ that the powers and duties of county officers in any county adopting a special charter under that section remain subject to and controlled by general laws respecting anything relating thereto concerning which the charter makes no provision. If, therefore, we find no valid provision in the charter with respect to the appointment and compensation of deputy county clerks, it would follow that the provisions of the general law regarding them would prevail. The charter contains certain provisions on that subject with respect to county clerks. It provides that there shall be a county clerk and that he "shall be ex officio recorder." Stats. 1917, p. 1883. It further provides that his salary as clerk and recorder shall be $2,400 per annum and that "his chief deputy shall receive one thousand two hundred dollars per annum." Article 4, § 2, Stats. 1917, p. 1883. It also provides in section 4 of article 3 that—

"Each county officer shall have the powers and perform the duties now or hereafter prescribed by general law as to such officer, except as otherwise provided by this charter."

[7] Section 9, art. II, of the charter, provides that—

"The supervisors shall appoint all county and district officers other than elective officers, their assistants and deputies, except as otherwise provided in this charter," and shall provide by ordinance for the terms of office and for the compensation of these appointive officers, "unless such terms of office * * * are otherwise provided by law or by this charter."

Inasmuch as the compensation of the chief deputy clerk was attempted to be provided for by the charter in article IV aforesaid, it follows that this last provision cannot be construed to authorize the supervisors to provide compensation for such chief deputy county clerk.

It is conceded by the parties hereto that the supervisors have never by ordinance or otherwise appointed or provided for the appointment of any deputies or fixed the compensation of any of them.

The provisions of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution above set forth, it is to be observed, do not authorize the Legislature, or the county, by means of a freeholders' charter, to provide directly for the appointment of deputy county officers or for their compensation. On the contrary, that section prescribes in subdivision 5, as above shown, that the charter shall provide for the fixing and regulation by the board of supervisors by ordinance for such appointment and compensation. The matter is not to be fixed by the charter itself, but by ordinance adopted by the board of supervisors. It follows, therefore, that the charter contains no valid provision either for the appointment of the petitioner or other person as deputy county clerk, or for his compensation when appointed. Also it follows from the fact that the charter contains no provision therefor that the provisions of the general law empowering the county clerk to appoint his own deputy and fixing the compensation of such deputy are not superseded by the charter, but remain in full force as if no charter had been adopted. The conclusion is therefore inevitable, since the general law allows the deputy county clerk a salary of $100 per month, and since his appointment as chief deputy is in substance an appointment as deputy county clerk, that the petitioner is entitled to the salary demanded by him, and that the writ of mandate should issue as prayed for.

KERR v. REED et al. (L. A. 6547.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1921.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨76, 148—Payment and execution of deed held concurrent conditions; tender necessary to put vendee in default, unless waived.

When the final payment comes due under a contract in which time is of the essence, the obligation to make the payment and the obligation on the part of the vendor to make a deed are dependent and concurrent conditions, under Civ. Code, § 1439, and vendee is not in default until vendor has tendered a deed, or tender has been waived.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨334(6)—Vendee entitled to rescind and recover money paid on breach by vendor.

If a vendor under a contract for sale of land sells the land to a third party while the contract is still in force, without any arrangement by which he can subsequently make title to the vendee, the sale constitutes a breach of contract, which entitles the vendee to rescind and recover money paid.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨335—Defaulting purchaser cannot recover purchase money.

A purchaser in default cannot recover purchase money paid.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(3)—Finding that vendee did not waive tender of deed sustained.

In an action by vendee to recover money paid on contract to purchase land, held, that a finding that the vendee had not waived tender of deed by vendor after final payment was due was warranted by the evidence.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨148—Tender of deed by vendor, how waived.

Tender of deed by vendor after installment is due entitling vendee to a deed under a contract of which time is of the essence, may be waived by the vendee expressly or by implication, or excused by conduct showing that the tender would be in vain and a useless ceremony.

6. Appeal and error ⇨842(2)—Waiver by vendee of tender of deed after payment due question of fact.

The question of waiver by a vendee of tender by vendor of deed after installment due entitling vendee to the deed, under a contract of which time was of the essence, is a question of fact, and a finding of waiver, supported by sufficient evidence, is binding upon appeal.

Action by John N. Kerr against David C. Reed and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Britt & Cosgrove, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Dwight D. Bell, of San Diego, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an action brought by a vendee of real estate to recover from the vendor installments of the purchase price paid to him, amounting to $5,600, upon the theory that the contract dated December 4, 1912, had been rescinded by mutual consent. The contract price was $25,000; $5,000 paid upon the execution of the contract; $5,000 and a mortgage for $15,000 for the balance of the purchase price to be paid December 4, 1913, interest at 6 per cent. payable quarterly. Interest was paid as follows: $300, March 15, 1913; $150, June 4, 1913; $150, July 1, 1913; $65.63, September 4, 1913; $69.-03, November 10, 1913. The vendee on December 4, 1913, was in default as to the interest, $165.34, and also had failed to pay the taxes due in November, but in lieu thereof had given a note for $182.87. Time was made of the essence of the contract by the following clause:

"Time is hereby declared to be of the essence of this contract, and should purchaser fail or neglect to make said deferred payments, or any of them, at the times and in the manner herein provided, then and in that event this receipt and contract shall at once become null and void, and the said parties of the first part shall be at once released from any and all obligations to make any conveyance hereunder, or to convey the property herein described to said purchaser. It being agreed that it is impossible to fix and determine the actual damage arising out of the failure of said purchaser to make said preferred payments, it is hereby agreed that all moneys paid upon the purchase price of said property shall be by the parties of the first part retained and held as and for liquidated damages arising and caused by the failure of the said purchaser to comply with the terms hereof.

"And the parties of the first part, on receiving such payment, at the time and in the manner above mentioned, agree to execute and deliver to the party of the second part, or to his assigns, a good and sufficient deed conveying said property to said party of the second part or his lawful assigns, and to furnish a certificate of title from the Union Title & Trust Company, showing property free and clear of incumbrance from date of November 23, 1912."

[1] Nothing was done on the 4th of December, 1913, by either party. The vendee had been placed in possession under the contract, that is to say, under the arrangement made the rents from the property were collected by an agent and credited to the vendee on account of the interest due on the contract. Some time after the 4th day of December, 1913, at the direction of the defendant, this agent began to credit the rentals to the vendor. It is thoroughly established that when the final payment comes due under a contract in which time is the essence of the contract, the obligation to make the payment and the obligation on the part of the vendor to make a deed are dependent and concurrent conditions. Section 1439, Civ. Code; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 297, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126, and cases cited; Sausalito, etc., Co. v. Sausalito Imp. Co., 166 Cal. 302, 308, 136 Pac. 57; Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 6, 10, 183 Pac. 148; Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 1, 3, 183 Pac. 150; Hoppin v. Munsey, 193 Pac. 398.

[2, 3] On December 4, 1913, the date of the final payment, the vendor was to give the deed and the purchaser to tender the purchase money. Without action on the part of either, neither could claim the other was in default. The plaintiff testified and the court found that he was totally unaware of any intention on the part of the vendor to declare a forfeiture or to consider the contract terminated until July, 1914, when he was notified that the vendor had sold the property. This sale was made June 15, 1914, without any arrangement by which the vendor could subsequently make title to the plaintiff herein, and, consequently, if the contract was then in force as to both parties, the sale constitutes a breach of contract on the part of the vendor which the vendee might take advantage of by rescission and suit to recover money paid on account of purchase price. Brimmer v. Salisbury, 167 Cal. 522, 140 Pac. 30. The vendor has never tendered the vendee a deed, nor has the purchaser ever tendered the purchase money. The plaintiff does not allege that he was at any time ready, able, and willing to pay the purchase price, and relies wholly upon the implied rescission arising from the sale by the vendor to a third party and plaintiff's subsequent demand for a return of the purchase money theretofore paid by him as a consent thereto.

This case was previously tried and a motion for a nonsuit was granted. An appeal was taken to this court and assigned to the District Court of Appeal, Second Division, where the judgment was reversed. Kerr v. Reed, 39 Cal. App. 11, 179 Pac. 399.

Upon the new trial the plaintiff recovered judgment for the full amount paid by him on the contract, less the rental value of the premises during the time he was in possession. The vendor appeals from this judgment. He claims that the respondent waived a formal tender of the deed on December 4, 1913, and therefore that such tender was unnecessary to put the vendee in default. Hoppin v. Munsey, supra. Mr. Swayne, Mr. Fleet, and the defendant testified that the day before the final payment came due, to wit, December 3, 1913, the vendee stated to the vendor that it would be impossible for him to make the payment which was due the next day; that he was "all in" and could not raise the money; and that the vendor thereupon stated that he would give no extension of time and would stand on the contract. The defendant also testified that the plaintiff had made similar statements in September, 1913; that plaintiff then said that he would be unable to meet his payments any more; that he was "all in"; that he had to pay some notes for his father-in-law in Denver, and he could not pay any more. He said he had put in about $25,000 in San Diego and it would all be a loss. This testimony, if believed by the trial court, would undoubtedly be sufficient to justify a finding by that court that the tender of the deed on December 4th was waived, and that the purchaser being in default, had no right to recover the purchase money theretofore paid by him. Hoppin v. Munsey, supra. The testimony of the plaintiff, however, conflicted with that of the defendant and his witnesses.

[4] The plaintiff testified that in July, 1913, he was unable to pay the full amount of the $300 due as interest, and that the defendant told him to do the best he could and that he would let the rents apply on the interest as collected; that about November 20, 1913, the payment of $5,000 due December 4, 1913, was mentioned by Mr. Fleet, defendant's agent. Plaintiff testified: "I told him I didn't think I would be able to meet it at that time, and he said not to let it worry me; that they would take care of it all right." At that time it was arranged that the defendant would pay the taxes then due on the premises, which the vendee had contracted to pay, and to accept a written agreement of plaintiff bearing interest in lieu of such payment. Plaintiff testified that no other conversation occurred with either Mr. Fleet, Mr. Swayne, or Mr. Reed until December 10, 1913, and that he had not seen any of them between November 20th and December 10th; that on December 10th he asked Mr. Fleet, defendant's agent, for a written statement as to when he might pay the balance due on the contract. To his request Mr. Fleet responded: "Well, don't ask Mr. Reed for any written statement on this. He has never taken anybody's money and he won't take yours." Subsequently plaintiff stated he talked with Mr. Reed, the defendant, who told him not to worry; that it could be arranged some way; that neither the defendant nor Mr. Fleet informed the plaintiff at these conversations that they considered the contract forfeited or that they considered themselves in possession of the property. The plaintiff admitted on cross-examination that on December 4, 1913, he did not have sufficient funds to meet the $5,000 payment, but that he did have some money and property from which money could be raised. The plaintiff does not specifically deny the above-mentioned conversations testified to by defendant and the witnesses Swayne and Fleet as having occurred between November 20th and December 4th, except by denying that any conversation occurred between November 20th and December 4th. It is contended by appellant that plaintiff in effect merely denied the date of the conversations and not the conversations themselves. But the court may well have believed that he meant to deny the conversations. If we accept the plaintiff's testimony, it follows that, whatever may have been said before the 20th of November 1913, the parties then regarded the contract as still in force. The plaintiff then gave a new obligation to pay the taxes then due under the contract, and requested and received assurance that he would not be pressed for the payment due December 4, 1913.

[5, 6] The tender of the deed was due from the defendant on December 4th. The tender could have been waived by the vendee expressly or by implication or excused by conduct showing that the tender would be a vain and useless ceremony. Hoppin v. Munsey, supra. There was no express waiver of the tender of the deed, and the implied waiver to be inferred from the conversation of November 20th, testified to by the plaintiff, was, of course, conditioned upon the waiver of payment when due. Hence, if the defendant had tendered his deed on December 4th, he might be in a condition to declare a default for the nonpayment of the amount then due, but without such tender it is clear he could not declare such default unless the tender was excused under the law, on the theory that it would have been a useless ceremony. Hoppin v. Munsey, supra. But here, according to plaintiff's testimony, both parties regarded the contract as still in force, after the plaintiff's statements of his inability to pay, and for that reason made arrangements to pay the taxes, and, according to the plaintiff, on December 10th defendant recognized the contract as still in force. In this state of the evidence the trial court found the fact to be:

"That plaintiff never, by act, word, or otherwise, waived any provision or covenant of, or right under, the contract. * * *"

While this finding is attacked as not supported by the evidence, the testimony of the plaintiff was sufficient to support the finding, notwithstanding his failure to specifically deny the conversations attributed to him by defendant's witnesses. The question of waiver is a question of fact, and when supported by sufficient evidence to justify the inference of waiver is binding upon this court. In view of this finding and others by the court along the same line, we have the simple situation where both parties to a contract in which time is made the essence thereof, allow the date of final payment to pass without action. Under these circumstances neither party can be subsequently placed in default by the other without a tender. Lemle v. Barry, supra. It follows that the contract was in full force and effect at the time the vendor made the conveyance to a third party and thereby breached his obligation. The plaintiff was justified in treating this as a rescission and upon consenting thereto to sue for a recovery of the money paid by him.

Appellant strongly relies upon the cases of Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, and Schwerin Estate Realty Co. v. Slye, 173 Cal. 170, 159 Pac. 420, and also upon the case of Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, 162 Cal. 539, 123 Pac. 363. It is sufficient to say that the contract in the case at bar is substantially identical with that involved in the recent cases of Lemle v. Barry, supra, and Hoppin v. Munsey, supra, and, being controlled by these late cases if any inference is to be derived from the cases relied upon by the appellant pointing to a different conclusion, a point which we need not decide, these cases are controlled by the more recent decisions of Lemle v. Barry, supra, and Hoppin v. Munsey, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELDER et al. v. DOSS et al., Board of Sup'rs.
(S. F. 9908.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1921.)

1. Counties ⇨2—Statute for creation may prescribe conditions in addition to those prescribed by Constitution.

While under Const. art. 11, § 3, a new county cannot be created except under general and uniform laws which the Legislature may provide subject to certain limitations, the Legislature may prescribe conditions for such formation other than those prescribed by the Constitution, so long as they are consistent therewith.

2. Mandamus ⇨10—Statutes ⇨64(4)—Invalidity of condition in acts for formation of new counties held to render whole of such acts void; mandamus not granted for consideration of petition for formation of county contrary to provision of statute, it being valid or there being no statutory authority.

It cannot be assumed that the acts for formation of new counties (St. 1907, p. 275, § 1, amended by St. 1909, p. 194, § 1) would have been passed without the provision thereof that no new county shall be formed which shall reduce the area of an existing county to less than 1,200 square miles; so, if such condition is not valid, the whole of such acts is void, and there is no general law for the formation of new counties, as is necessary under Const. art. 11, § 3; either alternative preventing the granting of mandamus compelling the consideration of a petition for formation of a new county which would so reduce an existing county.

In Bank.

Original mandamus proceeding by James W. Elder and others against H. F. Doss and others, constituting the Board of Supervisors of the County of Sonoma. Dismissed.

Hartley F. Peart, of San Francisco, and Frank J. Burke and E. J. Dole, both of Petaluma, for petitioners.

G. W. Hoyle, Dist. Atty., of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the board of supervisors of Sonoma county to appoint a day for the hearing of a petition for the organization of a new county out of territory wholly within the territory of Sonoma county. The petition failed to show that the creation of the new county would not reduce the area of Sonoma county to less than 1,200 square miles, and it is conceded that it would so reduce such area. Both the act of 1907 providing for the formation of new counties (Stats. 1907, p. 275) and the act of 1909 amendatory thereof (Stats. 1909, p. 194), the only statutes on the subject, provided as follows:

"Nor shall any new county be formed which shall reduce to less than twelve hundred square miles the area of any existing county from which territory is taken to form such new county."

The petition purported to be signed by more than one-half of the qualified electors living within the territory to be comprised in the new county, a sufficient compliance in that respect with the act of 1907, but it did not purport to be signed by 65 per cent. of such qualified electors, as required by the amending act of 1909, or by not less than 50 per cent. of the qualified electors residing in the county, as required by such amending act. For these reasons the board refuses to proceed on the petition, and denied the same.

At the very threshold plaintiffs are met by a condition that, in our opinion, requires a denial of their application. Their claim, in brief, is that the amendatory act of 1909 is void for failure of its title to sufficiently state its scope, with the result that the only act in force is that of 1907, and that the petition, being signed by the requisite number of electors as prescribed by that act, is sufficient in respect to signatures. With regard to the provision common to the act of 1907 and that of 1909, that no new county shall be formed which shall reduce to less than 1,200 square miles the area of any existing county from which territory is taken to form such new county, the claim is that the provision is violative of our Constitution for several reasons, and must be disregarded, leaving the act of 1907 in force without such provision.

[1] It was said in Los Angeles County v. Orange County, 97 Cal. 329, 331, 32 Pac. 316:

"Counties are merely local subdivisions of the state, created by the Legislature for governmental purposes, and are denominated public corporations for the reason that they are but parts of the machinery employed in carrying on the political affairs of the state. The Legislature, except as restrained by constitutional limitations, may change their boundaries and extent, consolidate two or more into one, or divide and create new counties out of the territory of one or more previously existing ones." (Italics ours.)

At the time of this decision, as now, the only constitutional provision on the subject was section 3 of article 11 of the Constitution, which then simply provided that—

"No new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to a population of less than eight thousand; nor shall a new county be formed containing a less population than five thousand; nor shall any line thereof pass within five miles of the county seat of any county proposed to be divided. * * *"

These were prohibitions pure and simple, and, subject only to them, the power of the Legislature in the matter of the creation of new counties by either general or special law (see Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 228, 92 Pac. 353; Mundell v. Lyons, 182 Cal. 289, 187 Pac. 950) was unlimited. In 1894 the constitutional provision was amended by inserting at the beginning of the section the words, "The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, may provide for the formation of new counties; provided, however, that," and in 1910 it was further amended by inserting in this clause after the words "may provide for" the words "the alteration of county boundary lines, and for," with the result that the section now reads:

"The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, may provide for the alteration of county boundary lines, and for the formation of new counties; provided, however, that no new county shall be established which shall reduce," etc. Const. art. 11, § 3.

By the amendment of 1910 the minimum population of the old county was also fixed at 20,000 instead of 8,000, and the minimum population of a new county at 8,000 instead of 5,000, matters immaterial here. The effect of these changes was considered in the recent case of Mundell v. Lyons, 182 Cal. 289, 187 Pac. 950, and it was substantially held that the provision authorizing the Legislature "by general and uniform laws" to provide for the formation of new counties was designed to prohibit the formation of new counties by the Legislature by special act or provision by the Legislature for their formation in any other way than by general and uniform laws. In the language of Mundell v. Lyons, supra:

"It is at once evident that the section, as it so read, was designed to be prohibitory and a limitation upon the authority of the Legislature."

It was simply another "constitutional limitation" upon the power of the Legislature in the matter of the creation of new counties, which, subject to the prohibitions contained in the section, was still left with full power in such matters. Whether there should be any law under which new counties might be formed was left to the Legislature. The language in this respect is entirely permissive, being, "The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, may provide," etc., and clearly the case is not one where the word "may" can be read as "shall" or "must." If, in its wisdom, it concluded that provision for the formation of new counties should be made, it could make it only "by general and uniform laws," and, in view of its power in such matters, it seems perfectly clear that in such laws it could prescribe such conditions as it saw fit, in addition to and consistent with the conditions prescribed in the constitutional provision.

[2] In the exercise of the power vested in the Legislature, the provision against a reduction in area of the old county to less than 1,200 square miles was inserted in the acts of both 1907 and 1909. Such, in the judgment of the Legislature, was deemed an indispensable condition to the creation of a new county from the territory of an old county. We are aware of no authority that would warrant us in holding that the Legislature would have enacted these laws in the absence of such a provision, even if we assume for the purposes of this decision that it is violative of certain provisions of our Constitution inhibiting special legislation and requiring that all acts of a general nature shall have a uniform operation. It was the judgment of the Legislature that no new county should be formed if its formation would have any such effect. If, then, this provision is void, the whole act of 1907 must necessarily be void, and likewise the whole act of 1909. The result, if that is the case, obviously would be that no valid general and uniform law for the formation of new counties has been enacted. Without such a law there can be no proceeding for the formation of a new county, and plaintiff's petition was properly denied by the board of supervisors of Sonoma county. If, on the other hand, the act of 1907 was a valid enactment, the petition was properly denied for the reason that the formation of the proposed new county would be in violation of the terms thereof in the respect discussed, as prescribed both in such act and the amendatory act of 1909. In either event plaintiff's proceeding before the board of supervisors must be held ineffective for any purpose.

Under the circumstances stated, discussion of the objections on constitutional grounds to the provision in these acts prohibiting reduction in area below 1,200 square miles of the county from the territory of which the new county is proposed to be formed, as well as to the amendatory act of 1909, would be futile. We are not to be understood, however, as assenting to the claim that the area provision is invalid, or as expressing any opinion as to the objections made to the amendatory act.

The order to show cause is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

MAHONY v. STANDARD GAS ENGINE CO.
(S. F. 9538.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 12, 1921.)

1. Sales $\S$ 390—Action to recover money paid on contract not within statutes as to damages.

In action to recover a deposit paid under a contract for gas engines where the cause of action was not based on an express warranty nor the action one to reform a contract and recover damages for its breach, Civ. Code, § 3308, which establishes the measure of damages for the breach of an agreement by the seller of personal property not fully paid for in advance, and Civ. Code, § 3313, which provides the rule of compensation for a breach of warranty of personal property, do not apply.

2. Sales $\S$ 390—Contract to furnish and install gas engines not within provision as to warranty of specially manufactured article.

An action to recover a deposit paid under a contract to "furnish and install" gas engines is not within Civ. Code, § 1770, which provides that one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose.

3. Sales $\S$ 390—Where, under contract, there is failure of consideration, no request necessary before suing for return of deposit.

Where there was a total failure of consideration for a deposit under a contract for the purchase of gas engines, in that the engines tendered did not comply with those to be furnished under the contract, a promise on the part of the seller that he would repay it was raised by law without any request, and an action for money had and received was maintainable.

4. Sales ⇨128—Refusal to accept gas engines developing less than required horse power was rescission of contract.

Under Civ. Code, § 1689, providing that a party to a contract may rescind it where, "through the fault of the party as to whom he rescinds, the consideration for his obligation fails in whole or in part," the refusal by plaintiff to accept gas engines that developed less than the agreed horse power was a rescission of the contract, though he had previously insisted on delivery.

5. Sales ⇨392—Total failure of consideration when engine valueless to buyer, so that formal rescission not necessary before suing.

Where gas engines ordered from defendant by plaintiff were valueless to plaintiff because of their failure to develop the specified horse power, the failure of consideration for plaintiff's deposit under the contract was total, so that formal rescission before suing for money paid by buyer was unnecessary.

6. Reformation of instruments ⇨19(1)—To express intention.

Notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1625, providing that the execution of a contract in writing supersedes all negotiations and that such prior negotiations cannot be availed of to vary the terms under Civ. Code, § 3399, where there has been a mutual mistake, the contract may be revised so as to express the intention of the parties.

7. Reformation of instruments ⇨46—Finding held equivalent to finding of mutual mistake.

In an action to recover a deposit under a contract for the purchase of engines, in which plaintiff sought to revise the contract under Civ. Code, § 3399, a finding that the omission of a provision that the engines would develop specified horse power was a mistake of the parties held equivalent to a finding that it was a mutual mistake.

8. Reformation of instruments ⇨47—In action to recover money paid on account of contract in which there was mutual mistake, not necessary to have reformation before recovery.

In an action for the recovery of money paid on account of a contract for gas engines which were to develop 150 brake horse power, where there has been a finding of mutual mistake in not including such stipulation in the contract, it is not necessary that the contract be formally revised, where the reformation is not for the purpose of enforcing it as reformed but to show a failure of consideration.

9. Reformation of instruments ⇨48—Findings as to mistake held to justify a reformation.

In action for money paid under a contract for gas engines omitting a stipulation that such engines should develop 150 brake horse power, findings that there was a mistake on the part of the parties, and that plaintiff signed the agreement in the "belief" that it contained such stipulation, justified a reformation of the contract.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1170(3)—Overruling of demurrer to complaint harmless, defendant's answer construing alleged mistake in contract as mutual.

In action for money paid under a contract for gas engines, the overruling of a demurrer to complaint for failure to state that the omission of a stipulation was a mutual mistake of the parties or a mistake of the plaintiff which the defendant at the time knew or suspected was not prejudicial; defendant's answer construing such alleged mistake as a mutual one, and the substantial rights of the parties not being affected under Code Civ. Proc. § 475.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Andrew Mahony against the Standard Gas Engine Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. F. Lemberger and V. G. Skinner, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Henry A. Jacobs and G. B. Blanckenburg, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHURTLEFF, J. This appeal is upon the judgment roll alone and is from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, against the defendant.

The allegations of the amended complaint, essential to the determination of the questions presented, are that the parties entered into an agreement whereby defendant agreed to furnish and install two gas engines, "240 I. H. P. [indicated horse power] * * * for the price of forty thousand (40,000) dollars"; that such agreement was executed in confirmation of a written proposal theretofore submitted by defendant to plaintiff and verbally accepted by the latter, which provided that the engines should develop not less than 150 brake horse power; that it was the intention of the parties that a stipulation to that effect should be included in the contract; that the contract erroneously omitted any reference to, or warranty of, the development of 150 brake horse power; that plaintiff executed said agreement in the belief that said provision was therein contained; that the omission of said provision warranting the development, by said engines contracted for, of 150 brake horse power was a mistake. "That at the time of entering into said agreement and prior thereto defendant was informed and advised by plaintiff of the particular purpose for which said engines were to be used, and defendant at all times was informed and advised and had actual knowledge that it was required by plaintiff, and it was necessary that said engines develop not less than 150 brake horse power, otherwise said engines would be of no use for the purpose required." That defendant at all times, both prior to and at the time of entering into said contract, agreed with and warranted to plaintiff that each of said engines would actually develop in excess of 150 brake horse power. That plaintiff, relying upon said warranty and agreement on the part of the defendant, paid defendant the sum of $10,000 as a deposit on account of the purchase price of said engines.

That thereafter defendant notified plaintiff that the engine mentioned in the said written agreement "would develop only 140 brake horse power, whereupon plaintiff refused to accept delivery of said engines and demanded a return of said deposit of $10,000," which defendant refused. The prayer is for a money judgment only, to wit, the sum of $10,000 and interest. The defendant demurred generally and specifically to the complaint, which demurrer was overruled. Whereupon the defendant answered, admitting the execution of the agreement, which is set forth in hæc verba, but denied all of the aforementioned allegations of the complaint, particularly the one to the effect that it was agreed that the engines should develop 150 brake horse power, or any other brake horse power, and averred that the only proposal submitted to the defendant by plaintiff was embodied in the agreement set forth in the answer, which agreement makes no mention whatever of "brake horse power." It denied that the omission from the contract of a provision warranting the development by the engines of 150 brake horse power, or any other brake horse power, was a mistake, or that there was any mistake made by either plaintiff or defendant in the execution of the contract and averred:

"That the said contract embodied all and every condition, warranty and reference intended by the parties to be contained therein."

Payment of $10,000 is admitted, coupled with the averment that it was paid under the terms of the contract set forth in the answer.

The defendant also filed a cross-complaint, which refers to the contract mentioned in its answer, makes it part of such cross-complaint, and alleges upon information and belief that plaintiff entered into a contract with the Standard Oil Company to furnish the latter two engines which would develop "in the amount of 150 brake horse power," which were the engines covered by the contract between plaintiff and defendant. It is further stated in the cross-complaint that "after the engine had been built by the manufacturer as called for in the contract," defendant (cross-complainant) was informed by the manufacturer that it would only develop 140 brake horse power, although built in accordance with the terms of the contract between plaintiff and defendant; that defendant informed plaintiff of that fact and offered to rescind the contract between plaintiff and defendant "and tender to the said plaintiff the sum of $10,000" paid by plaintiff to defendant under the terms of the contract, which offer plaintiff refused to accept, "but demanded that this defendant procure the engine from the manufacturer, and in reliance upon the terms of said contract and in pursuance of the said demand" the defendant ordered the "said engines shipped"; that plaintiff refused to take delivery, and that by reason thereof defendant has been damaged in the sum of $20,000, upon which amount $10,000 has been paid. A demurrer to the cross-complaint was overruled; thereupon plaintiff answered denying the material allegations of the cross-complaint with the exception that the Standard Oil Company was a corporation, and repeating certain allegations of his amended complaint, and averring that the engines called for by the contract between him and the defendant were "to be installed in a motor boat being constructed by plaintiff for the Standard Oil Company, and which, under the terms of the contract of plaintiff with said Standard Oil Company," it was "agreed would develop 150 brake horse power," of which the defendant at all times had knowledge.

The necessity for the foregoing exhaustive résumé of the pleadings is apparent from what follows.

The court made its findings covering every material issue raised by the pleadings and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, from which judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The defendant contends that the judgment is erroneous because not supported by the findings in the following particulars: First, that there was no expressed or implied warranty as to brake horse power; that the engines tendered by defendant were in full performance of the contract and that plaintiff, in not accepting them when tendered, violated his contract. Second, "That plaintiff has mistaken his remedy in seeking to recover the part payment for the reason that the findings show that he has at all times refused to cancel the contract even after knowledge that the engines would not develop over 140 brake horse power; that he has not rescinded nor offered to rescind and that he has not sought to reform the contract and sue for the damages sustained by reason of the alleged breach of the reformed contract."

[1, 2] We think most of the foregoing contentions are predicated upon a misconception by defendant of plaintiff's cause of action and the theory of his claim for recovery. He is not suing upon an express warranty as to brake horse power, neither is the action primarily one to reform a contract and recover damages for its alleged breach as so reformed. We agree with defendant that neither the provisions of section 3308 of the Civil Code, which establishes the measure of damages for the breach of an agreement by the seller to sell personal property, not fully paid for in advance, nor of section 3313 of the same Code, which prescribes the rule of compensation for the detriment caused by the breach of a warranty of the quality of personal property, are applicable here. Furthermore, this is not a case falling within section 1770 of the Civil Code, which declares that "one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose, warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose," for it is not alleged, nor found, that the defendant manufactured, or agreed to manufacture, the engines covered by the contract—his undertaking was to "furnish and install" them.

[3] Plaintiff's claim for the recovery of the $10,000 paid by him on account of the price of the engines in question is based upon an alleged total failure of the consideration upon which it was paid in that the engine tendered did not comply with those to be furnished under the contract which the court found was entered into by him with the defendant. In short, the action is for money had and received, which this court has held may be maintained whenever an equity or legal right arises from the circumstances that one person has money which he ought to pay to another. Quimby v. Lyon, 63 Cal. 394. In such a case, the law raises a promise on the part of the receiver of the money that he will pay it to the person entitled thereto, and that, too, without any previous request. Hawley v. Sage, 15 Conn. 56. The gist of the present action is that the law will not permit defendant to retain money paid it for an article which the trial court found failed to comply with what defendant had agreed to furnish plaintiff.

[4, 5] The Code declares that a party to a contract may rescind it where "through the fault of the party as to whom he rescinds, the consideration for his obligation fails, in whole or in part." Civ. Code, § 1689.

The following, taken from S. C. V. Peat Fuel Co. v. Tuck, 53 Cal. 304, is in point:

"The substance of the complaint was that the defendant, by a written contract (a copy of which was annexed to the complaint), had agreed with the plaintiff to construct a peat machine and its appurtenances within sixty days, at his own expense, and put the same in running order at a point on the San Joaquin river. The contract specifies the machinery, and as a part of it a scow of certain proportions; and the complaint avers that at the time of the execution of the agreement and soon thereafter the plaintiff paid to the defendant in advance, as a part of the contract price, several sums of money, amounting in the aggregate to four hundred and thirty-three dollars and fifty cents, and that though the time for performing the contract by the defendant had elapsed, he had never 'built, furnished, or put in running order, any peat or other machinery, * * * and refused so to do; and said plaintiff has never accepted any machinery from said defendant.' We think this is substantially an averment that the defendant had failed and refused to perform any part of the contract; and the action is to recover the money advanced, on the ground that the consideration upon which it was paid had wholly failed. The authorities appear to be uniform to the effect that where a sum of money has been paid upon a consideration which has entirely failed, the law implies a promise to refund it."

See, also, Rose v. Foord, 96 Cal. 152, 30 Pac. 1114; Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 Pac. 39.

We cannot concede the correctness of defendant's contention that there was no rescission of the contract in question by plaintiff. It is true that the court found that defendant at one time offered to cancel the contract, which offer was refused, and that plaintiff demanded that defendant fulfill it, but the court further found:

"That thereafter defendant tendered to plaintiff * * * the same engines that defendant notified plaintiff would develop only 140 brake horse power; that plaintiff refused to accept [them] * * * and thereupon demanded of said defendant the return of the said deposit of $10,000."

This is clearly a finding of rescission by plaintiff, and it was in fact a rescission; plaintiff could not have done more, except, possibly, to have said, which would have added nothing to the efficiency of the rescission, "I rescind the contract existing between us."

In Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 373, 62 Pac. 39, 40, this court said:

"Nor, where the failure of the consideration is total—which implies, of course, that nothing of value has been received under the contract by the party seeking to rescind—is it necessary that a formal rescission be made before bringing suit. In such cases a suit may always be maintained for the recovery of the consideration paid. * * * In the authorities cited [except one] it is held that, where there has been a total failure of consideration as to one party, the law implies a promise on the part of the other to repay what has been received by him under the contract."

In the case at bar the failure of consideration was total, for it clearly appears from the findings that unless the engines developed not less than 150 brake horse power, they would be of no use for the purpose required, and hence of no value to plaintiff.

[6, 7] Appellant correctly affirms that the law is well settled, to use the language of the statute, that "the execution of a contract in writing, * * * supersedes all the negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument" (Civ. Code, § 1625), and adds that such prior "negotiations and agreements cannot be availed of by either party to vary the terms of a subsequent written instrument"; but, as the findings indicate was done, the plaintiff in offering, and the court in receiving, evidence tending to show that the agreement of the parties was that the engines should develop 150 brake horse power, did not transgress this well-established principle of law. It was not an attempt to vary, and, if satisfactorily established, did not vary, the terms of the contract. Its purpose was to revise the contract, which, due to a mutual mistake of the parties thereto, did not, as written, truly express their intention—a remedy expressly given by section 3399 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"When through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of one party, which the other at the time knew or suspected, a written contract does not truly express the intention of the parties, it may be revised on the application of a party aggrieved, so as to express that intention, so far as it can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons, in good faith and for value."

The court found "that the omission of said provision stating that said engines contracted for would develop 150 brake horse power was a mistake on the part of the parties hereto," which was the equivalent of finding that it was a mutual mistake.

[8] It is not necessary that the contract be formally revised (Gardner v. Cal. Guarantee, etc., Co., 137 Cal. 71, 75, 69 Pac. 844), and especially in a case where, as here, the reformation is not for the purpose of enforcing it as reformed, or seeking damages for its breach, but to show a failure of consideration. Moreover, there is no allegation that the rescission prejudiced rights acquired by a third person.

The authorities cited by respondent to the proposition that a contract cannot be revised by a party thereto because of an omission due to his own negligence are not pertinent to the discussion of any of the questions arising here, for there is no finding that the mistake was due to the negligence of plaintiff.

[9] Defendant further urges that the finding that plaintiff executed the agreement in the belief that it contained the provision which called for the development by the engine of 150 brake horse power does not justify a reformation of the instrument. In view of the fact that there is a general finding that such omission "was a mistake on the part of the parties," which was the ultimate fact to be found, we can see no merit in this contention. Moreover, the "belief" of plaintiff was in the nature of a probative fact and in no manner inconsistent with the ultimate fact found—indeed, it tends to sustain the latter finding.

[10] There remains for consideration the contention that the amended complaint, as framed, does not raise the issue of "mutual mistake." It alleges "that the omission [from the contract] of said provision warranting the development by said engines contracted for of 150 brake horse power was a mistake," which allegation was challenged by the special demurrer upon the ground of uncertainty in that it failed to state whether it "was a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of plaintiff which the defendant at the time knew or suspected," which is practically the language of the section of the Code just quoted. As we have said, the demurrer was overruled. While we think this was error (Peasley v. McFadden, 68 Cal. 611-616, 10 Pac. 179), it was not prejudicial to defendant, since it did not affect any of its substantial rights (Code Civ. Proc. § 475). Its answer indicates that it construed the complaint as alleging that the mistake in it mentioned was a mutual one, for it contains a denial that "there was any mistake made by either the plaintiff or this defendant in the execution of the said contract," and, in addition, states the following:

"And in this behalf defendant alleges that the said contract embodies all and every condition, warranty and reference intended by the parties to be contained therein."

The pleadings and the finding of the court hereinbefore mentioned indicate that the issue of mistake was fully presented at the trial.

We find no error in the record justifying a reversal, and are of the opinion that the findings amply support the judgment, and it is therefore affirmed.

GATES v. GATES. (Civ. 2240.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 30, 1921. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 28, 1921.)

1. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 245(1)—Where interlocutory decree provided for alimony until final decree, final decree could provide for future alimony.

Under Civ. Code, § 139, providing that, when a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may make suitable allowance to the wife for her support during her life "or for a shorter period," and from time to time modify its order, where the interlocutory decree awarded alimony until the entry of final judgment, the court in making its final decree could grant future alimony, although the interlocutory judgment had then become final, and no authority to modify it was reserved therein, and section 139 was enacted before section 131 was changed to provide for interlocutory judgments.

2. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 286—On appeal from order recalling execution, award assumed suitable in absence of evidence.

On appeal from an order recalling and modifying an execution for alimony, the court must assume, in the absence of the evidence, that the allowance of alimony was suitable under the circumstances of the parties, as required by Civ. Code, § 139.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Suit by Jessie Harkness Gates against Laud C. Gates. From an order recalling and modifying an execution, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. S. Henion and Whitmore & Henion, all of Oakland, for appellant.

R. R. Fowler and James C. Nichols, both of Turlock, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The facts and the legal controversy involved herein, as stated in our former opinion, are as follows:

"The plaintiff, on the 12th day of January, 1917, filed a verified complaint in a suit for divorce against the defendant on the ground of cruelty. On the 15th day of January, 1917, the defendant filed an answer, denying the charge of cruelty so alleged, and on said 15th day of January, 1917, the court granted an interlocutory decree to plaintiff, declaring her to be entitled to a divorce from defendant and awarding to her alimony in the sum of $75 per month, 'the first payment to be made on the 10th day of February, 1917, and thereafter on the 10th day of each succeeding month until the entry of final judgment or decree herein.' The court did not in said decree reserve the right to make any order for further alimony.

"During the time intervening between the granting of the interlocutory decree and the granting of the final decree, a child was born to the parties, as to the legitimacy of whom no question is raised.

"After the birth of said child and prior to the granting of the final decree, the plaintiff through her attorneys, served upon opposing counsel a notice that she would on Friday, the 25th day of January, 1918, make an application for a modification of that part of the decree relating to alimony so that it would provide as follows: That the custody of the minor child be awarded to plaintiff, and that 'defendant be required to pay to plaintiff the sum of $75 per month until further order of the court as an allowance for the support and maintenance of said plaintiff and said minor child, and the further sum of $100 as attorney's fees in connection therewith, and for the costs of this proceeding.' This notice was dated the 17th day of January, 1918, two days beyond the year after the interlocutory decree was granted, and was filed with the records of the case in the office of the clerk of the court on the 18th day of January, 1918.

"On the 30th day of January, 1918, more than one year after the granting of the interlocutory decree, the court made its final decree, granting to plaintiff a divorce, and therein inserted a provision that the custody of the minor child be awarded to plaintiff, and that 'the defendant pay to plaintiff monthly an allowance for the support of said plaintiff and said minor child the sum of $60, whereof $25 is for the support of said minor child, and $35 is for the support of plaintiff, payments to be made monthly, beginning with this decree, and that the defendant further pay to the plaintiff as attorney's fees in this proceeding the sum of $25, and the costs of this proceeding.'

"After the granting of the final decree, the defendant gave notice of appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court, but the same was thereafter dismissed on the stipulation of the parties.

"It appears that defendant failed and refused to make the monthly payments required by the final decree, and on the 11th day of February, 1920, the sum of $1,468.55 having accrued to plaintiff under the terms of said decree, a writ of execution was issued on the application of plaintiff out of the superior court of Stanislaus county, directing the sheriff to enforce the collection of the sum named by seizure and sale of so much of the property of defendant as might be necessary to satisfy the same.

"Subsequently, and prior to the satisfaction of said writ by the sheriff, defendant served upon plaintiff a notice of a motion for an order recalling, modifying, and correcting said writ of execution. The said motion, in pursuance of the terms of the notice thereof, was regularly called for hearing on the 1st day of March, 1920. At said hearing the court, over the objection of the plaintiff, admitted and received in evidence a certain written agreement, entered into between the parties to the divorce action on the 9th day of January 1917 (six days prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree), wherein and whereby, after reciting the differences arising between them and declaring it to be impossible by reason of such differences for them further to live together as husband and wife, the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $75 per month, payable monthly and on the 10th day of each month, said payments to begin on the 10th day of January, 1917, and to continue for one year from said date. Said agreement thus concluded: 'Said payment of $75 per month to be in lieu of and as and for alimony paid by said first party to said second party and for the support and maintenance of said second party and for the support and maintenance of the expected child of said parties during said period of 12 months.'

"At the hearing of said motion it was admitted that the sum of $380 had been paid on account of the sum of $1,468.55, specified as due in said execution.

"The court on the 12th day of May, 1920, rendered its decision granting the motion, and the execution was accordingly recalled and modified, and denied the plaintiff any sum whatsoever for her own support, as provided for in the said final decree of divorce, and also denied plaintiff counsel fees in defense of said motion to modify said writ of execution. The court also, by said order of modification, awarded plaintiff the sum of $235.25 found to be due to her for the support of the minor child.

"The appeal here is by the plaintiff from the last-mentioned order.

"The contention of the appellant is that the order complained of is the result of a collateral attack upon the final judgment granting plaintiff a divorce from defendant, and that the judgment, not being void upon its face, is not subject to such an attack.

"It is, of course, the established rule that a judgment cannot be assailed in a collateral proceeding or except by appeal unless it is void upon its face. 'In a collateral attack every intendment is in favor of the judgment, and the judgment will be set aside, generally speaking, for but one of three reasons—lack of jurisdiction of the person, lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, or an absolute lack of jurisdiction to render such a judgment as the one given.' Baldwin v. Foster, 157 Cal. 643, 646, 108 Pac. 714. No question is raised here of the power of the court to provide in its final decree for the support and maintenance of the minor child of the parties. The sole question here is whether, in view of the terms of the interlocutory decree as to alimony, the court in making provision in the final decree for the support and maintenance of the wife was within its jurisdiction. If the court has the legal authority for making such provision, then, obviously, an objection to the judgment in that particular may be presented to a court of review only by appeal. On the other hand, if the making of such a provision in the final decree is in excess of its (the court's) jurisdiction, then, when such provision is so made, the judgment to that extent is invalid, and such invalidity is of a character to be apparent upon an inspection of the judgment roll."

[1, 2] After a more deliberate examination of the law we feel entirely satisfied that the trial court in making said modification of the award to the plaintiff acted within the limits of its jurisdiction, and therefore that the judgment roll did not authorize the court to recall said execution. We think that this follows clearly from the plain language of section 139 of the Civil Code, providing:

"Where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may compel him to provide for the maintenance of the children of the marriage, and to make such suitable allowance to the wife for her support, during her life, or for a shorter period, as the court may deem just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively; and the court may, from time to time, modify its orders in these respects."

It is true that this section was enacted before the law was changed providing for interlocutory judgments in divorce cases (section 131, Civ. Code), but that circumstance is entirely immaterial; the difference being that now the allowance for support is provided by said interlocutory judgment, and it may or may not be carried into the final judgment.

Applying said section 139 to the situation presented herein, we must find legal warrant in every particular for said modified order. In the first place, the divorce "was granted for an offense of the husband." The court in granting said divorce, as shown by the interlocutory judgment, made an "allowance to the wife for her support." We must assume, of course, in the absence of the evidence, that such allowance was "suitable" under "the circumstances of the parties respectively." This allowance was made "for a shorter period" than "during her life," namely until the entry of final judgment. Respondent seems to think that the section applies to a permanent award rather than to one of a temporary character, but there is nothing in the language of the section to justify the contention. The authority indeed extends to cases wherein the award is for life or for any "shorter period." It would be hard to conceive of language that would more closely fit the situation shown herein.

In considering the question it is to be borne in mind that the first award was not for "suit money," as it is sometimes called. It was not made on motion at the beginning of the action to enable her to prosecute the case. If it had been, there might be some force in respondent's contention. The award was made, however, after trial for the support of the wife and possible issue, and was a part of the judgment settling the property rights of the parties and decreeing that the plaintiff was entitled to a divorce.

That the interlocutory judgment had become final before the modification was made does not render said section 139 inapplicable. The provision rests upon the theory that the trial court has a continuing jurisdiction in reference to such award. Its authority is not exhausted by the original order, nor is it foreclosed by the expiration of the time for an appeal.

It is equally plain that the court is not required by express provision to reserve the authority to modify the award in order to justify such action. The language of said section becomes a part of the original order as though written therein. The section itself reserves to the court the authority to modify the allowance.

It may be added that the decisions are in harmony with appellant's position. Indeed after an examination of a large number of cases we think none can be found involving a similar statute and similar facts, wherein it was held that the court had no jurisdiction to make such modification of the original judgment.

In Soule v. Soule, 4 Cal. App. 97, 87 Pac. 205, after quoting said section 139, the court said:

"This statutory provision enters into every decree in an action for divorce which provides for the payment by the husband of an allowance for the support of the wife as fully as though it should be incorporated into the terms of the decree. The authority of the court to modify its decree in this respect does not depend upon a reservation therefor in the decree itself, but exists by virtue of a statute, and, being conferred by the Legislature, it is beyond its power to divest itself of such authority."
* * *

"Under this section it may modify its former order either by increasing or reducing the amount of money to be paid at any one time, or enlarging or diminishing the frequency with which the payments are to be made. Neither is the authority to modify the decree limited by the section to a mere change in the amount of the allowance to be paid, but it includes a modification of the order in any respect which under the circumstances of the particular case may seem just to the court. * * * In the present case the right of the plaintiff to alimony was established by the decree in her action for divorce, and section 139 gives to the court the authority to modify it."

In Mathews v. Mathews, 193 Pac. 586, it is said:

"Thus, when the court by its judgment does require the husband to pay alimony, and that judgment is not appealed from or vacated, it stands as a judicial determination of the right of the wife to such alimony, subject always to the retention by the court of jurisdiction to modify its judgment from time to time in that respect. That the court may modify its order with respect to alimony there can be no question."

In Willey v. Willey, 196 Pac. 101, the court said:

"We hold, however, that the court was not limited by the somewhat inartificially drawn prayer of the complaint as to its power to require the defendant to pay plaintiff alimony in the action based upon charges of desertion and failure to provide sustained by a showing of the plaintiff's necessities and of the defendant's financial ability to relieve them. It possessed that power under section 137 of the Civil Code, and it also possesses the power to modify its orders made in that respect from time to time under its express reservation of that power, and also under section 139 of the Civil Code."

In Cohen v. Cohen, 150 Cal. 99, 88 Pac. 267, 11 Ann. Cas. 520, it is said:

"The judgment, in the first instance, might have been for a gross sum, or for periodical payments, either for a stated period, or, as in effect was done, during the life of the plaintiff. Civ. Code, § 139. To change this judgment so as to require the payments for a stated period only would not be an annulment of the original judgment, but only a modification thereof. Therefore such modification would be within the power of the court, even if it were conceded that the power to modify did not give authority to vacate such order in its entirety."

The decisions in other states having a statute similar to ours are in line with the foregoing, a few of which may be cited: Skinner v. Skinner, 205 Mich. 243, 171 N. W. 383; Martin v. Martin, 195 Ill. App. 32; Delbridge v. Sears, 179 Iowa, 526, 160 N. W. 218; Holmes v. Holmes, 90 Minn. 466, 97 N. W. 147; Smith v. Smith, 190 Mass. 573, 77 N. E. 522, 5 Ann. Cas. 939. For many others we may refer to Ruge v. Ruge, 97 Wash. 51, 165 Pac. 1063, L. R. A. 1917F, 721, wherein is found a comprehensive review of the authorities, including some of the text-books. In the Washington case, supra, it is admitted that the court may make such modification where said power is reserved in the original decree or where statutory authority exists, but, in the absence of such reservation or statutory authority, it was held that the court could not modify "a decree for alimony, payable in periodical instalments, as fixed by a decree of divorce."

In none of the cases cited by respondent does anything appear contrary to the foregoing.

In Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 37 Pac. 770, 43 Am. St. Rep. 70, there was no judgment for alimony, and the court held that—

"The provision of section 139 of the Civil Code authorizing the court from time to time to modify its orders for the maintenance and support of the wife and children contemplates that the right to alimony as well as other property rights shall have been presented in the action and established by the judgment, and there can be no modification of an allowance for alimony where there is no allowance to modify."

O'Brien v. O'Brien, 124 Cal. 422, 57 Pac. 225, is to the same effect, wherein it was held that—

"Where the question of alimony was in issue in a divorce suit, and no finding was made thereupon, and no alimony was awarded in the order of judgment, or in the entry thereof, the error is judicial, and after the entry of judgment the court loses jurisdiction to amend it so as to reserve the question of alimony or to award alimony upon motion."

In Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 367, 173 Pac. 582, the question was whether the trial court had power, upon the motion of either party, to set aside the interlocutory decree in a divorce case at any time prior to the entry of the final decree, and it was properly held that it was subject to attack, like other judgments, only upon appeal or by proceedings under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "within six months after the entry of such decree, and that, after the expiration of the period within which either of these forms of attack may be made, the trial court is without jurisdiction to alter or set aside its interlocutory decree."

We think there is no escape from the conclusion that the court had jurisdiction to make such modification, and that it was error to recall said execution, and the order is therefore reversed.

CAHILL et al. v. VERDIER. (Civ. 3884.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Oct. 6, 1921.)

Trial $\Rightarrow$ 9(2)—Statute held not to confer power to shorten time for serving notice of trial.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1005, relating to the time when notice of motion must be given, confers the power to shorten the time for filing and serving a notice of motion, but does not confer power on the trial court to shorten the 5-day period required by section 594, providing for 5 days' notice of trial of a fact issue, in the absence of the adverse party, and hence a 2-day notice of trial pursuant to order of court was insufficient to support a judgment taken in defendant's absence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Lawrence M. Cahill, Jr., and others, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of California Garage, against Paul Verdier, to recover for labor and materials furnished. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

William A. Kelly, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. E. McCurdy, of San Mateo, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendant for the reasonable value of labor and materials furnished the defendant at his special instance and request. The plaintiffs recovered a judgment in the trial court, and the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendant complains because the trial was had in the absence of the defendant and of defendant's counsel. In this behalf it becomes pertinent to note that on February 9, 1921, the plaintiffs' attorney served and filed a notice of motion to set the case for trial. In that notice it was stated that the motion would be made February 17, 1921. On the date last mentioned, Kenneth M. Greene, Esq., representing William A. Kelly, Esq., attorney for defendant appeared, and J. E. McCurdy, Esq., appeared representing the plaintiffs, and on motion of counsel the hearing of the motion to set was continued to the 24th day of February, 1921. On the latter date, no one appearing for the defendant, the case was set for trial at 10 o'clock a. m., February 28, 1921. On the same date the trial court made an order that the time for serving and filing the notice of the date of the trial be shortened to 2 days. On the same day the attorney for the plaintiffs served on the attorney for the defendant a formal written notice of the time and place of trial.

Under the foregoing circumstances a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury, the plaintiffs introduced their proof, and, in the absence of the defendant, took a judgment as prayed for. The appellant contends that the trial was had, therefore, in violation of the provisions of section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Replying to this contention, the respondents place much stress upon the record as showing that on the 8th day of February, 1921, they gave a written notice of intention to move to set the cause for trial; that the hearing of the notice came up on the 17th day of February, 1921, in the presence of himself and the representative of the attorney for the defendant; that the further hearing of the motion to set was continued until the 24th day of February, 1921. These matters concerning "notice of intention to set" are wholly without the provisions of section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They neither sustain, nor violate, the calls of that statute. McNeill & Co. v. Doe, 163 Cal. 338, 341, 125 Pac. 345. The respondent further relies upon the fact that on the day the order was made setting the cause for trial the judge of the trial court made an order shortening the time for filing and serving the notice of the time and place of trial. As to this element the appellant contends that section 1005 of the Code of Civil Procedure confers the power to shorten the time for filing and serving a notice of motion, but does not confer the power on the trial court to shorten the 5-day period provided by section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this contention we think that the appellant is correct. If the trial court can, pursuant to the provisions of section 1005, shorten the time prescribed by section 594, it can reduce the period of time from 5 days to 4 days or to one hour. All of these things it had the power to do before the amendment to section 594. But if it has the same power after the amendment to the section, then no force or effect is given to the mandate of the legislative enactment amending the section. Stats. 1899, p. 5. In Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 305, 45 Pac. 470, 471, the court was considering whether subdivision 7 of section 581, Code of Civil Procedure (Stats. 1889, p. 398), was directory or otherwise. The court said:

"It is prohibitory, otherwise it would have no force at all. The courts were already authorized and required to dismiss suits upon motion when there had been culpable failure to prosecute. To hold this statute directory would therefore be to repeal it."

Referring to the case just cited, in Modoc Land, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 255, 256, 60 Pac. 848, 849, the court said:

"True, in that case more than 16 years had expired before the summons was returned, whereas in the present case the summons was returned only 11 days after the expiration of this period; but the statute imposes the penalty of dismissal in all cases where the return is made more than 3 years after the commencement of the action. The court is deprived of jurisdiction to take any other action than to dismiss the cause, whether 1 day or many years elapse before its attention is called to the subject. The declaration that 'no further proceedings shall be had therein' is a statutory prohibition against any further proceedings, and, if the court should assume to act in disregard of this prohibition of the statute, it would be acting without any jurisdiction."

Counsel have cited no case that directly rules the point and we have not found a case directly in point. True it is that in the instant case the trial court made a formal order shortening time, and true it is that the plaintiffs served the defendant with that order. But the fact of service or nonservice of the order shortening time is not by the terms of the statute made a controlling feature. The gravamen of the matter is 5 days' notice. If the respondents' contention that the trial court has the right to shorten time is sound, then it would seem to follow that the case entitled Estate of Dean, 149 Cal. 487, 87 Pac. 13, was incorrectly decided. The only difference would be that in the instant case the trial court made a formal order shortening time, and that that formal order was served, whereas in the Dean case the trial court impliedly shortened the time. In the case of Hagenkamp v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 29 Cal. App. 713, 156 Pac. 520, the facts were that the cause was regularly set for August 7, 1913; that at 5:15 p. m. of August 5, 1913, plaintiffs served a notice on the intervener that the cause was set for trial on the 7th day of August, 1913. On the latter date the cause was tried in the absence of the intervener, but when the irregularity was called to the attention of the trial judge he vacated the judgment and ordered a new trial. It was also contended that the cause had been partly tried on August 5, 1913, by the same judge sitting in another department. On page 716 of 29 Cal. App., at page 521 of 156 Pac. the court said:

"The order thus made was in effect a resetting of the cause for trial; and it not having been shown that it was made with the knowledge and consent of the counsel for the intervener, a further trial of the case could not be had in his absence without giving him the 5 days' notice required by section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

The respondent cites and relies on Sheldon v. Landwehr, 159 Cal. 778, 116 Pac. 44. However, we find nothing in that case that is helpful. In that case the defendant's attorney attended the trial, cross-examined witnesses, and made various objections. On appeal the court held that section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to trials had in the absence of a party and of his attorney. Handy v. Handy, 31 Cal. App. 590, 161 Pac. 21, and Estate of Wempe, 197 Pac. 949, are to the same effect. It has been ruled more than once that the 5-day notice may be shortened by waiver or by the consent of the parties. Townsend v. Driver, 5 Cal. App. 581, 585, 90 Pac. 1071; Estate of Dean, 149 Cal. 487, 492, 87 Pac. 13. The expression, it seems, was carefully chosen.

As the case must be remanded for a new trial it is not necessary for us to pass on the point made by the appellant as to the insufficiency of the evidence. The judgment is reversed.

GOLDSTEIN v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 3950.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 24, 1921.)

1. Carriers ⇨344—Passenger's contributory negligence not inferable from happening of accident.

Where a passenger was injured by a fall from a street car which she alleged was caused by a sudden start or jerk of the car, which defendant denied, defendant was not entitled to inference of negligence on the part of plaintiff from the mere fact of injury and on the assumption that the car was properly managed; that being a fact in issue.

2. Carriers ⇨316(3)—Injury to passenger held to place burden of proof on carrier.

Where the evidence showed relation of carrier and passenger, and that the fall which injured a passenger was caused by the violent jerking of the car, a prima facie case was established casting on the carrier the burden of proving that the injury was not the result of its negligence.

3. Carriers $\hookrightarrow$ 318(4)—Evidence held to sustain verdict for injury caused by sudden jerking of street car.

Evidence of injury resulting from a fall alleged to have been caused by the sudden jerking of street car held sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Sarah Goldstein against the United Railroads of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, Wm. M. Cannon and Kingsley Cannon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Andrew W. Roberts and M. H. Hernan, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained while plaintiff was a passenger on a street car of defendant. A verdict of $1,250 was returned in favor of plaintiff, and from the judgment following defendant appeals.

With relation to the circumstances of the accident the evidence shows: About midnight of November 30, 1917, plaintiff, accompanied by a woman friend, boarded a street car of defendant in front of the Ferry Building, in the city and county of San Francisco. The track at this place forms a loop or curve leading back into Market street and away from the Ferry Building. The car in question stopped about the middle of this loop. Plaintiff entered the car and was just about to be seated when it started around the loop to go out Market street, and she fell or was thrown to the floor, suffering the injuries complained of. The complaint alleges that the motorman turned on the electric current suddenly and with great force and strength, causing the car to start or bound forward with great speed around the loop or curve, and that the sudden speed with which the car was started around the loop or curve caused plaintiff to be precipitated to the floor of the car, and in falling her head, limbs, and body were thrown on and against the seats of the car with great force and violence, severely bruising and injuring her. Plaintiff's proof consists of the testimony of herself and companion and that of two disinterested fellow passengers who witnessed the accident; there being on the car at the time but three passengers besides plaintiff and her friend. Their testimony fully substantiated the allegations of the complaint. Opposed to this was the testimony of the motorman and one Shields, the third passenger on the car. The motorman testified that the car moved slowly around the curve in question, and that from the time he started the car until he received the three bells he had never had his controller beyond two points; that a car is hardly moving at two points. Shields testified that he was sitting in a lengthwise seat on the left-hand side of the car about four or five feet from the door when plaintiff fell; that the car "was going the same way they always go, moderate rate of speed, not very fast; it was not going fast at all, for that matter;" that he noticed no jerk whatsoever, and, so far as he could observe, plaintiff lost her balance.

[1] The points raised on appeal are: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to establish negligence of defendant; (2) negligence of plaintiff; and (3) error in instructing the jury. Referring first to respondent's alleged negligence, there is no evidence of either the commission or omission by respondent of any act from which such negligence might be inferred. Appellant's whole argument in support of this contention assumes that the car was properly operated—the very question in issue—and that therefore the fact that respondent fell and was injured while the car was traveling around the curve is proof that she failed to guard against the swaying and swinging necessarily incident thereto, and amounted to negligence. Negligence on the part of respondent cannot be established in this way.

The instruction under review is:

"You are instructed that contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff cannot be presumed from the mere fact of injury, but must be proved. On the other hand, proof of the injury, proof that it proceeded from a sudden, unusual, or violent jerking or swinging or swaying of the car while the plaintiff was preparing to seat herself in the car, casts upon the defendant the burden of proving that the injury was occasioned by unavoidable casualty or some other cause which human care and foresight could not reasonably prevent, or by contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff."

[2, 3] Appellant urges that the evidence does not show facts which justified the giving of this instruction and that it was misleading to the jury; that the evidence relating to the circumstances of the accident consisted of mere expressions of conclusions of witnesses that the jerk was unusual and violent. This criticism is not merited. The witnesses testified to the physical facts. The evidence shows the relation of carrier and passenger and that the fall which resulted in respondent's injuries was caused by the violent jerking of the car. There is no question here of negligence on the part of respondent; no evidence whatever having been introduced tending to show such negligence.

Under these circumstances a prima facie case was established (Renfro v. Fresno City Ry. Co., 2 Cal. App. 317 84 Pac. 357).

"It must first be shown that the injury came from the movement of the car by those in charge of it, or from something connected therewith, or in control of the defendant. When this is done, the law then presumes, prima facie, that the particular thing thus shown to have caused the injury was due to the defendant's negligence, and the burden is thrown upon the defendant to disprove the prima facie case thus made." Wyatt v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 170, 174, 103 Pac. 892; McCurrie v. S. P. Co., 122 Cal. 558, 55 Pac. 324; Babcock v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 128 Cal. 173, 60 Pac. 780.

In Renfro v. Fresno City Ry. Co., supra, 2 Cal. App. 321, 84 Pac. 359, the court said:

"Ordinarily a passenger injured while riding on a car is not in position to know more than that by some unusual movement of, or happening to, the car he has received injury. What caused the movement or happening he cannot be expected to know, and it is for this reason and for the further reason that the persons operating the car should know the cause and be able to explain it that the presumption of negligence arises, and that the burden is cast upon the railroad company to explain the cause. The present case fairly illustrates the wisdom and justice of the rule. The proximate cause of plaintiff's injury was the sudden jerking of the car forward when he had reason to believe that it was about to stop. Beyond this he was in no position to know the cause. If such sudden movements of street cars, under like circumstances, are necessary or unavoidable, in their operation, we think the rule would cast the burden upon the company operating the cars to show this fact as part of its defense. * * * He [plaintiff] showed enough to raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant, and it was for the defendant to rebut this presumption to the satisfaction of the jury."

There is no error in this instruction.

Applying the rule of the foregoing authorities, it follows that the evidence offered by respondent was sufficient, if believed by the jury, to establish a case of negligence on the appellant's part.

The judgment is affirmed.
